So it seemed to be again last night when Michael Tilson Thomas came here to lead the celebrated aggregation through a program offering the Beethoven Seventh Symphony and Copland's Third. Sighs of complete satisfaction punctuated the pauses between movements (all right, some patrons would limit that statement to the Beethoven) and at the end of work and concern the applause arrived at a tumult.

Certainly it was deserved. After all these years it is rather late, and not very easy, to find new things to say to extol the orchestra's virtues — its musicianship par excellence, its eloquence, its resonance and its vitality, et cetera et cetera. You name it, as the old saying went, and the Boston's got it and to spare.

Energetic Conductor

Mr. Thomas, who has been here before, is one of those ultra-energetic young conductors who is all over the orchestra and podium laying out the music and challenging the players to deliver it up to the hilt. This they seemed happy to do last night. They carried the final pages of the Beethoven practically to a frenzy which was transferred to the audience as well. Mr. Thomas had lingered lovingly enough over the tender passages of the work in a fashion which seemed to me a little more like Schubert than Bethoven. But when he came to the lively pages, it was all git-up-and-go as if there was reward in decibels as well as musicmarking. It's a popular recipe for all kinds of symphonies today on both sides of the footlights, little doubt of that last night.

I was rather bemused by Mr. Thomas' animated style on the podium, why it took such mighty gestures every moment to lead an orchestra through such rather straightforward writing. The Boston must have played the Beethoven a hundred times and I could only wonder if such elaborate attentiveness was readily necessary to bring the work off, or whether it was Mr. Thomas' own balletic response to the music that encouraged him to such choreographic effort.

On the other hand, in coming to the Copland, a work with plenty of intricacies that need careful shepherding Mr. Thomas was comparatively restrained in supervising the players and the music. It did not mean that he didn't do a good job, for it was a vivid account he gave of his symphony which has a curious amount of energetic exaltation to it. Mr. Copland denies making use of any American folk material, which has been so characteristic as part of his other music, but every commentator remarks on the "American" feeling in the Third Symphony. It is indeed there — even if, like salt, the flavor is plain but hard to describe.

Anyhow, it was a hearty reading and hearty performance and while it was plain the audience was partial to the Beethoven, it was good to hear Copland in the Bushnell once again.

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 199,160

JAN 14 1973

New England Newsclip

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 165,925

JAN 17 1973

New England Newsclip

Conducting Conversations

The Boston Symphony's permanent guest conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas, left, talks with two Hartt College of Music students, Barbara Sargent of Avon and Matthew Valenti of New Britain, prior to his Tuesday evening concert at the Bushnell. Thomas met with 35 to 40 area music students to discuss the symphony and his work (Courant Photo by Arman G. Hatsian).

Boston Symphony Next In Bushnell Series

Aaron Copland's Third Symphony and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday at 8:15 p.m. Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct the concert in Bushnell Memorial.

Copland, who has been involved with the Berkshire Music Center's activities for more than 30 years, was commissioned to do the Third Symphony by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation in 1943.

Copland used themes which he had collected over a period of years. He began work on the score in 1944 and completed the work in September, 1946.

Michael Tilson Thomas, principal guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, is music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra. He has bachelor of music and a master of music degrees from the University of Southern California.

He was conductor of the Young Musicians Foundation Debut Orchestra in Los Angeles for four years. A conducting fellow of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood during 1968 and 1969, he was awarded the Koussevitzky Prize in conducting. The three following summers, he was on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center.

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 130,857

JAN 17 1973

New England Newsclip

Bostonians in Fine Form

By DOROTHY STOWE
Times Music Critic

It is always a homecoming when Boston Symphony plays Bushnell Memorial, for this is New England's major orchestra, one of the nation's greatest, and Hartford music lovers take a proprietary interest in its fortunes.

In last night's concert the orchestra sounded fresh and rested, and seemed to be giving unstintingly of their best. And guest conductor Michael Tilson Thomas shows signs of coming of age conductorially.

Boston's finest led off with a highly creditable rendition of Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 in A. It is cheerful Beethoven, characterized by more than usual airiness and good humor. The Allegretto and Presto movements were classically exact and cleanly articulated, and the jolly spirit of the work came through with appealing gaiety and lightness.

Only with the final Allegro con brio did I take exception, a movement so con brio that it nearly ran out of control. The violins' opening theme was rushed and slurred, and the movement throughout sounded pushed, abounding in fuzzy phrasses and muddy passages from all string sections. It is unnecessary that such accomplished musicians should play so carelessly.

With Aaron Copland's Symphony No. 3, Tilson Thomas came into his own. This composition is of a genre which he grasps well, and the orchestra did full justice to its afirmative, pleasant modernity, filled with agreeable folk references and transparency of statement.

From beginning to end of the work, Tilson Thomas was effectual in getting value received from the orchestra for the visible effort he put in, a result which he has not always accomplished in the past. The opening was simply sincere, the folk suggestions were vibrantly rhythmic, and while there were transitional passages which seemed to meander, they usually terminated in significant climaxes.

All was brought to a really stunning close as the Boston brass, in superlative form, led out in re-stating the symphony's main themes, including the "Fanfare for the Common Man" which is incorporated into this work.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 244,000

JAN 13 1973

ABOUT NEW YORK THIS WEEK

IT'S BOSTON SYMPHONY WEEK in New York, for sure, what with the BSO and its ebullient young conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas, on hand for four dates, January 17 to 20, two each at Carnegie Hall and Philharmonic Hall. The two at Carnegie Hall are the ones to most quicken one's interest, particularly that of the 18th, in which Mr. Thomas will introduce New Yorkers to Spectrum, the concept which has set new young audiences in Boston to cheering, and also impressed critics and the oldsters. "A Program of Musical Multiples," the Boston opener last year, will be repeated here, and it includes Steve Reich's "Four Organs," for rock organs and maracas, plus works by J. C. Bach, Liszt, and Bartok which qualify for the overall "multiples" theme. Mr. Thomas' comments as well as conducts at these sessions, and informality and surprises prevail—from lighting to dress to the music itself. On the 20th, "A Salute to Diaghilev" will take in commissioned ballet scores by Prokofiev ("Scythian Suite"), Stravinsky ("Les Noces"), and Ravel ("Daphis et Chloe"). More conventional BSO programming at Philharmonic Hall will be Beethoven's Seventh and Copland's Third Symphonies, these concerts on the 17th and 19th.

Staten Island Advance
STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
D. 66,825 SUN. 65,718

JAN 14 1973

Music and dance

Boston Symphony Specials — Michael Tilson Thomas conducts Carnegie Hall concerts on Thursday and Saturday of rare interest. The first a "Spectrum Concert," offers a Bach Overture, Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celeste, Steve Reich's "Four Organs," for rock quartet, and the Liszt Hexameron for six Pianos and Orchestra. Saturday's more traditional but still fresh fare is a "Salute to Diaghilev," with three colorful scores: "The Scythian Suite" of Prokofiev, Stravinsky's "les Noces," and the complete "Daphnis and Chloe" music of Ravel. Tickets are cheaper for Thursday!

Long Island Press
JAMAICA, N. Y.
D. 441,961 SUN. 423,790

JAN 14 1973

Best bets of the week

BOSTON SYMPHONY SPECIALS. Michael Tilson Thomas conducts Carnegie Hall concerts on Thursday and Saturday of rare interest. The first a "Spectrum Concert," offers a Bach Overture, Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celeste, Steve Reich's "Four Organs," for rock quarter, and the Liszt Hexameron for Six Pianos and Orchestra. Saturday's more traditional but still fresh fare is a "Salute to Diaghilev," with three colorful scores: "The Scythian Suite" of Prokofiev, Stravinsky's "Les Noces," and the complete "Daphnis and Chloe" music of Ravel. Tickets are cheaper for Thursday!

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,549

JAN 18 1973

GOING OUT Guide

VARIETY ACT — The Boston Symphony Orchestra plays Carnegie Hall, 57th Street and Seventh Avenue (CI 7-7459) at 8 tonight serving up a veritable musical smorgasbord under the title of "Spectrum Concert." Under the direction of Michael Tilson Thomas, the orchestra will not be in uniform or, if you prefer, the uniform will be informal wear-what-you-will.

Michael Tilson Thomas

The program, stylistically, will not be uniform either, and bills itself as a "concert of musical multiples." For instance, there's J.C. Bach's Symphony for Double Orchestra in E Flat, Mr. Thomas leading one and someone else the other Then "Four Organs," for rock organ quartet and maracas ensemble, by Steve Reich, current American composer of what has been called "hypnotic" or "pulse" music, who will also help perform it, with Mr. Thomas also pitching in on one of the four organs. Admission, $3 to $7.

While you're there, you might go up to the first-tier rotunda and look at the large new window of fused glass, 51 to 43 inches, by Edith Bry and called, coincidentally, "Spectrum." it is in the lobby, opposite a handsome stained-glass window by Elsa de Brun, installed there a few years ago.

AFTER DARK
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. N. AVAIL.

JAN 1973

The Classical Scene
by Robert Jacobson

The New Year in New York has more than enough novelties to pick up any mid-season sag in musical spirits. Michael Tilson Thomas brings in the Boston Symphony for three out-of-the-ordinary programs. On the 18th at Carnegie Hall, he recreates his acclaimed "Spectrum" concert, with works for multiple instruments by Bach, Bartók, Liszt and Reich (the last is a rock piece for electronic organs). On the 20th, he's planned a "Salute to Diaghilev," with ballets of Prokofiev, Stravinsky and Ravel. At Philharmonic on the 17th and 19th, he's programmed Copland's Third Symphony with Beethoven's Seventh. Pierre Boulez is back in charge with the New York Philharmonic. On 2-9 he has André Watts for the Beethoven Fourth Concerto—plus Ravel, Mozart, Schumann. From 11-16 Stravinsky's Song of the Nightingale is paired with Haydn's Theresienmesse (soloists are Reri Grist, Anna Reynolds, Donald Gramm, et al.). From 18-20 he combines Crumb's Voices of Ancient Children, Telemann, Strauss and Stravinsky; and for 25-30 he has Rudolf Serkin in the Schumann Concerto, along with works of Wagner, Webern and Beethoven.

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 165,925

JAN 18 1973 New England Newsclip

The Boston At Bushnell

(Reprinted From Yesterday's late editions).

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas, was presented in the Bushnell Symphony Series at the Memorial auditorium Tuesday night. The program:

Symphony No. 7	Beethoven
Symphony No. 3	Copland

It would be choosing among great blessings to try to say what visiting orchestra holds the palm in the esteem of Bushnell audiences, but certainly the Boston Symphony must come near ranking the rest in popular favor.

So it seemed to be again last night when Michael Tilson Thomas came here to lead the celebrated aggregation through a program offering the Beethoven Seventh Symphony and Copland's Third. Sighs of complete satisfaction punctuated the pauses between movements (all right, some patrons would limit that statement to the Beethoven) and at the end of work and concern the applause arrived at a tumult.

Certainly it was deserved. After all these years it is rather late, and not very easy, to find new things to say to extol the orchestra's virtues — its musicianship par excellence, its eloquence, its resonance and its vitality, et cetera et cetera. You name it, as the old saying went, and the Boston's got it and to spare.

Energetic Conductor

Mr. Thomas, who has been here before, is one of those ultra-energetic young conductors who is all over the orchestra and podium laying out the music and challenging the players to deliver it up to the hilt. This they seemed happy to do last night. They carried the final pages of the Beethoven practically to a frenzy which was transferred to the audience as well. Mr. Thomas had lingered lovingly enough over the tender passages of the work in a fashion which seemed to me a little more like Schubert than Bethoven. But when he came to the lively pages, it was all git-up-and-go as if there was reward in decibels as well as musicmarking. It's a popular recipe for all kinds of symphonies today on both sides of the footlights, little doubt of that last night.

I was rather bemused by Mr. Thomas' animated style on the podium, why it took such mighty gestures every moment to lead an orchestra through such rather straightforward writing. The Boston must have played the Beethoven a hundred times and I could only wonder if such elaborate attentiveness was readily necessary to bring the work off, or whether it was Mr. Thomas' own balletic response to the music that encouraged him to such choreographic effort.

On the other hand, in coming to the Copland, a work with plenty of intricacies that need careful shepherding Mr. Thomas was comparatively restrained in supervising the players and the music. It did not mean that he didn't do a good job, for it was a vivid account he gave of his symphony which has a curious amount of energetic exaltation to it. Mr. Copland denies making use of any American folk material, which has been so characteristic as part of his other music, but every commentator remarks on the "American" feeling in the Third Symphony. It is indeed there — even if, like salt, the flavor is plain but hard to describe.

Anyhow, it was a hearty reading and hearty performance and while it was plain the audience was partial to the Beethoven, it was good to hear Copland in the Bushnell once again.

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 165,925

JAN 17 1973 New England Newsclip

Conducting Conversations

The Boston Symphony's permanent guest conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas, left, talks with two Hartt College of Music students, Barbara Sargent of Avon and Matthew Valenti of New Britain, prior to his Tuesday evening concert at the Bushnell. Thomas met with 35 to 40 area music students to discuss the symphony and his work (Courant Photo by Arman G. Hatsian).

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 199,160

JAN 14 1973 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Next In Bushnell Series

Aaron Copland's Third Symphony and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday at 8:15 p.m. Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct the concert in Bushnell Memorial.

Copland, who has been involved with the Berkshire Music Center's activities for more than 30 years, was commissioned to do the Third Symphony by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation in 1943.

Copland used themes which he had collected over a period of years. He began work on the score in 1944 and completed the work in September, 1946.

Michael Tilson Thomas, principal guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, is music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra. He has bachelor of music and a master of music degrees from the University of Southern California.

He was conductor of the Young Musicians Foundation Debut Orchestra in Los Angeles for four years. A conducting fellow of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood during 1968 and 1969, he was awarded the Koussevitzky Prize in conducting. The three following summers, he was on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center.

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 130,857

JAN 17 1973 New England Newsclip

Bostonians in Fine Form

By DOROTHY STOWE
Times Music Critic

It is always a homecoming when Boston Symphony plays Bushnell Memorial, for this is New England's major orchestra, one of the nation's greatest, and Hartford music lovers take a proprietary interest in its fortunes.

In last night's concert the orchestra sounded fresh and rested, and seemed to be giving unstintingly of their best. And guest conductor Michael Tilson Thomas shows signs of coming of age conductorially.

Boston's finest led off with a highly creditable rendition of Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 in A. It is cheerful Beethoven, characterized by more than usual airiness and good humor. The Allegretto and Presto movements were classically exact and cleanly articulated, and the jolly spirit of the work came through with appealing gaiety and lightness.

Only with the final Allegro con brio did I take exception, a movement so con brio that it nearly ran out of control. The violins' opening theme was rushed and slurred, and the movement throughout sounded pushed, abounding in fuzzy phrasses and muddy passages from all string sections. It is unnecessary that such accomplished musicians should play so carelessly.

With Aaron Copland's Symphony No. 3, Tilson Thomas came into his own. This composition is of a genre which he grasps well, and the orchestra did full justice to its afirmative, pleasant modernity, filled with agreeable folk references and transparency of statement.

From beginning to end of the work, Tilson Thomas was effectual in getting value received from the orchestra for the visible effort he put in, a result which he has not always accomplished in the past. The opening was simply sincere, the folk suggestions were vibrantly rhythmic, and while there were transitional passages which seemed to meander, they usually terminated in significant climaxes.

All was brought to a really stunning close as the Boston brass, in superlative form, led out in re-stating the symphony's main themes, including the "Fanfare for the Common Man" which is incorporated into this work.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 244,000

JAN 13 1973

ABOUT NEW YORK THIS WEEK

IT'S BOSTON SYMPHONY WEEK in New York, for sure, what with the BSO and its ebullient young conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas, on hand for four dates, January 17 to 20, two each at Carnegie Hall and Philharmonic Hall. The two at Carnegie Hall are the ones to most quicken one's interest, particularly that of the 18th, in which Mr. Thomas will introduce New Yorkers to Spectrum, the concept which has set new young audiences in Boston to cheering, and also impressed critics and the oldsters. "A Program of Musical Multiples," the Boston opener last year, will be repeated here, and it includes Steve Reich's "Four Organs," for rock organs and maracas, plus works by J. C. Bach, Liszt, and Bartok which qualify for the overall "multiples" theme. Mr. Thomas comments as well as conducts at these sessions, and informality and surprises prevail—from lighting to dress to the music itself. On the 20th, "A Salute to Diaghilev" will take in commissioned ballet scores by Prokofiev ("Scythian Suite"), Stravinsky ("Les Noces"), and Ravel ("Daphis et Chloe"). More conventional BSO programming at Philharmonic Hall will be Beethoven's Seventh and Copland's Third Symphonies, these concerts on the 17th and 19th.

Staten Island Advance
STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
D. 66,829 SUN. 65,714

JAN 14 1973

Music and dance

Boston Symphony Specials — Michael Tilson Thomas conducts Carnegie Hall concerts on Thursday and Saturday of rare interest. The first a "Spectrum Concert," offers a Bach Overture, Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celeste, Steve Reich's "Four Organs," for rock quartet, and the Liszt Hexameron for six Pianos and Orchestra. Saturday's more traditional but still fresh fare is a "Salute to Diaghilev," with three colorful scores: "The Scythian Suite" of Prokofiev, Stravinsky's "les Noces," and the complete "Daphnis and Chloe" music of Ravel. Tickets are cheaper for Thursday!

Long Island Press
JAMAICA, N. Y.
D. 441,931 SUN. 423,790

JAN 14 1973

Best bets of the week

BOSTON SYMPHONY SPECIALS. Michael Tilson Thomas conducts Carnegie Hall concerts on Thursday and Saturday of rare interest. The first a "Spectrum Concert," offers a Bach Overture, Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celeste, Steve Reich's "Four Organs," for rock quarter, and the Liszt Hexameron for Six Pianos and Orchestra. Saturday's more traditional but still fresh fare is a "Salute to Diaghilev," with three colorful scores: "The Scythian Suite" of Prokofiev, Stravinsky's "Les Noces," and the complete "Daphnis and Chloe" music of Ravel. Tickets are cheaper for Thursday!

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,949

JAN 18 1973

GOING OUT Guide

VARIETY ACT - The Boston Symphony Orchestra plays Carnegie Hall, 57th Street and Seventh Avenue (CI 7-7459) at 8 tonight serving up a veritable musical smorgasbord under the title of "Spectrum Concert." Under the direction of Michael Tilson Thomas, the orchestra will not be in uniform or, if you prefer, the uniform will be informal wear-what-you-will.

Michael Tilson Thomas

The program, stylistically, will not be uniform either, and bills itself as a "concert of musical multiples." For instance, there's J.C. Bach's Symphony for Double Orchestra in E Flat, Mr. Thomas leading one and someone else the other Then "Four Organs," for rock organ quartet and maracas ensemble, by Steve Reich, current American composer of what has been called "hypnotic" or "pulse" music, who will also help perform it, with Mr. Thomas also pitching in on one of the four organs. Admission, $3 to $7.

While you're there, you might go up to the first-tier rotunda and look at the large new window of fused glass, 51 to 43 inches, by Edith Bry and called, coincidentally, "Spectrum." it is in the lobby, opposite a handsome stained-glass window by Elsa de Brun, installed there a few years ago.

AFTER DARK
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. N. AVAIL.

JAN 1973

The Classical Scene
by Robert Jacobson

The New Year in New York has more than enough novelties to pick up any mid-season sag in musical spirits. Michael Tilson Thomas brings in the Boston Symphony for three out-of-the-ordinary programs. On the 18th at Carnegie Hall, he recreates his acclaimed "Spectrum" concert, with works for multiple instruments by Bach, Bartók, Liszt and Reich (the last is a rock piece for electronic organs). On the 20th, he's planned a "Salute to Diaghilev," with ballets of Prokofiev, Stravinsky and Ravel. At Philharmonic on the 17th and 19th, he's programmed Copland's Third Symphony with Beethoven's Seventh. Pierre Boulez is back in charge with the New York Philharmonic. On 2-9 he has André Watts for the Beethoven Fourth Concerto—plus Ravel, Mozart, Schumann. From 11-16 Stravinsky's Song of the Nightingale is paired with Haydn's Theresienmesse (soloists are Reri Grist, Anna Reynolds, Donald Gramm, et al.). From 18-20 he combines Crumb's Voices of Ancient Children, Telemann, Strauss and Stravinsky; and for 25-30 he has Rudolf Serkin in the Schumann Concerto, along with works of Wagner, Webern and Beethoven.

54.

WOOSTER, OHIO,
RECORD
D. 23,000

JAN 17 1973

'Spectrum Concert' Debuts In New York

BY HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Michael Tilson Thomas, who has more ideas about programing than an IBM Systems man, is coming to carnegie hall Thursday with the Boston Symphony and an affair that he calls a "Spectrum Concert." This is a fancy name for a program that is built on unusual combinations of instruments. It opens with an overture for double orchestra by Johann Christian Bach, and proceeds to Bartok's music for strings, percussion and celeste, Steve Reich's "Four Organs" for rock organ quartet and maracas ensemble (try to top that one!) and ends with Liszt's "Hexameron" for six pianos and orchestra.

The J. C. Bach work is a rarity, though it probably will not contain any musical surprises. Johann Christian was a polite composer in the galant style and was not out to rock the boat. The Bartok work is, of course, well known. The Reich will be a first New York performance, and with that combination of instruments anything can happen. And then there is the "Hexameron," which will be receiving a first New York performance in its setting for pianos and orchestra. It has been previously heard here, however. Raymond Lewenthal resurrected it as a piano solo, and only last season Eugene List and his cohorts, at a Carnegie Hall "Monster Concert" at midnight, played it en masse — first the solos, ending with six pianists joining in for the finale.

Raymond Lewenthal, who has done such pioneer work in the Romantic revival, heads the group of six in the Thursday concert. Virginia Eskin, Marilyn Neeley, Craig Sheppard, Peter Basquin and Antonio Barbosa are the other pianists. It should be a ball. The "Hexameron" is an unusual work, the joint effort of six of the most famous pianists of the 1830's, and as such as a compendium of piano styles of the day. And it has a fascinating background.

For years it was taken for granted that the work was played at the salon of Princess Belgioioso. Every Liszt biographer said so, and this writer, for one, took them on faith. But Lewenthal, who has researched the period thoroughly (he knows more about the Romantic period than anybody around) has different ideas. Much of the following information about the "Hexameron" is cribbed shamelessly from Lewenthal's program notes for his "Hexameron" recording.

There is no doubt that the princess was the progenitor of the piece. She was an aristocrat who was one of those supremely talented women, like George Sand, who knew music well (she could play the piano and sing), was a published writer, collected famous names in all fields and held the most brilliant salon in paris. It was she who brought together Liszt and Sigismond Thalberg in one of the most famous of all musical encounters. Who was the greater pianist? Each tried to outplay the other in a pianistic duel held at her salon on March 31, 1837. Then she tried to conclude the evening with an even greater coup. She wanted to bring together Liszt, Thalberg, Johann Peter Pixis, Henri Herz, Carl Czerny and Frederic Chopin. The idea was that each was to compose a variation on the march from Bellini's "I Puritani," and play it before the guests of the princess.

It has been the general assumption that the affair took place, most likely at the Liszt-Thalberg encounter. But Lewenthal thinks differently. He has looked through every source, every bit of published information that he could get his hands on, and has been unable to find any reference to this stupendous event. Certainly it would have made the headlines had it ever taken place. Lewenthal concludes that not even the Princess Belgioioso could get six such temperaments together under one roof. She did get after them, however, to submit the variations for which they had been commissioned, and those were published. Liszt likes the work. He played it as a solo, orchestrated it (or had it orchestrated) for piano and orchestra, and even worked up a two-piano arrangement of it.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,549

JAN 19 1973

Music: Copland's Force

By DONAL HENAHAN

To the generation that came of age in the 1930's and 1940's the name of Aaron Copland meant something special, something that would be hard to put into precise words for recently matured music listeners. Mr. Copland, in a vague but real way, represented American music for many people, though he was hardly the only important composer to emerge in those days (Ives and Ruggles had surveyed the land long before, and others might rightfully file claims, too).

But Mr. Copland was the one who made many of us aware that an American could impress himself on an international audience as a serious composer. It was a fascinating experience, therefore, to listen again to his ambitious Symphony No. 3, a 1946 work that the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Michael Tilson Thomas performed winningly on Wednesday night at Philharmonic Hall. The score, which summed up Mr. Copland's efforts as a symphonist, still packs a punch.

●

The Third Symphony, recognizably American in idiom though more abstract and more labored than some of Mr. Copland's popular pieces, is not first-rate throughout, but it deserves a hearing now and then. Mr. Thomas's conducting tended to be lean and propulsive, and sometimes rather literal. But the score's strength and individuality came across clearly. A straightforward interpretation may not be the worst way to handle such music, in fact. With wrong emphasis the first movement could take on the patina of superior movie music (there is a "Wagons West" suggestion in its rugged simplicities). And the third movement also might slip off into pictorial mood music ("Twilight at the Bunkhouse").

But such evocations may not be built into the work so much as into the listener. There was a time, for example, when people detected jazz in the Third Symphony, which seems remarkable now: The only hint comes in the finale with a brief lapse into a Gottschalkish cakewalk, and even that fleeting allusion is cut short with an orchestral rasp, or possibly raspberry.

The symphony's most familiar moment, the famous Fanfare preceding the final movement, made its debut as "Fanfare for the Common Man" in 1944, and continues to lead an independent life. Mr. Thomas allowed it to make its brazenly stirring point without flatulence.

●

Considering the excellence of the Copland score's performance, it perhaps was not surprising that the orchestra gave a rough, if spirited, reading of Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. One would guess that Mr. Thomas had spent the bulk of his energy at rehearsals in preparing the Copland and trusted that the Boston Symphony would have no trouble with Beethoven. The priorities were right, if so, but it still came as a shock to hear wind chords raucously out of time and many other infelicities.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,549

JAN 22 1973

Music: Boston Symphony

Thomas Conducts Stravinsky, Prokofiev and Ravel in 'Salute to Diaghilev'

By ALLEN HUGHES

Michael Tilson Thomas worked hard last week to shake things up musically in New York.

After presenting Steve Reich's "Four Organs" and the 19th-century committee work "Hexameron" in his Thursday concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he came up with Stravinsky's "Les Noces," Prokofiev's "Scythian Suite" and a big chunk of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé" in the orchestra's Saturday-night appearance at Carnegie Hall.

This second program was entitled "A Salute to Diaghilev." The renowned impresario was responsible, in one way or another, for the existence of all three works.

The most unconventional and most difficult one to bring off was, of course, "Les Noces," a work for vocal soloists, chorus, four pianos and percussion. No one aware of Mr. Thomas's expertise would doubt his ability to realize an efficient performance of the work.

It was, therefore, not unreasonable to assume that almost everything about it would be well played and well sung on this occasion. But the effect it should have created did not materialize, and the chief reason was probably acoustical.

The chorus and instrumentalists were strung out across the stage in such a way that the elements did not fuse.

Both the chorus (of the New England Conservatory) and the soloists (Susan Larson, Jan Curtis, Alexander Stevens and Mark Pearson) sounded weak, but arranged differently and perhaps in a different hall, they might have made a stronger impression.

Both the "Scythian Suite" and the "Daphnis et Chloé" music were well played. But for some reason, Mr. Thomas performed great stretches of the "Daphnis" score that serve well for ballet but make for dreary concert listening.

All in all, it added up to an evening that seemed too didactic for its own good.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 244,000

JAN 27 1973

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY—At Carnegie Hall. Was this the great Back Bay orchestra with conductor Michael Tilson Thomas on the stage, all clad in colorful, open-necked sports shirts? Yes, this was the first local performance of the symphony's lively, experimental "Spectrum" concerts, an event which shivered the timbers of the auditorium in more ways than one. In explaining the basic concept, the prodigious and protean Mr. Thomas tossed off erudite nuggets in an engagingly boyish manner. Each of the works—a double orchestra sinfonia by J. C. Bach, a canzona by Gabrieli, Bartok's "Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta," a strident new piece by Steve Reich, and the six-pianos "Hexaméron" by Liszt, Thalberg, Pixis, Herz, Czerny, and Chopin—exploited orchestral doubles, antiphonies, and "stereo" effects. Mr. Reich's "Four Organs" for rock organs and relentlessly chittering maracas had many auditors booing, stamping, whistling, or leaving in huffy clumps. In this laceratingly amplified work, Mr. Reich seems to have taken the famous "lost" chord apart without first acquiring the skill to put it together again. The splashy Liszt "compendium" reconstructed for orchestra by Robert Linn, was a balmy breeze following the racket. My compliments to those the program called "I Tutti Pianisti"—Raymond Lewenthal, Peter Basquin, Marilyn Neeley, Craig Sheppard, Virginia Eskin, Antonio Barbosa. They tripped through the grandiloquence like Great Danes romping with Chihuahuas.

—GREER JOHNSON

New York Post
D. 623,245 SAT. 354,797

JAN 19 1973

Michael Tilson Thomas Leads Bostonians in 'Spectrum Concert'

By HARRIETT JOHNSON

Michael Tilson Thomas led the Boston Symphony last night at Carnegie Hall in a "Spectrum Concert" subtitled "Musical Multiples," that is, a program featuring combinations of instruments.

By the time I arrived from Philharmonic Hall, the stage was being set for Steve Reich's "Four Organs," scored for rock-organ quartet and maracas ensemble. It took time to get the electronic equipment in order but eventually four musicians sat down to the console-type instruments: Reich, Thomas, Newton Wayland, Ayrton Pinto. The four maracas players, holding a maracas in each hand, had already been sitting out front for some time.

Boos at Conclusion

"Four Organs" consisted of a scant half hour of unbelievably tedious repetition of chords and a few notes. Tilson described it as possibly "finding infinity in a moment" but judging by the reaction it made the audience instead feel like captives in a prison. They showed their irritation by hand-clapping, whistling, booing, leaving before the grind stopped.

Once ended the work was greeted by more boos than yeas. Tilson, an engaging, informative talker, explained the Reich to no avail so far as enjoyment.

"Hexameron," which followed was a hit with the audience and required no explaining. Originally for six pianos, in the current version, there were six pianos and orchestra in an arrangement by Robert Linn. Sections were written by Liszt, Thalberg, Pixis, Herz, Czerny, Chopin. The work saved the night by its clever tour-de-force of composers and instruments. It is a period piece of virtuoso variety, humor and eclat.

With Thomas conducting, it was performed by an admirable group of pianists who simulated the 19th century grand manner. Raymond Lewenthal, appropriately dressed like Liszt in long coat and cape, played for him. Liszt was the leader; his collaborators: Virginia Eskin, Thalberg; Marilyn Neeley, Pixis; (Miss Neeley played from memory with flair.) Craig Sheppard, Henri Herz; Peter Basquin, Czerny; Antonio Barbosa, Chopin.

DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
D. 2,129,901 SUN. 2,948,786

JAN 20 1973

A Thomas Spectrum

By STEVEN MATTHEWS

Among the many posts musical whiz kid Michael Tilson Thomas is holding this season is music director of the New York Philharmonic's Young People's Concerts. Thursday night he brought an adult version of those programs to Carnegie Hall, where he conducted the Boston Shymphony in a Spectrum Concert.

Spectrum Concerts were developed two years ago by Thomas, a principal guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, as a way of attracting new audiences and presenting music not usually heard on symphony programs.

The orchestra performs in shirtsleeves and Thomas introduces each piece with a brief commentary on the composer and the music. Each program is devoted to a single concept, although the pieces can be very varied in nature.

Thursday's concert was billed as an evening of musical multiples, and it began with a stately and precise reading of J.C. Bach's Grand Overture for Double Orchestra, a piece Thomas described as a gigantic ecclesiastical ping-pong game.

The young conductor then turned to the audience and directed their attention to the dress circle, where he had stationed two brass quartets. Standing on tiptoes, as if to get closer to the musicians, he led them in a rich and exciting performance of Giovanni Gabriel's "Canzone on the Seventh Tone."

Continuing his theme, Thomas said that Bartok represented "the complete fulfillment of the antiphonal idea." As an example of this, the orchestra played the Hungarian composer's "Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta."

The piece, he said, "drives a conductor crazy to learn," but he obviously had learned it well and the Bostonians were equal to his energetic demands.

Following a lengthy intermission, much moving of chairs and a lot of static and amplified hums and buzzes, Thomas presented Steve Reich's "Four Organs" for electric rock organ quartet and maracas ensemble. Thomas and the composer, as well as Newton Wayland and Ayrton Pinto, were the organists.

Four Organs," which was played before a completely darkened hall on a spotlighted stage, is a composition with a strong Asian background. It is a repetition of tones and develops more in intensity than in rythmic complexity.

It received a mixed reception, with boos competing with cheers when it was over and considerably fewer listeners in the hall than when it started.

54.

WOOSTER, OHIO,
RECORD
D. 23,000

JAN 17 1973

'Spectrum Concert' Debuts In New York

BY HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Michael Tilson Thomas, who has more ideas about programing than an IBM Systems man, is coming to carnegie hall Thursday with the Boston Symphony and an affair that he calls a "Spectrum Concert." This is a fancy name for a program that is built on unusual combinations of instruments. It opens with an overture for double orchestra by Johann Christian Bach, and proceeds to Bartok's music for strings, percussion and celeste, Steve Reich's "Four Organs" for rock organ quartet and maracas ensemble (try to top that one!) and ends with Liszt's "Hexameron" for six pianos and orchestra.

The J. C. Bach work is a rarity, though it probably will not contain any musical surprises. Johann Christian was a polite composer in the galant style and was not out to rock the boat. The Bartok work is, of course, well known. The Reich will be a first New York performance, and with that combination of instruments anything can happen. And then there is the "Hexameron," which will be receiving a first New York performance in its setting for pianos and orchestra. It has been previously heard here, however. Raymond Lewenthal resurrected it as a piano solo, and only last season Eugene List and his cohorts, at a Carnegie Hall "Monster Concert" at midnight, played it en masse — first the solos, ending with six pianists joining in for the finale.

Raymond Lewenthal, who has done such pioneer work in the Romantic revival, heads the group of six in the Thursday concert. Virginia Eskin, Marilyn Neeley, Craig Sheppard, Peter Basquin and Antonio Barbosa are the other pianists. It should be a ball. "Hexameron" is an unusual work, the joint effort of six of the most famous pianists of the 1830's, and as such as a compendium of piano styles of the day. And it has a fascinating background.

For years it was taken for granted that the work was played at the salon of Princess Belgioioso. Every Liszt biographer said so, and this writer, for one, took them on faith. But Lewenthal, who has researched the period thoroughly (he knows more about the Romantic period than anybody around) has different ideas. Much of the following information about the "Hexameron" is cribbed shamelessly from Lewenthal's program notes for his "Hexameron" recording.

There is no doubt that the princess was the progenitor of the piece. She was an aristocrat who was one of those supremely talented women, like George Sand, who knew music well (she could play the piano and sing), was a published writer, collected famous names in all fields and held the most brilliant salon in paris. It was she who brought together Liszt and Sigismond Thalberg in one of the most famous of all musical encounters. Who was the greater pianist? Each tried to outplay the other in a pianistic duel held at her salon on March 31, 1837. Then she tried to conclude the evening with an even greater coup. She wanted to bring together Liszt, Thalberg, Johann Peter Pixis, Henri Herz, Carl Czerny and Frederic Chopin. The idea was that each was to compose a variation on the march from Bellini's "I Puritani," and play it before the guests of the princess.

It has been the general assumption that the affair took place, most likely at the Liszt-Thalberg encounter. But Lewenthal thinks differently. He has looked through every source, every bit of published information that he could get his hands on, and has been unable to find any reference to this stupendous event. Certainly it would have made the headlines had it ever taken place. Lewenthal concludes that not even the Princess Belgioioso could get six such temperaments together under one roof. She did get after them, however, to submit the variations for which they had been commissioned, and those were published. Liszt likes the work. He played it as a solo, orchestrated it (or had it orchestrated) for piano and orchestra, and even worked up a two-piano arrangement of it.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,549

JAN 19 1973

Music: Copland's Force

By DONAL HENAHAN

To the generation that came of age in the 1930's and 1940's the name of Aaron Copland meant something special, something that would be hard to put into precise words for recently matured music listeners. Mr. Copland, in a vague but real way, represented American music for many people, though he was hardly the only important composer to emerge in those days (Ives and Ruggles had surveyed the land long before, and others might rightfully file claims, too).

But Mr. Copland was the one who made many of us aware that an American could impress himself on an international audience as a serious composer. It was a fascinating experience, therefore, to listen again to his ambitious Symphony No. 3, a 1946 work that the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Michael Tilson Thomas performed winningly on Wednesday night at Philharmonic Hall. The score, which summed up Mr. Copland's efforts as a symphonist, still packs a punch.

•

The Third Symphony, recognizably American in idiom though more abstract and more labored than some of Mr. Copland's popular pieces, is not first-rate throughout, but it deserves a hearing now and then. Mr. Thomas's conducting tended to be lean and propulsive, and sometimes rather literal. But the score's strength and individuality came across clearly. A straightforward interpretation may not be the worst way to handle such music, in fact. With wrong emphasis the first movement could take on the patina of superior movie music (there is a "Wagons West" suggestion in its rugged simplicities). And the third movement also might slip off into pictorial mood music ("Twilight at the Bunkhouse").

But such evocations may not be built into the work so much as into the listener. There was a time, for example, when people detected jazz in the Third Symphony, which seems remarkable now: The only hint comes in the finale with a brief lapse into a Gottschalkish cakewalk, and even that fleeting allusion is cut short with an orchestral rasp, or possibly raspberry.

The symphony's most familiar moment, the famous Fanfare preceding the final movement, made its debut as "Fanfare for the Common Man" in 1944, and continues to lead an independent life. Mr. Thomas allowed it to make its brazenly stirring point without flatulence.

•

Considering the excellence of the Copland score's performance, it perhaps was not surprising that the orchestra gave a rough, if spirited, reading of Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. One would guess that Mr. Thomas had spent the bulk of his energy at rehearsals in preparing the Copland and trusted that the Boston Symphony would have no trouble with Beethoven. The priorities were right, if so, but it still came as a shock to hear wind chords raucously out of time and many other infelicities.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,549

JAN 22 1973

Music: Boston Symphony

Thomas Conducts Stravinsky, Prokofiev and Ravel in 'Salute to Diaghilev'

By ALLEN HUGHES

Michael Tilson Thomas worked hard last week to shake things up musically in New York.

After presenting Steve Reich's "Four Organs" and the 19th-century committee work "Hexameron" in his Thursday concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he came up with Stravinsky's "Les Noces," Prokofiev's "Scythian Suite" and a big chunk of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé" in the orchestra's Saturday-night appearance at Carnegie Hall.

This second program was entitled "A Salute to Diaghilev." The renowned impresario was responsible, in one way or another, for the existence of all three works.

The most unconventional and most difficult one to bring off was, of course, "Les Noces," a work for vocal soloists, chorus, four pianos and percussion. No one aware of Mr. Thomas's expertise would doubt his ability to realize an efficient performance of the work.

It was, therefore, not unreasonable to assume that almost everything about it would be well played and well sung on this occasion. But the effect it should have created did not materialize, and the chief reason was probably acoustical.

The chorus and instrumentalists were strung out across the stage in such a way that the elements did not fuse.

Both the chorus (of the New England Conservatory) and the soloists (Susan Larson, Jan Curtis, Alexander Stevens and Mark Pearson) sounded weak, but arranged differently and perhaps in a different hall, they might have made a stronger impression.

Both the "Scythian Suite" and the "Daphnis et Chloé" music were well played. But for some reason, Mr. Thomas performed great stretches of the "Daphnis" score that serve well for ballet but make for dreary concert listening.

All in all, it added up to an evening that seemed too didactic for its own good.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 244,000

JAN 27 1973

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY—At Carnegie Hall. Was this the great Back Bay orchestra with conductor Michael Tilson Thomas on the stage, all clad in colorful, open-necked sports shirts? Yes, this was the first local performance of the symphony's lively, experimental "Spectrum" concerts, an event which shivered the timbers of the auditorium in more ways than one. In explaining the basic concept, the prodigious and protean Mr. Thomas tossed off erudite nuggets in an engagingly boyish manner. Each of the works—a double orchestra sinfonia by J. C. Bach, a canzona by Gabrieli, Bartok's "Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta," a strident new piece by Steve Reich, and the six-pianos "Hexaméron" by Liszt, Thalberg, Pixis, Herz, Czerny, and Chopin—exploited orchestral doubles, antiphonies, and "stereo" effects. Mr. Reich's "Four Organs" for rock organs and relentlessly chittering maracas had many auditors booing, stamping, whistling, or leaving in huffy clumps. In this laceratingly amplified work, Mr. Reich seems to have taken the famous "lost" chord apart without first acquiring the skill to put it together again. The splashy Liszt "compendium" reconstructed for orchestra by Robert Linn, was a balmy breeze following the racket. My compliments to those the program called "I Tutti Pianisti"—Raymond Lewenthal, Peter Basquin, Marilyn Neeley, Craig Sheppard, Virginia Eskin, Antonio Barbosa. They tripped through the grandiloquence like Great Danes romping with Chihuahuas.

—GREER JOHNSON

New York Post
D. 623,245 SAT. 354,797

JAN 19 1973

Michael Tilson Thomas Leads Bostonians in 'Spectrum Concert'

By HARRIETT JOHNSON

Michael Tilson Thomas led the Boston Symphony last night at Carnegie Hall in a "Spectrum Concert" subtitled "Musical Multiples," that is, a program featuring combinations of instruments.

By the time I arrived from Philharmonic Hall, the stage was being set for Steve Reich's "Four Organs," scored for rock-organ quartet and maracas ensemble. It took time to get the electronic equipment in order but eventually four musicians sat down to the console-type instruments: Reich, Thomas, Newton Wayland, Ayrton Pinto. The four maracas players, holding a maracas in each hand, had already been sitting out front for some time.

Boos at Conclusion

"Four Organs" consisted of a scant half hour of unbelievably tedious repetition of chords and a few notes. Tilson described it as possibly "finding infinity in a moment" but judging by the reaction it made the audience instead feel like captives in a prison. They showed their irritation by hand-clapping, whistling, booing, leaving before the grind stopped.

Once ended the work was greeted by more boos than yeas. Tilson, an engaging, informative talker, explained the Reich to no avail so far as enjoyment.

"Hexameron," which followed was a hit with the audience and required no explaining. Originally for six pianos, in the current version, there were six pianos and orchestra in an arrangement by Robert Linn. Sections were written by Liszt, Thalberg, Pixis, Herz, Czerny, Chopin. The work saved the night by its clever tour-de-force of composers and instruments. It is a period piece of virtuoso variety, humor and eclat.

With Thomas conducting, it was performed by an admirable group of pianists who simulated the 19th century grand manner. Raymond Lewenthal, appropriately dressed like Liszt in long coat and cape, played for him. Liszt was the leader: his collaborators: Virginia Eskin, Thalberg; Marilyn Neeley, Pixis; (Miss Neeley played from memory with flair.) Craig Sheppard, Henri Herz; Peter Basquin, Czerny; Antonio Barbosa, Chopin.

DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
D. 2,129,901 SUN. 2,948,786

JAN 20 1973

A Thomas Spectrum

By STEVEN MATTHEWS

Among the many posts musical whiz kid Michael Tilson Thomas is holding this season is music director of the New York Philharmonic's Young People's Concerts. Thursday night he brought an adult version of those programs to Carnegie Hall, where he conducted the Boston Shymphony in a Spectrum Concert.

Spectrum Concerts were developed two years ago by Thomas, a principal guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, as a way of attracting new audiences and presenting music not usually heard on symphony programs.

The orchestra performs in shirtsleeves and Thomas introduces each piece with a brief commentary on the composer and the music. Each program is devoted to a single concept, although the pieces can be very varied in nature.

Thursday's concert was billed as an evening of musical multiples, and it began with a stately and precise reading of J.C. Bach's Grand Overture for Double Orchestra, a piece Thomas described as a gigantic ecclesiastical ping-pong game.

The young conductor then turned to the audience and directed their attention to the dress circle, where he had stationed two brass quartets. Standing on tiptoes, as if to get closer to the musicians, he led them in a rich and exciting performance of Giovanni Gabriel's "Canzone on the Seventh Tone."

Continuing his theme, Thomas said that Bartok represented "the complete fulfillment of the antiphonal idea." As an example of this, the orchestra played the Hungarian composer's "Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta."

The piece, he said, "drives a conductor crazy to learn," but he obviously had learned it well and the Bostonians were equal to his energetic demands.

Following a lengthy intermission, much moving of chairs and a lot of static and amplified hums and buzzes, Thomas presented Steve Reich's "Four Organs" for electric rock organ quartet and maracas ensemble. Thomas and the composer, as well as Newton Wayland and Ayrton Pinto, were the organists.

Four Organs," which was played before a completely darkened hall on a spotlighted stage, is a composition with a strong Asian background. It is a repetition of tones and develops more in intensity than in rythmic complexity.

It received a mixed reception, with boos competing with cheers when it was over and considerably fewer listeners in the hall than when it started.

Long Island Press
JAMAICA, N. Y.
D. 441,961 SUN. 423,790

JAN 19 1973

Critic-at-large

'Spectrum' lively event

By BYRON BELT

The Boston Symphony "Spectrum Concert" which Michael Tilson Thomas conducted at Carnegie Hall last night proved that interesting program concepts can fill the hall with younger audiences than usual, and start a minor riot or two while generating an authentic and perfectly wonderful "happening."

In a program of music for various multiples of ensemble or sonic variations, Thomas moved from standard works of Johann Christian Bach, Giovanni Gabriell and Bela Bartok, to a local premiere of Steve Reich's newest essay in calculated boredom right on through the mundane exoticisms of "Hexameron," a piece for six pianos, and orchestra by Franz Liszt and others.

It was, of course, the Reich piece that caused the storm. During the opening portion the audience was a model of attentive listening and warm appreciation. For "Four Organs," a work for rock organ quartet and maracas, the younger listeners tended to keep their cool and their fascination, but their elders—always so ready to lecture the young on good manners—began chatting, moaning and departing before the 23-minute work had scarcely begun.

The last 10 minutes of "Four Organs" did get pretty nerve-wracking I must admit, but the option to leave is a fairer one than to chatter, whistle, clap and jeer. As an old defender of the well-placed boo—the pandimonium at the conclusion did my heart good. But the end is the proper place to express opinions. Remember, those foolish rioters at the "Rite of Spring" premiere ALSO thought the music was dreadful!

Reich's work would not seem to be destined for the ages but it does, in the words of Michael Tilson Thomas, "return to tonality with a vengence." Single tones are repeated endlessly, with the steady beat of the maracas, and the most minutely subtle shifts in rhythm on the part of the four players. It is hypnotic, possibly, or just foolish, perhaps.

Somehow, we were never bored, and watching the intense faces of the organists—composer Reich, Thomas and Newton Wayland and Ayrton Pinto was almost reward enough.

* * *

IF REICH and some of his associates are carrying minimal art to new dimensions, the maximum masterpiece on the program was the marvelous Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta of Bartok.

As with most of the evening's performances, the sweep and fire of the Thomas vitality was most stimulating, although more subtle and refined playing could be imagined without much difficulty.

Following a too-big but terribly exciting performance of Bach's Grand Overture for Double Orchestra and a Canzena on the Seventh Tone for brasses flung high in the Carnegie Hall balconies, then the great Bartok and controversial Reich, a lollypop for fun-lovers was to be expected.

In this season of the Monster Concert (now safely recorded on Columbia, for those unable to live without multi-hands bounding through a Czerny version of Rossini's "William Tell Overture!") we have had the "Hexameron" in several forms.

Last night Thomas elected to perform the Liszt theme with variants by pianists Thalberg, Pixis, Herz, Czerny and Chopin in a shoddy "reconstruction" of the orchestral score by one Robert Linn.

* * *

LOVERS of Raymond Lewenthal and the more mindless aspects of the so-called "Romantic Revival" were out in force, and probably loved it. Even at the risk of sounding snobbish, it was the "Hexameron" that lent a glow of taste and imagination to Steve Reich's piece.

In addition to Lewenthal, the pianists were Virginia Eskin, Marilyn Neeley, Craig Sheppard, Peter Basquin and Antonio Barbosa. Only Miss Neeley really made music of her dashing Pixis variation, although Barbosa managed to keep his local appearances to Chopin by drawing that composer's dreamy, and pretty awful sixth variation.

Michael Tilson Thomas was all over the place last night. Looking very pale, he yet managed to conduct brilliantly, drone handsomely on the organ, sing and introduce the music and even the stage hands. All in all, it was a lively night. More "Spectrums" soon, please.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,549

JAN 20 1973

Music: A Concert Fuss

Piece By Reich Draws a Vocal Reaction

5454

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

Aside from musicians of the Boston Symphony playing in open-necked colored shirts, aside from the spectacle of six pianos lined up in front of the stage and played by as many pianists, aside from a lively demonstration from the audience pro and con a new piece by Steve Reich, it was a normal evening in Carnegie Hall on Thursday night.

Michael Tilson Thomas was conducting a "Spectrum Concert," this one "a concert of musical multiples." If this sounds like Leonard Bernstein at his worst, it was, in a way. It was not too long ago that Mr. Bernstein was trying to educate the public at his Philharmonic concerts, introducing each piece with a kind of boyish sincerity. Now we have young Mr. Thomas introducing each piece with a kind of boyish sincerity.

•

Like Mr. Bernstein, Mr. Thomas speaks fluently. Like Mr. Bernstein, he is a good musician. But is a symphony concert, introduced with great gobs of music appreciation, the place for this kind of often condescending stuff? At least, this is not part of the regular Boston Symphony series, and is frankly an experiment in musical informality. And it must be said that the audience seemed to love it. Mr. Thomas has an interesting disease known as charisma.

The big fuss came with the 21 minutes of Steve Reich's "Four Organs," for rock organ quartet (so it was described) and maracas ensemble. The four maracas players kept to one solid beat throughout the work. The four organs played nothing but a single chord, letting it drift out of phase. There is really nothing to "understand" in this music. There is nothing much to like, nothing much to dislike. Basically it is an exercise in acoustics.

But the audience reacted as though red-hot needles were being inserted under fingernails. After a while there were yells for the music to stop, mixed with applause to hasten the end of the piece. At the end there were lusty boos. There also was a contingent that screamed approval. At least there was some excitement in the hall, which is more than can be said when most avant-garde music is being played.

•

The six pianos came with Liszt's "Hexameron," in an orchestration by Robert Linn. Originally, back in the 1830's, six of the greatest pianists in Europe, headed by Liszt, Thalberg and Chopin, were supposed to play this set of variations on a Bellini theme. The idea was that each pianist was to compose his own variation. They did compose them, but there is no evidence that this hexameron of pianists ever got together to play it.

And so, as the largest of the musical multiples on the Carnegie Hall program, six pianists were brought together. They were Raymond Lewenthal, Virginia Eskin, Marilyn Neeley, Craig Sheppard, Peter Basquin and Antonio Barbosa. They played singly and in ensemble, and the old period piece was a lot of fun. It also was the milk as an antidote to the Reich poison (as Liszt once said in a slightly different context).

The other multiples on the program were J. C. Bach's Overture for Double Orchestra in E flat, and Bartók's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta. The Bach is a well-written though rather negative piece; it makes the gestures but says very little. The Bartók, of course, is a masterpiece, and it was given an unusually lyric performance by Mr. Thomas and his players.

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Michael Tilson Thomas conducting, with Mr. Thomas, Steve Reich, Newton Wayland and Ayrton Pinto, electric organs, and Raymond Lewenthal, Virginia Eskin, Marilyn Neely, Craig Sheppard, Peter Basquin and Antonio Barbosa, pianos. At Carnegie Hall.

Grand Overture for Double Orchestra in E flat ..... J. C. Bach
Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta ..... Bartok
Four Organs (for organ quartet and maracas) ..... Reich
Hexameron for Six Pianos and Orchestra ..... Liszt, Thalberg, Pixis, Herz, Czerny and Chopin

Staten Island Advance
STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
D. 66,825 SUN. 65,718

JAN 19 1973

Bostonians offer varied program

By BYRON BELT

The Boston Symphony "Spectrum Concert" which Michael Tilson Thomas conducted at Carnegie Hall last night proved that interesting program concepts can fill the hall with younger audiences than usual.

In a program of music for various multiples of ensemble or sonic variations, Thomas moved from standard works of Johann Christian Bach, Giovanni Gabrielli and Bela Bartok to a local premiere of Steve Reich's newest essay in calculated boredom right on through the mundane exoticisms of "Hexameron," a piece for six pianos and orchestra by Franz Liszt and others.

Reich's "Four Organs," for rock organ and marcas, would not seem to be destined for the ages, but it does, in the words of Michael Tilson Thomas, "return to tonality with a vengeance." Single tones are repeated endlessly, with the steady beat of the maracas and the most munutely subtle shirts in rhythm on the part of the four players. It is hypnotic, possibly, or just foolish, perhaps. Somehow, we were never bored, and watching the intense faces of the organists — composer Reich, Thomas and Newton Wayland and Ayrton Pinto — was almost reward enough.

56.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264

JAN 25 1973 New England Newsclip

Conductor Jochum arrives in Boston—on business

His BSO debut follows 15 years of U.S. dates

By Louis Snyder

Tonight, when Eugen Jochum conducts the Boston Symphony in the first of three weekend performances, he will be making his long overdue Boston debut in a role for which he is internationally famous.

Although he has visited more than 60 United States cities as guest conductor of leading American orchestras, and as director of the touring Berlin Philharmonic and Amsterdam Concertgebouw orchestras, Boston has not hitherto been on his professional itinerary. He has, of course, been in Cambridge often to visit his daughter, Veronica Jochum von Moltke, a faculty member at the New England Conservatory.

And as circumstances will have it, Mr. Jochum's Boston "debut" this week with the BSO will be followed by a second Symphony Hall appearance this season. On March 19, he will conduct the Bamberg Symphony Orchestra there in an all-Beethoven program for the benefit of the New England Conservatory's fund-raising campaign, with his pianist-daughter as soloist.

* * *

Meeting the press informally on Tuesday at the New England Conservatory, in company with his daughter and Gunther Schuller, NEC president, the genial 70-year-old conductor was fresh from a first BSO rehearsal ("One of the best orchestras in the world — so quick to understand, so flexible, so disciplined . . ."), and full of enthusiasm for the Bamberg Orchestra's forthcoming first visit ("after the Berlin Philharmonic, the best of the German orchestras that tour").

Although the latter is regarded as a typical German group, he said, "it was formed more than 25 years ago by many members of the Prague Symphony who did not return home after the war."

And Mr. Jochum, urged to speak of his own distinguished career, went back over the years with penetration and good humor. Born in a small town near Munich, he grew up in a musical household, since his father was church organist, school music master, and operetta conductor in the small local theater. "I was raised on Palestrina and 'The Merry Widow,' " he recalls laughingly.

While he was at Munich Conservatory ("I thought of myself as a great composer!"), an opportunity to lead the Munich Philmarmonic at 23 "made my whole career." Within three years, he became first conductor of the opera house in Kiel, and as he moved forward toward Berlin via Mannheim, he encountered the already eminent Wilhelm Furtwaengler there. He remembers happily what his superior said: "If I had known you were so good, I would have recommended you for a bigger post."

Eugen Jochum

The bigger opportunity arrived in 1932 — to rebuild the Berlin Radio Orchestra when no one was interested in the possibilities of classical music on radio. "But this was a bad time," he said, "and for me music and politics don't mix." So when he was offered the chance to succeed Karl Boehm as joint director of the Opera and Philharmonic of Hamburg, a city toward which the Nazis maintained a "hands-off" policy, he accepted with alacrity.

In 1949, Jochum founded the Bavarian Radio Philharmonic, has served as co-conductor of the Concertgebouw, and has conducted at Bayreuth, and in capitals around the globe. There are 65 operas in his repertory, and innumerable symphonic works. And this week he adds, belatedly, another famous city to his worldwide collection.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398

JAN 25 1973 New England Newsclip

Jochum Conducts Boston Symphony

BOSTON — Eugen Jochum makes his first appearances conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight at 8, Friday at 2 p.m. and Saturday at 8.30 p.m.

Jochum opens each concert with Handel's Overture to "Agrippina," follows it with Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in C ("Jupiter") and Shubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and closes each concert with Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel. He will appear with the Boston Symphony for only these concerts during the winter program.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264

JAN 29 1973 New England Newsclip

BSO responds to Jochum with 'warm, full sound'

For almost 50 years, Eugen Jochum has been conducting leading orchestras around the world, but not until three Symphony Hall concerts this past weekend had he stood before the Boston Symphony.

Mr. Jochum is a tall, trim man with silvery hair, a no-nonsense manner, and a firm, controlled beat, which bespeaks authority but not crushing pressure. In its turn, the orchestra responded to him with a warm, full sound, and precise playing of a sort not always evident on some occasions of late.

The weekend program that Mr. Jochum had chosen demonstrated the solidity of his approach: Handel's Overture to "Agrippina" (a BSO first), Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, the Schubert No. 8 ("Unfinished"), and Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel" — four substantial works to challenge any director or performer, if hardly unfamiliar territory for most listeners.

* * *

What was different was the end result, in each case, where Mr. Jochum's strong interpretative hand was concerned. He had reseated the orchestra in certain sections, with violas changing places with cellos, with some noticeable increase in the sonority of these two choirs. But more than anything else was the feeling of individuality and finish that he imparted at least to the three well known program selections.

The Handel was stylishly majestic, and the "Jupiter," somewhat more deliberately paced than usual, emerged finally in all its grandeur as Mozart with an autumnal patina — a real departure from the norm hereabouts.

* * *

Perhaps Mr. Jochum's searching approach was best illustrated by the Schubert "Unfinished," which, in a skillful application of tonal light and shade, revealed unexpected dimensions in this music. His handling of the Andante was especially perceptive and moving, and the musicians themselves displayed an alertness toward his wishes that resulted in a powerful, reconstituted performance.

In Mr. Jochum's eyes, the "Merry Pranks" which Strauss relates in "Till Eulenspiegel" contain a twist of irony and extremism best conveyed by vivid contrasts. This was an unusually pictorial reading of a work already inherently descriptive, and it made a great impression on the audience as had the Schubert, in particular. On Friday, Mr. Jochum's welcome to Boston was expressed with unqualified enthusiasm on the platform and in the hall.

L. Sn.

PHOENIX
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 25,000

JAN 30 1973 New England Newsclip

Ear Trumpet: Facing Both Ways

By Richard Buell

The seventy-year-old Eugen Jochum, who was in town last week to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in recordings ~~(for D.G.G.)~~ and concerts, is an almost paradigmatic gentleman of the old German school. He has never recorded music by any but German or Austrian composers. His programs with the Bamberg Symphony, which is this year making its first American tour (the last stop is Boston's Symphony Hall on March 19) are hardly insurrectionary; the modern works are Hindemith's Mathos der Maler Symphony; and the French Suite (After Rameau) of Werner Egk (born 1091), whose operas The Magic Fiddle (Die Zaubergeige) and Betrothal in Santo Domingo are so little known in this country: "No, I don't play Stockhausen," he replied to a question put to him at a press conference at the New England Conservatory.

Biographical data are helpful in any appreciation of Jochum's echt Deutsch virtues. He followed what many still regard as the ideal route for learning the conductor's craft: from a musical household (the elder Jochum was the town of Babenhausen's conductor of both Palestrina and Franz Lehar) to Gymnasium to conservatory; working his way up in his twenties through a succession of provincial opera houses. He eventually received the benediction of Wilhelm Furtwaengler; he declined an engagement with the New York Philharmonic in 1929; in Berlin, he organized musical affairs for the radio in the late Weimar period, moving to Hamburg ("a liberal city that Hitler did not like to visit") in 1934 as successor to Karl Muck an ex-B.S.O. conductor) and Karl Boehm. He stayed in Hamburg for fifteen years.

It was in Munich' whose Bavarian State Radio Orchestra he took over in 1949, that he made the first recording (released here on Decca DL 9706) of that peculiarly Teutonic adumbration of cock-rock, Carl Orff's Carmina Burana. Carmin's high soprano part was terribly taxing for soloist Elfride Troetschel, Maestro Jochum recalled; what appeared on record was a masterpiece of tape splicing. His second recording of the work, also for D.G.G., but in Berlin, featured Gundula Janowitz, and "it gave her no trouble whatever," he pronounced approvingly.

Records have largely been responsible for Jochum's reputation in this country. Of the nearly seventy operas in his repertory, he has conducted Lohengrin, Der Freischuetz, Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail, Cosi fan Tutte for D.G.G. He has seasoned opinions on opera: e.g., that the regiseur has usurped interpretive powers in European opera houses and is free to commit unpardonably anti-musical offenses; that the recitatives in Clemenza di Tito, an opera he loves, are too long and not good, and should be replaced by a responsible modern composer.

He declared himself pleased with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Not only one of the best in America, but one of the world's best, and "quick, like the Berliner Philharmoniker." The Mozart Jupiter and the Schubert Unfinished are what he and the orchestra are doing for D.G.G.

The story of the Bamberg Symphony, whose March concert here will benefit the New England Conservatory, is interesting as history. For this group may be the original "Refugee Philharmonic," founded as it was by Germans who, advisedly, had fled Czechoslovakia at the end of World War Two. Bamberg, as one of the few cities left standing in the area, was a likely place to put down stakes, and this ancient little city has been their base of operations — much recording and touring — ever since.

Whoever attends their concert, an all-Beethoven one, will surely carry away a generous quantity of inspissated German culture.

They'd None of Them Be Missed Department. Who, or what, can justify the continued appearance on WBUR of DeKoven, the internationally-acclaimed music-appreciationist, as I believe he calls himself? His information is so meagre, his taste so horrid, and the technical quality of his program is not at all superior to that of short-wave radio on a bad night. And the tenor of his enthusiasm for "Barococo" music, preferably on the longunavailable Concert Hall and Allegro labels, suggests that he ought to consult an endocrinologist.

Next. Early on Saturday evenings, when there is a drought of classical music on the radio, WCRB fouls the ether with an interview program called "Ps and Qs," which is conducted, mostly in the treble range, by a former Miss Massachusetts. Miss Linda Anne Preen, or whatever your name is, why are you doing this to us? If you do it much longer, I'm giving your name and address to the nearest Arab slave-trading ship.

There is news of creative ferment in the innards of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Not only is high-class firewater now served in the bars in Symphony Hall's Cabot-Cahners Room (before, during, after concerts); not only that, but contemporary music ensemble has emerged from the ranks of the orchestra's members. Collage is its name, and the group will make its Boston Debut on Friday, February 2, in Jordan Hall (tickets $2; $.50 with student I.D.) Counting heads, I see that they comprise a nonet (two winds, three strings, one piano, one percussion, one singer, one dancer), but numbers vary as needs arrive. Moderns from Virgil Thomson and Francis Poulenc to Gilbert Amy, Roger Reynolds and Morton Feldman are part of their repertory. However, they aim to be known as a Boston group and are friendly to local composers.

The rehearsal I attended was in the spirit of an old-fashioned New England quilting bee (that is, cooperative and sociable in the interests of tangible accomplishment) than that of a symphony orchestra rehearsal, which can be authoritarian, ugly, anarchic, and many other things. Crises of interpretation were puzzled out with a seeming absence of ego. Player remarked to conductor: "Sorry, Jerry, I couldn't follow you at all there!" Bassist inquired how many bars rest he had. Clarinetist gratefully takes note of a rare place to catch a breath. In ways, an atmosphere of each-one-teach-one. But Contrast this to what Gunther Schuller remembers of rehearsing his opera Visitation at the Hamburg opera. "The concertmaster secretly took the score home to study. He didn't want the other players to know he was doing it."

The program on the 2nd will include Synchronisms No. 2 of Mario Davidovsky (a composer endorsed even, by Aaron Copland); Ocean de Terre by Oliver Knussen; Tibor Pusztai's Nocturnes; and pieces by Robert Seely, Robert Selig and Lukas Foss.

BOSTON HERALD TRAVELE
RECORD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 312,885
JAN 27 1973
New England Newsclip

Conductor Jochum in Boston Debut

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

The conductor Eugen Jochum is known to have rather conservative ideas about programming. During an interview the other day, for instance, he was asked if he were bringing any contemporary music on his spring tour with the Bamburg Symphony Orchestra. He said, yes, he was—Hindemith's 'Mathis der Maler."

With an answer like that, one should not have been too surprised at the program he selected for his Thursday night debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was about as adventuresome as the listening list in a freshman music appreciation course.

HANDEL, Overture to "Agrippina;" Mozart, Symphony No. 41 ("Jupiter"); Schubert, Symphony No. 8 ("Unfinished"); and Strauss, "Til Eulenspiegels lustige Streiche." All of them (excepting perhaps the Handel) familiar masterworks.

Putting them together on one program need not have seemed like a bunch of gray textbook examples, however, had they been performed with any kind of intensity or personality.

However, for the most part, it was the standard "Jupiter" the standard "Unfinished" that we got, with a slightly more lively "Till."

THE FIRST movement of the Mozart seemed to have all its edges smoothed and the dynamics, as in most everything that followed, were rigidly contained particularly in the direction of loudness. I kept waiting to hear an out-and-out, real risk-taking fortissimo, but was disappointed at most of the climactic moments.

The second movement deviated from the straight arrow approach taken in the other movements and seemed too slow and fused up with ritards and, for some reason, Jochum would not observe the repeats here although he did so in the first movement. The last movement was performed so under wraps that there was no excitement to be had from a movement that is naturally very exciting.

I love the Schubert "Unfinished." Performed well (I still recall Solti's performance last spring) it can be really hair-raising. But, Thursday it sounded quite stodgy. That opening, which builds from nothing to great climactic B-minor chord, ought to take you right off the seat, but it seldom does and it didn't Thursday night.

ALSO, loving that opening the way I do, I really relish getting to hear it a second time when the Exposition is repeated, and I missed that too in this performance.

The best thing on the program was a really puckish and fun performance of the Strauss that featured some fine horn solos by Charles Kavaloski.

• Concert Review

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
JAN 31 1973
New England Newsclip

In Concert

Machine-Styled Music

By David Noble

When it was announced that Eugen Jochum would conduct twice in Boston this season, many who had learned who Bruckner was from the conductor's famous (and excellent) recordings were pleased.

Some of the glow that surrounded the prospect was dimmed when it became known that Jochum's programs were lists that would have been superconservative in 1953, let alone this year — Mozart and Schubert with the BSO and all-Beethoven with the Bamberg Symphony in Symphony Hall.

Waiting To Hear

But still, it was Jochum, and many of us went to Symphony Hall late last week to hear what he would do with the "Jupiter" and the "Unfinished," with "Till Eulenspiegel" and Handel's "Agrippina" overture thrown in for variety. But it quickly became apparent that the semi-mystical style the conductor had achieved with such marvelous effect in his Bruckner records was to be applied with equal fervor to everything he performed.

The Handel was a ghostly relic of those days when LP records were new, and baroque music had just been rediscovered and hundreds of issues of Vivaldi and Corelli were filling record shelves. Many of those early-Fifties goldies were played by some Rundfunk Orchester or another in the south of Germany, and they sounded just like the "Agrippina" excerpt did Saturday night: Big, modern orchestra sound without continuo, string bowing a little too ripe for Brahms, and no more rhythmic pointing than a rolling pancake has. A few bars in the allegro section took a broad, expressive turn that coincidentally had a "Bruckneriana" geometry, and for precisely those seconds things sounded grand in a way that would have amazed Handel.

Clues

Mozart's 41st Symphony and Schubert's 8th were fed into the same style machine. Surprisingly, Mozart turned out a better proto-Brucknerian than did Schubert. The reason for that was suggested in the BSO's program, book, where the annotator pointed out that the "Jupiter" anticipates, or creates, romantic ways of constructing music more than any other Mozart symphony. A good thing, too, is all I can add. In most of Mozart's music, if the conductor ignores gradations of volume and articulation in middle voices and generally lets the proportions take care of themselves while he pursues a long line he thinks he finds in the music, the result is cabbage soup. This time there was something left — there is a long, grand line explicit in much of the 41st, but still it needs respectable articulation.

On the Schubert let us not dwell. It can take a lot of twisting, but not a treatment that gets so wrapped up in details that the focal tones and sonorities are nearly overlooked.

Good Blend

At last, at the end of the program, came a work from the generation just before Jochum's, a Richard Strauss tone poem dating from 1895. Jochum's conducting style and the musical structure of "Till Eulenspiegel" dovetailed warmly at first — the beginning was almost old Viennese — and blindingly well later, as the orchestra woke up and began to produce some real tone. The last five minutes were satisfying even to a listener who has attended Reiner's "Zarathustra."

The real problem with Jochum's Boston "season" is that both the concerts he is doing here were planned under strictly commercial auspices — the BSO appearance was really a warmup for a DG recording of the Mozart and the Schubert, while his all-Beethoven Hall program is a benefit. On neither occasion, apparently, could they afford the luxury of thinking about esoteric matters of musical style.

It really needn't be that way. A recording of the "Till" achieved by Jochum and the BSO might not be a commercial disaster, and you'd think that Brahms, if not Bruckner, could be slipped into a concert intended for wide appeal. The Beethoven program will be played March 19.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398
JAN 30 1973
New England Newsclip

Steinberg Returns To BSO Tuesday

BOSTON — On Tuesday at 8.30 p. m. former music director William Steinberg will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Wagner's Overture to "Der fliegende Hollander," Saint-Saens' Cello concerto no. 1 in A minor, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor.

Jules Eskin, principal cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is soloist.

New York Post
D. 623,245 SAT. 554,797
JAN 26 1973

Bostonians Return Feb. 7

The Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its fourth appearance here this season in its Philharmonic Hall series Feb. 7 at 8:30 p.m. William Steinberg will conduct the program of Janacek's "Taras Bulba" and Bruckner's Symphony No. 5 in B Flat Major which will be repeated Feb. 9.

SOUTH MIDDLESEX DAILY NEWS
FRAMINGHAM, MA.
JAN 27 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO extra concert

BOSTON — Se who becomes Symphony Orch
music director conduct an ex
the benef
Orchestra's
Sunday, Fe
Sunday
with Be "Le C follow
Piano
Alex solo Sy distr closes wi from "The Mandarin."

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398
JAN 30 1973
New England Newsclip

Ozawa Conducting BSO Pension Benefit

BOSTON — Seiji Ozawa, who becomes the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 15th music director this fall, will conduct an extra concert for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund Sunday evening, Feb. 18, at 8.30 p.m.

The concert opens with Berlioz' Overture to "Le carnaval romain," followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 4 with Alexis Weissenberg as soloist, then Haydn's Symphony no. 60 "Il distratto." The concert closes with Bartok's suite from "The miraculous mandarin." Piano Tickets for this concert range from $10 to $4.50 and are available at the Symphony Hall box office, Boston.

THE LEDGER
BROOKLINE, MASS.
W. 8,500
JAN 26 1973
New England Newsclip

Steinberg returns to symphony

On Tuesday, January 30, at 8:30 p.m., former Music Director William Steinberg will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Wagner's Overture to "Der fliegende Hollander", Saint-Saens' Cello concerto no. 1 in A minor, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony no. 5 in E minor. Jules Eskin, principal cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is soloist.

Steinberg retired from his post in Boston at the end of last season and is now Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony. He led concerts not only in Boston, in New York and in many other American cities, but also in the music centers of England, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain and France. He has the distinction of being a founder of the Israel Philharmonic.

Eskin, principal cello of the Boston Symphony, came to Boston in 1964 from the Cleveland Orchestra, where he held the same chair for three years under George Szell's direction. He was with the Dallas Symphony and was later first cellist of the New York City Opera and Ballet Orchestra. For three years he played with Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico, and at the Marlboro Music Festival with Casals, Alexander Schneider and Rudolf Serkin. He is on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and is a member of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

58

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264

FEB 5 1973 New England Newsclip

Touching all the bases with the Boston Symphony

Musicians display skills at Symphony Hall and as Collage, Chamber Players, and professors-to-be

By Louis Snyder

Neither rain nor snow nor ice nor blow kept Boston Symphony members from a variety of appointments over the weekend. While the weather reduced the sizes of audiences, BSO musicians turned up to participate in a number of enterprises.

At Boston University's ceremonial Castle on Friday morning, acting dean Norman Dello Joio of the university's School of Fine and Applied Arts announced to the press a new and functional link between BU and BSO. Five of the orchestra's first desk players — Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Harold Wright, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon, and Charles Kavaloski, French horn — will join the school's faculty with the title of Adjunct Professors of Music, and will become a performing unit as the Boston University Woodwind Quintet.

Initially, two open rehearsals and concerts will be given yearly for university audiences, with the eventual possibility that the quintet will concertize independently when its teaching, orchestral, and Boston Symphony Chamber Players commitments permit.

The affiliation had its basis in BU's intention to expand its faculty for woodwind studies. Mr. Gomberg, representing his other colleagues, approached Mr. Dello Joio with the suggestion that their experience in both the orchestral and chamber music field might be of value to the university for ensemble as well as individual instruction.

With confirmation of the arrangement between BU and the BSO musicians, the five will be able to concentrate their teaching activities in one Boston location, with the further advantage of continuing to function as a woodwind performing unit. Aside from having private pupils, all five artists have taught on the university or conservatory level, Mr. Gomberg's and Mr. Walt's affiliation with BU dating back to 1956.

Although the five musicians' appointments at the university are not effective until next September, Mr. Dello Joio announced that the BU Woodwind Quintet would be one of the attractions in a newly instituted Sunday concert series being held this winter and spring in Stamford, Conn., at Treetops, the estate bequeathed to the university for musical uses by the late Libby Holman.

BSO's Strauss fest

At Symphony Hall, William Steinberg had put together a mini-Richard Strauss festival for weekend subscribers. Thanks to the obvious affinity the BSO's former music director brought to the music, and some stunning playing by the orchestra and soloists from among its own ranks, this proliferation of plummily orchestrated pieces, generously laced with showy theatrical programmatic references, worked more effectively than might have been expected.

Mr. Steinberg's choices from the Strauss canon were deft and varied: the Suite from "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," the "fantastic variations on a theme of knightly character" better known as "Don Quixote," and the "Dance of the Seven Veils" from "Salome."

What came out of the program, in addition to Mr. Steinberg's constantly discerning touch, was some exceptionally listenable playing by cellist Jules Eskin and violist Burton Fine (in "Don Quixote"), concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and pianist Newton Wayland (in "Gentilhomme"), and numerous others whom Strauss favors with shorter but nevertheless telling passages. And perhaps most unexpected was a simple revelation of the scope of the composer whose idiom is usually considered so easily identifiable as to be classified as invariable.

Side by side, however, there proved to be considerable difference in Strauss's treatment of those determined eccentrics Monsieur Jordain, Don Quixote and Sancho Panza, and Salome. Using the same tonal palette, he produced a variegated Fragonard mural to depict Moliere's nouveau rich man, the firm and wispy strokes of a Goya for Cervantes's knight errant and his subaltern, and a thick, Bakst-like brush to capture the lurid exoticism of Herod's court.

From each composition emerged strong characters shaped in musical language — the "Bourgeois Gentilhomme" adrift in opulence come true, the Don and Sancho always one fantastic step behind brutal reality, the Judean princess irretrievably headed for self-destruction. There they were — all familiar Strauss, but as different as night and day. The Friday audience seemed glad they had braved the elements to come.

Collage's Boston debut

Unfamiliarity was the keynote of Collage, the contemporary music ensemble of the Boston Symphony, which made its Boston debut on Friday evening in Jordan Hall. Its first appearance at Tanglewood, reviewed during the summer, left no doubt about the forward looking aspirations of these nine perfirmers, six of them BSO musicians: Frank Epstein, percussion; Ronald Feldman, cello; Paul Fried, flute; Ronald Knudsen, violin; Felix Viscuglia, clarinet, and Lawrence Wolfe, double bass. Associated with the group are Ina Hahn, dancer; Joan Heller, soprano, and Christopher Kies, piano.

Friday's program included two premieres — Robert Selig's 1971 quartet, "The Three Seasons of Autumn," and Oliver Knussen's recently completed "Ocean de Terre," which Jerome Rosen conducted. Tibor Pusztai conducted the first Boston performance of his "Nocturnes." Other works played were Mario Davidovsky's "Synchronisms No. 2," Robert Ceely's Hymn for Cello and Bass, and the Lukas Foss "Time Cycle."

Sydeman Duo in Cambridge

An established BSO adjunct, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, had more favorable weather in the streets when they performed on Sunday afternoon at Sanders Theater, Cambridge. Their program scheduled a novelty too — William Sydeman's Duo for Trumpet and Percussion which was to be bracketed by Carl Nielsen's Woodwind Quintet, Op. 43, and the Dvorak Piano Quartet in E flat, with Philip Kalisch as guest pianist.

BSO first desk woodwind players (seated) Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Sherman Walt, and (standing, from left) Charles Kavaloski, Harold Wright, and Ralph Gomberg. They will become adjunct professors in Boston University's music division in September, and will form the BU Woodwind Quintet.

Cellists' musical chairs

Stephen Geber, currently a member of the cello section of the Boston Symphony, has been chosen by music director Lorin Maazel to be first cellist of the Cleveland Orchestra beginning next season. He succeeds William Stokking, also a former BSO cellist, who moves to the first desk of the Philadelphia Orchestra in 1973-74.

New duties in the wind

PEDDLER
BROOKLINE, MASS.
13,000

New England Newsclip

FEB 10 1973

5 from BSO to teach at BU Music

Five distinguished musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra have accepted appointments to Boston University, effective September 1973, Norman Dello Joio, acting dean of the University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, announced today. The five, all principal players with the Symphony, are Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist, Ralph Gomberg, oboist, Harold Wright, clarinetist, Sherman Walt, bassoonist, and Charles Kavaloski, French horn player. They join Boston University Professors of Music as Adjunct Professors of Music and as a performing ensemble, to be called the Boston University Woodwind Quintet. Each of the five will continue to hold his first-chair position with the Boston Symphony in addition to the University appointments.

Dean Dello Joio explained that the five artists had sought the group appointment from Boston University because they wished to consolidate their teaching assignments in one location in the city and to remain together as a performing quintet. Gomberg and Walt have held teaching associate positions at Boston University since 1956.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

FEB 8 1973 New England Newsclip

In Concert

Sounds from a Ghetto

By David Noble
Patriot Ledger Correspondent

The Boston Symphony and other major music institutions have started to meet criticism of their conservatism in repertory by giving separate contemporary concerts — BSO's "Spectrum" series is a modified example, and one which makes clear some of the problems this "ghetto" approach to new music raises.

Impatient with this situation, a few BSO players have joined with a couple of free-lancers to do new music themselves, on their own time, concentrating on music by local composers. There was much publicity, and the idea was good, but the Boston debut of "Collage," the Contemporary Music Ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bogged down in musical and conceptual problems last Friday night in Jordan Hall.

For openers, there was the program, a 2½-hour list of tightly constructed music mostly written by Boston composers. Boston's composers strike a high average, as those things go, but there wasn't much fun or light music in the evening. It still was a new-music ghetto.

On top of this, the "Collage" players haven't really achieved the consistent firmness of rhythm and timbre needed by the music they do. This is like the problems the BSO Chamber Players have playing with chamber-music flexibility. In both cases the orchestra's heavy work schedule, and the narrowness of its repertory, inevitably influence the performing styles of the players, capable though they be.

Most successful Friday were the first two works performed: Synchronism No. 2 by Mario Davidovsky, a witty modern classic for four instruments with tape obbligato, and a Hymn for Cello and Bass by Robert Ceely of the New England Conservatory, which was dramatic and shapely despite an underachieved double bass part.

A "Quartet: Three Seasons of Autumn" by Robert Selig, also of the Conservatory, began nicely as a quiet, moody instrumental work that sounded like the music of George Crumb (except that the counterpoint was interesting) and continued with a pleasantly contrasting second movement with Joan Heller as a wordless soprano in jazzy rhythms. But the last movement, all-instrumental again, was simply too long — I understand there was trouble in reading the hand-copied parts.

A group of "Nocturnes" performed by Miss Heller and a chamber orchestra wired for sound was obscured by a modern dancer who projected strong tensions under baby blue light. The music was indeed tense — perhaps awkwardly so — but a reading of its nightmarish Rilke texts after the concert suggested that there may have been reasons for this. Composer Tibor Pustai conducted his work capably, and did an astonishingly good job of deploying the sound apparatus involved, but he would have done better to leave the dancer out and the lights on, so his text leaflet could have been followed by the audience.

Miss Heller returned to sing "Ocean de terre" by Oliver Knussen, a young composer long touted as a prodigy who has written some lovely music in the past few years. Not this time, though: the academic serial structure of this new work stultified his fresh creative ear, a circumstance made even more irritating by the unfailing excellence of his scoring.

"Time Cycle," a half hour-long contemporary repertory piece by Lukas Foss, ended the program for those who stayed.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528

New England Newsclip

FEB 10 1973

Five Hub Musicians Named to Boston

Five musicians fr
Boston Symphony C have accepted app to Boston Unive fective Septe
Norman Dello
dean of the School of Fin
Arts announc
The five players wi are Doric flautist, oboist clarine basso
Ka pla
U
F

ALLSTON-BRIGHTON
CITIZEN ITEM
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 8,900

FEB 8 1973 New England Newsclip

5 from BSO to teach at BU Music

Five distinguished musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra have accepted appointments to Boston University, effective September 1973, Norman Dello Joio, acting dean of the University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, announced today. The five, all principal players with the Symphony, are Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist, Ralph Gomberg, oboist, Harold Wright, clarinetist, Sherman Walt, bassoonist, and Charles Kavaloski, French horn player. They join Boston University Professors of Music as Adjunct Professors of Music and as a performing ensemble, to be called the Boston University Woodwind Quintet. Each of the five will continue to hold his first-chair position with the Boston Symphony in addition to the University appointments.

Dean Dello Joio explained that the five artists had sought the group appointment from Boston University because they wished to consolidate their teaching assignments in one location in the city and to remain together as a performing quintet. Gomberg and Walt have held teaching associate positions at Boston University since 1956.

MICHAEL STEINBERG

BSO's Strauss worth a rainy trip

It was a day for polar bears, ice-skaters and seals, enough to keep a lot of just people from going to hear the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon. Those who did manage to wade or skid or swim to the hall were rewarded with a beautiful concert. The program was all by Richard Strauss — the suite from "Le bourgeois gentilhomme," "Don Quixote," and "Salome's Dance" — with William Steinberg to conduct and Jules Eskin as cello soloist.

Strauss advised conductors to handle "Salome" and "Elektra" as though dealing with Mendelssohnian fairy-music. He knew he wrote a terrible lot of notes (Mozart, after all, was his favorite composer, and he had standards), and he knew that his rhetoric was emphatic. He was also a great conductor, and he knew that there was a way of conducting Strauss "like Mendelssohn," delicately and with restraint. That still won't make it sound like "Midsummer Night's Dream," not to mention Mozart, but it will produce a performance to show what a good composer Strauss was.

About William Steinberg it is a curious thing. His conducting has weight: the basses are really solid, the middle of the texture is richly filled out, metrical accents are firm. The feel of it all is apt to be blunt rather than sharp. There is quite a range of music in which his work can be disagreeably heavy, but somehow Strauss always brings out in him a delicious lightness. The music is transparent, the rhythm has spring. The jokes are funny, but they are quietly told — in fact, there is no shouting or lapel-grabbing ever. Less is more, and in that respect, Steinberg's conducting of Strauss is much — and admirably — like Strauss's own.

"Le bourgeois gentilhomme" can seem arch and precious, but Steinberg, playing it straight and with the lightest possible touch, found in it only the masterfulness of the writing. The playing was very fizzy, very gentle, very right.

With "Don Quixote," the flavor of th event changed. It had been delightful, and now it was profoundly moving. It is a glorious work, funny, tender, imaginative (Xenakis, Penderecki, and the rest of the fluttertongue boys come and go, but still those sheep in "Don Quixote" knock you on your ear every time), and nowhere did Strauss more successfully solve the problem of how to integrate pictorial or narrative detail into a large and musically coherent structure. The performance was a wonderfully understanding revelation of the piece, with just the right balance of trees and wood, of affection and irony.

Steinberg and the orchestra provided the ideal framework, and inside that, Eskin drew the Don's portrait with wonderful sense of character, also playing the instrument beautifully, with Burton Fine, Sancho Panza-as-viola, doing a superb job of support and comment.

Count on Strauss always to know how to end a piece. The epilogue in "Don Quixote" is so beautiful altogether, the last two chords with their soft cymbal wipes in particular, that I felt they had to be left untouched — so, with apologies to St. Mark, Oscar Wilde, Lord Alfred Douglas, Dr. Strauss, and all others concerned, I admit that I ran before Salome danced.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
FEB 5 1973
New England Newsclip

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,549
FEB 9 1973

Admirable Playing Of Bostonians Lifts Strauss's 'Quixote'

By RAYMOND ERICSON

The Richard Strauss program in which William Steinberg led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Philharmonic Hall on Wednesday night began with one of the composer's less often played works, the Suite from "Le bourgeois gentilhomme." For all its rarity on the local concert scene, it turned out to be the least interesting part of the evening.

There is a great deal of musical skill in the work's assembly, but it is too often a not very witty pastiche or commentary. Despite the use of a small orchestra, the touch is never light. The work was not helped by Mr. Steinberg's much too gentlemanly reading and by a lack of ensemble among the players.

Conductor and orchestra came into their own with an admirable performance of "Don Quixote." Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the orchestra, played his solo role with exceptional sensitivity.

He does not produce a big tone, and he tried to make up for it with an intensity that roughened the sound and even made a string collapse. But the delicate lyricism of his performance, particularly toward the end, was quite memorable. Burton Fine's Sancho Panza, as embodied in the viola solo, couldn't have been better, and Mr. Steinberg's understanding of the score was matched by a loving performance from the orchestra.

The Dance of the Seven Veils from "Salome" closed the program. It generated some excitement, but not enough to erase memories of the good Don.

BOSTON HERALD TRAVELER & RECORD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 312,885
FEB 3 1973
New England Newsclip

Adroit Choice by Symphony

By DAVID NOBLE

This weekend's Boston Symphony program conducted by William Steinberg, contains a couple of adroit choices — call them "Music by Richard Strauss for People Who Don't Like Richard Strauss."

The works chosen are, with one easily avoided exception, among the most delicious in that composer's large output, and all are rather different from each other, as his music goes.

The suite from Strauss's incidental music to Moliere's comedy drama, "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," is particularly outstanding in the composer's work. Taking off from (and in a couple of movements quoting) the music of Lully, who provided songs and dances for the first production of the play in the middle of the 17th century, Strauss's work has a delicacy and reticence surpassing to those who know him through his tone poems.

Only three dozen members of the orchestra were needed for the suite — it was especially amusing to see only one trumpet and one trombone seated for a Strauss performance. What they played was, for the most part, more of a gentlemanly run-through of the music than a performance.

The overture was skimmed lightly, and the first minuet tripped over some pseudo-French rhythmic pointings Strauss had indulged in. The vigorous "Fencing Master" music was a minor disaster of insecure individual solos, except in the case of trombonist Gordon Hallberg, who cut through brightly and cleanly.

• Concert Review

From then on, though, things were brought back into partial focus by two most accomplished musicians: BSO concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Lully.

Siverstein's extended solo in the polonaise smacked more of Odessa than Warsaw, but it was excellently played and marvelous to hear.

Lully provided the thematic material for the middle movements of Strauss's suite, and Lully-translated-by-Strauss seemed to be much more suited to the players' mood than Strauss in his own right. A minuet and a processional constructed around stately tunes by Lully gained a fluent, murmuring quality in the performance (a nice Courante, also based on Lully, was omitted in yesterday's performance).

Thus lulled by Strauss's musical time traveling, the players carried some of the warmth they had gained into the suite's last movements. The final waltz needed more lively rhythm and instrumental sting, but it had a playful Straussian ambience just right for a Moliere dinner party.

After intermission came "Don Quixote," a tone poem nearly an hour long written as something of a cello concerto. Written in 1897, near the end of Strauss's tone poem period (and nearly 15 years before the "Bourgeois" music), it sums up the delights of his musical gains from the imposing "Macbeth" to the crazy-quilt "Till Eulenspiegel" in orchestrations usually kept shrewdly light so the solo cello which represents the Don can speak with an authoritative voice.

"Authoritative" isn't the word for the playing contributed by Jules Eskin, the BSO's principal cellist; "masterful," perhaps, in this case. He solved beyond argument the music's conflict between accurate rhythmic pointing and broad, expansive phrasing. Even better, he projected the work's stagey but real tenderness in all but a few places.

Principal violist Burton Fine, cast by the score as Sancho Panza, played cleanly and incisively, but without Eskin's expressive breadth of line.

The full orchestra was seated for this work; it looked awfully big after one had seen the small band used earlier. It played very well, too, but received only a minimal direction that concentrated, not too closely, on large effects but left many crucial small things to accident. The bizarre "sheep" episode was less sharply played than it had been as a jocular reference in the "Bourgeois" suite half an hour earlier.

The last variation and finale of the tone poem were played with earnest tenderness — too earnest, perhaps. The artificiality of sentiment that is necessary to a first-rate Strauss performance was missing (one of the reasons Reiner was such a fine Strauss conductor was a certain coarseness in his interpretative fiber).

The program ended with the "Dance of the Seven Veils" written by Strauss for his opera, "Salome."

Hub Debut of Contemporary Music Ensemble

Collage Should Have Been Better

By ELLEN PFEIFER

Collage, the contemporary music ensemble composed mainly of BSO musicians and the soprano Joan Heller, made its Boston debut Friday night at Jordan Hall with a program that featured works by Boston-based composers. For this listener, it was not a joyful evening.

With few exceptions, the music seemed tedious, pretentious, full of 20th Century cliches, and apt to take itself too seriously. I may be in the minority, however, to judge by the youthful audience's friendly response to the performances.

Of the works by Boston composers, I found Robert Ceely's "Hymn for Cello and Bass" the most successful. To quote his program note, "the composition thrives on a strangely convincing alteration of heightened, hypertense "Schelomo" rhetoric with a severe note-against-note counterpoint almost of medieval stamp."

Actually, I'm not so sure how "strange" the alteration was but it did work. The opening, which features a single prolonged interval that goes from very soft to loud and from non-vibrato to intense wide vibrato with a number of subtle variations in the basic pitches, was particularly attractive.

Robert Selig's Quartet: "The Three Seasons of Autumn" was the least successful and most pretentious, the two outer movements rather faceless and tiresome, the inner movement (with soprano vocalise) sentimental and of movie-score cuteness.

Tibor Pusztai's "Nocturnes" was a piece I would like to hear again, because there is so much going on that one's perception is rather overloaded.

I must admit that Iwas so entranced by the muscle-contracting dances performer by Ina Hahn and by the extraordinary expressiveness of Joan Heller's singing that the rest of the textures really didn't register.

What that says about Hahn's dancing, Heller's singing or Pusztai's music I'm not certain which is why I need another listening-viewing.

Oliver Knussen's just completed "Ocean de terre," I found nicely evocative of submarine regions and again. Heller's singing displayed fine word-sense, but it was rather longer than it needed to be.

Davidovsky's Synchronism No. 2 and Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle" completed a program that ran about 2½ hours. Much, much too long for any concert, even of masterwords and such was not the case Friday.

BOSTON HERALD TRAVELER & RECORD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 312,885
FEB 5 1973
New England Newsclip

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500
FEB 8 1973
New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: ALL-STRAUSS (RICHARD)

The advance billing for William Steinberg's return visit to the Boston Symphony Orchestra called for Bruckner's Fifth Symphony, but, for what ever the reason, the concert turned out to be all-Strauss.

Now right few are the composers with the weight to bear an "all-" for the program, and at first blush one might think that a menu consisting of zed but Richard Strauss—a "quasi-genius," Bruno Walter once termed him—would leave the listener feeling that he was consuming a meal consisting entirely of Linzer torte. Yet, with canny selection among the mass of what is tawdry or overblown or dated or simply overworked in Strauss, a conductor can put together a couple of hours of thoroughly absorbing music-making. And that is just what Mr. Steinberg succeeded in doing at Symphony last weekend with the "suite from 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme'," "Don Quixote" and the "Dance of the Seven Veils from 'Salome'."

The fairly unfamiliar Suite derives from the opera "Ariadne auf Naxos," the Strauss - Hofmannsthal treatment of Moliere's "The Bourgeois Gentilhomme." Each of the nine movements is discreet in its treatment of the musical and textual subject at hand, although showing in common among them a spark and exuberant kitsch. "My score, as a score," Strauss with characteristic modesty wrote to Hofmannsthal just before its initial performance, "is truly a masterpiece which will not soon be imitated." He wasn't so far off the mark.

There is nothing quasi about the genius of the inspiration of the "Don Quixote" variations, and its playing is almost by definition an event. The bleating of the sheep and the wind machine may by now be old hat tricks, but the theme and finale and the intervening ten variations in their totality remain perhaps the summit in the employment of music for pictorial description. In this connection the printed identificaiton of each variation in the Program Bulletin, which accords with Strauss' own practice in conducting the work, aids immensely in approaching the unfolding of the tale. Description apart, the music, of course, stands very solidly on its own merits. One would have to go some to find passages that for sheer rapturousness exceed the Fifth Variation, "Vision of Dulcinea," or can match the serenity and resignation of the death of the Don in the finale.

Jules Eskin and Burton Fine, the orchestra's principal cellist and violinist, were the redoubtable soloists. While hardly evocative of the great tradition of the Feuermann - Primrose collaborations of an earlier generation, their rendering was a comfortably strong and beautifully crafted one that managed to get inside the score. The orchestra had occasion to rejoice in the quality of its principals.

The "Dance of the Seven Veils" was somewhat anti-climactic. Indeed, I had forgotten that it was on the program and had to be hauled back to my seat by my companion. It is amazing how after all these years Salome's welter of sound contrives to remain so effectually erotic. Mr. Steinberg, who gives the impression to have forgotten more about the post-romantic composers than most of the younger contemporary men on the podium ever knew, is a conductorial aristocrat not given to opening all the stops. Such a filip here might have conferred upon the proceedings, which in every other way were admirably handled, the exclamation point that they could have used.

. . . AND THE BSO CHAMBER PLAYERS

Homogeneous programming is the last thing of which the Chamber Players can stand accused.

The second in this year's Sunday afternoon series at Sanders Theatre revealed even more than usual the formidable span of styles, periods, genre and combinations that characterizes these concerts. The very listing of the items pretty well gives the picture: Mozart's arrangement of three Bach preludes for string trio, Sydeman's Duo for trumpet and percussion, Nielsen's woodwind quintet and Dvorak's E flat piano quartet. The honors were done by Mrs. Dwyer and Messrs. Silverstein, Fine, Eskin, Gomber, Wright, Walt, Ghitalla, Firth and Kalish.

The range of difficulty in these pieces runs from the hard to the ferocious, but such was the concentration of artistry in this pool of players that they performed the numbers as if they had endless reserves to draw on. This was not always the case. What is plain, among other things, is that the weeding out process among the woodwind principals in the Symphony, now complete, has borne the richest results. Again the orchestra had occasion to rejoice in the quality of its principals.

MICHAEL STEINBERG

BSO's Strauss worth a rainy trip

It was a day for polar bears, ice-skaters and seals, enough to keep a lot of just people from going to hear the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon. Those who did manage to wade or skid or swim to the hall were rewarded with a beautiful concert. The program was all by Richard Strauss — the suite from "Le bourgeois gentilhomme," "Don Quixote," and "Salome's Dance" — with William Steinberg to conduct and Jules Eskin as cello soloist.

Strauss advised conductors to handle "Salome" and "Elektra" as though dealing with Mendelssohnian fairy-music. He knew he wrote a terrible lot of notes (Mozart, after all, was his favorite composer, and he had standards), and he knew that his rhetoric was emphatic. He was also a great conductor, and he knew that there was a way of conducting Strauss "like Mendelssohn," delicately and with restraint. That still won't make it sound like "Midsummer Night's Dream," not to mention Mozart, but it will produce a performance to show what a good composer Strauss was.

About William Steinberg it is a curious thing. His conducting has weight: the basses are really solid, the middle of the texture is richly filled out, metrical accents are firm. The feel of it all is apt to be blunt rather than sharp. There is quite a range of music in which his work can be disagreeably heavy, but somehow Strauss always brings out in him a delicious lightness. The music is transparent, the rhythm has spring. The jokes are funny, but they are quietly told — in fact, there is no shouting or lapel-grabbing ever. Less is more, and in that respect, Steinberg's conducting of Strauss is much — and admirably — like Strauss's own.

"Le bourgeois gentilhomme" can seem arch and precious, but Steinberg, playing it straight and with the lightest possible touch, found in it only the masterfulness of the writing. The playing was very fizzy, very gentle, very right.

With "Don Quixote," the flavor of the event changed. It had been delightful, and now it was profoundly moving. It is a glorious work, funny, tender, imaginative (Xenakis, Penderecki, and the rest of the fluttertongue boys come and go, but still those sheep in "Don Quixote" knock you on your ear every time), and nowhere did Strauss more successfully solve the problem of how to integrate pictorial or narrative detail into a large and musically coherent structure. The performance was a wonderfully understanding revelation of the piece, with just the right balance of trees and wood, of affection and irony.

Steinberg and the orchestra provided the ideal framework, and inside that, Eskin drew the Don's portrait with wonderful sense of character, also playing the instrument beautifully, with Burton Fine, Sancho Panza-as-viola, doing a superb job of support and comment.

Count on Strauss always to know how to end a piece. The epilogue in "Don Quixote" is so beautiful altogether, the last two chords with their soft cymbal wipes in particular, that I felt they had to be left untouched — so, with apologies to St. Mark, Oscar Wilde, Lord Alfred Douglas, Dr. Strauss, and all others concerned, I admit that I ran before Salome danced.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
FEB 3 1973
New England Newsclip

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,549
FEB 9 1973

Admirable Playing Of Bostonians Lifts Strauss's 'Quixote'

5454

By RAYMOND ERICSON

The Richard Strauss program in which William Steinberg led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Philharmonic Hall on Wednesday night began with one of the composer's less often played works, the Suite from "Le bourgeois gentilhomme." For all its rarity on the local concert scene, it turned out to be the least interesting part of the evening.

There is a great deal of musical skill in the work's assembly, but it is too often a not very witty pastiche or commentary. Despite the use of a small orchestra, the touch is never light. The work was not helped by Mr. Steinberg's much too gentlemanly reading and by a lack of ensemble among the players.

Conductor and orchestra came into their own with an admirable performance of "Don Quixote." Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the orchestra, played his solo role with exceptional sensitivity.

He does not produce a big tone, and he tried to make up for it with an intensity that roughened the sound and even made a string collapse. But the delicate lyricism of his performance, particularly toward the end, was quite memorable. Burton Fine's Sancho Panza, as embodied in the viola solo, couldn't have been better, and Mr. Steinberg's understanding of the score was matched by a loving performance from the orchestra.

The Dance of the Seven Veils from "Salome" closed the program. It generated some excitement, but not enough to erase memories of the good Don.

BOSTON HERALD TRAVELER &
RECORD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 312,885
FEB 3 1973
New England Newsclip

Adroit Choice by Symphony

By DAVID NOBLE

This weekend's Boston Symphony program conducted by William Steinberg, contains a couple of adroit choices — call them "Music by Richard Strauss for People Who Don't Like Richard Strauss."

The works chosen are, with one easily avoided exception, among the most delicious in that composer's large output, and all are rather different from each other, as his music goes.

The suite from Strauss's incidental music to Moliere's comedy drama, "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," is particularly outstanding in the composer's work. Taking off from (and in a couple of movements quoting) the music of Lully, who provided songs and dances for the first production of the play in the middle of the 17th century, Strauss's work has a delicacy and reticence surpassing to those who know him through his tone poems.

Only three dozen members of the orchestra were needed for the suite — it was especially amusing to see only one trumpet and one trombone seated for a Strauss performance. What they played was, for the most part, more of a gentlemanly run-through of the music than a performance.

The overture was skimmed lightly, and the first minuet tripped over some pseudo-French rhythmic pointings Strauss had indulged in. The vigorous "Fencing Master" music was a minor disaster of insecure individual solos, except in the case of trombonist Gordon Hallberg, who cut through brightly and cleanly.

• Concert Review

From then on, though, things were brought back into partial focus by two most accomplished musicians: BSO concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Lully.

Siverstein's extended solo in the polonaise smacked more of Odessa than Warsaw, but it was excellently played and marvelous to hear.

Lully provided the thematic material for the middle movements of Strauss's suite, and Lully-translated-by-Strauss seemed to be much more suited to the players' mood than Strauss in his own right. A minuet and a processional constructed around stately tunes by Lully gained a fluent, murmuring quality in the performance (a nice Courante, also based on Lully, was omitted in yesterday's performance).

Thus lulled by Strauss's musical time traveling, the players carried some of the warmth they had gained into the suite's last movements. The final waltz needed more lively rhythm and instrumental sting, but it had a playful Straussian ambience just right for a Moliere dinner party.

After intermission came "Don Quixote," a tone poem nearly an hour long written as something of a cello concerto. Written in 1897, near the end of Strauss's tone poem period (and nearly 15 years before the "Bourgeois" music), it sums up the delights of his musical gains from the imposing "Macbeth" to the crazy-quilt "Till Eulenspiegel" in orchestrations usually kept shrewdly light so the solo cello which represents the Don can speak with an authoritative voice.

"Authoritative" isn't the word for the playing contributed by Jules Eskin, the BSO's principal cellist; "masterful," perhaps, in this case. He solved beyond argument the music's conflict between accurate rhythmic pointing and broad, expansive phrasing. Even better, he projected the work's stagey but real tenderness in all but a few places.

Principal violist Burton Fine, cast by the score as Sancho Panza, played cleanly and incisively, but without Eskin's expressive breadth of line.

The full orchestra was seated for this work; it looked awfully big after one had seen the small band used earlier. It played very well, too, but received only a minimal direction that concentrated, not too closely, on large effects but left many crucial small things to accident. The bizarre "sheep" episode was less sharply played than it had been as a jocular reference in the "Bourgeois" suite half an hour earlier.

The last variation and finale of the tone poem were played with earnest tenderness — too earnest, perhaps. The artificiality of sentiment that is necessary to a first-rate Strauss performance was missing (one of the reasons Reiner was such a fine Strauss conductor was a certain coarseness in his interpretative fiber).

The program ended with the "Dance of the Seven Veils" written by Strauss for his opera, "Salome."

Hub Debut of Contemporary Music Ensemble

Collage Should Have Been Better

By ELLEN PFEIFER

Collage, the contemporary music ensemble composed mainly of BSO musicians and the soprano Joan Heller, made its Boston debut Friday night at Jordan Hall with a program that featured works by Boston-based composers. For this listener, it was not a joyful evening.

With few exceptions, the music seemed tedious, pretentious, full of 20th Century cliches, and apt to take itself too seriously. I may be in the minority, however, to judge by the youthful audience's friendly response to the performances.

Of the works by Boston composers, I found Robert Ceely's "Hymn for Cello and Bass" the most successful. To quote his program note, "the composition thrives on a strangely convincing alteration of heightened, hypertense "Schelomo" rhetoric with a severe note-against-note counterpoint almost of medieval stamp."

Actually, I'm not so sure how "strange" the alteration was but it did work. The opening, which features a single prolonged interval that goes from very soft to loud and from non-vibrato to intense wide vibrato with a number of subtle variations in the basic pitches, was particularly attractive.

Robert Selig's Quartet: "The Three Seasons of Autumn" was the least successful and most pretentious, the two outer movements rather faceless and tiresome, the inner movement (with soprano vocalise) sentimental and of movie-score cuteness.

Tibor Pusztai's "Nocturnes" was a piece I would like to hear again, because there is so much going on that one's perception is rather overloaded.

I must admit that Iwas so entranced by the muscle-contracting dances performer by Ina Hahn and by the extraordinary expressiveness of Joan Heller's singing that the rest of the textures really didn't register.

What that says about Hahn's dancing, Heller's singing or Pusztai's music I'm not certain which is why I need another listening-viewing.

Oliver Knussen's just completed "Ocean de terre," I found nicely evocative of submarine regions and again. Heller's singing displayed fine word-sense, but it was rather longer than it needed to be.

Davidovsky's Synchronism No. 2 and Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle" completed a program that ran about 2½ hours. Much, much too long for any concert, even of masterwords and such was not the case Friday.

BOSTON HERALD TRAVELER &
RECORD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 312,885
FEB 5 1973
New England Newsclip

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500
FEB 8 1973
New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: ALL-STRAUSS (RICHARD)

The advance billing for William Steinberg's return visit to the Boston Symphony Orchestra called for Bruckner's Fifth Symphony, but, for what ever the reason, the concert turned out to be all-Strauss.

Now right few are the composers with the weight to bear an "all-" for the program, and at first blush one might think that a menu consisting of zed but Richard Strauss—a "quasi-genius," Bruno Walter once termed him—would leave the listener feeling that he was consuming a meal consisting entirely of Linzer torte. Yet, with canny selection among the mass of what is tawdry or overblown or dated or simply overworked in Strauss, a conductor can put together a couple of hours of thoroughly absorbing music-making. And that is just what Mr. Steinberg succeeded in doing at Symphony last weekend with the "suite from 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme'," "Don Quixote" and the "Dance of the Seven Veils from 'Salome'."

The fairly unfamiliar Suite derives from the opera "Ariadne auf Naxos," the Strauss - Hofmannsthal treatment of Moliere's "The Bourgeois Gentilhomme." Each of the nine movements is discreet in its treatment of the musical and textual subject at hand, although showing in common among them a spark and exuberant kitsch. "My score, as a score," Strauss with characteristic modesty wrote to Hofmannsthal just before its initial performance, "is truly a masterpiece which will not soon be imitated." He wasn't so far off the mark.

There is nothing quasi about the genius of the inspiration of the "Don Quixote" variations, and its playing is almost by definition an event. The bleating of the sheep and the wind machine may by now be old hat tricks, but the theme and finale and the intervening ten variations in their totality remain perhaps the summit in the employment of music for pictorial description. In this connection the printed identificaiton of each variation in the Program Bulletin, which accords with Strauss' own practice in conducting the work, aids immensely in approaching the unfolding of the tale. Description apart, the music, of course, stands very solidly on its own merits. One would have to go some to find passages that for sheer rapturousness exceed the Fifth Variation, "Vision of Dulcinea," or can match the serenity and resignation of the death of the Don in the finale.

Jules Eskin and Burton Fine, the orchestra's principal cellist and violinist, were the redoubtable soloists. While hardly evocative of the great tradition of the Feuermann - Primrose collaborations of an earlier generation, their rendering was a comfortably strong and beautifully crafted one that managed to get inside the score. The orchestra had occasion to rejoice in the quality of its principals.

The "Dance of the Seven Veils" was somewhat anti-climactic. Indeed, I had forgotten that it was on the program and had to be hauled back to my seat by my companion. It is amazing how after all these years Salome's welter of sound contrives to remain so effectually erotic. Mr. Steinberg, who gives the impression to have forgotten more about the post-romantic composers than most of the younger contemporary men on the podium ever knew, is a conductorial aristocrat not given to opening all the stops. Such a filip here might have conferred upon the proceedings, which in every other way were admirably handled, the exclamation point that they could have used.

. . . AND THE BSO CHAMBER PLAYERS

Homogeneous programming is the last thing of which the Chamber Players can stand accused.

The second in this year's Sunday afternoon series at Sanders Theatre revealed even more than usual the formidable span of styles, periods, genre and combinations that characterizes these concerts. The very listing of the items pretty well gives the picture: Mozart's arrangement of three Bach preludes for string trio, Sydeman's Duo for trumpet and percussion, Nielsen's woodwind quintet and Dvorak's E flat piano quartet. The honors were done by Mrs. Dwyer and Messrs. Silverstein, Fine, Eskin, Gomber, Wright, Walt, Ghitalla, Firth and Kalish.

The range of difficulty in these pieces runs from the hard to the ferocious, but such was the concentration of artistry in this pool of players that they performed the numbers as if they had endless reserves to draw on. This was not always the case. What is plain, among other things, is that the weeding out process among the woodwind principals in the Symphony, now complete, has borne the richest results. Again the orchestra had occasion to rejoice in the quality of its principals.

BSO's Joseph Silverstein may move to L.A., say reports

The Globe has learned that there is speculation in Los Angeles that Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster and Assistant Conductor, may become concertmaster and Associate Conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Los Angeles Philharmonic has just announced that David Frisina has asked to be relieved of his position as concertmaster at the end of the coming Summer. He will have the title of Concertmaster Emeritus and will continue to play in the violin section in another position.

The contract of Associate Conductor Gerhard Samuel expires at the end of this Summer, and observers of the musical scene in Los Angeles do not expect it to be renewed.

Thus the job of concertmaster is open for sure, and very likely that of Associate Conductor as well.

When Hans Werner Henze cancelled a guest conducting engagement for the Philharmonic's subscription concerts of March 1, 2, and 4, the dates were not offered to Associate Conductor Samuel, but to Silverstein.

Ernest Fleischmann, the orchestra's Executive Director, explained that Samuel, who is conducting no subscription concerts this season (extremely unusual for someone with Associate Conductor rank), would be busy with opera performances at the California Institute for the Arts at that time, and that getting Silverstein "fit in well with the program." Samuel's opera performances are Feb. 27 and 28, but a spokesman for the Institute said that it would be "normal" for an Institute performance to be postponed if a faculty member had an outside engagement.

MICHAEL STEINBERG

Only Mozart's Clarinet Concerto, to be played by a member of the Philharmonic, is being retained by Silverstein from Henze's original program. Silverstein will play and conduct Haydn's Violin Concerto in C (replacing Mozart's Symphony No. 28) and Prokofiev's Symphony No. 6 (replacing Henze's Symphony No. 6).

The 40-year-old Silverstein, reached in New York where the Boston Symphony is on tour this week, said that there had been "no job offer," that the guest conducting engagement had come "completely out of the blue," that "the people in Los Angeles would be very much surprised" to hear of his being thought of as the possible new concertmaster or Associate Conductor. "I am very much under contract to the Boston Symphony," he added, "as concertmaster and as Chairman of Faculty of the Berkshire Music Center."

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

The Boston Symphony management would not divulge yesterday what the players' contract stipulates as the deadline for giving notice.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
FEB 9 1973
New England Newsclip

PORTLAND SYMPHONY

a major coup and a daring choice

The Portland Symphony concert of January 23 was distinctly pleasurable on two counts: first of all, the rare opportunity to hear once more the unique, incredible Sibelius violin concerto (and reflect on the fads and whims that determine "success" in the public arts), and, secondly, the equally uncommon chance to see violinist Joseph Silverstein in a virtuosic solo performance.

The concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than ten years, Silverstein has a reputation stretching way beyond the borders of Massachusetts — awards, honors, major recitals, and reviews — but is limited by the demands of his orchestral position to a relatively small number of solo appearances. Portland is fortunate to have engaged him, and it was a treat to see Mr. Silverstein standing in the spotlight rather than sawing away in the middle of the usual crowd scene to the left of the conductor. (No nasty letters from concertmasters, please.)

Although his vibrato is often too fat for my taste, Silverstein has a big tone and awesome technique; if, on occasion, his highest tones, harmonics or rhythmic subdividing were only 99% accurate, that's still far better than par for most performances (even recorded ones) of the Sibelius. Best of all, Silverstein really understands the shape of the work, the peculiar concurrence of seemingly disparate events — some lengthy, others clipped and terse — and the interplay of timbres that make this piece unlike any other in the violinist's repertoire.

If it was a major coup for conductor Paul Vermel to have brought Silverstein to Portland, it's perhaps even more daring to have programmed the Sibelius concerto, a work that had reached extraordinary heights of popularity earlier in this century and is now almost entirely forgotten. (As is most of the Sibelius literature, and, for that matter, much of the major output of Hindemith, Vaughan Williams, Prokofiev, Bloch, Nielsen.) Completed in 1903, the concerto is now 70 years old, and one could argue that, for a piece of music (especially one that's been dropped from the standard repertory), 70 is something of an awkward age. Such a work really isn't "contemporary music" anymore, nor is it really a "classic."

What can we make of the Sibelius? For one thing, we must admit that it's a great deal more than another folksy, pretty piece; if all we hear are the fiery, "romantic" aspects of it (or the brooding Scandinavian overtones, or similar irrelevancies) then we're making the same error that probably accounted for the rapid popularity (and sudden demise) of the concerto in the first place — that is, basically misreading as "programatic" something that is really formal and abstract, monumentally so, on the level of a Beethoven. Or, on another level, listen to the orchestration: rather than the typical late-nineteenth century hash of rich, fat sound that might be expected, there's an unparalleled economy and a deliberate use of dark colors, chamber-like in their transparency. The point is that for 1903 this was "radical," daring gutsy music — it still is, in fact, if we return to it with fresh ears and an awareness of the Sibelius profile. The contradictions, eccentricities, mannerisms are all integral to that profile, perhaps even necessary, and I wouldn't change any of them. They are as unpredictable, as daring, now as they were 70 years ago!

By way of contrast, the Portland Symphony also presented a short work by William Bergsma that was dated and stale when the ink was drying on the manuscript paper. The "Serenade to Await the Moon" is, in fact, the antithesis of the Sibelius: tame, safe, stylistically unable to break free of its own constraints. The few passages that sound "experimental" to my ears — a moment or two of ponticello string bowing, or exotic percussion color — haven't been integrated into the total fabric convincingly, and only heighten one's sense of anachronism. A straddling of two esthetics may have been attempted, but the net effect is one of bland, meek conservatism, peppered with a sprinkling of avant-garde sound effects that didn't work. If Portland is going to program twentieth century music, as of course the Symphony should, we have a right to expect better instances of it than this. If not the experimental music of the 1970's, then perhaps more of the radical avant-garde of the immediate past — like Sibelius, for example.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 was also played, and in quite spirited fashion, with the dramatic thrust of the final movement especially well articulated. The work is not quite as lightweight as some would imagine: it offers, rather, a picture of a composer just on the brink of discovering something really overwhelming, but not yet certain of how to deal with it. Many of the Beethoven fingerprints are already present, especially the willful use of dynamic levels and the almost perversely crude, nasty scoring for the winds in fortissimo passages.

In passing, it struck me during the concert that all three programmed works were decidedly UN-brilliant, anti-"lush" and almost aggressively harsh in their instrumentation — the Beethoven and Sibelius perhaps to articulate and underline the dramatic/structural arc of the "form," and the Bergsma most probably because of the rarified subject-matter. At any rate, it must have been a novelty for Paul Vermel — who excels in delineating the most brilliant of voicings, and who is most at home with the clarity of French orchestral sound — to have a program of this sort to work with. He and the orchestra did quite well with the challenge, to say the least, and really worked wonders in the Sibelius. Will the PSO tackle one of the Sibelius symphonies during the next few seasons, now that they've had a taste of it? They have at least one affirmative vote from this quarter.

by Elliott Schwartz

MAINE TIMES
TOPSHAM, MAINE
W. 13,230
FEB 2 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO Soloist

Orchestra Opens Its Third Season

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

A thoroughly admirable concert opened the third season of the new Worcester Orchestra last night, before a good-sized audience in Memorial Auditorium. Arthur Winograd conducted an ensemble of 62 players, with Abraham Mishkind as concertmaster.

The distinguished soloist was

Gazette Review

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Bruch's Violin Concerto No. 1 in G minor. The orchestral works were Mozart's overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D major.

While the program made no excursions into modern music, it did reveal convincingly the progress made under Winograd in mounting authentic versions of long-established compositions.

Silverstein was a delight. He was an ardent but wholly poised soloist, with tone which had not only refinement but also carrying quality. The clinging, legato phrases at the start of the concerto were especially gracious and appealing.

Fantasia

This concerto, originally conceived as a fantasia, has long been admired for its romanticism and melodic richness. Winograd made of the orchestral part a worthy partnership with the soloist, and moods were woven with skill and coherence.

The familiar "Figaro" overture was notable for its clever handling of the string phrases, with little accents which made all the difference between lilting Mozart and routine playing.

Sibelius' Second was a major assignment, 40 minutes long. The music is in constant activity, portraying various aspects of rugged Finland or the reaction of the person to nature. Again the strings were wonderfully clear and eloquent. The brasses made the proclamations of the finale most convincing. This was music of real stature.

GAZETTE
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 97,539
FEB 16 1973
New England Newsclip

NEWS
NAUGATUCK, CONN.
D. 4,750
FEB 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Bach Program Performed By Violinist

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will present two concerts of the music of J.S. Bach on Sunday, February 11, 1973 in Sprague Memorial Hall. The concerts, which are part of the Yale School of Music Sprague Hall Series, will be at 4 p.m. and at 8:30 p.m. and will have different but related programs.

Mr. Silverstein will offer, on these concerts, the Sonatas and Partitas for unaccompanied violin of J.S. Bach. The afternoon program will offer the Sonata No. 1, the Partita No. 1 and the Sonata No. 3. The evening concert will include the Partita No. 3, the Sonata No. 2 and the Partita No. 2.

For those people planning to attend both concerts, to hear the complete set of works, adequate time has been allowed between the concerts for a leisurely dinner.

Mr. Silverstein has long been known as an unusually fine solo violinist and has appeared throughout the world as a recitalist and as soloist with countless orchestras. He is perhaps best known as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a position he has held for a number of years. Besides being concertmaster Joseph Silverstein is a regular soloist with the Boston Symphony and an assistant conductor of that orchestra.

Tickets may be purchased at Yale School of Music for the pair of concerts (at a special rate) or for either of the concerts individually.

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
S. 137,000
FEB 11 1973
New England Newsclip

Bach Marathon Slated Today

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will play the sonatas and partitas for solo violin by J. S. Bach this afternoon and evening. Appearing on the Yale School of Music's Sprague Hall Series, Silverstein will play at 4 p.m. and again at 8:30 p.m., presenting two different programs of Bach's masterworks for the unaccompanied violin.

Mr. Silverstein, besides being an internationally acclaimed soloist, also serves full time as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Yale School of Music has been fortunate to have Mr. Silverstein as a member of its string faculty this year through the Samuel Simonds Sanford Professorship of Music.

Remaining tickets for both of Mr. Silverstein's concerts will be available at the Sprague Hall Box Office from 2:30 p.m. on Sunday. Tickets may be purchased for either concert individually, or for both concerts, at a special rate.

ENTERPRISE
BROCKTON, MASS.
D. 54,587
FEB 17 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO CONCERTMASTER SILVERSTEIN TO GIVE CONCERT IN MARSHFIELD

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a solo performance in Marshfield in the third major concert this year under auspieces of the South Shore Center for the Performing Arts, Inc.

Mr. Silverstein, who is also first violinist with the Boston Symphony, will appear on Sunday, March 25, at 8 p.m., in the Marshfield High School auditorium and will be accompanied at the piano by Virginia Eskin.

Mrs. Lawrence Powers, ticket chairman, will open her home at Miles View Dr., Duxbury, for a champagne reception honoring Mr. Silverstein after the concert. Tickets for the reception are available from Mrs. Powers.

Tickets for the vening concert are available by contacting Mrs. Powers or Mrs. Howard Dodge of Pembroke, Mrs. Ruth Valentine of Halifax, Mrs. Jack Angley of Halifax, Mrs. Donald DeLuse of Hanover or the Marshfield High School Music Department.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
FEB 10 1973
New England Newsclip

L.A. said eyeing BSO's Silverstein

According to a report in the much under contract to the BSO Boston Globe, Joseph Silver- and as chairman of the faculty stein, concertmaster and assist- at the Berkshire Music Center. ant conductor of the Boston BSO management would not Symphony Orchestra, may be- comment on the situation. come concertmaster and asso- New music director Seiji ciate conductor of the Los Ange- Ozawa will hold a press confer- les Philharmonic Orchestra. ence in Boston on Wednesday in

The concertmaster of the Los which he will discuss forthcom- Angeles group, David Frisina, ing plans, but he is not expected has asked to be relieved of his to comment on the Silverstein position at the end of the sum- situation. mer, and the contract of the associate conductor, Gerhard Samuel, expires at the same time. When a guest conductor canceled out on his contract recently, the dates were offered to Silverstein rather than Samuel.

The 40-year-old Silverstein said that there had been "no job offer" and that he is still very

BSO's Joseph Silverstein may move to L.A., say reports

The Globe has learned that there is speculation in Los Angeles that Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster and Assistant Conductor, may become concertmaster and Associate Conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Los Angeles Philharmonic has just announced that David Frisina has asked to be relieved of his position as concertmaster at the end of the coming Summer. He will have the title of Concertmaster Emeritus and will continue to play in the violin section in another position.

The contract of Associate Conductor Gerhard Samuel expires at the end of this Summer, and observers of the musical scene in Los Angeles do not expect it to be renewed.

Thus the job of concertmaster is open for sure, and very likely that of Associate Conductor as well.

When Hans Werner Henze cancelled a guest conducting engagement for the Philharmonic's subscription concerts of March 1, 2, and 4, the dates were not offered to Associate Conductor Samuel, but to Silverstein.

Ernest Fleischmann, the orchestra's Executive Director, explained that Samuel, who is conducting no subscription concerts this season (extremely unusual for someone with Associate Conductor rank), would be busy with opera performances at the California Institute for the Arts at that time, and that getting Silverstein "fit in well with the program." Samuel's opera performances are Feb. 27 and 28, but a spokesman for the Institute said that it would be "normal" for an Institute performance to be postponed if a faculty member had an outside engagement.

MICHAEL STEINBERG

Only Mozart's Clarinet Concerto, to be played by a member of the Philharmonic, is being retained by Silverstein from Henze's original program. Silverstein will play and conduct Haydn's Violin Concerto in C (replacing Mozart's Symphony No. 28) and Prokofiev's Symphony No. 6 (replacing Henze's Symphony No. 6).

The 40-year-old Silverstein, reached in New York where the Boston Symphony is on tour this week, said that there had been "no job offer," that the guest conducting engagement had come "completely out of the blue," that "the people in Los Angeles would be very much surprised" to hear of his being thought of as the possible new concertmaster or Associate Conductor. "I am very much under contract to the Boston Symphony," he added, "as concertmaster and as Chairman of Faculty of the Berkshire Music Center."

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

The Boston Symphony management would not divulge yesterday what the players' contract stipulates as the deadline for giving notice.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
FEB 9 1973
New England Newsclip

PORTLAND SYMPHONY

a major coup and a daring choice

The Portland Symphony concert of January 23 was distinctly pleasurable on two counts: first of all, the rare opportunity to hear once more the unique, incredible Sibelius violin concerto (and reflect on the fads and whims that determine "success" in the public arts), and, secondly, the equally uncommon chance to see violinist Joseph Silverstein in a virtuosic solo performance.

The concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than ten years, Silverstein has a reputation stretching way beyond the borders of Massachusetts — awards, honors, major recitals, and reviews — but is limited by the demands of his orchestral position to a relatively small number of solo appearances. Portland is fortunate to have engaged him, and it was a treat to see Mr. Silverstein standing in the spotlight rather than sawing away in the middle of the usual crowd scene to the left of the conductor. (No nasty letters from concertmasters, please.)

Although his vibrato is often too fat for my taste, Silverstein has a big tone and awesome technique; if, on occasion, his highest tones, harmonics or rhythmic subdividing were only 99% accurate, that's still far better than par for most performances (even recorded ones) of the Sibelius. Best of all, Silverstein really understands the shape of the work, the peculiar concurrence of seemingly disparate events — some lengthy, others clipped and terse — and the interplay of timbres that make this piece unlike any other in the violinist's repertoire.

If it was a major coup for conductor Paul Vermel to have brought Silverstein to Portland, it's perhaps even more daring to have programmed the Sibelius concerto, a work that had reached extraordinary heights of popularity earlier in this century and is now almost entirely forgotten. (As is most of the Sibelius literature, and, for that matter, much of the major output of Hindemith, Vaughan Williams, Prokofiev, Bloch, Nielsen.) Completed in 1903, the concerto is now 70 years old, and one could argue that, for a piece of music (especially one that's been dropped from the standard repertory), 70 is something of an awkward age. Such a work really isn't "contemporary music" anymore, nor is it really a "classic."

What can we make of the Sibelius? For one thing, we must admit that it's a great deal more than another folksy, pretty piece; if all we hear are the fiery, "romantic" aspects of it (or the brooding Scandinavian overtones, or similar irrelevancies) then we're making the same error that probably accounted for the rapid popularity (and sudden demise) of the concerto in the first place — that is, basically misreading as "programatic" something that is really formal and abstract, monumentally so, on the level of a Beethoven. Or, on another level, listen to the orchestration: rather than the typical late-nineteenth century hash of rich, fat sound that might be expected, there's an unparalleled economy and a deliberate use of dark colors, chamber-like in their transparency. The point is that for 1903 this was "radical," daring gutsy music — it still is, in fact, if we return to it with fresh ears and an awareness of the Sibelius profile. The contradictions, eccentricities, mannerisms are all integral to that profile, perhaps even necessary, and I wouldn't change any of them. They are as unpredictable, as daring, now as they were 70 years ago!

By way of contrast, the Portland Symphony also presented a short work by William Bergsma that was dated and stale when the ink was drying on the manuscript paper. The "Serenade to Await the Moon" is, in fact, the antithesis of the Sibelius: tame, safe, stylistically unable to break free of its own constraints. The few passages that sound "experimental" to my ears — a moment or two of ponticello string bowing, or exotic percussion color — haven't been integrated into the total fabric convincingly, and only heighten one's sense of anachronism. A straddling of two esthetics may have been attempted, but the net effect is one of bland, meek conservatism, peppered with a sprinkling of avant-garde sound effects that didn't work. If Portland is going to program twentieth century music, as of course the Symphony should, we have a right to expect better instances of it than this. If not the experimental music of the 1970's, then perhaps more of the radical avant-garde of the immediate past — like Sibelius, for example.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 was also played, and in quite spirited fashion, with the dramatic thrust of the final movement especially well articulated. The work is not quite as lightweight as some would imagine: it offers, rather, a picture of a composer just on the brink of discovering something really overwhelming, but not yet certain of how to deal with it. Many of the Beethoven fingerprints are already present, especially the willful use of dynamic levels and the almost perversely crude, nasty scoring for the winds in fortissimo passages.

In passing, it struck me during the concert that all three programmed works were decidedly UN-brilliant, anti-"lush" and almost aggressively harsh in their instrumentation — the Beethoven and Sibelius perhaps to articulate and underline the dramatic/structural arc of the "form," and the Bergsma most probably because of the rarified subject-matter. At any rate, it must have been a novelty for Paul Vermel — who excels in delineating the most brilliant of voicings, and who is most at home with the clarity of French orchestral sound — to have a program of this sort to work with. He and the orchestra did quite well with the challenge, to say the least, and really worked wonders in the Sibelius. Will the PSO tackle one of the Sibelius symphonies during the next few seasons, now that they've had a taste of it? They have at least one affirmative vote from this quarter.

by Elliott Schwartz

MAINE TIMES
TOPSHAM, MAINE
W. 13,230
FEB 2 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO Soloist

Orchestra Opens Its Third Season

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

A thoroughly admirable concert opened the third season of the new Worcester Orchestra last night, before a good-sized audience in Memorial Auditorium. Arthur Winograd conducted an ensemble of 62 players, with Abraham Mishkind as concertmaster.

The distinguished soloist was Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Bruch's Violin Concerto No. 1 in G minor. The orchestral works were Mozart's overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D major.

While the program made no excursions into modern music, it did reveal convincingly the progress made under Winograd in mounting authentic versions of long-established compositions.

Silverstein was a delight. He was an ardent but wholly poised soloist, with tone which had not only refinement but also carrying quality. The clinging, legato phrases at the start of the concerto were especially gracious and appealing.

Fantasia

This concerto, originally conceived as a fantasia, has long been admired for its romanticism and melodic richness. Winograd made of the orchestral part a worthy partnership with the soloist, and moods were woven with skill and coherence.

The familiar "Figaro" overture was notable for its clever handling of the string phrases, with little accents which made all the difference between lilting Mozart and routine playing.

Sibelius' Second was a major assignment, 40 minutes long. The music is in constant activity, portraying various aspects of rugged Finland or the reaction of the person to nature. Again the strings were wonderfully clear and eloquent. The brasses made the proclamations of the finale most convincing. This was music of real stature.

Gazette Review

GAZETTE
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 97,539
FEB 16 1973
New England Newsclip

NEWS
NAUGATUCK, CONN.
D. 4,750
FEB 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Bach Program Performed By Violinist

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will present two concerts of the music of J.S. Bach on Sunday, February 11, 1973 in Sprague Memorial Hall. The concerts, which are part of the Yale School of Music Sprague Hall Series, will be at 4 p.m. and at 8:30 p.m. and will have different but related programs.

Mr. Silverstein will offer, on these concerts, the Sonatas and Partitas for unaccompanied violin of J.S. Bach. The afternoon program will offer the Sonata No. 1, the Partita No. 1 and the Sonata No. 3. The evening concert will include the Partita No. 3, the Sonata No. 2 and the Partita No. 2.

For those people planning to attend both concerts, to hear the complete set of works, adequate time has been allowed between the concerts for a leisurely dinner.

Mr. Silverstein has long been known as an unusually fine solo violinist and has appeared throughout the world as a recitalist and as soloist with countless orchestras. He is perhaps best known as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a position he has held for a number of years. Besides being concertmaster Joseph Silverstein is a regular soloist with the Boston Symphony and an assistant conductor of that orchestra.

Tickets may be purchased at Yale School of Music for the pair of concerts (at a special rate) or for either of the concerts individually.

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
S. 137,000
FEB 11 1973
New England Newsclip

Bach Marathon Slated Today

Violinist Joseph Silverstein will play the sonatas and partitas for solo violin by J. S. Bach this afternoon and evening. Appearing on the Yale School of Music's Sprague Hall Series, Silverstein will play at 4 p.m. and again at 8:30 p.m., presenting two different programs of Bach's masterworks for the unaccompanied violin.

Mr. Silverstein, besides being an internationally acclaimed soloist, also serves full time as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Yale School of Music has been fortunate to have Mr. Silverstein as a member of its string faculty this year through the Samuel Simonds Sanford Professorship of Music.

Remaining tickets for both of Mr. Silverstein's concerts will be available at the Sprague Hall Box Office from 2:30 p.m. on Sunday. Tickets may be purchased for either concert individually, or for both concerts, at a special rate.

ENTERPRISE
BROCKTON, MASS.
D. 54,587
FEB 17 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO CONCERTMASTER SILVERSTEIN TO GIVE CONCERT IN MARSHFIELD

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a solo performance in Marshfield in the third major concert this year under auspieces of the South Shore Center for the Performing Arts, Inc.

Mr. Silverstein, who is also first violinist with the Boston Symphony, will appear on Sunday, March 25, at 8 p.m., in the Marshfield High School auditorium and will be accompanied at the piano by Virginia Eskin.

Mrs. Lawrence Powers, ticket chairman, will open her home at Miles View Dr., Duxbury, for a champagne reception honoring Mr. Silverstein after the concert. Tickets for the reception are available from Mrs. Powers.

Tickets for the vening concert are available by contacting Mrs. Powers or Mrs. Howard Dodge of Pembroke, Mrs. Ruth Valentine of Halifax, Mrs. Jack Angley of Halifax, Mrs. Donald DeLuse of Hanover or the Marshfield High School Music Department.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
FEB 10 1973
New England Newsclip

L.A. said eyeing BSO's Silverstein

According to a report in the Boston Globe, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, may become concertmaster and associate conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra.

The concertmaster of the Los Angeles group, David Frisina, has asked to be relieved of his position at the end of the summer, and the contract of the associate conductor, Gerhard Samuel, expires at the same time. When a guest conductor canceled out on his contract recently, the dates were offered to Silverstein rather than Samuel.

The 40-year-old Silverstein said that there had been "no job offer" and that he is still very much under contract to the BSO and as chairman of the faculty at the Berkshire Music Center, BSO management would not comment on the situation.

Seiji Ozawa, new music director, will hold a press conference in Boston on Wednesday in which he will discuss forthcoming plans, but he is not expected to comment on the Silverstein situation.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
FEB 15 1973
New England Newsclip

THEATER / ARTS

Musica Viva comments on rehearsals

QUODLIBET / By MICHAEL STEINBERG

In an interview published in The Sunday Globe, Jan. 28, Boston Symphony percussion player Frank Epstein, founder of the contemporary music ensemble, Collage, was quoted as saying about the Boston Musica Viva, a contemporary music group with an annual season at the Busch-Reisinger Museum, that "they do whatever they do on three paid rehearsals and that's it" (in contrast to Collage's policy of unlimited "rehearsal till ready.")

Five members of MusicaViva — violinist Nancy Cirillo, flutist John Heiss, Cellist Jay Humeston, pianist Luise Vosgerchian, clarinetist William Wrzesien — have written to comment as follows:

"We have never presented concerts with only three rehearsals. Mr. Epstein commenced rehearsals with us for one of our concerts after several sessions had already taken place.

"There is a tacit agreement amongst us that rehearsals without payment may be called whenever we feel the need.

"Often we have private sessions with the director, Richard Pittman, before the first reading rehearsal takes place.

"We believe that our involvement and commitment to contemporary music is a worthy contribution to a tradition of innovative music-making in Boston. We hope to continue to enrich the musical life of this community and heartily welcome the efforts of Collage to do the same."

★

Stephen Geber, a member of the Boston Symphony cello section since 1965, will become Principal Cellist of the Cleveland Orchestra beginning with the 1973-74 season. He succeeds William Stokking, a former and recent Boston Symphony member, who goes to Philadelphia as Principal Cellist to replace Samuel Mayes, a former BSO Principal Cellist. Mayes was succeeded here by Jules Eskin, up to that time Principal Cellist in Cleveland. Balanchine should choreograph this.

In the same spirit of public service with which The Globe supplies The Herald with music critics, the Boston Symphony supplies this continent's orchestras with Principal Cellists. John Sant Ambrogio of the St. Louis Symphony is a BSO alumnus, as were his two predecessors, Richard Sher and Peter Schenkman. Frome St. Louis, Schnkman went to the Toronto Symphony. The Metropolitan Opera recruited its solo cellist, Jascha Silberstein, from the BSO, too. Silberstein's new London record of Romantic cello concertos — Auber in A minor, Popper in E major and the fine Massenet Fantasy — with Richard Bonynge and the Suisse Romande orchestra, has brilliant playing and is great fun.

BSO concertmaster and Assitant Conductor, Joseph Silverstein, has been teaching at Yale this year as one of a series of performers in the newly created Samuel Simons Sanford Professorship (others include Eugene Ormandy and Claude Frank); violinist Rudolf Kolisch of the New England Conservatory has just completed a month of master classes at the San Francisco Conservatory; Violist Walter Trampler has joined the faculty of Boston University.

Feb. 28, the Postmaster General issues a new eight-cent George Gershwin stamp. And mark it on your calendar: the dates for the WCRB - Boston Symphony marathon are March 8, 9, 10, and 11.

BOSTON HERALD TRAVELER &
RECORD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 312,885
FEB 6 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO Concert a Real Pleasure

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

● Music Review

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players' concert Sunday afternoon at Sanders Theatre was a real pleasure, one of the best concerts I have heard them play.

The program was a mix of cool, wry 20th Century works William Sydeman's duo for trumpet and percussion and Carl Nielsen's woodwind quintet) and super-romanticism (Dvorak's Piano Quartet in E-flat) plus two Mozart transcriptions of Bach Preludes and Fugues.

THE SYDEMAN DUO, performed by Everitt Firth and Armando Ghitalla, proved a low profile experiment with the sounds a trumpet can make — with particular emphasis on muting — and provided a good bit of virtuoso work for the percussions/timpanist.

There is some cyclic use of motifs in the work, which although tending to sound just a bit like television muzak, is nevertheless chatty and amusing.

Nielsen's Quintet is an absolutely charming piece written in conventional forms — that is, first-movement sonata structure, menuet, theme and variations. Its cheerful first movement has a particularly graceful secondary theme which provided the opportunity for some fine horn solos by Charles Kavaloski.

THE THIRD MOVEMENT opens with a Praeludium featuring some sinuous English horn melodies, procee[illegible] lovely chorale and the variations, some of which are quite funny in a gentle sort of way.

The Dvorak, a work of passionate declaration and flowery sentiment with a bravura part for the painist (Gilbert Kalish) was the occasion for perhaps the best playing of the afternoon. Kalish's performance was very exciting indeed and I have rarely heard the rest of the players so turned-on, rarely heard them play with such abandon.

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW JERSEY FIRST NEWSPAPER
SUN. 2,973,270
FEB 4 1973

Concert to Honor Evers College

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by James Levine, will present the second of its three-concert series this season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday. Joseph Silverstein, assistant conductor, will be soloist in Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 4 in D. The concert will honor Medgar Evers College of Brooklyn.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
GRAPHIC
(NEW YORK CITY MARKET AREA)
W. 13,000
FEB 7 1973

Boston at BAM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 8, 1973. The Orchestra will be conducted by James Levine, Principal Conductor elect of the Metropolitan Opera.

For their appearance in Brooklyn, the Orchestra will play Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 4 in D and Mahler's Symphony No. 6 in A minor. The soloist for the Violin Concerto will be Joseph Silverstein. Silverstein has been Concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1962 and Assistant Conductor since the beginning of the 1971-1972 season.

The concert is the second in a series of three sponsored by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. The Boston Symphony Series has been a tradition in Brooklyn for 85 years. For the past two years, the Brooklyn Institute has endeavored to increase community involvement in the Series by honoring various organizations and institutions in Brooklyn. The February 8th concert will honor Medgar Evers College.

Students and senior citizens may purchase discount tickets at $2.00 each on the day of the performance. For further ticket information, call the Academy of Music Box Office (ST3-6700) or the Brooklyn Institute (638-5159). For further information, call Beatrice Brailsford (638-5159).

CRICKET
MANCHESTER MASS.
W. 1,598
FEB 9 1973
New England Newsclip

"Symphony Spirals" Successful

"Symphony Spirals" were launched in the fall of 1972 by the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This series of informal parties, which has just now drawn to a close, raised $24,500 to help offset the million dollar annual deficit of the Orchestra. Thousands of music lovers from the North Shore participated in the Spirals. Each person hosted a party and donated two dollars to the orchestra. Tennis matches, walks, picnics, coffee hours, teas, luncheons, dinners, chowder parties, an illustrated lecture and a piano teachers' exchange were among the variety of spiral gatherings on the North Shore.

Co-Chairmen from the North Shore area were Mrs. George Blagden of Beverly and Mrs. Robert Emmons of Manchester. They wish to express their great appreciation to all who helped to make this fund-raising project a success.

EXPRESS
PORTLAND, MAINE.
D. 29.772
FEB 28 1973
New England Newsclip

Here And There

Speaking of the Portland Concert Association, the organization certainly turned a great many heads when it announced recently that the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its new director, Seiji Ozawa, will appear here next season. The New York agency handling BSO engagements had stated quite firmly that little cities such as Portland would not be considered for the BSO calendar, but by going directly to the source the Portland group virtually assured themselves of another sell-out season next year . . . and the appearance here of truly great orchestra a great conductor.

NEWS
BRIDGTON, MAINE
W. 3,300
FEB 22 1973
New England Newsclip

Portland Concert Membership Drive Now Underway

The Portland Concert Association memberships are now available for their 1972-73 series of "Community Concerts". Following the "sold-out", most successful, '72-'73 season, patrons would do well to sign up early. The first concert presents The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Seiji Ozawa. This Japanese Conductor has been enthusiastically applauded by public and press and has appeared with most of the major symphonies.

The second concert will be Tenor James McCracken and his wife, Mezzo soprano Sandra Warfield. Each has starred separately at the Metropolitan Opera and practically every important house in the world.

The third concert presents Peter Nero, an unbelievably accomplished pianist, the "Horowitz of the popular field". A fourth concert will be announced later.

The deadline to keep your present reserved seat is February 28th. The deadline for the remaining reserved seats is March 6th, and the drive closes on March 17th.

The reserved section tickets are $20.00, unreserved adult tickets are $15.00 and the student tickets $7.00. Please contact Mrs. Jane Komer, Bridgton, 647-2441 or Mrs. J.L. Bauer, Denmark, 452-2000 for information.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
FEB 15 1973
New England Newsclip

THEATER / ARTS

Musica Viva comments on rehearsals

QUODLIBET / By MICHAEL STEINBERG

In an interview published in The Sunday Globe, Jan. 28, Boston Symphony percussion player Frank Epstein, founder of the contemporary music ensemble, Collage, was quoted as saying about the Boston Musica Viva, a contemporary music group with an annual season at the Busch-Reisinger Museum, that "they do whatever they do on three paid rehearsals and that's it" (in contrast to Collage's policy of unlimited "rehearsal till ready.")

Five members of MusicaViva — violinist Nancy Cirillo, flutist John Heiss, Cellist Jay Humeston, pianist Luise Vosgerchian, clarinetist William Wrzesien — have written to comment as follows:

"We have never presented concerts with only three rehearsals. Mr. Epstein commenced rehearsals with us for one of our concerts after several sessions had already taken place.

"There is a tacit agreement amongst us that rehearsals without payment may be called whenever we feel the need.

"Often we have private sessions with the director, Richard Pittman, before the first reading rehearsal takes place.

"We believe that our involvement and commitment to contemporary music is a worthy contribution to a tradition of innovative music-making in Boston. We hope to continue to enrich the musical life of this community and heartily welcome the efforts of Collage to do the same."

★

Stephen Geber, a member of the Boston Symphony cello section since 1965, will become Principal Cellist of the Cleveland Orchestra beginning with the 1973-74 season. He succeeds William Stokking, a former and recent Boston Symphony member, who goes to Philadelphia as Principal Cellist to replace Samuel Mayes, a former BSO Principal Cellist. Mayes was succeeded here by Jules Eskin, up to that time Principal Cellist in Cleveland. Balanchine should choreograph this.

In the same spirit of public service with which The Globe supplies The Herald with music critics, the Boston Symphony supplies this continent's orchestras with Principal Cellists. John Sant Ambrogio of the St. Louis Symphony is a BSO alumnus, as were his two predecessors, Richard Sher and Peter Schenkman. Frome St. Louis, Schnkman went to the Toronto Symphony. The Metropolitan Opera recruited its solo cellist, Jascha Silberstein, from the BSO, too. Silberstein's new London record of Romantic cello concertos — Auber in A minor, Popper in E major and the fine Massenet Fantasy — with Richard Bonynge and the Suisse Romande orchestra, has brilliant playing and is great fun.

BSO concertmaster and Assitant Conductor, Joseph Silverstein, has been teaching at Yale this year as one of a series of performers in the newly created Samuel Simons Sanford Professorship (others include Eugene Ormandy and Claude Frank); violinist Rudolf Kolisch of the New England Conservatory has just completed a month of master classes at the San Francisco Conservatory; Violist Walter Trampler has joined the faculty of Boston University.

Feb. 28, the Postmaster General issues a new eight-cent George Gershwin stamp. And mark it on your calendar: the dates for the WCRB - Boston Symphony marathon are March 8, 9, 10, and 11.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
GRAPHIC
(NEW YORK CITY MARKET AREA)
W. 13,000
FEB 7 1973

Boston at BAM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 8, 1973. The Orchestra will be conducted by James Levine, Principal Conductor elect of the Metropolitan Opera.

For their appearance in Brooklyn, the Orchestra will play Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 4 in D and Mahler's Symphony No. 6 in A minor. The soloist for the Violin Concerto will be Joseph Silverstein. Silverstein has been Concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1962 and Assistant Conductor since the beginning of the 1971-1972 season.

The concert is the second in a series of three sponsored by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. The Boston Symphony Series has been a tradition in Brooklyn for 85 years. For the past two years, the Brooklyn Institute has endeavored to increase community involvement in the Series by honoring various organizations and institutions in Brooklyn. The February 8th concert will honor Medgar Evers College.

Students and senior citizens may purchase discount tickets at $2.00 each on the day of the performance. For further ticket information, call the Academy of Music Box Office (ST3-6700) or the Brooklyn Institute (638-5159). For further information, call Beatrice Brailsford (638-5159).

CRICKET
MANCHESTER, MASS.
W. 1,598
FEB 9 1973
New England Newsclip

"Symphony Spirals" Successful

"Symphony Spirals" were launched in the fall of 1972 by the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This series of informal parties, which has just now drawn to a close, raised $24,500 to help offset the million dollar annual deficit of the Orchestra. Thousands of music lovers from the North Shore participated in the Spirals. Each person hosted a party and donated two dollars to the orchestra. Tennis matches, walks, picnics, coffee hours, teas, luncheons, dinners, chowder parties, an illustrated lecture and a piano teachers' exchange were among the variety of spiral gatherings on the North Shore.

Co-Chairmen from the North Shore area were Mrs. George Blagden of Beverly and Mrs. Robert Emmons of Manchester. They wish to express their great appreciation to all who helped to make this fund-raising project a success.

SUNDAY NEWS
SUN.
FEB 4 1973

Concert to Honor Evers College

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by James Levine, will present the second of its three-concert series this season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday. Joseph Silverstein, assistant conductor, will be soloist in Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 4 in D. The concert will honor Medgar Evers College of Brooklyn.

BOSTON HERALD TRAVELER &
RECORD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 312,885
FEB 6 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO Concert a Real Pleasure

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

● Music Review

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players' concert Sunday afternoon at Sanders Theatre was a real pleasure, one of the best concerts I have heard them play.

The program was a mix of cool, wry 20th Century works William Sydeman's duo for trumpet and percussion and Carl Nielsen's woodwind quintet) and super-romanticism (Dvorak's Piano Quartet in E-flat) plus two Mozart transcriptions of Bach Preludes and Fugues.

THE SYDEMAN DUO, performed by Everitt Firth and Armando Ghitalla, proved a low profile experiment with the sounds a trumpet can make — with particular emphasis on muting — and provided a good bit of virtuoso work for the percussions/timpanist.

There is some cyclic use of motifs in the work, which although tending to sound just a bit like television muzak, is nevertheless chatty and amusing.

Nielsen's Quintet is an absolutely charming piece written in conventional forms — that is, first-movement sonata structure, menuet, theme and variations. Its cheerful first movement has a particularly graceful secondary theme which provided the opportunity for some fine horn solos by Charles Kavaloski.

THE THIRD MOVEMENT opens with a Praeludium featuring some sinuous English horn melodies, procee[illegible] lovely chorale and the variations, some of which are quite funny in a gentle sort of way.

The Dvorak, a work of passionate declaration and flowery sentiment with a bravura part for the painist (Gilbert Kalish) was the occasion for perhaps the best playing of the afternoon. Kalish's performance was very exciting indeed and I have rarely heard the rest of the players so turned-on, rarely heard them play with such abandon.

EXPRESS
PORTLAND, MAINE.
D. 29.772
FEB 28 1973
New England Newsclip

Here And There

Speaking of the Portland Concert Association, the organization certainly turned a great many heads when it announced recently that the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its new director, Seiji Ozawa, will appear here next season. The New York agency handling BSO engagements had stated quite firmly that little cities such as Portland would not be considered for the BSO calendar, but by going directly to the source the Portland group virtually assured themselves of another sell-out season next year . . .

and the appearance here of truly great orchestra a great conductor.

NEWS
BRIDGTON, MAINE
W. 3,300
FEB 22 1973
New England Newsclip

Portland Concert Membership Drive Now Underway

The Portland Concert Association memberships are now available for their 1972-73 series of "Community Concerts". Following the "sold-out", most successful, '72-'73 season, patrons would do well to sign up early. The first concert presents The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Seiji Ozawa. This Japanese Conductor has been enthusiastically applauded by public and press and has appeared with most of the major symphonies.

The second concert will be Tenor James McCracken and his wife, Mezzo soprano Sandra Warfield. Each has starred separately at the Metropolitan Opera and practically every important house in the world. The third concert presents Peter Nero, an unbelievably accomplished pianist, the "Horowitz of the popular field". A fourth concert will be announced later.

The deadline to keep your present reserved seat is February 28th. The deadline for the remaining reserved seats is March 6th, and the drive closes on March 17th. The reserved section tickets are $20.00, unreserved adult tickets are $15.00 and the student tickets $7.00. Please contact Mrs. Jane Komer, Bridgton, 647-2441 or Mrs. J.L. Bauer, Denmark, 452-2000 for information.

62.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514

FEB 14 1973

New England Newsclip

Benefit concert

BOSTON — Sunday Feb. 18 marks the day of the Pension Fund concerts for the benefits of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At 8:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, who assumes the post of music director of the Boston's Symphony next fall, conducts the Orchestra in Berlioz' Overture 'Le Carnaval Romain', Beethoven's Piano Concerto no. 4 in G with Alexis Weissenberg piano soloist, follows it with Haydn's Symphony no. 60 in C 'Il Distratto', and closes the concert with Bartok's

Suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin." Tickets, ranging in price from $4.50 to $10.00 are available at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

The orchestra is also offering a limited number of "patrons" tickets at $35 each for the Pension Fund concert. Only patrons will have the opportunity to hear Alexis Weissenberg and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in a special preview concert at 6:30 p.m. Mr. Weissenberg and the Chamber Players will perform Beethoven's Quintet in E flat for piano and winds in this opening recital in the new Cabot-Cahners Room. After the chamber concert, patrons are invited downstairs for beverages and buffet, then to the 8:30 p.m. concert with Seiji Ozawa and Alexis Weissenberg. Patrons tickets are partially tax deductible.

All proceeds from the Pension Fund concert are for the benefit of the orchestra.

For information regarding tickets call Symphony Hall at 266-1492.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264

FEB 7 1973

New England Newsclip

Fleeting visitor

Seiji Ozawa music director designate of the Boston Symphony, had made his commitments for 1972-73 before his appointment. But he is available to the orchestra for a week of conducting this season: five concerts at Symphony Hall — Feb. 13, 15, 16, and 17, and on the evening of Feb. 18 a special Pension Fund benefit with Alexis Weissenberg as piano soloist.

BOSTON HERALD TRAVELER &
RECORD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 312,885

FEB 13 1973

New England Newsclip

Concert to Aid BSO Fund

Seiji Ozawa, BSO Music Director-elect who will conduct only one week of concerts with the Orchestra this season, will direct a special concert to benefit the Pension Fund, Sunday evening Feb. 18 at 8:30 p.m.

The program will include Berlioz' Overture to "The Roman Carnival"; Beethoven, Piano Concerto No. 4 with Alexis Weissenberg; Haydn, Symphony No. 60 "Il distratto" and Bartok, "The Miraculous Mandarin" suite. Tickets for this concert range from $4.50 to $10 and are available at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

Also scheduled are a special Preview Concert with Weissenberg and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players at 6:30 p.m. and a buffet supper both of which will be open only to those purchasing special "Patrons" tickets. The preview will be the inaugural concert in the new Cabot-Cahners Room. Patrons tickets are $35 each, partially tax deductible, and available at the Box Office.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

FEB 1 1973

New England Newsclip

Current Musical Notes

Seiji Ozawa will conduct an extra concert for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension Fund. Feb. 18 at 8:30 p.m. due to a large demand for tickets. The ocrhester is also offering a limited number of patron tickets for the Pension Fund concert which will enable holders to attend the Alexis Weissenberg and Boston Symphony Chamber Players special preview concert at 6:30 pm. in the new Cabot-Cahners Room. After the chamber concert patrons are invited downstairs for beverages and buffet then to the 8:30 concert with Seiji Ozawa and Alexis Weissenberg, which will feature Mr. Weissenberg playing Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 4. The program will also include Berlioz' Overture to "Le carnaval romain," Haydn's Symphony no. 60 and Bartok's Suite from "The miraiculous mandarin."

It isn't always necessary to go to Symphony Hall to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Once again the Council of friends of the BSO has arranged a Musical Marathon for the benefit of the Symphony and the Pops which will take place on radio station WCRB beginning March 8 at 7 p.m. and continuing non-stop 24 hours a day until 1 a.m. March 12, during which time listeners may select commercially unavailable taped concerts by the two orchestras from a special Musical Marathon catalogue. Requests for music to be broadcast over WCRB are based on $1.00 per minute beginning at $15.00. The catalogues are available at Symphony Hall.

ALLSTON-BRIGHTON
CITIZEN ITEM
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 8,900

FEB 1 1973

New England Newsclip

Conductor does extra concert

Seiji Ozawa, who becomes the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 15th Music Director this fall, will conduct an extra concert for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund, Sunday evening Feb. 18 at 8:30 p.m.

Originally scheduled to conduct only four subscription concerts (February 13, 15, 16 and 17) during his visit to Boston this season, Mr. Ozawa has yielded to the ticket demand and will add this one extra day to his Boston stay.

Sunday's concert opens with Berlioz' Overture to "Le carnaval romain", followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 4 with Alexis Weissenberg as soloist, then Haydn's Symphony no. 60 "Il distratto". The concert closes with Bartok's suite from "The miraculous mandarin". Tickets for this concert range from $10 to $4.50 and are available at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

The Orchestra is also offering a limited number of "Patrons" tickets at $35 each for the Pension Fund concert. Only Patrons will have the opportunity to hear Alexis Weissenberg and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in a special preview concert at 6:30 p.m.

Mr. Weissenberg and the Chamber Players will perform Bethoven's Quintet in E flat for piano and winds in this inaugural recital in the new Cabot-Cahners Room. After the chamber concert Patrons are invited downstairs for beverages and buffet, then to the 8:30 p.m. concert with Seiji Ozawa and Alexis Weissenberg. Patrons tickets are partially tax deductible.

For information regarding concerts, call Symphony Hall at 266-1492.

REPORTER
MARBLEHEAD, MASS.
W. 7,400

FEB 8 1973

New England Newsclip

SWAMPSCOTT REPORTER
MARBLEHEAD, MASS.
W. 3,000

FEB 8 1973

New England Newsclip

SUNDAY HERALD TRAVELER &
SUNDAY ADVERTISER
S. 415,000

FEB 4 1973

New England Newsclip

CHRONICLE-CITIZEN
BROOKLINE, MASS.
W. 10,200

FEB 1 1973

New England Newsclip

ITEM
LYNN, MASS.
D. 34,202

FEB 16 1973

New England

ENTERPRISE
BROCKTON, MASS.
D. 54,587

FEB 10 1973

New England Newsclip

Pension Fund Concerts to Aid Boston Symphony

Sunday, Feb. 18, marks the day of the Pension Fund concerts for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At 8:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, who assumes the post of music director of the Boston Symphony next fall, conducts the orchestra in Berloiz' Overture 'Le carnaval romain,' Beethovan's Piano concerto no. 4 in G with Alexis Weissenberg piano soloist, follows it with Haydyn's Symphony no. 60 in C 'Il distratto,' and closes the concert with Bartok's Suite from "The miraculous mandarin." Tickets, ranging in price from $4.50 to $10 are available at the Symphony Hall box office. The Orchestra is also offering a limited number of "patrons" tickets at $35 each for the Pension Fund concert. Only patrons will have the opportunity to hear Alexis Weissenberg and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in a preview concert at 6:30 p.m. Mr. Weissenberg and the Chamber Players will perform Beethoven's Quintet in E flat for piano and winds in this opening recital in the new Cabot-Cahners Room. After the chamber concert, patrons are invited downstairs for beverages and buffet, then to the 8:30 p.m. concert with Seiji Ozawa and Alexis Weissenberg. All proceeds from the Pension Fund concert are for the benefit of the orchestra.

NEWS
NEWBURYPORT, MASS.
D. 7,358

FEB 14 1973

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398

FEB 12 1973

New England Newsclip

Ozawa Conducts In Boston This Week Only

BOSTON — Seiji Ozawa, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's ~~Music Adviser~~ and future Music Director will be in Boston to conduct the orchestra for one week only this season.

Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. he will conduct Berlioz' Overture "Le Carnaval Romain." Mozart's Violin concerto No. 4 in D with Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist, and Berlioz'

"Symphonie Fantastique"

Thursday at 8.30 p.m., Friday at 2 p.m. and Saturday at 8.30 p.m. he will conduct an all-Berlioz program: "Symphonie Fantastique" and "Lelio."

On Sunday at 8.30 p.m. he will lead a special Pension Fund concert of Berlioz' Overture "Le Carnaval Romain," Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G with Alexis Weissenberg piano soloist, Haydn's Symphony No. 60 in C "Il Distratto" and Bartok's suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin."

NEWS
MALDEN, MASS.
D. 12,420

FEB 12 1973

New England Newsclip

Ozawa Conducts Boston Symphony

BOSTON — Seiji Ozawa, the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~music adviser~~ and future music direcor will be in Boston to conduct the orchestra for one week only this season. On Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., Ozawa will conduct the orchestra in Berlioz' Overture "Le carnaval romain," Mozart's violin concerto no. 4 in D with Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist, and Berlioz' Symphonic fantastique.

On Thursday Feb. 15 at 8:30 p.m., Friday Feb. 16 at 2 p.m. and Saturday, Feb. 17 at 8:30 p.m., Mr. Ozawa will conduct the orchestra in an all-Berlioz program.

FENCE VIEWER
SUDBURY, MASS.
W. 3,000

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

CITIZEN
BELMONT, MASS.
W. 4,350

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

JOURNAL
CONCORD, MASS.
W. 6,000

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

TIMES-UNION
BURLINGTON, MASS.
W. 7,200

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

MINUTE MAN
LEXINGTON, MASS.
W. 8,234

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

MINUTE MAN
BEDFORD, MASS.
W. 2,993

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

Ozawa Conducts

Sunday, Feb. 18 marks the day of the Pension Fund concerts for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At 8:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, who assumes the post of Music Director of the Boston Symphony next fall, conducts the Orchestra in Berlioz' Oyerture 'Le carnaval romain,' Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 4 in G with Alexis Weissenberg piano soloist, follows it with Haydn's Symphony no. 60 in C 'Il distratto,' and closes the concert with Bartok's Suite from "The miraculous mandarin."

62.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514

FEB 14 1973

New England Newsclip

Benefit concert

BOSTON — Sunday Feb. 18 marks the day of the Pension Fund concerts for the benefits of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At 8:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, who assumes the post of music director of the Boston's Symphony next fall, conducts the Orchestra in Berlioz' Overture 'Le Carnaval Romain', Beethoven's Piano Concerto no. 4 in G with Alexis Weissenberg piano soloist, follows it with Haydn's Symphony no. 60 in C 'Il Distratto', and closes the concert with Bartok's

Suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin." Tickets, ranging in price from $4.50 to $10.00 are available at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

The orchestra is also offering a limited number of "patrons" tickets at $35 each for the Pension Fund concert. Only patrons will have the opportunity to hear Alexis Weissenberg and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in a special preview concert at 6:30 p.m. Mr. Weissenberg and the Chamber Players will perform Beethoven's Quintet in E flat for piano and winds in this opening recital in the new Cabot-Cahners Room. After the chamber concert, patrons are invited downstairs for beverages and buffet, then to the 8:30 p.m. concert with Seiji Ozawa and Alexis Weissenberg. Patrons tickets are partially tax deductible.

All proceeds from the Pension Fund concert are for the benefit of the orchestra.

For information regarding tickets call Symphony Hall at 266-1492.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264

FEB 7 1973

New England Newsclip

Fleeting visitor

Seiji Ozawa music director designate of the Boston Symphony, had made his commitments for 1972-73 before his appointment. But he is available to the orchestra for a week of conducting this season: five concerts at Symphony Hall — Feb. 13, 15, 16, and 17, and on the evening of Feb. 18 a special Pension Fund benefit with Alexis Weissenberg as piano soloist.

BOSTON HERALD TRAVELER &
RECORD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 312,885

FEB 13 1973

New England Newsclip

Concert to Aid BSO Fund

Seiji Ozawa, BSO Music Director-elect who will conduct only one week of concerts with the Orchestra this season, will direct a special concert to benefit the Pension Fund, Sunday evening Feb. 18 at 8:30 p.m.

The program will include Berlioz' Overture to "The Roman Carnival"; Beethoven, Piano Concerto No. 4 with Alexis Weissenberg; Haydn, Symphony No. 60 "Il distratto" and Bartok, "The Miraculous Mandarin" suite. Tickets for this concert range from $4.50 to $10 and are available at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

Also scheduled are a special Preview Concert with Weissenberg and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players at 6:30 p.m. and a buffet supper both of which will be open only to those purchasing special "Patrons" tickets. The preview will be the inaugural concert in the new Cabot-Cahners Room. Patrons tickets are $35 each, partially tax deductible, and available at the Box Office.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

FEB 1 1973

New England Newsclip

Current Musical Notes

Seiji Ozawa will conduct an extra concert for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension Fund. Feb. 18 at 8:30 p.m. due to a large demand for tickets. The ocrhester is also offering a limited number of patron tickets for the Pension Fund concert which will enable holders to attend the Alexis Weissenberg and Boston Symphony Chamber Players special preview concert at 6:30 pm. in the new Cabot-Cahners Room. After the chamber concert patrons are invited downstairs for beverages and buffet then to the 8:30 concert with Seiji Ozawa and Alexis Weissenberg, which will feature Mr. Weissenberg playing Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 4. The program will also include Berlioz' Overture to "Le carnaval romain," Haydn's Symphony no. 60 and Bartok's Suite from "The miraculous mandarin."

It isn't always necessary to go to Symphony Hall to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Once again the Council of friends of the BSO has arranged a Musical Marathon for the benefit of the Symphony and the Pops which will take place on radio station WCRB beginning March 8 at 7 p.m. and continuing non-stop 24 hours a day until 1 a.m. March 12, during which time listeners may select commercially unavailable taped concerts by the two orchestras from a special Musical Marathon catalogue. Requests for music to be broadcast over WCRB are based on $1.00 per minute beginning at $15.00. The catalogues are available at Symphony Hall.

ALLSTON-BRIGHTON
CITIZEN ITEM
BOSTON, MASS
W. 8,996

FEB 1 1973

New England Newsclip

Conductor does extra concert

Seiji Ozawa, who becomes the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 15th Music Director this fall, will conduct an extra concert for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund, Sunday evening Feb. 18 at 8:30 p.m.

Originally scheduled to conduct only four subscription concerts (February 13, 15, 16 and 17) during his visit to Boston this season, Mr. Ozawa has yielded to the ticket demand and will add this one extra day to his Boston stay.

Sunday's concert opens with Berlioz' Overture to "Le carnaval romain", followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 4 with Alexis Weissenberg as soloist, then Haydn's Symphony no. 60 "Il distratto". The concert closes with Bartok's suite from "The miraculous mandarin". Tickets for this concert range from $10 to $4.50 and are available at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

The Orchestra is also offering a limited number of "Patrons" tickets at $35 each for the Pension Fund concert. Only Patrons will have the opportunity to hear Alexis Weissenberg and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in a special preview concert at 6:30 p.m.

Mr. Weissenberg and the Chamber Players will perform Bethoven's Quintet in E flat for piano and winds in this inaugural recital in the new Cabot-Cahners Room. After the chamber concert Patrons are invited downstairs for beverages and buffet, then to the 8:30 p.m. concert with Seiji Ozawa and Alexis Weissenberg. Patrons tickets are partially tax deductible.

For information regarding concerts, call Symphony Hall at 266-1492.

REPORTER
MARBLEHEAD, MASS.
W. 7,400

FEB 8 1973

New England Newsclip

SWAMPSCOTT REPORTER
MARBLEHEAD, MASS.
W. 3,000

FEB 8 1973

New England Newsclip

SUNDAY HERALD TRAVELER &
SUNDAY ADVERTISER
S. 415,000

FEB 4 1973

New England Newsclip

CHRONICLE-CITIZEN
BROOKLINE, MASS.
W. 10,200

FEB 1 1973

New England Newsclip

ITEM
LYNN, MASS.
D. 34,202

FEB 16 1973

New England

ENTERPRISE
BROCKTON, MASS.
D. 54,587

FEB 10 1973

New England Newsclip

Pension Fund Concerts to Aid Boston Symphony

Sunday, Feb. 18, marks the day of the Pension Fund concerts for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At 8:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, who assumes the post of music director of the Boston Symphony next fall, conducts the orchestra in Berloiz' Overture 'Le carnaval romain.' Beethovan's Piano concerto no. 4 in G with Alexis Weissenberg piano soloist, follows it with Haydyn's Symphony no. 60 in C 'Il distratto,' and closes the concert with Bartok's Suite from "The miraculous mandarin." Tickets, ranging in price from $4.50 to $10 are available at the Symphony Hall box office. The Orchestra is also offering a limited number of "patrons" tickets at $35 each for the Pension Fund concert. Only patrons will have the opportunity to hear Alexis Weissenberg and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in a preview concert at 6:30 p.m. Mr. Weissenberg and the Chamber Players will perform Beethoven's Quintet in E flat for piano and winds in this opening recital in the new Cabot-Cahners Room. After the chamber concert, patrons are invited downstairs for beverages and buffet, then to the 8:30 p.m. concert with Seiji Ozawa and Alexis Weissenberg. All proceeds from the Pension Fund concert are for the benefit of the orchestra.

NEWS
NEWBURYPORT, MASS.
D. 7,358

FEB 14 1973

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398

FEB 12 1973

New England Newsclip

Ozawa Conducts In Boston This Week Only

BOSTON — Seiji Ozawa, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's ~~Music Adviser~~ and future Music Director will be in Boston to conduct the orchestra for one week only this season.

Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. he will conduct Berlioz' Overture "Le Carnaval Romain." Mozart's Violin concerto No. 4 in D with Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist, and Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique"

Thursday at 8:30 p.m., Friday at 2 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. he will conduct an all-Berlioz program: "Symphonie Fantastique" and "Lelio."

On Sunday at 8:30 p.m. he will lead a special Pension Fund concert of Berlioz' Overture "Le Carnaval Romain," Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G with Alexis Weissenberg piano soloist, Haydn's Symphony No. 60 in C "Il Distratto" and Bartok's suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin."

NEWS
MALDEN, MASS.
D. 12,420

FEB 12 1973

New England Newsclip

Ozawa Conducts Boston Symphony

BOSTON — Seiji Ozawa, the Boston Symphony Orchestra music ~~adviser~~ and future music direcor will be in Boston to conduct the orchestra for one week only this season. On Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., Ozawa will conduct the orchestra in Berlioz' Overture "Le carnaval romain," Mozart's violin concerto no. 4 in D with Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist, and Berlioz' Symphonic fantastique.

On Thursday Feb. 15 at 8:30 p.m., Friday Feb. 16 at 2 p.m. and Saturday, Feb. 17 at 8:30 p.m., Mr. Ozawa will conduct the orchestra in an all-Berlioz program.

FENCE VIEWER
SUDBURY, MASS.
W. 3,000

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

CITIZEN
BELMONT, MASS.
W. 4,350

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

MINUTE MAN
BEDFORD, MASS.
W. 2,993

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

JOURNAL
CONCORD, MASS.
W. 6,000

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

TIMES-UNION
BURLINGTON, MASS.
W. 7,200

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

MINUTE MAN
LEXINGTON, MASS.
W. 8,234

FEB 15 1973

New England Newsclip

Ozawa Conducts

Sunday, Feb. 18 marks the day of the Pension Fund concerts for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At 8:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, who assumes the post of Music Director of the Boston Symphony next fall, conducts the Orchestra in Berlioz' Overture 'Le carnaval romain,' Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 4 in G with Alexis Weissenberg piano soloist, follows it with Haydn's Symphony no. 60 in C 'Il distratto," and closes the concert with Bartok's Suite from "The miraculous mandarin."

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654
FEB 17 1973
New England Newsclip

'Lelio' Out of Berlioz' Wildest Imagination

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

The Symphonie fantastique by Hector Berlioz is pretty much of a textbook classic and a repertory staple. Its sequel, "Lelio, or the return to life" is hardly known at all and almost never performed. According to Berlioz' preface, it "should be heard immediately after the Symphonie fantastique, of which it is the conclusion and complement," and, for once Berlioz' instructions were followed — at the BSO concert conducted by Seiji Ozawa Thursday night.

One listening is enough to tell you why this work never made it into the standard repertory. It is something of a freak —a combination of Berlioz' wildest imaginings and his most mundane work, a bit of crazy egomania plus, as Pierre Boulez describes it, the "contents of the bottom drawer."

What it is is a pastiche of short pieces which Berlioz had written at various times that he attempted to tie together through the device of a monologue by the autobiographical figure, Lelio. The monologue consumes, by far, the better part of the performance and includes some of the anguished lover outpourings so familiar to anyone who has read the "Memoirs." Also, there is a very funny section in which Lelio castigates the artistic establishment (Berlioz' own bete noir) for its conservative tastes that sounds like much of Berlioz own music criticism. And finally there are some really contrived lead-ins to the musical pieces "Hamlet", a Brigands' song, a Fantasie on "The Tempest" etc.).

The pieces themselves are of varying quality — the (A Fisherman's Song, a Chorus of ghosts inspired by

• Concert Review

Chorus of ghosts quite wonderfully mysterious and eerie; the Chant de bonheur and Aeolian Harp beautifully lyrical; and the Tempest Fantasy very silly and trivial.

Anyway, I was delighted Ozawa did "Lelio" and especially that he did it with the Fantastique. It is a fun evening.

For the cast, Ozawa chose Mallory Walker as the Voice of Horatio and of the imagined Lelio; David Evitts as the Captain of Brigands; the Tanglewood Festival Chorus; and as the Narrator, Colin Fox.

Fox, is a dead ringer for Berlioz and he was costumed in 1830's style to enhance the resemblance. He did not, however, really resemble the demeanor which I believe must have been Berlioz'. The tone of his ravings was generally angry, although I think Berlioz would have been more pensive, agonized, brooding and aggrieved.

Walker essayed the extraordinarily difficult kind of singing Berlioz usually writes for tenors with some unease and the chorus sang well although I think the ghost chorus ought to have been more quiet and other-worldly.

Both the Symphonie and "Lelio" were performed spectacularly by the orchestra —Ozawa bringing out all the nuances of color, the extremes of dynamics which complement the extremes of emotional content, creating the grotesque, frenzied passionate worlds of opium dreams and unbridled artistic imagination. There were some fine solos, too, especially by Ralph Gomberg and Harold Wright.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500
FEB 22 1973
New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BERLIOZ OP. 14a AND 14b

On my graduation from high school in Newport News, Virginia, in the mid-thirties the Music Department head presented me with a gift, the memoirs of a composer whose name was then unknown to me. But being a gift the book must be read, and thus the first intimations to me of the personal, professional and aesthetic careers, in all of their audacity, impact and tragedy, of that strange and erratic genuis, Hector Berlioz.

Running through the "Memoirs" like a theme is an account of the origins and subsequent history of the "Symphonie fantastique." Every word is fascinating and instructive, and one sees how the "Fantastique" is the seed and remains today the patriach of pictorial composition. It has, of course, occupied a very special place in BSO annals. On the other hand, buried in a single episode is the account of "Lelio." Until its listing for performance by Seiji Ozawa last weekend I had never encountered the name after those high school days, let alone heard the piece.

Yet the two compositions — one a towering masterwork of the repertory, the other something from a museum's storage attic — are inextricably related with their continuing opium dream "story."

The "Fantastique" was a sensation when first performed in Paris in 1830. Berlioz had immediately gone off to Rome for the ensuing two years and on his return needed a vehicle to jog the memories of the Parisian public. Hence, a "newly composed" sequel consisting of a series of musical numbers connected by a chain of declamations by the earlier work's protagonist, now recovered from his opium hallucinations. The music in the sequel was characteristically composed of a potpourri of compositions of Berlioz' youthful years (remember that theme in the Franc-Guges overture?) and the speeches are vintage Berliozese that jump right out of the man's life. The two works were numbered opus 14a and 14b respectively, and where played together Berlioz ordinarily insisted in distributing the "Fantastique's" dramatic plan with the program notes. And that is what Mr. Ozawa did in this concert.

The quality of the "Lelio" score is fully as uneven as one might expect under the circumstances of its basting. Some measures approach the sublimity of the finer moments of the "Nuit d'Ete" and "Faust." More are of the tea-time background music genre. The latter nonetheless is unfailingly charming. So we had a thoroughly listenable score combined with what undoubtedly is close to the ultimate in period pieces.

It must have been these elements that contrived to make the audience seem more than merely indulgent in accepting the format and contents of the spectacle on its own campy terms. It seemed almost to get itself involved in the narration with its jibes, its heroic posturing, its sighs and supplications, pulled off incidentally with considerable eclat by a Canadian actor named Colin Fox. The tenor, Mallory Walker, singing the role of the protagonist, had his problems with his upper registers and occasional stridency in the rest of his range but withal carried his difficult assignment acceptably, as did someone in the lesser role of the Captain of the Brigands who was substituting for the ailing Braun and whose announced name I did not catch.

The choral part was handled by the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. This ensemble was founded in 1970 under the joint auspices of the Orchestra and Boston University, and on this occasion, as earlier in the season in Mahler's Second Symphony, showed itself as a fine new addition to the clutch of fine choruses in this area. As for the Orchestra, it dealt with its rather undemanding portion with a relaxed and occasionally lax professionalism.

The Orchestra's performance of the "Symphonie fantastique," though, was anything but relaxed. It was one of those readings when the players were clearly "up" and any listener with an ear and a heart knows the signs: the burnished tone, the clarity of the inner voices, the hairline attacks, the vivacity of the strings and the unmistakable overall brio. If this was a portent of how the Orchestra is going to do under Seiji Ozawa, the Golden Age is nigh at hand.

The Berlioz momentum continues apace this weekend. Colin Davis returns for his second round of the season and will conduct the Orchestra's first Boston performance of the "Te Deum," with Kenneth Riegel, tenor, and again the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. Mozart's Symphony No. 39 will be the companion work.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
FEB 17 1973
New England Newsclip

Ozawa brings 'Lelio' and 'Fastastique'

MICHAEL STEINBERG

"Lelio" is the child of vanity and thrift. Berlioz needed a come-back vehicle. What could be better than a sequel to the "Fantastic Symphony" whose premiere two years earlier, in 1830, had been such a glamorous success? And what an opportunity to use a heterogeneous bunch of pieces — among them a Goethe ballad for tenor and piano, a brigands' chorus, and a fantasy on Shakespeare's "Tempest" — waiting patiently in desk drawers, some for as much as five years.

A scenario was made. The protagonist of the "Fantastic Symphony" — his name is Lelio, obviously baby-talk for Berlioz — wakes from his opium dream. He speaks, and his words are cues for music. What has his friend Horatio been up to? — probably still sitting at the piano playing his favorite ballad. He meditates on "Hamlet," and the orchestra begins to play the music he imagines one might compose for a Chorus of Shades from the undiscovered country. Oh, I'm so fed up with all this — let's go to Naples or Calabria — blood, lava, and Lacryma Christi: the brigands sing. I have sketches for a "Tempest" Fantasy: shall we try it out? And, to make a frame as well as to reinforce the claim that "Lelio" really is "the conclusion and complement" of the "Fantastique," Berlioz begins and ends with appearances of Idefix, that favorite comic-strip character from the Symphony.

Performances of both parts of the "Episode in the life of an artist" — "Fantastique" with sequel — are rare, and Seiji Ozawa provided Boston with its first, or certainly the first at a Boston Symphony concert, Thursday evening. For that our thanks, because, absurd as the dramatic pretext is and impossible as it is to believe in the two-part "Episode" as a single work, "Lelio" is worth experiencing.

So characteristic is it as a Romantic conceit that it affords a singularly vivid glimpse of a certain temperament and a certain way of living with art. A better reason is that some of the music is very beautiful. Not so much the Ballad, but the Brigands, whose music is full of life (good practice, too, for the "Harold in Italy" finale), and the sombre Chorus of Shades. Lelio's Song of Bliss, in the delicate style of "Nuits d'ete," is on a still higher level, and it is followed by a very lovely instrumental meditation on it, "The Aeolian harp." "Tempest," the only section that does not antedate the "Fantastique," is the most ambitious section of "Lelio," and it has extraordinary sonorities (the writing for woodwinds, muted solo violins, and piano duet at the beginning!) as well as the play of Berlioz's poetic fantasy and power of characterization.

For that matter, some of Berlioz's script still amuses: Lelio's mordant comments about critics and orchestra players tell us once again that "plus ca change . . ." The work can still be put over: Thursday's audience, restless and noisy during the music, cheered and applauded for a long time.

From the enthusiasm about the performances, I must to some degree dissent. Now Tuesday, that was something else. On a program that ended with the "Fantastique" (which I did not hear), Ozawa and the orchestra, started with a brilliant, poised "Roman Carnival" Overture, and, with Joseph Silverstein, went on to a performance of perfect elegance of Mozart's D major Violin Concerto, K.218, simpler than the one with Levine at Tanglewood and the better for it. Both performances were of a high order of virtuosity and taste.

Thursday, the orchestra, which played much of "Lelio" very well, was often rackety in the "Fantastique." Ozawa, perhaps still a little unsure of "Lelio" and a little too sure of the "Fantastique," tended to undercharacterize the former and to coarsen the latter. The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, whose intonation is admirable, sang no pianissimo and in bad French and Italian. The Canadian actor Colin Fox brought the wrong elements to his reading of Lelio—earth and water instead of fire and air. David Evitts, a last-moment substitute for Victor Braun, brought lively professionalism to the role of the Captain of the Brigands; Mallory Walker's singing of the two tenor solos was musically and vocally undistinguished.

Some of these defects aer conceptual of built in; others, I would guess, were failures specifically of that performance. The program is repeated tonight and is well worth a look.

Remember the WCRB-BSO Marathon: March 8-11.

64.
BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654
FEB 21 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO Pension Benefit Concert Had 'Dividends'

By DAVID NOBLE

Delicious Berlioz, Haydn, and Bartok performances were added dividends at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund benefit concert Sunday night.

Given to support the well-earned leisure of musicians who gave their lives to the orchestra, the concert was also an augury of beneficial relations between the orchestra and conductor Seiji Ozawa, who will become the BSO's music director next season.

The "Roman Carnival Overture" of Berlioz had, in the appropriate places, shapely melody and dash. Overall, Ozawa's interpretation of it fell nicely between the frenzy he stirred up at the end of the composer's "Symphonie Fantastique" in a concert last week and the reserve of that same program's "Lelio" (also by Berlioz—quite a week).

Alexis Weissenberg appeared as soloist in Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto. This pianist has made an authoritative recording of Rachmaninoff's Third Concerto, but in Beethoven's scaled-down and more intricate rhetoric he seemed to be of at least two minds. At first he responded only to passages that invited imposing rhetoric; then, in the second movement, he found fulfillment in dramatically quiet answers to Ozawa's muscular string statements. In the finale, he vacillated between these levels of voice, though the performance gained rhythmic momentum.

If Ozawa had conducted the whole concert in the bold way he did the middle movement — the fact that he employed all the orchestras's string also suggested a bold approach — the result might have been interesting. But after working to bring the loudness down at the beginning he, too, wandered among playing styles at the end (I was particularly unimpressed by the attempts of the full double-bass section to walk on little cat's feet).

After intermission Haydn's Symphony No. 60 kept a large complement of players, but was put together delectably by the music director-elect. Put together by Haydn from six segments of music written for a play production, the symphony abounds in deliberate formal "mistakes" which, if they don't sound wrong to modern ears, sound decidedly odd. The performance was a comic success.

• Concert Review

This symphony is subtitled, "Il Distratto"—"The Absent-Minded," in one translation—but one listener suggested that it be dubbed, "The Non-Sequitur."

Last, and most memorable, was Bartok's suite from his ballet, "The Miraculous Mandarin." Written with the brutal rhythms and shrieking sonorities of Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring" but with a post-Beethovenian formal tightness, this piece is a high point in Bartok's career and one of the grand showpieces of twentieth-century music.

Ozawa's performances of it with the BSO were widely praised a yar ago; they did it again. Their view of it is flexible, light and slashing—quite different from the pile-driving approach taken by Hungarian conductors such as Dorati, Reiner, and Solti. Bartok was Hungarian, but this Japanese interpretation reveals many cutting details the others covered in their passions. Every member of the viola section deserves individual praise for the unity achieved in the jagged statement that follows the suite's first climax.

In both Belioz and Bartok, Ozawa demanded and to a remarkable extent got a muscular pointing of sharp accents played in fast tempos—a kind of driving authority the BSO has not consistently displayed for several years. This sharp profiling of phrases can, if taken to excess, dissect music into bleeding chunks, but it is good to hear the orchestra brought before that kind of conducting.

Post Script: Before Sunday's concert, four first-chair wind players from the orchestra joined pianist Weissenberg in Symphony Hall's Cabot-Cahners Room to play an early work of Beethoven's before several dozen patrons of the Pension Fund: the Quintet in E-Flat, Op. 16.

In the live, warm ambience of that foyer the tones produced by oboist Ralph Gomberg, clarinetist Harold Wright, bassoonist Sherman Walt, and horn player Charles Kavaloski were so rich and well modulated that it was difficult at first to pay attention to Beethoven.

The five players took an appropriately quiet, rhythmically straightforward approach to Beethoven's well crafted hors d'ouvre, and maintained it throughout except in a few climaxes, which were more resounding than was strictly necessary in the confined space.

In his non-soloistic part, Weissenberg proved himself an expert accompanist, adjusting to the wind playing with exquisite skill and letting his fleeter, Mozartean idea of the music show only at a couple of moments.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
FEB 16 1973
New England Newsclip

In Concert

The Peak of Form

By Peter M. Knapp

"Special Appearance-One Week Only," read the flyers being handed out at Symphony Hall for Seiji Ozawa's brief visit to Boston.

But this year's "music adviser" becomes next year's music director as of September, and the Boston Symphony will be seeing more of him. Not that they are strangers, but Ozawa has led the orchestra at Tanglewood more than in Boston during the past few years, and there is something of "the new man" to him for BSO audiences.

Ozawa and the orchestra scooped up a lot of merit-badge points at Tuesday night's concert, mostly built around the Berlioz stand-bys that Ozawa does with such flair. The program was conventional, but it went very well, and at least some audience sentiment was summed up in a remark overheard during intermission — "at last they're playing something I know."

Well, the season hasn't been that daring, but on this occasion under WGBH-TV's bright lights the music-making was high-voltage. There were Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture, and the "Symphonie Fantastique" and Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 4 in D, K. 218, for which Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein was soloist.

Between the two Berlioz sonic extravaganzas the gentle and genial Mozart concerto might have been lost but for the well-proportioned, sensitive performance. Ozawa scaled down the orchestra to sensible balance, and the playing was deft, pointed and light, with good rapport between conductor and soloist.

Silverstein played beautifully, letting the score breathe, phrasing gracefully. He has matured immensely as a soloist since his early years with the orchestra and there is both more character and less fussiness to his playing now — a notable example being in the slow movement, whose lines were set out simply yet expressively. He also supplied the cadenzas for the first two movements, tasteful and stylistically "right."

The "Symphonie Fantastique" has become something of an Ozawa specialty, and perhaps there has built up between the conductor and orchestra that sense of security that comes from knowing what is wanted. At any rate, there is a feeling of being on sure ground whatever the orchestral razzle-dazzle.

Of course the "March to the Scaffold" and the "Witches' Sabbath" with its vivid instrumental effects rarely fail to make a big splash if played well, but Ozawa is equally good in the quieter moments — the opening soliloquy of the "Day Dreams" movement or the "Scene in the Fields," with Laurence Thorstenberg's thoughtful, rich-toned English horn solo. For all its familiarity, it is a pleasure to hear the "Symphonie Fantastique" played with such vividness and drama — and to hear the Boston Symphony in such peak form.

MAINE SUNDAY
TELEGRAM
PORTLAND, MAINE
S. 111,360
FEB 18 1973
New England Newsclip

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
FEB 20 1973
New England Newsclip

In Concert

Berlioz at Random

By David Noble
Patriot Ledger Correspondent

The sequel Berlioz wrote to continue his "Symphonie Fantastique" was played Thursday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Seiji Ozawa after a performance of the "Fantastique," which was held over from the performance earlier in the week.

The sequel, written two years after the "Symphonie" was completed, is titled "Lelio, or the Return to Life"; it is distinctly odd. To be strictly truthful, it is a commercial paste-up job Berlioz did to promote a revival of the "Fantastique."

Collecting choral and other oddments from projects that just preceded the great "Symphonie," Berlioz put them together in a suite of pieces linked by one of the most amazing narrations ever delivered from Symphony Hall's stage. Thursday night actor Colin Fox looked and sounded like just the kind of vaporing romantic Berlioz intended, except that the talking (not the singing) was done in English.

Though microphoned with excellent clarity, Fox had trouble sustaining interest in the character he portrayed. His limited palette of gestures faces, and speech inflections was partly to blame, but so was Berlioz (it is reported that Parisian audiences ate it up enthusiastically in 1832).

Dramatic Moment

The best musico-dramatic moment came near the beginning. As the narrator gushes about his friend Horatio, Horatio appears at the corner of the stage — he turns out to be a tenor singing with piano accompaniment. As he sings something with obvious analogy to the scenario of "Symphonie Fantastique" the narrator breaks in with intense reactions, during which song and piano stop. In one of these exclamation breaks the orchestra, which so far has lain dormant, puts a violin line behind Lelio's ramblings. The change in sonic depth and presence is amazing — it is one of Berlioz's great moments — and then it becomes plain that what the violins are playing is the cyclic theme from the "Fantastique," in a musico-literary reference.

Nothing that happens later quite comes up to that event, although there is an amusing number for the chorus' men, all about Sicilian banditti making captive girls drink from their boyfriends' skulls. Most of the six musical segments concern Shakespeare and/or Harriet Smithson, an actress who was important to Berlioz at the time.

A Musical Down

Before the last movement Lelio addresses the orchestra and chorus, making remarks on musical performance that the Symphony Hall audience found amusing (a brief judgment of the "performance" written by Berlioz for delivery after the final chorus was omitted.)

All in all the music is elegant enough, varied, and worthwhile as a suite of uncollected Berlioz. As a sequel to the "Fantastique" you might call it a benign "down" after the symphony's frenetic up trip — down musically, that is not literally. Ozawa's performance was on the careful side — everything was performed securely, but on a reduced scale as far as softs and louds were concerned.

The Tanglewood chorus was at least equally reduced in volume, almost disturbingly so in view of its size. Tenor Mallory Walker sang two solos with a floridity and skill that enhanced both music and period flavor; baritone David Evitts, recruited at the last minute to replace Victor Braun as the captain of banditti, was light and sprightly in a difficult part.

I could sit through "Lelio" again sometime, as long as it is spoken in French, a language I do not understand.

Music

Concert Association Lays It On Line

By JOHN THORNTON

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra under its new director, Seiji Ozawa, will be brought to Portland next season as a principal attraction by the Portland Concert Association.

In booking the orchestra, the PCA scores a definite coup since the agency in New York representing the BSO had made it plain the ensemble did not tour small cities. So Portland Concert Association officers went directly to management and obtained the contract for it to appear in City Hall Auditorium.

This will be the first time in three decades that the PCA has brought the Bostonians to Portland. The last time was in 1943 when Koussevitsky was at the helm.

Exactly what Ozawa will elect to conduct will not be known for some time, nor will the exact date of performance be determined for a few weeks, although it seems likely to be in November.

The last time this great orchestra visited Portland was on Jan. 25, 1966 at the invitation of Bowdoin College, which at the time was celebrating its salute to Carl Ruggles.

Normally the BSO numbers 104, but that night the big Strauss tone-poem "Ein Heldenleben," was the chief item on the agenda, along with the American premiere of Ruggles' "Suntreader," and the instrumentation called for augmented ensemble. The stage itself had not been deepened — this was before the auditorium's $500,000 face lift — and it took some doing to get them all on the old platform.

Since the half million dollar renovation the stage is larger and there are better facilities for dressing. In the old days musicians had to change in the corridors and toilets.

Needless to say, the Boston Symphony is the most important orchestra PCA has engaged in many seasons. We have had outstanding orchestras, like the Pittsburgh Symphony (twice, 1962-1971) the Detroit Symphony, the Minneapolis, NDR of Hamburg, the Minnesota Orchestra, the Indianapolis and Helsinki orchestras, and in 1966 the Monte Carlo.

Then we had the Dallas Symphony in the season of 1964-65, the Philharmonica Hungarica in 1962 and the Cincinnati Orchestra in the season of 1953-54, which makes it 10 years since its current visit, not 15 as announced from the podium by resident conductor Erich Kunzel. But all of those, however excellent, are hardly in the class with the BSO, among the greatest in the world.

The fact that Ozawa is scheduled to conduct (barring illness or emergency) is a large drawing card; the young Japanese maestro is one of the most sought after directors in music today. His appointment came as a pleasing surprise to the orchestra members, who admire him, and to the astonishment of the musical world. He is the youngest music director in the history of the BSO.

Ozawa made his first appearance as a guest conductor before the Boston Orchestra nine years ago. His career since then has truly been meteoric. First he established himself as an attraction in the role of guest conductor, leading prominent orchestras in Europe, America and Asia. Appointed an assistant to Leonard Bernstein at the New York Philharmonic in 1961, eventually he was made permanent director of the Toronto Symphony but resigned that post in 1969 to accept more of the guest conducting offers that were flowing in. Soon he was leading the New York Philharmonic, Philadelphia and Cleveland Orchestras regularly.

He then accepted a post as music director of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. When his appointment as the man to succeed William Steinberg was announced, some supporters of the BSO were concerned as to how he could be boss for two orchestras located a continent apart. So far it looks like it will work, since his contract allows him to devote a number of weeks to each orchestra.

A graduate of the Toho School of Music in Tokyo where he won prizes in composition and conducting, Ozawa later went to Europe to win an international competition. One of the judges at that affair was Charles Munch, then music director of the Boston Symphony. Impressed, he asked Ozawa to Tanglewood to become a conducting student. The youth promptly won a Koussevitsky memorial scholarship.

The remainder of the PCA season will be divided between the extremely popular musician Peter Nero, and the ranking Metropolitan operatic team of James McCracken and Sandra Warfield.

Nero is a multi-talented artist, pianist, composer, conductor, who has developed over the years a substantial following whose recent recordings featured the themes from "Love Story" and "Summer of '42" followed by music from "The Godfather."

McCracken is by far the most famous "Othello" on the opera stage today, and his wife, Sandra Warfield, is one of the Met's leading mezzo-sopranos. The two recently toured the coutry appearing as the leads in "Carmen" and have also been acclaimed for their performances together in "Samson and Delilah."

For those who don't know, this next few weeks will provide the only opportunity available to buy tickets for the concert association series.

There are hundreds of loosely affiliated concert associations across the land and they all operate in pretty much the same manner. They sell only season tickets, not individual ducats, and usually for only one or two weeks, about six months in advance of the beginning of the season.

Most draw artists from a master list compiled by one New York booking agency, Columbia Artists, and in the past, membership of one association has included the privilege of attending the concerts of sister associations.

Thus, members of concert associations in Lewiston, or Bangor, could attend without further payment concerts put on by the association in Portland. Or a Portland member perhaps visiting Los Angeles could use his membership card to gain free admittance to an LA Concert Association event, if seats were available.

The Portland Concert Association is now in the process of upsetting this little apple cart, and some of its neighbors with it.

In fact, they have already put up the barriers. A busload of members of the Lewiston-Auburn Concert Association were turned away, amid angry recriminations, from the PCA's first event of this season, the Teicher-Ferrante concert.

Newsday
GARDEN CITY, N. Y.
D. & SUN. 429,162
FEB 1 8 1973

The Indianapolis Star
D. 231,064 SUN. 379,299
MAR 1 1 1973

MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
D. 20,000
MAR 2 3 1973

The Home News
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
D. 50,927 SUN. 52,421
MAY 2 9 1973

MICKLIN/Michael Tilson Thomas Takes to the Podium and the Pulpit

By Bob Micklin

At a recent Carnegie Hall concert by the Boston Symphony, young conductor-pianist Michael Tilson Thomas was little more than three-quarters through the program when the music almost stopped.

The orchestra was not on stage at that point. Thomas, Steve Reich and two other keyboard players were seated at four portable electric organs. The quartet was performing Reich's "Four Organs," an avant-garde composition essentially based on two chords. The total effect was one of hypnotic sound-flow, but the audience was anything but hypnotized.

After about 10 minutes of electronic droning from the stage, many people headed for the exits. Whistles, jeers, and catcalls started from all parts of the hall. Shouts of "Get off the stage" and "Take it away" were heard. When, after nearly 20 minutes, "Four Organs" ended, a few young people stood up and applauded. The rest of the audience, including many other young people, whistled and booed.

"I've never been in an experience like that before," Michael Tilson Thomas said recently in his Manhattan hotel suite. "Never encountered an audience which actually tried to stop a performance. There were several points as we were playing when we couldn't hear ourselves—we had to count our parts by the numbers. Steve Reich was really floored. He'd been playing his music mostly before small groups of people who wanted to hear it. He never suspected the piece would get such antagonistic reactions."

It was, however, one of the few musical experiences Thomas had not previously encountered. At 28, his biography reads like the invention of a movie scriptwriter with a hyperactive imagination. Born in Hollywood . . . nephew of actor Paul Muni . . . played piano by ear at 5 . . . fascinated with chemistry and geology . . . studied music, architecture at the University of Southern California.

Much more: Graduate degree in music from USC in 1968, received award as the university's outstanding alumnus that same day . . . met and worked with Pierre Boulez, Jascha Heifetz and Gregor Piatigorsky while still in college . . . conducted the Youth Concerts of the Los Angeles Philharmonic . . . won the 1968 Koussevitsky conducting prize at Tanglewood, Mass. . . . appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1969.

The biggest break, Oct. 22, 1969: Stepped in for conductor William Steinberg when the maestro became ill during Boston Symphony concert in New York . . . a dramatic and musical success . . . took over podium for many of the Boston's remaining concerts of that season.

Next season: Named associate conductor of the Boston . . . conducted the London Symphony, and at Tanglewood, Chicago's Ravinia Festival and the Mostly Mozart Festival in New York . . . became one of the favorites to replace Steinberg as Boston music director . . . the job went to Seiji Ozawa in 1970, but Thomas named director of the Buffalo Philharmonic soon after . . . recently signed new, three-year contract with the Buffalo . . . also new director of New York Philharmonic's Youth Concerts . . . interested in every kind of sound, from oriental and medieval music to rock and roll to automobile engines . . . is tall, dark, single, good-looking and frightfully busy all the time.

The Carnegie Hall concert (which also included Johann Christian Bach's "Grand Overture for Double Orchestra," Bartok's "Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta" and that unique set of piano variations for six pianists and orchestra called "Herameron") was an example of what Thomas has been doing as a guest with the Boston over the past two years—putting together programs called "Spectrum Concerts" centered around a theme. In this case, the theme was "Musical Multiples," six pianists, a double overture, four organs, etc.

Reich's composition, which stirred up so much hostility, employed two chords held for varying lengths of time, and the concept is one of extremely delicate tonal shifts and balances. Time-spans are altered almost imperceptibly, each chord held for a certain amount of counts, with the counts lengthened or contracted so that the duration of each chord becomes more important than its harmonic content. Subtle changes in emphasis occur as one or more of the players takes over the dominant voice, and both the stresses and rhythmic nuances of the piece demand strict concentration on the part of the audience.

"I want a concert to be a controversial event," Thomas said. "I make up programs to contrast one esthetic with a different one, to examine the musical density and complexity of ideas in various pieces. When I program a piece of new music along with other, older music, my purpose is not to shock the audience but to open their ears. When you're not willing to open your mind to new experiences, you are at that moment dead!"

Thomas enjoys making such dramatic pronouncements, and if they came from a lesser musician, you would merely dismiss them as youthful hyperbole. But Thomas is undeniably a brilliant artist, one who has, as one critic said, "talent to burn."

"Today's concert world is designed for dead people," he said. "You hear the same things over and over again. There's only one thing I have to be aggressive about, and that's my philosophy of openness and exploring new things. Look, if you don't want to come to my concerts, don't come. I'm interested in learning new things even if I don't like them, and I expect my audiences to have the same attitude."

But is it fair of him to expect his audiences to be as aware of and concerned with the varieties of musical experience as he is? "Sure," he said, "and many of them are. In Buffalo, half of my entire season is devoted to musical exploration and it's attended by a young, hip, alive audience." Ah, the familiar youth vote. "No," he said. "It's a priority to get young people interested in 'classical' music, to show them what an exciting and beautiful experience it is.

"The base of support of orchestras is going to change. The standard repertory, the basically German repertory, is going to change. They have to change. The old subscribers have to disappear sooner or later, but I don't want symphony orchestras to disappear along with them. The symphony has to become the definer of what future orchestras should be.

"During the 1950s there was great experimentation in music—a fantastic leap in the difficulty of music. Not technical difficulty, but conceptual difficulty. The 19th Century was an age of romantic excess. The 20th Century has been an age of intellectual excess, which has aggravated the traditional antagonisms between players and composers.

"The musicians have claimed the music is too difficult to understand. The composers have claimed that the musicans won't try it, and so they've given up writing for orchestras and have turned to writing for smaller ensembles. But I'm trying to work out how to make clear to the musicians what they have to do in a contemporary piece of music. What their roles are and why they're supposed to do this or that. I've found that players

—Continued on Page 52

The Pittsburgh Press
D. 346,000 SUN. 744,732
MAR 1 1 1973

Discretion may be the better part of valor, but too much discretion makes a dull symphony season, and at least a few conductors have had the right idea in venturing out on the limb of unusual programming.

At a recent Carnegie Hall concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conductor Michael Tilson Thomas raised audience eyebrows and ire by playing Bach and Bartok alongside music for rock organs and maracas by avant-gardist Steve Reich. And piling the bizarre on top of the preposterous Thomas disintered Liszt's "Hexameron" for six pianos and orchestra — a curio if there ever was one.

Michael Tilson Thomas on podium and pulpit

—Continued from Page 50

often know much more than composers or conductors think, but when they're playing a complicated piece, they can only realize their part. They cannot perceive the total fabric of the piece."

Trying to simultaneously inspire both musicians and audiences would seem an intimidating task, but Thomas obviously relishes such challenges. "I try to involve everyone in the music," he said, "to have everyone share in it. The only orchestra directors doing this are Pierre Boulez and I. In Buffalo, Lukas Foss [the orchestra's previous director] prepared the way for me. He introduced a lot of musical exploration to that audience, and I've built on what he established."

He has no regrets about being in Buffalo instead of Boston. There are certain knowledgeable people in the music world, in fact, who say that he was offered the directorship of the Boston before Ozawa, and turned it down. "All I can say is that I don't think I would have been ready for so much responsibility two years ago," he smiled. "I've always been influenced by Asiatic studies, and I've learned there is a right time to do everything—a way you make your life that takes you through. So much has happened to me in such a short time that, for a while, I almost lost control of my own life. I think I understand more things now. I think I know how to set my own tempo."

A short time later, Michael Tilson Thomas began studying the score for a New York Philharmonic Young People's Concert he would do the next day. As you read this, he is already in Europe where he has conducted the London Symphony and Rome's Italian Radio Orchestra. /II

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719
APR 1973

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas, presented a "concert of musical multiples." It began with J. C. Bach's Overture for Double Orchestra in E flat, and Bartók's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta. The first piece following intermission was Steve Reich's Four Organs, for rock organ quartet and maracas. It was greeted by boos, hisses, pre-emptory applause (unsuccessful), and an occasional audience member who fled the hall in mid-performance. In short, much of the audience demonstrated a boorish rudeness rarely encountered at concerts these days (except by opera-goers who begin their applause the moment the curtain begins to fall). This was all the more curious since Four Organs is not really a very bad work, just very boring. The most appropriate and demonstrative response would have been total silence, perhaps punctuated by an occasional yawn. But then audiences are a notoriously non-silent group, particularly during the performance, so a collective outburst of ennui could hardly be expected.

The concert ended with its Piece de resistance, Liszt's Hexameron for six pianos and orchestra. This, in its first New York performance in this version, was a smashing success. —Turner

SATURDAY REVIEW
EDUCATION
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY CIRC. N. AVAIL.
MAR 1973

MUSIC

Four in a Row by the B.S.O.

On its most recent visit to New York, the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed on four successive evenings, which may have happened before. But the conductor on all four occasions was Michael Tilson Thomas, something rather less common. In addition to the usual Wednesday-Friday pair at Philharmonic Hall, he led the orchestra in another pair as well—the Thursday and Saturday night appearances at Carnegie Hall.

The most unusual of these was the Thursday night program, which duplicated the events he has been directing in Boston under the title of Spectrum concerts. The gambit here was "Multiples," which included such familiar specimens of divided ensembles as an overture (or symphony) for double orchestra by Johann Christian Bach (in E-flat), music by Gabrieli for brass choirs on opposite sides of the hall's second tier, and Bartók's Music for Strings, Percussion, and Celesta with its subdivided personnel. For a rousing finale Thomas offered a rare hearing of Liszt's Hexaméron, with a relay of pianists playing variations by Thalberg (Virginia Eskin), Johann Pixis (Marilyn Neeley), Henri Herz (Craig Sheppard), Carl Czerny (Peter Basquin), and Frédéric Chopin (Antonio Barbosa). Raymond Lewenthal had the honor of leading off by impersonating Liszt. It was clear that a good time was had by all, especially the several pianists.

Between the Bartók and the Liszt, Thomas indulged his sub-Bernstein gift for linguistics and his own passion for the innovative, however banal, in Steve Reich's Four Organs. This is an exploitation of the rock organ, an instrument of the electronic family with keyboard, amplifier, and oversized loudspeaker. Thomas's dissertation on the possibilities of four such instruments and a quartet of maracas aroused an interest singularly unfulfilled by twenty minutes' repetition of a single chord sequence. Its blurrings, overlappings, and twitterings combined a maximum of insolence with a minimum of ingenuity.

The massive sonorities generated in the Reich and Liszt pieces were harmless in themselves, but they may go a long way toward explaining one of the loudest performances ever heard of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, in the first of the Philharmonic Hall programs. It did not respond so well to Thomas's current commitment to decibel impact as the Third Symphony of Copland, which followed. The volume tapered off somewhat in the Saturday night program, devoted to Prokofiev's Scythian Suite, Stravinsky's Les Noces (only four pianos), and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloé (with chorus). I. K.

Newsday
GARDEN CITY, N. Y.
D. & SUN. 429,162
FEB 1 8 1973

The Indianapolis Star
D. 231,064 SUN. 379,299
MAR 1 1 1973

MIDDLETOWN, CONN. PRESS
MAR 23 1973

The Home News
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
MAY 29 1973

MICKLIN/Michael Tilson Thomas Takes to the Podium and the Pulpit

By Bob Micklin

At a recent Carnegie Hall concert by the Boston Symphony, young conductor-pianist Michael Tilson Thomas was little more than three-quarters through the program when the music almost stopped.

The orchestra was not on stage at that point. Thomas, Steve Reich and two other keyboard players were seated at four portable electric organs. The quartet was performing Reich's "Four Organs," an avant-garde composition essentially based on two chords. The total effect was one of hypnotic sound-flow, but the audience was anything but hypnotized.

After about 10 minutes of electronic droning from the stage, many people headed for the exits. Whistles, jeers, and catcalls started from all parts of the hall. Shouts of "Get off the stage" and "Take it away" were heard. When, after nearly 20 minutes, "Four Organs" ended, a few young people stood up and applauded. The rest of the audience, including many other young people, whistled and booed.

"I've never been in an experience like that before," Michael Tilson Thomas said recently in his Manhattan hotel suite. "Never encountered an audience which actually tried to stop a performance. There were several points as we were playing when we couldn't hear ourselves—we had to count our parts by the numbers. Steve Reich was really floored. He'd been playing his music mostly before small groups of people who wanted to hear it. He never suspected the piece would get such antagonistic reactions."

It was, however, one of the few musical experiences Thomas had not previously encountered. At 28, his biography reads like the invention of a movie scriptwriter with a hyperactive imagination. Born in Hollywood . . . nephew of actor Paul Muni . . . played piano by ear at 5 . . . fascinated with chemistry and geology . . . studied music, architecture at the University of Southern California.

Much more: Graduate degree in music from USC in 1968, received award as the university's outstanding alumnus that same day . . . met and worked with Pierre Boulez, Jascha Heifetz and Gregor Piatigorsky while still in college . . . conducted the Youth Concerts of the Los Angeles Philharmonic . . . won the 1968 Koussevitsky conducting prize at Tanglewood, Mass. . . . appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1969.

The biggest break, Oct. 22, 1969: Stepped in for conductor William Steinberg when the maestro became ill during Boston Symphony concert in New York . . . a dramatic and musical success . . . took over podium for many of the Boston's remaining concerts of that season.

Next season: Named associate conductor of the Boston . . . conducted the London Symphony, and at Tanglewood, Chicago's Ravinia Festival and the Mostly Mozart Festival in New York . . . became one of the favorites to replace Steinberg as Boston music director . . . the job went to Seiji Ozawa in 1970, but Thomas named director of the Buffalo Philharmonic soon after . . . recently signed new, three-year contract with the Buffalo . . . also new director of New York Philharmonic's Youth Concerts . . . interested in every kind of sound, from oriental and medieval music to rock and roll to automobile engines . . . is tall, dark, single, good-looking and frightfully busy all the time.

The Carnegie Hall concert (which also included Johann Christian Bach's "Grand Overture for Double Orchestra," Bartok's "Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta" and that unique set of piano variations for six pianists and orchestra called "Herameron") was an example of what Thomas has been doing as a guest with the Boston over the past two years—putting together programs called "Spectrum Concerts" centered around a theme. In this case, the theme was "Musical Multiples," six pianists, a double overture, four organs, etc.

Reich's composition, which stirred up so much hostility, employed two chords held for varying lengths of time, and the concept is one of extremely delicate tonal shifts and balances. Time-spans are altered almost imperceptibly, each chord held for a certain amount of counts, with the counts lengthened or contracted so that the duration of each chord becomes more important than its harmonic content. Subtle changes in emphasis occur as one or more of the players takes over the dominant voice, and both the stresses and rhythmic nuances of the piece demand strict concentration on the part of the audience.

"I want a concert to be a controversial event," Thomas said. "I make up programs to contrast one esthetic with a different one, to examine the musical density and complexity of ideas in various pieces. When I program a piece of new music along with other, older music, my purpose is not to shock the audience but to open their ears. When you're not willing to open your mind to new experiences, you are at that moment dead!"

Thomas enjoys making such dramatic pronouncements, and if they came from a lesser musician, you would merely dismiss them as youthful hyperbole. But Thomas is undeniably a brilliant artist, one who has, as one critic said, "talent to burn."

"Today's concert world is designed for dead people," he said. "You hear the same things over and over again. There's only one thing I have to be aggressive about, and that's my philosophy of openness and exploring new things. Look, if you don't want to come to my concerts, don't come. I'm interested in learning new things even if I don't like them, and I expect my audiences to have the same attitude."

But is it fair of him to expect his audiences to be as aware of and concerned with the varieties of musical experience as he is? "Sure," he said, "and many of them are. In Buffalo, half of my entire season is devoted to musical exploration and it's attended by a young, hip, alive audience." Ah, the familiar youth vote. "No," he said. "It's a priority to get young people interested in 'classical' music, to show them what an exciting and beautiful experience it is.

"The base of support of orchestras is going to change. The standard repertory, the basically German repertory, is going to change. They have to change. The old subscribers have to disappear sooner or later, but I don't want symphony orchestras to disappear along with them. The symphony has to become the definer of what future orchestras should be.

"During the 1950s there was great experimentation in music—a fantastic leap in the difficulty of music. Not technical difficulty, but conceptual difficulty. The 19th Century was an age of romantic excess. The 20th Century has been an age of intellectual excess, which has aggravated the traditional antagonisms between players and composers.

"The musicians have claimed the music is too difficult to understand. The composers have claimed that the musicans won't try it, and so they've given up writing for orchestras and have turned to writing for smaller ensembles. But I'm trying to work out how to make clear to the musicians what they have to do in a contemporary piece of music. What their roles are and why they're supposed to do this or that. I've found that players

—Continued on Page 52

The Pittsburgh Press
D. 348,000 SUN. 744,732
MAR 1 1 1973

Discretion may be the better part of valor, but too much discretion makes a dull symphony season, and at least a few conductors have had the right idea in venturing out on the limb of unusual programming.

At a recent Carnegie Hall concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conductor Michael Tilson Thomas raised audience eyebrows and ire by playing Bach and Bartok alongside music for rock organs and maracas by avant-gardist Steve Reich. And piling the bizarre on top of the preposterous Thomas disintered Liszt's "Hexameron" for six pianos and orchestra — a curio if there ever was one.

Michael Tilson Thomas on podium and pulpit

—Continued from Page 50

often know much more than composers or conductors think, but when they're playing a complicated piece, they can only realize their part. They cannot perceive the total fabric of the piece."

Trying to simultaneously inspire both musicians and audiences would seem an intimidating task, but Thomas obviously relishes such challenges. "I try to involve everyone in the music," he said, "to have everyone share in it. The only orchestra directors doing this are Pierre Boulez and I. In Buffalo, Lukas Foss [the orchestra's previous director] prepared the way for me. He introduced a lot of musical exploration to that audience, and I've built on what he established."

He has no regrets about being in Buffalo instead of Boston. There are certain knowledgeable people in the music world, in fact, who say that he was offered the directorship of the Boston before Ozawa, and turned it down. "All I can say is that I don't think I would have been ready for so much responsibility two years ago," he smiled. "I've always been influenced by Asiatic studies, and I've learned there is a right time to do everything—a way you make your life that takes you through. So much has happened to me in such a short time that, for a while, I almost lost control of my own life. I think I understand more things now. I think I know how to set my own tempo."

A short time later, Michael Tilson Thomas began studying the score for a New York Philharmonic Young People's Concert he would do the next day. As you read this, he is already in Europe where he has conducted the London Symphony and Rome's Italian Radio Orchestra. /II

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719
APR 1973

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas, presented a "concert of musical multiples." It began with J. C. Bach's Overture for Double Orchestra in E flat, and Bartók's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta. The first piece following intermission was Steve Reich's Four Organs, for rock organ quartet and maracas. It was greeted by boos, hisses, pre-emptory applause (unsuccessful), and an occasional audience member who fled the hall in mid-performance. In short, much of the audience demonstrated a boorish rudeness rarely encountered at concerts these days (except by opera-goers who begin their applause the moment the curtain begins to fall). This was all the more curious since Four Organs is not really a very bad work, just very boring. The most appropriate and demonstrative response would have been total silence, perhaps punctuated by an occasional yawn. But then audiences are a notoriously non-silent group, particularly during the performance, so a collective outburst of ennui could hardly be expected.

The concert ended with its Piece de resistance, Liszt's Hexameron for six pianos and orchestra. This, in its first New York performance in this version, was a smashing success. —Turner

SATURDAY REVIEW
EDUCATION
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY CIRC. N. AVAIL.
MAR 1973

MUSIC

Four in a Row by the B.S.O.

On its most recent visit to New York, the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed on four successive evenings, which may have happened before. But the conductor on all four occasions was Michael Tilson Thomas, something rather less common. In addition to the usual Wednesday-Friday pair at Philharmonic Hall, he led the orchestra in another pair as well—the Thursday and Saturday night appearances at Carnegie Hall.

The most unusual of these was the Thursday night program, which duplicated the events he has been directing in Boston under the title of Spectrum concerts. The gambit here was "Multiples," which included such familiar specimens of divided ensembles as an overture (or symphony) for double orchestra by Johann Christian Bach (in E-flat), music by Gabrieli for brass choirs on opposite sides of the hall's second tier, and Bartók's Music for Strings, Percussion, and Celesta with its subdivided personnel. For a rousing finale Thomas offered a rare hearing of Liszt's Hexaméron, with a relay of pianists playing variations by Thalberg (Virginia Eskin), Johann Pixis (Marilyn Neeley), Henri Herz (Craig Sheppard), Carl Czerny (Peter Basquin), and Frédéric Chopin (Antonio Barbosa). Raymond Lewenthal had the honor of leading off by impersonating Liszt. It was clear that a good time was had by all, especially the several pianists.

Between the Bartók and the Liszt, Thomas indulged his sub-Bernstein gift for linguistics and his own passion for the innovative, however banal, in Steve Reich's Four Organs. This is an exploitation of the rock organ, an instrument of the electronic family with keyboard, amplifier, and oversized loudspeaker. Thomas's dissertation on the possibilities of four such instruments and a quartet of maracas aroused an interest singularly unfulfilled by twenty minutes' repetition of a single chord sequence. Its blurrings, overlappings, and twitterings combined a maximum of insolence with a minimum of ingenuity.

The massive sonorities generated in the Reich and Liszt pieces were harmless in themselves, but they may go a long way toward explaining one of the loudest performances ever heard of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, in the first of the Philharmonic Hall programs. It did not respond so well to Thomas's current commitment to decibel impact as the Third Symphony of Copland, which followed. The volume tapered off somewhat in the Saturday night program, devoted to Prokofiev's Scythian Suite, Stravinsky's Les Noces (only four pianos), and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloé (with chorus). I. K.

66

Music director projects plans for Symphony

BOSTON — The 100th anniversary of the composer Schonberg will make next season a "big Schonberg year," Seiji Ozawa said during his press conference Wednesday, Feb. 14, in the Ancient Instruments Room at Symphony Hall.

In the Hub for just one week Ozawa, the Boston Symphony music director for next year, was announcing plans for the coming year and later.

During the 1972-73 season his week in Boston has included the conducting of five concerts and five rehearsals, as well as making a recording. In the next season 1973-74 he will spend 12 weeks in Boston plus the summer concert series at Tanglewood in the Berkshires.

Ozawa is also director of the San Francisco Symphony through 1976 and serves the Boston Symphony as music adviser this season.

Principal conductor of the Boston Symphony for next season, according to Ozawa's plans, will be Michael Tilson Thomas, as he has been this season. Also serving as guest conductor for many concerts will be Colin Davis of England, who is conductor of Convent Garden Opera. Ozawa refused to commit himself on whether or not these two conductors would continue beyond the 1973-74 season in such paramount roles with the orchestra.

Other guest conductors next season will be: Carlo Maria Giulini of the Chicago Symphony, Okko Kamu of Finland, Rafael Kubelik of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York and William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony, who is now conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony orchestra.

PRESS CONFERENCE — Seiji Ozawa, music advisor for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and next season's music director, is shown at a press conference Wednesday, Feb. 14, in the Ancient Instruments Room at Symphony Hall. He discussed his musical plans for the 1973-74 subscription season. Talcott Banks, right, president of the board of trustees of the orchestra, looks on. (UPI photo)

Ozawa had great praise for Boston and the Hub's Symphony Orchestra referring specifically to the tradition of classical music that the orchestra epitomizes.

Berlioz and Hayden are particularly of interest to Ozawa for he mentioned them as being included in his long-range planning. Other composers who seem to attract this young, 37-year-old conductor are Mahler and Burckner.

—Rita Jean Dunn

1972 spirals top $24,500

BOSTON — "Symphony Spirals" were launched in the fall of 1972 by the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This series of informal parties, which has just now drawn to a close, raised $24,500 to help offset the million dollar annual deficit of the orchestra.

Thousands of music lovers from the North Shore participated in the Spirals. Each person hosted a party and donated two dollars to the orchestra. Tennis matches, walks, picnics, coffee hours, teas, luncheons, dinners, chowder parties, an illustrated lecture and a piano teachers' exchange were among the variety of spiral gatherings on the North Shore.

Co-Chairmen from the North Shore area were Mrs. George Blagden of Beverly and Mrs. Robert Emmons of Manchester. They express their appreciation to all who helped to make this fund-raising project a success.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514
FEB 16 1973
New England Newsclip

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 130,857
FEB 15 1973
New England Newsclip

MONITOR
CONCORD, N. H.
D. 15,300
FEB 20 1973
New England Newsclip

EXPRESS
NEWPORT, VT.
D. 4,536
FEB 16 1973
New England Newsclip

SOUTH MIDDLESEX DAILY NEWS
FRAMINGHAM, MA.
D. 21[illegible]
FEB 16 1973
New Englan Newscl

CHRONICLE
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
D. 8,500
FEB 15 1973
New Englan Newscl

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY CHALLENGE
D. CIRC. N. AVAIL. (N)
FEB 21 1973

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY CHALLENGE
D. CIRC. N. AVAIL. (N)
FEB 21 1973

CITIZEN
WINSTED, CONN.
D. 4,600
FEB 21 1973
New England Newsclip

The Cleveland Press
D. 375,633
FEB 20 1973

BOSTON: Seiji Ozawa (L) the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Music Advisor and next season's Music Director, holds press conference in the Ancient Instruments Room at Symphony Hall. He discussed his musical plans for the 1973-1974 subscription season. Talcott Banks (R) pres. of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, looks on. UPI

NEW DIRECTOR — Seiji Ozawa has been named music directo for the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season. Ozawa, who als is music director for the San Francisco Symphony, will spend 1 weeks with the Boston Symphony in Boston and on tour during 1973 74, plus the summer concert series this year at Tanglewood in th Berkshires.

SEIJI EXPLAINS — Seiji Ozawa (left), the musical adviser for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and next year's musical director for the orchestra, held a press conference this week to discuss his musical plans for the 1973-74 subscription season. Present with Ozawa at the session was Talcott Banks (right) president of the board of trustees for the orchestra.

(UPI Photo)

SEIJI OZAWA AT SYMPHONY HALL PRESS CONFERENCE. (UPI)

Ozawa to funnel new-music into BSO programs, slowly

By Michael Steinberg
Globe Staff

The Boston Symphony intends to get back into the new-music business, but evidently slowly. At a press conference yesterday afternoon, Seiij Ozawa, acknowledged the playing of contemporary music as an important responsibility, but admitted in 1937-74, his first season as BSO music director, there would not be "too much."

Specifically, aside form what guest conductors may bring and from whatever gets exiled to Michael Tilson Thomas's three-program spectrum series, there will be the US premier of Sir Michael Tippett's Symphony No. 3 (Colin Davis, with soprano Heather Harper), Gunther Schuller's "Capriccio Stravagante" (composed for Ozawa and the San Francisco Symphony, performed there earlier this season) and Gyorgy Ligeti's "Melodien" (Ozawa, previously conducted by him at Tanglewood).

Ozawa said he did not know how long the arrangement of having Davis and Thomas as principle guest conductors would continue. He indicated, however, that he favored such an arrangement — with his small number of other guests in brief appearances — for the stability it offered the orchestra. For himself, he noted with pleasure that as of next season, when he will conduct only the Boston and San Francisco Symphonies, the two orchestras he serves as music director, "there will be an end to hotel life."

Ozawa's appointment as music director of BSO was announced a year ago. It goes into effect in September; for now, he has the title of music advisor. Because his own plans and the orchestra's were so nearly fixed by last September, he could be here only one week this season. That week is now, and in it Ozawa is conducting four subscription concerts, the annual Pension Fund concert on Sunday, recording Berlioz's "Fantastic Symphony" for Deutsche Grammophon, firming up plans for Tanglewood, and looking for a house.

Long-range plans include the performance and recording of the major works of Berlioz, including "The Damnation of Faust," next season, followed in subsequent years by "Romeo and Juliet," the Te Deum, Requiem, "Christ's Childhood"; a Mahler Cycle beginning next season with Symphony No. 1, and a Bruckner cycle to start in 1974-75; a Haydn Symphony cycle to be shared by Ozawa and Davis; with special attention also to major works of Sibelius (Davis) and Stravinsky (Davis and Thomas).

Aside from the Berlioz project, the orchestra will record Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto" with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist, to go into an album of all five Beethoven piano concertos by Eschenbach, each with a different orchestra and conductor; also Beethoven's Fifth Symphony as part of an album with Rafael Kubelik conducting nine different orchestras; and, also with Kubelik, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Guest conductors for 1972-73 other than Davis and Thomas include Carlo Maria Giulimi, Kubelik, William Steinberg and Okko Kamu, a Finnish conductor who was the first winner of the Von Karajan Competition.

Programs will be announced in full later. For now it is known that Ozawa's programs will include, other than the works already mentioned, Chogenberg's "Transfigured Night," "Ode to Napoleon," Violin Concerto (Joseph Silverstein) and the The Dance Around the Golden Calf from "Moses and Aaron," all in honor of the composer's 100th anniversary; Holst's "Hymn of Jesus," another centenary observation; Rachmaninoff's Symphony No. 3; Mozart's A Major Piano Concerto; K. 488 (Mauricio Pollini) and the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto (David Oistrakh).

Besides the Tippit Symphony, Davis will conduct the First and Fourth Symphonies of Sibelius, "Orpheus" and the "Dunbarton Oaks Concerto" by Stravinsky, Strauss's Four Last Songs (Jessye Norman), the Vaughan Williams Symphony No. 4 and Mozart's A Major Piano Concerto, K. 414 (Michael Roll).

Thomas will conduct the complete "Vespers of 1610" by Monteverdi, Strauss's "Also Sprach Zarathustra," Brahms's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Malcolm Frager) and the recently discovered Violin Concerto No. 3 by Paganini (Henryk Szeryng).

The Boston Globe (EVENING) D. 195,032 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
HERALD NEWS FALL RIVER, MASS. D. 41,749 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
EXPRESS PORTLAND, MAINE. D. 29,772 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip
REGISTER NEW HAVEN, CONN. D. 114,000 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
TRANSCRIPT NORTH ADAMS, M D. 13,225 FEB 15 1973
SOUTH MIDDLESEX DAILY NEWS FRAMINGHAM, MA. D. 24,079 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip
SENTINEL FITCHBURG, MASS. D. 20,300 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip
RECORDER GAZETTE GREENFIELD, MASS. D. 14,693 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
TELEGRAPH NASHUA, N. H. D. 69,493 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip
BERKSHIRE EAGLE PITTSFIELD, MASS. D. 30,400 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
SUN LOWELL, MASS. D. 49,250 FEB 15 1973
NEWS SPRINGFIELD, MASS. D. 95,528 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip

MUSIC DIRECTOR OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

Ozana Joins Boston Sympnony

BOSTON (AP) — With high praise for Boston and its Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, who will be the orchestra's music director next year, Wednesday announced plans for that year and later.

"Boston to me has always been the must musical background city of North America," Ozawa told a news conference at Symphony Hall.

He said he thought the city and the orchestra had a "great tradition" in classical music.

Ozawa, who also is music director of the San Francisco Symphony and has a contract there until 1976, is music adviser for the Boston Symphony this season.

But, this is the only week he will spend in Boston during the 1972-73 season, and an orchestra official said it would include Ozawa conducting five concerts and five rehearsals as well as making a recording.

Ozawa said he would spend 12 weeks with the Boston Symphony in Boston and on tour during the 1973-74 season plus the summer concert series at Tanglewood in the Berkshires.

Ozawa said principal guest conductors next season, as this season, will be Michael Tilson Thomas, the young (late 20s) conductor whose career has been with the Boston Symphony, and Colin Davis of England, conductor of Covent Garden Opera.

Ozawa said he did not know whether they would continue in that capacity after next season, and that he would have to know "more about the Boston Symphony itself" before he could say.

Guest conductors next season will be: Carlo Maria Giulini of the Chicago Symphony, Okko Kamu of Finland, Rafael Kubelik of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, and William Steinberg, who was music director of the Boston Symphony from 1969 until last fall and who is conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra.

Next season will be a "big Schonberg year," Ozawa said, noting that it will be the 100th anniversary of that composer. Another to be performed during the season is a newly discovered violin concerto by Paganini.

Ozawa, 37, said he has much interest in works by Berlioz and Hayden and they would be included in long range plans. He said he also wants to include, at the rate of one or two a year, works by Mahler and Bruckner.

Asked why he had chosen to come to Boston at this time, there was a long pause before he said, "I never thought about that one."

He then said that when the position was offered to him, "I really thought about it for two months, every day and night." He said the decision "was really deciding my life, too," and it was a "very strong decision" when made.

He said it couldn't be said that he had chosen Boston because no other orchestra was offering him a position at the time.

In answering other questions, Ozawa said:

—He did not know whether there would be a woman conductor of the orchestra, but that "it must be possible." He said he studied with a woman conductor in Japan so it would "not be unnatural for me to see a woman conductor."

—He would like to use New England musicians and perform works written by area residents if they are good.

—He was not a specialist in contemporary composers, but "I think I have a responsibility to introduce what music is around the world now to Boston people."

He said there was various ways to do this including having a series of concerts devoted to contemporary works, or mixing contemporary music into the regular season programs. He said he preferred the latter.

Asked if he planned any changes, he said that his being new in Boston was a change in itself both for him and the orchestra members.

He said he could not tell about other changes. "I might stay three years, but I don't know. Three years is a very short time. I hope I could stay more than three years."

GAZETTE WORCESTER, MASS. D. 97,539 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
EAGLE TRIBUNE LAWRENCE, MASS. D. 48,000 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM HOLYOKE, MASS. D. 30,000 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip
JOURNAL LEWISTON, MAINE D. 14,019 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip
GAZETTE TAUNTON, MASS. D. 13,000 FEB 15 1973
NEWS GARDNER, MASS. D. 8,061 FEB 17 1973 Newsclip

Ozawa Announces His Boston Season

By Heuwell Tircuit

A preview of possibilities for the next San Francisco Symphony season was revealed in Boston this week when Seiji Ozawa announced his plans for the Boston Symphony's 1973-74 season.

Ozawa, currently "musical advisor" in Boston, will then move into his first season as music director. Since he traditionally shares repertory with cities in which he conducts, Boston and San Francisco will undoubtedly hear many of the same works next year.

A high point will be programs honoring the centennial of Arnold Schoenberg's birth in 1874. Ozawa told his Boston press conference that he had scheduled the Austrian master's Violin Concerto, "Ode to Napoleon," "Transfigured Night" and the "Dance Round the Golden Calf" scene from his opera "Moses and Aron."

SEIJI OZAWA
A sharing

OBSERVATIONS

Other centennial observations will be Gustav Holst's "Hymn to Jesus" for chorus and orchestra, a large work written about the same time as the more famous "Planets." This fall, Ozawa will honor the 1973 birthday of Rachmaninoff by performing his Symphony No. 3 in Boston.

Ozawa announced that he plans to bring the Boston Symphony back to its tradition of modern premiers, but to do it, as in San Francisco, gradually.

Boston will hear Gunther Schuller's "Capriccio Stravagante," commissioned by the San Francisco Symphony and premiered here last December. He will also repeat Gyorgy Ligeti's "Melodien," drawn from his San Francisco programming.

Interestingly, he announced a Mahler cycle, which has not yet materialized here, and scheduled a Haydn cycle and Berlioz cycle, continuing programming ideas which began here.

Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas will remain on as principal guest conductors of the orchestra. Davis will share in the Haydn cycle and begin a Stravinsky cycle as well. Thomas is to explore newer works with a Spectrum Series.

It is less likely that the two orchestras will share guest conductors. The Boston concerts will include: Carlo Maria Guilini, Rafael Kubelik, Okko Kamu, and former music director, William Steinberg.

RECORDING

This week, Ozawa recorded Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony with the Boston Symphony for Deutsche Grammophon. A Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto with pianist Christoph Eschenbach was announced, and for next season, a Berlioz "Damnation of Faust."

DGG will also continue its Kubelik-Boston series with Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and Bartok's Concerto for orchestra. Both are works previously recorded by Ozawa with the Chicago Symphony, so none of this repertory is likely to feature in future San Francisco recording plans.

The first of the Ozawa - San Francisco Symphony recordings are due in local shops in about two weeks. Even before sales begin, DGG decided to expand its original recording schedules here.

PLANS

Plans for April sessions are indefinite because of the Symphony's European tour in May and June. December appears to be the next possibility, when both conductor and orchestra are free to record.

Meanwhile, Ozawa goes to Tokyo this week for concerts with his Japan Philharmonic, now on firm financial ground again, thanks to his efforts. He will then take that orchestra to open the first Hong Kong International Festival in late February.

SEIJI OZAWA AT SYMPHONY HALL PRESS CONFERENCE. (UPI)

Ozawa to funnel new-music into BSO programs, slowly

By Michael Steinberg
Globe Staff

The Boston Symphony intends to get back into the new-music business, but evidently slowly. At a press conference yesterday afternoon, Seiij Ozawa, acknowledged the playing of contemporary music as an important responsibility, but admitted in 1937-74, his first season as BSO music director, there would not be "too much."

Specifically, aside form what guest conductors may bring and from whatever gets exiled to Michael Tilson Thomas's three-program spectrum series, there will be the US premier of Sir Michael Tippett's Symphony No. 3 (Colin Davis, with soprano Heather Harper), Gunther Schuller's "Capriccio Stravagante" (composed for Ozawa and the San Francisco Symphony, performed there earlier this season) and Gyorgy Ligeti's "Melodien" (Ozawa, previously conducted by him at Tanglewood).

Ozawa said he did not know how long the arrangement of having Davis and Thomas as principle guest conductors would continue. He indicated, however, that he favored such an arrangement — with his small number of other guests in brief appearances — for the stability it offered the orchestra. For himself, he noted with pleasure that as of next season, when he will conduct only the Boston and San Francisco Symphonies, the two orchestras he serves as music director, "there will be an end to hotel life."

Ozawa's appointment as music director of BSO was announced a year ago. It goes into effect in September; for now, he has the title of music advisor. Because his own plans and the orchestra's were so nearly fixed by last September, he could be here only one week this season. That week is now, and in it Ozawa is conducting four subscription concerts, the annual Pension Fund concert on Sunday, recording Berlioz's "Fantastic Symphony" for Deutsche Grammophon, firming up plans for Tanglewood, and looking for a house.

Long-range plans include the performance and recording of the major works of Berlioz, including "The Damnation of Faust," next season, followed in subsequent years by "Romeo and Juliet," the Te Deum, Requiem, "Christ's Childhood"; a Mahler Cycle beginning next season with Symphony No. 1, and a Bruckner cycle to start in 1974-75; a Haydn Symphony cycle to be shared by Ozawa and Davis; with special attention also to major works of Sibelius (Davis) and Stravinsky (Davis and Thomas).

Aside from the Berlioz project, the orchestra will record Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto" with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist, to go into an album of all five Beethoven piano concertos by Eschenbach, each with a different orchestra and conductor; also Beethoven's Fifth Symphony as part of an album with Rafael Kubelik conducting nine different orchestras; and, also with Kubelik, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Guest conductors for 1972-73 other than Davis and Thomas include Carlo Maria Giulimi, Kubelik, William Steinberg and Okko Kamu, a Finnish conductor who was the first winner of the Von Karajan Competition.

Programs will be announced in full later. For now it is known that Ozawa's programs will include, other than the works already mentioned, Chogenberg's "Transfigured Night," "Ode to Napoleon," Violin Concerto (Joseph Silverstein) and the The Dance Around the Golden Calf from "Moses and Aaron," all in honor of the composer's 100th anniversary; Holst's "Hymn of Jesus," another centenary observation; Rachmaninoff's Symphony No. 3; Mozart's A Major Piano Concerto; K. 488 (Mauricio Pollini) and the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto (David Oistrakh).

Besides the Tippit Symphony, Davis will conduct the First and Fourth Symphonies of Sibelius, "Orpheus" and the "Dunbarton Oaks Concerto" by Stravinsky, Strauss's Four Last Songs (Jessye Norman), the Vaughan Williams Symphony No. 4 and Mozart's A Major Piano Concerto, K. 414 (Michael Roll).

Thomas will conduct the complete "Vespers of 1610" by Monteverdi, Strauss's "Also Sprach Zarathustra," Brahms's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Malcolm Frager) and the recently discovered Violin Concerto No. 3 by Paganini (Henryk Szeryng).

The Boston Globe (EVENING) D. 195,032 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
HERALD NEWS FALL RIVER, MASS. D. 41,749 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
EXPRESS PORTLAND, MAINE. D. 29,772 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
REGISTER NEW HAVEN, CONN D. 114,000 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
TRANSCRIPT NORTH ADAMS, M D. 13,225 FEB 15 1973
SOUTH MIDDLESEX DAILY NEWS FRAMINGHAM, MA. D. 21,070 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip
SENTINEL FITCHBURG, MASS. D. 20,300 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip
RECORDER GAZETTE GREENFIELD, MASS. D. 14,693 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
TELEGRAPH NASHUA, N. H. D. 69,493 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip
BERKSHIRE EAGLE PITTSFIELD, MASS. D. 30,409 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
SUN LOWELL, MASS. D. 49,250 FEB 15 1973
NEWS SPRINGFIELD, MASS. D. 95,528 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip

MUSIC DIRECTOR OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

Ozana Joins Boston Sympnony

BOSTON (AP) — With high praise for Boston and its Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, who will be the orchestra's music director next year, Wednesday announced plans for that year and later.

"Boston to me has always been the must musical background city of North America," Ozawa told a news conference at Symphony Hall.

He said he thought the city and the orchestra had a "great tradition" in classical music.

Ozawa, who also is music director of the San Francisco Symphony and has a contract there until 1976, is music adviser for the Boston Symphony this season.

But, this is the only week he will spend in Boston during the 1972-73 season, and an orchestra official said it would include Ozawa conducting five concerts and five rehearsals as well as making a recording.

Ozawa said he would spend 12 weeks with the Boston Symphony in Boston and on tour during the 1973-74 season plus the summer concert series at Tanglewood in the Berkshires.

Ozawa said principal guest conductors next season, as this season will be Michael Tilson Thomas, the young (late 20s) conductor whose career has been with the Boston Symphony, and Colin Davis of England, conductor of Covent Garden Opera.

Ozawa said he did not know whether they would continue in that capacity after next season, and that he would have to know "more about the Boston Symphony itself" before he could say.

Guest conductors next season will be: Carlo Maria Giulini of the Chicago Symphony, Okko Kamu of Finland, Rafael Kubelik of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, and William Steinberg, who was music director of the Boston Symphony from 1969 until last fall and who is conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra.

Next season will be a "big Schonberg year," Ozawa said, noting that it will be the 100th anniversary of that composer. Another to be performed during the season is a newly discovered violin concerto by Paganini.

Ozawa, 37, said he has much interest in works by Berlioz and Hayden and they would be included in long range plans. He said he also wants to include, at the rate of one or two a year, works by Mahler and Bruckner.

Asked why he had chosen to come to Boston at this time, there was a long pause before he said, "I never thought about that one."

He then said that when the position was offered to him, "I really thought about it for two months, every day and night." He said the decision "was really deciding my life, too," and it was a "very strong decision" when made.

He said it couldn't be said that he had chosen Boston because no other orchestra was offering him a position at the time.

In answering other questions, Ozawa said:

—He did not know whether there would be a woman conductor of the orchestra, but that "it must be possible." He said he studied with a woman conductor in Japan so it would "not be unnatural for me to see a woman conductor."

—He would like to use New England musicians and perform works written by area residents if they are good.

—He was not a specialist in contemporary composers, but "I think I have a responsibility to introduce what music is around the world now to Boston people."

He said there was various ways to do this including having a series of concerts devoted to contemporary works, or mixing contemporary music into the regular season programs. He said he preferred the latter.

Asked if he planned any changes, he said that his being new in Boston was a change in itself both for him and the orchestra members.

He said he could not tell about other changes. "I might stay three years, but I don't know. Three years is a very short time. I hope I could stay more than three years."

GAZETTE WORCESTER, MASS. D. 97,539 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
EAGLE TRIBUNE LAWRENCE, MASS. D. 48,000 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM HOLYOKE, MASS. D. 30,000 FEB 16 1973 New England Newsclip
JOURNAL LEWISTON, MAINE D. 14,019 FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip
GAZETTE TAUNTON, MASS. D. 13,000 FEB 16 1973
NEWS GARDNER, MASS. D. 8,061 FEB 17 1973 Newsclip

Ozawa Announces His Boston Season

By Heuwell Tircuit

A preview of possibilities for the next San Francisco Symphony season was revealed in Boston this week when Seiji Ozawa announced his plans for the Boston Symphony's 1973-74 season.

Ozawa, currently "musical advisor" in Boston, will then move into his first season as music director. Since he traditionally shares repertory with cities in which he conducts, Boston and San Francisco will undoubtedly hear many of the same works next year.

A high point will be programs honoring the centennial of Arnold Schoenberg's birth in 1874. Ozawa told his Boston press conference that he had scheduled the Austrian master's Violin Concerto, "Ode to Napoleon," "Transfigured Night" and the "Dance Round the Golden Calf" scene from his opera "Moses and Aron."

OBSERVATIONS

Other centennial observations will be Gustav Holst's "Hymn to Jesus" for chorus and orchestra, a large work written about the same time as the more famous "Planets." This fall, Ozawa will honor the 1973 birthday of Rachmaninoff by performing his Symphony No. 3 in Boston.

Ozawa announced that he plans to bring the Boston Symphony back to its tradition of modern premiers, but to do it, as in San Francisco, gradually.

SEIJI OZAWA
A sharing

Boston will hear Gunther Schuller's "Capriccio Stravagante," commissioned by the San Francisco Symphony and premiered here last December. He will also repeat Gyorgy Ligeti's "Melodien," drawn from his San Francisco programming

Interestingly, he announced a Mahler cycle, which has not yet materialized here, and scheduled a Haydn cycle and Berlioz cycle, continuing programming ideas which began here.

Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas will remain on as principal guest conductors of the orchestra. Davis will share in the Haydn cycle and begin a Stravinsky cycle as well. Thomas is to explore newer works with a Spectrum Series.

It is less likely that the two orchestras will share guest conductors. The Boston concerts will include: Carlo Maria Guilini, Rafael Kubelik, Okko Kamu, and former music director, William Steinberg.

RECORDING

This week, Ozawa recorded Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony with the Boston Symphony for Deutsche Grammophon. A Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto with pianist Christoph Eschenbach was announced, and for next season, a Berlioz "Damnation of Faust."

DGG will also continue its Kubelik-Boston series with Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and Bartok's Concerto for orchestra. Both are works previously recorded by Ozawa with the Chicago Symphony, so none of this repertory is likely to feature in future San Francisco recording plans.

The first of the Ozawa - San Francisco Symphony recordings are due in local shops in about two weeks. Even before sales begin, DGG decided to expand its original recording schedules here.

PLANS

Plans for April sessions are indefinite because of the Symphony's European tour in May and June. December appears to be the next possibility, when both conductor and orchestra are free to record.

Meanwhile, Ozawa goes to Tokyo this week for concerts with his Japan Philharmonic, now on firm financial ground again, thanks to his efforts. He will then take that orchestra to open the first Hong Kong International Festival in late February.

68

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

FEB 17 1973 New England Newsclip

Seiji's Plans for a Season

By Peter M. Knapp

The Boston Symphony will again have its own music director next September, and this year's "music adviser", Seiji Ozawa, met the press this week to outline his plans for his first season.

Ozawa will lead the orchestra for 12 weeks, including tours, plus the Tanglewood concerts of which he is co-director. Michael Tilson Thomas and Colin Davis again have been designated principal guest conductors — althoiugh Ozawa won't commit himself as yet whether these positions will be continued beyond the 1973-74 season.

Other guest conductors next season will be Carlo Maria Giulini, Okko Kamu (a Finn who is a winner of the Karajan conducting competition), Rafael Kubelik, and William Steinberg, Ozawa's predecessor as BSO music director.

'Into' Haydn and Berlioz

As to repertoire, Ozawa said he has been "into" two composers lately, Haydn and Berlioz (during the week he recorded Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture and the "Symphony Fantastique" with the orchestra) and plans Berlioz, Mahler and Bruckner cycles.

He will open the season with Bedllioz' "Damnation of Faust," with long-range plans for performances and recordings of "Romeo and Juliet," the "Te Deum," the "Requiem" and "L'Enfance du Christ." The Mahler-Bruckner symphonic cycles probably will be done at a one-a-year pace, beginning next season with the Mahler First and the following season with the Bruckner First.

Also on next season's schedule will be works of composers whose 100th birth-anniversaries will be observed — Arnold Schoenberg, Sergei Rachmaninoff and Gustav Holst. The former will be represented by the largest cluster of works — "Verklaerte Nacht," "Modern Psalm" (the composer's last, unfinished work, just six minutes long), "Ode to Napoleon," the Violin Concerto, and the Golden Calf Dance from "Moses und Aron" (Ozawa noted he was present at the Berlin premiere led by Hermann Scherchen when there was a violent demonstration against nude dancers taking part in the scene). Rachmaninoff's Symphony No. 3 and Holst's "Hymn to Jesus" will honor those composers.

Something New

A new work, commissioned by Ozawa and the San Francisco Symphony of which he is also music director, will receive its first Boston performance: Gunther Schuller's "Capriccio Stravagante."

Among the highlights of other programs will be performances under Colin Davis of Michael Tippett's Symphony No. 3 (an American premiere), Sibelius' First and Fourth Symphonies, and Strauss' "Four Last Songs" sung by soprano Jessye Norman; and under Michael Tilson Thomas, Monteverdi's Vespers of 1610, and a newly discovered Paganini violin concerto, No. 3, performed by Henryk Szeryng. Thomas also will continue his "Spectrum" series of three programs.

Soloists with the orchestra next season will include pianists Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Maurizio Pollini and Michael Roll; violinists David Oistrakh and Szeryng; vocalists Heather Harper, Rene Kollo, Edith Mathis, Donald McIntyre, Thomas Paul and Miss Norman.

And there was a touch of mutual admiration evident when Ozawa said he thought Boston "is the most musical city of North America . . . with a great tradition," and BSO President Talcott Banks said he hoped Ozawa's directorship here would be a long and creative one.

NEWS
GARDNER, MASS.
D. 8,061

FEB 15 1973 New England Newsclip

MUSICAL DIRECTORS — Arthur Fielder (left), director of the Boston Pops Orchestra, chats with Seiji Ozawa at Boston Symphony Hall in Boston after Ozawa was named music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for next year. Ozawa, who also is music director for the San Francisco Symphony and has a contract there until 1976, is music adviser for the Boston Symphony this season. In the center is Talcott Banks, chairman, Board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony. (AP Wirephoto)

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264

FEB 17 1973 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony's new director makes haste—slowly

Ozawa to stress Berlioz begins with concert now

By Louis Snyder

Seiji Ozawa, who becomes music director of the Boston Symphony next season, is making haste slowly. Already heavily committed for 1972-73 when he received the bid to Boston last year, he has had only one conducting week to give to the orchestra during the present season — five performances and a recording, beginning last Tuesday and ending tomorrow night with a special Pension Fund Benefit.

So it was as this year's music adviser that Ozawa met the press on Wednesday afternoon at Symphony Hall with a sheaf of future plans:

— He will conduct the BSO in 1973-74 for 12 weeks in Boston, on tour, and at Tanglewood. Sharing the podium again as principal guest conductors will be Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas. Okko Kamu, the Finnish winner of the first Karajan conducting competition, will make his debut with the orchestra. Returning will be Carlo Maria Giulini, Rafael Kubelik, and William Steinberg.

* * *

— Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust," the likely season's opener in Boston, will continue Ozawa's exploration of the French composer's works over the next few seasons (begun in this present week's concerts). These are also included in his plans with the orchestra for recording with Deutsche Grammophone.

— 100th-year anniversaries of Holst, Rachmaninoff, and Schoenberg will be observed in programming, with the introduction of a number of seldom-heard compositions by the latter: the "Ode to Napoleon," Violin Concerto, and Modern Psalms.

— Over several seasons, it is planned to do all symphonies of Mahler (beginning 1973-74), of Bruckner (beginning 1974-75), Haydn symphonies (Ozawa and Davis), major works of Sibelius (Davis) and of Stravinsky (Davis and Thomas).

— Soloists to be heard next season: Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Maurizio Pollini, Michael Roll*, (pianists); David Oistrakh, Henryk Szeryng (violinists); Heather Harper*, Rene Kollo, Edith Mathis*, Donald McIntyre*, Jessye Norman, Thomas Paul (vocalists). (* indicates BSO debut).

* * *

— The New England Conservatory and the Tanglewood Festival Choruses will again perform with the orchestra, the former in Monteverdi's Vespers of 1610, to be conducted complete by Thomas.

— Sir Michael Tippett's Third Symphony will have its United States premiere under Davis's direction, with Miss Harper as soloist.

— The Spectrum series will continue under Thomas's direction.

— A Gunther Schuller composition, "Capriccio Stravagante," commissioned by the San Francisco Symphony, of which Ozawa is also music director, and premiered there earlier this year, will have its first BSO performance in 1973-74, as will the newly discovered Paganini Third Violin Concerto, with Szeryng and Thomas.

AP photo

Conductor Seiji Ozawa talks of musical future

This season he is music advisor. Next season he will be music director for Boston Symphony. At a press conference in the ancient instruments room at Symphony Hall he disclosed his plans in some detail. Here he is seen with himself (on the wall) and with Talcott Banks (right) president of the board of trustees of the BSO.

Some planning details remain to be settled, Ozawa indicated, since for him this has been "a crazy year" after "deciding my life in two locations." As previously announced, beginning next season, Ozawa will limit his conducting engagements exclusively to the two orchestras, San Francisco Symphony and Boston Smphony, of which he is music director.

Some of the usual and a few unusual questions were put to Ozawa by the press. With regard to his attitude toward contemporary music ("I am not a contemporary specialist") he said he nevertheless felt "a responsibliity to introduce what music is going on," even though he considers the BSO a traditional symphony orchestra because of its Koussevitzky and Munch heritage.

Would he consider engaging a woman conductor? He really didn't know, although he knows several and, in fact, studied at one time with Keiko Kuyama in Japan.

Why did he choose to come to Boston? ("I never chose Boston . . .") but "Boston is the most musical city of North America."

* * *

To end the session, Talcott M. Banks, president of the orchestra's trustees, declared that "a long, delightful, creative term" is anticipated with Ozawa as music director.

This week, Ozawa has already put his plans for Berlioz in practice. The "Carnaval Romain" Overture opened last Tuesday evening's program and will do the same for the Pension Fund benefit concert tomorrow night. Tonight, as on Thursday and Friday, the bill of fare is all-Berlioz: the "Symphonie Fantastique," and for the first time by the BSO, that strange flight of fancy, "Lelio."

As his past performances of the "Fantastique" with the BSO have revealed, the Ozawa approach is not the rich, velvety romantic one that those brought up on the Koussevitzky and Munch readings will remember. It is sharply defined, full of rush and color, not always mindful of nuance. The "Scene in the Fields," for instance (except for some beautiful English horn sounds from Laurence Thorstenberg), comes across as more matter of fact than its content would seem to dictate, and while the "March to the Scaffold" achieves a big effect, it often smacks of overdoing it.

However, this exotic musical nightmare becomes differently stirring and pungent under the Ozawa baton, reflective of a more aggressive, contemporary romantic concept. Thursday's audience was overwhelmed by it, and made loud approving sounds of its own.

* * *

"Lelio," subtitled "the Return to Life," continues the sage of the love-tortured artist of the "Fantastique," now at least conscious of his narrow escape from extinction. In monologue and music, he grasps at possibilities: his admiration for Shakespeare, the free existence of brigandry, and dreams of his former love, to find a way to a new life. Finally, he decides that it is music alone that will be his salvation and, with the aid of orchestra and chorus, he "composes" a fantasia on "The Tempest," which ends the piece.

While "Lelio" is more of a curiosity than a substantial epilogue to the grandeurs of the Fantastic Symphony, it is liberally stamped with the composer's brilliant tonal trademark, and textually with his wry humor. And not a little with his ego.

Colin Fox, a suitably flamboyant Canadian actor and Berlioz-lookalike, dominated the proceedings as Lelio, while tenor Mallory Walker and baritone David Evitts (deputizing on Thursday for indisposed Victor Braun) made becoming if not large-scale contributions to the occasion. The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, representing phantoms, brigands, and disembodied voices, joined the orchestra in responding aimiably to Ozawa's figurative backstage role in this period monodrama.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

FEB 20 1973

New England Newsclip

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

It would seem that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is going to turn into a family affair, judging from what went on at last week's fantastically successful Musical Marathon Preview Party at Symphony Hall. Not only were many mothers and daughters involved on the committee with the planning of the affair but the new director of the orchestra brought his wife and baby to the event, keeping them firmly beside him in the receiving line.

No one will deny that young—for a musical director—Seiji Ozawa is a radical change from the old traditional idea of the silver-maned elderly conductor clad in the establishment type of outfit. Not only does he scorn the usual shirt, tie and business suit for a turtle-necked jersey, corduroy pants and overshirt complete with a vivid sash and necklace of beads, but his hair is shoulder length and in every way he would seem the very antithesis of everything Boston holds dear. Yet 800 members of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra flocked to greet him last week at the party, there has been nothing but approval heard for the appointment of this brilliant young man, and best of all his fellow musicians in the orchestra hold him in the very highest esteem.

His tiny 13-month-old-daughter with her mop of black hair shared the receiving line at the top of the marble stairs leading to the new Cabot-Cahners Room with her mother, who is half-Russian and half-Japanese; her father; Talcott Banks, president of the trustees of the orchestra; and the beloved conductor of the Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler. As the 800 guests filed up the stairs and through the receiving line they passed on into the newly decorated room which used to be the old art gallery of Symphony Hall, and which now has become a very attractive red-carpeted bar and meeting place.

Here they found flashing on and off on the walls above their heads slides of the premiums that will be offered during the four-day Musical Marathon to be held over radio station WCRB from March 8 to March 12. A novel chance to meet and participate in a variety of interesting ventures with members of the orchestra the different premiums are available to all those donating a minimum of $15 to the Marathon.

Probably the highlight of the Marathon preview party to most of the guests were the clever valentines that decorated the walls of Symphony Hall. Made by Annie Lawrie Ryerson and her sister Ethel, daughters of member of the committee Mrs. Ducey Ryerson, they honored the different musical sections of the orchestra and were most original and amusing.

Mrs. Robert L. Bradley of Hingham had been responsible for the beautiful flower arrangements that carried out the Valentine's Day color scheme. Great arrangements of red and pink roses, snap dragons, lavender, red and pink tulips and heather showed to perfection against the marble walls of Symphony Hall.

The entire concept of this party was remarkable for the fact that it was one of the very few chances given to those admirers and supporters of the B.S.O. to meet on equal terms with the musicians and to socialize with them. Almost all of the 102 members of the group were there with their wives, the men distinguished by special blue and white hand printed ties, the women musicians by scarves in the same print.

Among the many at the highfly successful event, a forerunner of the actual Marathon at which the Council of Friends of the B.S.O hope to raise $65,000 for the orchestra were Mrs. George Lee Sargent of Dover, chairman of the Council of Friends, wearing a bright red St. Valentine's Day dress; the Carlos Tosis of Louisburg Square; Mrs. Prentiss Shepherd; Mrs. Robert C. Hamlen of Dover; Mrs. James Perkins of Wsetwood, a trustee of the orchestra, and her husband; Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, and many more supporters of the B.S.O. enjoying a party that they hoped would not be just a one-time affair.

Mrs. Carlos Tosi

OLD AND NEW MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops, Seiji Ozawa (left) and Arthur Fiedler (right) greet each other with affection as they arrive at the Musical Marathon Preview Party held last week at Symphony Hall. Mr. Ozawa will become the new director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season and Mr. Fiedler has been the conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra for more than 40 years. (David L. Richards)

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 277,264

FEB 21 1973

New England Newsclip

69.

BSO pension concert

Ozawa's stirring 'good-bye-for-now'

By Louis Snyder

Symphonic musicians all over the United States can be grateful for what happened in Boston in 1903. That was the year the Boston Symphony Pension Institution was established, the first of its kind in America, and since then retired players everywhere and their families have benefited from similar funds based on the BSO's organization.

* * *

Seiji Ozawa concluded his whirlwind, one-week visit as the BSO's music adviser this season by conducting the orchestra's 158th Pension Fund Concert on Sunday evening at Symphony Hall. Pianist Alexis Weissenberg was the soloist, and the program — Berlioz, Beethoven, Haydn, and Bartok — was calculated to please.

For the most part, it did more than that. Mr. Ozawa infused a special kind of electricity into the evening, Mr. Weissenberg didn't disappoint his admirers, the orchestra was in top form, and the large audience responded with unbounded enthusiasm.

* * *

With the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" Overture as a rousing, highly colored starter, the program next offered Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto (in G) with Mr. Weissenberg as soloist. In his most recent Boston appearances the pianist has stayed very much within the 20th century — Bartok, Prokofiev — so there was considerable interest in the way he would use his special gifts in behalf of Beethoven.

Mr. Weissenberg is a superb technician. He can cover the keyboard like the wind. However, he seems committed to accentuate certain bass notes with hammer-like strokes, and displays a characteristic way of chopping at the keys with the rhythm and strength of karate. While this produces excitement in Bartok and Prokofiev, it doesn't work too well for Beethoven. It made for a predominantly nervous, agitated performance, despite some lovely crystalline passages — hardly what one would expect in one of Beethoven's most relaxed concertos. Nevertheless, there seemed to be many who found this approach to their liking.

* * *

With a somewhat reduced orchestra, Mr. Ozawa fashioned a delightful, humor-filled reading of Haydn's Symphony No. 60 in C, subtitled "Il distratto," although its six movements were originally composed for an obscure French play, "Le Distrait." What with the wit and tonal contrast of the sections which make up this "symphony," one can handily supply his own scenario, very much in the manner of Strauss's "Bourgeois Gentilhomme," heard here just a few weeks back. In any case, Mr. Ozawa's feel for style and nuance was seconded by charmingly lucid orchestral playing.

The evening's greatest excitement, however, was generated by a sizzling, super-virtuosic performance of Bartok's "Miraculous Mandarin" Suite. If memory serves, Mr. Ozawa has conducted this before in recent seasons here, but never with the tremendous impact that he achieved on this occasion. The work is a field day for every section of the orchestra, so that the competition for achieving exotic effects is fierce. Mr. Ozawa kept a loose rein on this massive body of contentious sound, guiding it to its inevitable crashing finale, where it collided head-on with the cheers of listeners brought to their feet by the tonal brilliance of it all. It was a fitting good-bye-for-now exchange between Mr. Ozawa, the musicians, and the audience.

70. EAGLE TRIBUNE
LAWRENCE, MASS.
D. 48,000
FEB 21 1973 New England Newsclip

Symphony notes

BOSTON — Principal guest conductor Colin Davis returned to Boston to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the second time this season.

Last night at 8:30, Mr. Davis condcuted the orchestra in Mozart's Minuet in C and the Clarinet concerto in A with Principal clarinet Harold Wright, soloist. Mr. Davis closed the concert with Beethoven's Symphony no. 3 in E flat, "Eroica."

On Friday at 2:00 p.m, and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Mr. Davis will conduct the orchestra in Mozart's Symphony no. 39 in E flat and Berlioz' "Te Deum." Kenneth Riegel, tenor, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus under the direction of John Oliver, and the St. Paul's School Boy Choir, under the direction of Theodore Marier, are soloists.

Tuesday and next Thursday at 8:30 p.m., Mr. Davis conducts the orchestra in Sibelius' Tapiola and his Symphony no. 3 in C, and follows them with Elgar's Introduction and allegro for strings and his Variations on an original theme.

Colin Davis, music director of the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, has been guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on several occasions during recent years. His conducting career began in 1949 and his early experience was with the Kalmar Chamber Orchestra, the Chelsea Opera Group, the Festival Ballet and the Ballet Russe. In 1957 he became assistant conductor of the BBC Scottish Orchestra.

Two years later he was called at short notice to take the place of Otto Klemperer, who became ill, in a concert performance of Don Giovanni. He was shortly afterwards appointed music director of the Sadler's Wells Opera and made his debut with the CBC Symphohy in Canada, and appeared for the first time in the United States as guest conductor with the Minneapolis Symphony.

He directed the Berlin Philharmonic in the German premiere of Britten's War requiem.

In 1967, Davis took up his appointment as Chief Conductor of the BBC Symphony Orchestra, which he relinquished at the end of last season to take up his duties at Covent Garden. He has in recent years been guest conductor with the world's leading orchestras, among them the Israel Philharmonic, the Philadelphia, the Montreal Symphony, the Toronto Symphony, the Los Angeles Philharmonic and the New York Philharmonic.

STANDARD TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
D. 72,971
FEB 22 1973 New England Newsclip

E. J. Dias review

BSO freshens a conventional program

Colin Davis, who along with Tilson Thomas, is the principal guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was on the podium in the fourth program of the Tuesday "B" Series. The works chosen by Maestro Davis were conventional, but, certainly, there was nothing tired or conventional about his readings.

Mozart's "Minuet in C, K. 409," for example which is sometimes utilized as an extra movement in "Symphony No: 34" is bright, engaging music, filled with elan and humor and the selection, crisply and precisely done, with special attention to meticulous phrasing and lightness of touch, was indeed pleasant listening.

There followed Mozart's "Clarinet Concerto in A, K. 622," written only two months before the composer's death with Harold Wright, first clarinetist of the orchestra as soloist. Wright is a consummate musician, the master of his instrument. The concerto is an unassuming work, but in it Mozart seems to condense almost everything found in his instrumental music. There is that typically Mozartian elegance of phrasing combined with eloquence of feeling.

Wright proved more than equal to the many moods of the piece — the rapid passage work of the opening allegro and the skipping liveliness of the closing rondo, with its strangely deliberate mockery of one of the most poignant melodies in the movement. And his tone in the lovely adagio was one of shimmering beauty — all in all, a memorable reading on the part of conductor, soloist and orchestra of a great work.

Concluding the program was Beethoven's "Symphony No. 3 in E Flat" (the Eroica,") so familiar, of course, that there is really nothing new that one can say about it.

However, Davis and the orchestra gave it an exciting rendition, with tempos that struck me as faster than one ordinarily hears, with careful building to emotional climaxes, with the lush gravity of the famous Funeral March of the adagio conceived with mournful majesty. Davis, as I have noted in the past, seems to be able to bring out the best in the orchestra which responds enthusiastically to his conducting and play with considerable style and care. He and the Boston Symphony make a rewarding combination.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 556,377
FEB 24 1973 New England Newsclip

Colin Davis's BSO performance is an event

By Craig Smith
Globe Correspondent

Colin Davis conducted works of Mozart and Berlioz at yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert. Whenever Davis comes to town it is an event, and this concert, not withstanding its weakness, was no exception.

The program opened with Mozart's "39th Symphony." There were signs of the problems to come before Davis stepped on stage. The work calls for no oboes, so for all practical purposes the orchestra did not tune up. Such a practice is harmful to all music, but in the case of Mozart it is deadly. Intonation is not just a matter of vanity or nit-picking, it is tied up with clarity of textures, dove tailing of musical ideas and other matters at the core of music making. The orchestra played clearly out of tune throughout the performance.

Davis's performance was an uneven affair. The introduction to the first movement was disappointing, rhythmically soggy, with unpointed phrasing.

The beginning of the exposition was surprising—very slow, with a creamy legato not unlike some of Von Karajan's recent Mozart performances. The tempo quickly picked up along with the general level of spirit. The slow movement was lovely, with marvelously clear articulations from the strings. The last two movements were well played, but the trio to the Minuet seemed under-articulated and too legato.

The second half of the program was taken up with the Berlioz "Te Deum." It is a bizarre work calling for enormous orchestral and choral forces like the Requiem, yet lacking the profile and urgency of that great work. At times one has the feeling that in this piece Berlioz has deliberately flattened and banalized the lines of the piece in order to emphasize the climaxes by means of texture and sheer volume.

The performance was excellent. The two three-part adult choirs were taken by the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, while the boy choir part was sung backstage (with amplification) by the St. Paul's School Boy Choir. Kenneth Riegel was the tenor soloist.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500
MAR 1 1973 New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BERLIOZ: AND NOW THE "TE DEUM"

Beyond all peradventure, this is Berlioz season here. There has been nothing like it since Mr. Munch was in full flower, if then.

Last week witnessed the first performance in Boston of the "Te Deum." Colin Davis conducted and the forces included Kenneth Riegel, tenor, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, St. Paul's School Boy Choir, Theodore Marier, director, and Berj Zamkochian, organ.

Wherefor only now the "Te Deum's" revival? Certainly not the usual reason that pieces that haven't been played don't deserve to be. Though far short of the grandeur and sustained exaltation of the "Requiem," indeed with many pages (if the obvious bromide may be pardoned) of Tedium, the "TeDeum" has reaches of excitement and originality that approach anything that Berlioz ever composed. Radiance, sweetness, and, surprisingly, real supplication run through the six sections, and in the most rich and original of them, the concluding "Judex crederis," the series of modulations on the statement contained a cumulative power which is overwhelming even by Berlioz standards.

Did the performance come off, then? The answer to that depends on what a listener is seeking. Berlioz had a very special format in mind for the "Te Deum", which, I think, is close to indispensable in carrying out his intentions. Central to that format is the size and disposition of the forces: an orchestra of 100 strings and a suitably augmented remainder of two choruses of 100 voices each joined by a children's choir of 600, plus organ and tenor soloists. The performance was designed for a mammoth church in which the orchestra and choruses were to be placed at the opposite end from the great organ and the children's choir isolated from the other two and elevated on risers adjacent to the orchestra. One can envision the drama and impact of the antyphnal effects in a cathedral setting. The concert hall, however, is not a cathedral, and as for Symphony Hall, it has one of the shallowest stages in the business; moreover, the organ is located directly backstage. Mr. Davis' "solution" was to call upon modern technology: have the two large main choirs but still well short of 200 in number; place the boys choir backstage; amplify their voices and communicate with their conductor by closed circuit tv; and extend the apron of the stage a few feet.

Whatever else these devices added up to, they were not apt to make a listener feel that he was sitting in his pew at St. Eustache in Paris. The boys choir was totally inaudible, and the location of the organ and the massing together of the choirs all made for the very polyphony that Berlioz was trying to avoid. The consequence inevitably was to import a certain lack of focus throughout the presentation.

Still, unfocused or not, there was a reservoir of glorious sound and a feeling of the grand scale, all enhanced by a first-rate performance. The Tanglewood Festival people sang fervently and with appropriate excitement. Mr. Riegel displayed a fine ease and range and superb diction. Colin Davis infused the sprawling work with manifest command and commitment. If the "Te Deum" as a practical matter can only be heard with flaws, then by all means let us continue to hear it.

The other peice on the program was Mozart's Symphony no. 39 in E flat. Mr. Davis and a reduced orchestra gave this supple and beautifully molded masterpiece a strong reading. In many ways the E flat Symphony represents Mozart's truly full blown introduction of the clarinet to a symphony writing, and Messr. Wright and Cardillo served him well.

That clarinet playing is a fine preview of what is in store this weekend. Harold Wright, the orchestra's principal, will perform the Mozart Clarinet concerto in A major. The other item in the concert will be Wagner's "Prelude and Liebestod from 'Tristan und Isolde'." The soprano soloist will be Jessye Norman.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398
FEB 26 1973 New England Newsclip

Davis to Conduct Hub Symphony In 3 Concerts

BOSTON —On Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8.30 principal guest conductor Colin Davis will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mozart's Minuet in C and Clarinet concerto in A with Harold Wright clarinet soloist.

Davis will follow those works with Wagner's Funf Gędichte von Mathilde Wesendonk and Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde" with soprano Jessye Norman soloist.

On March 6 at 8.30 Davis will coduct the orchestra in the weekend's Mozart program Minuet in C and Clarinet concerto in A with principal clarinet Harold Wright soloist and will conclude that concert with Elgar's Introduction and allegro for strings and his Variations on an original theme "Enigma."

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,653
FEB 24 1973 New England Newsclip

BSO Presents 'Te Deum'

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

Last week at Symphony Hall, we had Berlioz' "Lelio," the product of the composer's economic necessity and his self-indulgence of grand passions and manic-depressive emotional states. This week, it was the "Te Deum," once again the achievement of a man whose tastes ran to the grandiose, the excessive.

Written with colossal performing resources in mind (100 strings, about 50 wind, brass and percussion players and choral forces of about 800), the Te Deum was performed in Symphony Hall with somewhat reduced forces — although they were large enough to fill the state and spill over into some outside room from which the St. Paul's Boy Choir was piped in with stereophonic equipment.

Conducted by Colin David, the work, like "Lelio," is a mixture of imaginative, fanciful, and beautiful moments, and bizarre, bombastic, impossible ones. The text is concerned with the praise of God and fear of his impending judgment and Berlioz exploits these sentiments for all they are worth.

Not surprising, it is most often the quieter sections, like "Tibi Omnes" or the end of

• Concert Review

"Te Ergo Quaesumus," or the ethereal colors in the "Sanctus" setting that work most successfully, while the Final Judgment scene ultimately gets out of hand (It could be a real monster given the mammoth ensemble Berlioz had in mind.

The performance was an exciting one, full of fervor and heroic sentiment. The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, although the voices seemed a bit light-weight and occasionally taxed by Berlioz' pitch extremes, sang well and negotiated the contrapuntal complexities with assurance.

As I mentioned, the boy choir had to be located outside the auditorium and that really didn't work too successfully. There were a number of distractions from the amplification system being switched on and off, once the boys came in a second late and, generally, the sound of their voices seemed heavy and thick.

Kenneth Riegel, the tenor soloist, seemed rather too Italianate in style for my taste, but he sang easily and with ample, attractive tone.

The first half of the program was devoted to Mozart's E-flat major symphony No. 39, which Davis gave a beautiful performance. It was informed by a wonderful sense of logic, by knowledge of where things were going and a willingness to take risks. This latter was evident in the slow introduction that Davis took very slowly indeed, producing an endless, spun-out line.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
MAR 1 1973 New England Newsclip

In Concert

Mutual Confidence

By Peter M. Knapp

Music by two 20th century romantics, Jean Sibelius and Edward Elgar, formed Colin Davis' program with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night.

Each composer was represented by a long work prefaced by a shorter one — Sibelius by the Symphony No. 3 in C and the "Tapiola" tone poem: Elgar by the "Enigma" Variations and the Introduction and Allegro for Strings. To complete the symmetry of this juxtaposition of Finnish introspection and English heartiness, most of the works were composed around the first decade of the century — "Tapiola" coming later, in 1924.

It was a grand night for the BSO and Davis, with the teamwork and mutual confidence evident from the start in that long, mystical opening section of "Tapiola" whose surface seems so static yet underneath, Sibelius' basic matter is multiplying. Surely this passage was an example of distinguished orchestra control, both behind the stands and on the podium, as was the later buildup of that long crescendo.

One could cite many such examples of the orchestra's virtuosity and Davis' solid command, ability to clarify details and textures — add in the spectacular string playing in the Elgar Introduction and Allegro, except for a few shrill peak notes. And there was a directness of expression without chilly literalism, and no little intensity.

For all that, the Sibelius Third is a pretty drab piece, even though it is one of his less determinedly weighty pieces — one hesitates to use the work "lighter" with Sibelius. Its events are clear enough, there's a rather nice tune (melancholy of course) in the middle slow movement, and the orchestra is less grandiose than in most of Sibelius, thinning out the winds and using only timpani for percussion, which of course cuts down the instrumental color.

But there's little going on to really capture the attention, and the piece while not unpleasant, seems neuter. Played afer "Tapiola" with its brooding evocations of forest depths and Finnish myth and Nordic soul, along with the intensity of the piece conveyed in Tuesday's performance, the Third Symphony seemed especially pallid.

That's one word you can't attach to either Elgar work. I'm a patsy for the "Enigma" Variations, especially for those great throbbing moments in Variations 9 and 12 where Elgar pours on the regal strings. As in the Introduction and Allegro, the BSO strings really put out regal sounds.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654
MAR 3 1973
New England Newsclip

Davis, BSO Present Sibelius, Elgar Concert

By DAVID NOBLE

Conducting a concert of Sibelius and Elgar is a veddy British thing to do—has been for decades.

Forty or 50 years ago, when it all began, Elgar was already regarded as an old hat and the serious attention went to Silbelius, who was seen as the Great Northern European Composer or some such thing. Now, of course, it's the other way around between them, but there they both were for the second time this season in Colin Davis' Tuesday and Thursday concerts with the Boston Symphony Orhestra.

The British conductor launched into Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for string quartet and string orchestra as if he, Davis, were going to forge to the head of the current Elgar revival by the energy of his performance. I'm not convinced Elgar meant to have it all be so muscular, but the BSO strings played handsomely, and the shapely sounds that resulted gave non-silent tribute to the durability of the music under stress. Relaxation finally was achieved in the final fugue.

• Concert Review

The quartet of soloists was not identified in the program, but as far as I could see it included acting concertmaster Jerome Rosen, principal second violinist Clarence Knudson, principal violist Burton Fine, and principal cellist Jules Eskin.

They played as a sixth section of the string orchestra rather than as an independent concertante—I think the music really calls for the approach that they took—and sounded gorgeous.

The "Enigma" variations for full orchestra were done at a more normal temperature and pressure, and sounded merely brilliant Thursday night. Davis' interpretation was fun and pretty, but missed the dark shadows that lurk in the corners of the work—the fact that its theme is really a counter-melody to an unstated tune whose identity Elgar never disclosed does shape much of the piece's progress.

Sibelius' tone poem, "Tapiola," began the evening under an icing of interpretative sugar. Thirty years ago Shaw thought the chromaticism of Sibelius's last works—this apparently among them—was a better clue to the future of music than the then emerging work of Schoenberg, but whatever it was England's greatest critic heard in the Sibelius of the 'twenties was out of sight Thursday night. There simply were no sharp edges to be found in the music, though it has them.

Sibelius's Third Symphony, carried over from programs played earlier this season, also was played in these concerts.

All in all, I had the impression that the orchestra gave Davis exactly what he asked, mostly with excellent ensemble.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
FEB 26 1973
New England Newsclip

Music—a week of happy returns

Symphony Hall stars— Davis, Serkin, the Guarneri

By Louis Snyder

It was a week of happy returns in Boston's Symphony Hall. Colin Davis was back again for his second two-week term this season as a Principal Guest Conductor of the Boston Symphony. The Guarneri String Quartet gave their second of a three-concert series, joined by Rudolf Serkin, who had himself played a solo piano recital in the hall in December. And there were plenty of listeners to welcome all of them.

In weekend concerts, Davis and the BSO gave their first Boston performances of the Berlioz Te Deum, which Charles Munch introduced at Tanglewood in 1954 and Davis, his tenor soloist Kenneth Riegel, organist Berj Zamkochian, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus repeated there last summer, as they did here on Friday and Saturday. The St. Paul's School Boy Choir was heard (from offstage) if not seen in the Boston performances.

Why it has taken so long for the orchestra to bring this work, which the composer described as "coming into the world with Richard the Third's teeth but not his deformity," is hard to explain. While great instrumental and choral forces are called for, Berlioz himself settled for less than his own specifications, and the large Tanglewood Chorus and the Boy Choir could hardly have been bettered for expansive sound.

* * *

Under the Davis baton, the Te Deum became an increasingly powerful experience. From the first shattering organ chords to the urgent tolling orchestral figure that accompanies the final prayer, "Judex crederis," his control and balance of voices and instruments kept listeners spellbound. The tremendous sustained mood of the "Tibi omnes," for instance, and the contrasting peace of the prayer ("Dignare Domine") which followed were memorably accomplished, with the artful cooperation of musicians, singers, and Mr. Zamkochian. Similarly, Mr. Riegel's solo, "Te ergo" was sung with strength and passion, and the finale was Berlioz at his ringing best.

The Te Deum was prefaced with a wonderfully gauged performance of Mozart's Symphony No. 39 in E flat, first of his last three, and a work of sublime beauty. Davis lavished great care on it, and the orchestra, which has played Mozart under several batons this season, responded with warmth and precision. The Andante was particularly impressive, and worth the pause that the conductor took between first and second movements on Friday afternoon while oblivious latecomers wandered in.

* * *

all. As strong and compelling as the impression was, the music never lost its lyric quality — it reflected the fairest weather imaginable — and once more the listeners sat transfixed until the last note.

* * *

Dvorak: Piano Quintet in A, Op. 81, Artur Rubinstein, Guarneri Quartet (RCA LSC-3252).

The Guarneri String Quartet has made one of several recordings that exist of the Dvorak Quintet, this with Artur Rubinstein as the pianist. While no disc can approach the immediacy of a live performance, particularly of this distinctly personal music, this meeting of superior musical minds has produced one that is the next best thing to being there in person, and Rubinstein gives a lively account of the persuasive piano part.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
MAR 5 1973
New England Newsclip

Music front: BSO, blues, and baroque

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
FEB 28 1973
New England Newsclip

For the musically inclined Bostonian or visitor, there is a variety to choose from over this weekend. Symphony, jazz, rock, and baroque will be available.

At Symphony Hall, Colin Davis is concluding his second set of appearances this season as a principal guest conductor of the Boston Symphony. At concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, there will be music by Mozart, including the Clarinet Concerto in A, played by Harold Wright, and by Wagner — the Wesendonck Songs and the "Tristan und Isolde" Liebestod, sung by soprano Jessye Norman.

STANDARD TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
S. 63,259
MAR 4 1973
New England Newsclip

A look at the arts, by Earl J.

Colin Davis of Symphon,

I was delighted to note at Symphony Hall in the fourth program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tuesday "B" Series that Colin Davis, principal guest conductor of the orchestra, was on the podium. Davis, who is at present music director of London's Royal Opera House, Convent Garden, and former conductor of the BBC Symphony Orchestra, is a maestro who always knows what he is doing, who is certain about the effects he wishes to obtain from his players, and is eminently successful in getting them to respond precisely and sensitively to his wishes.

Not so flashy and flamboyant a conductor as that human dynamo, Seiji Ozawa, who takes over the orchestra next season as music director, Davis, nevertheless, has managed to generate excitement in every concert I have heard him conduct. In the Tuesday program he gave us a lilting, beautifully phrased reading of Mozart's charming bauble, the "Minuet in C" and then, with that superb clarinetist, Harold Wright as soloist, and admirably balanced rendition of Mozart's "Clarinet Concerto in A," a masterwork notable for its serenity, its quiet elegance, its introspection.

The program concluded with an intelligently conceived performance of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 3 in E Flat," the frequently played "Eroica." Davis and his musicians accomplished what I had thought was virtually impossible — they made one of the most familiar selections in the symphonic repertory seem fresh and new, proving that nothing is really trite if one knows how to brush the dust form it.

Last weekend, Davis continued his guest conducting chores with a performance of Berlioz's grandise "Te Deum," a rendition that was full of heroic sentiment and fervor.

Moreover, Davis also offered Mozart's "Symphony No. 39 in E Flat Major," and, as always, gave us a reading of Mozart that was both logical and imaginative.

In recent years, the two guest conductors who have most impressed me at Boston Symphony concerts are Davis and Claudio Abbado. In fact, I wish heartily that Davis were more often on the premises of Symphony Hall. He is a musical treasure.

Conductor Colin Davis: 'every reason to be grateful'

Covent Garden's music director is never far from the problems of repertory, audiences, costs

By Louis Snyder

Boston

"We have a wonderful conductor this week," said a Boston Symphony player, nodding sagely. "He has a way of telling us what we need to know without insulting our intelligence — and we are intelligent," added this veteran.

The conductor was of course Colin Davis, who, for ever so long, has occupied a special place in the affections of the BSO as a musician and mentor. Sharing, with Michael Tilson Thomas, the designation of principal guest conductor, Davis, in his few weeks away from other large commitments, makes no secret of enjoying this time with BSO performances. In a recent conversation between a Boston Symphony member and a musician in another large orchestra, a few woes-as-usual having been exchanged, the non-Bostonian enviously intensified his own deprivations with "Ah, but you have Colin Davis!"

* * *

As for the music-director-conductor himself, he admits to being spoiled in his satisfaction with the directions his career has taken. Since 1959 when he gained international prominence as a last minute replacement for Otto Klemperer in a coucert performance of "Don Giovanni," he has been music director for five years of Sadler's Wells Opera, chief conductor of the BBC Symphony, guest with the London Symphony on its world tour, the New York Philharmonic, Metropolitan Opera, among others. And in 1971 he became chief conductor and artistic adviser at the Royal Opera, Covent Garden.

"I have every reason to be grateful," Davis declared in an earlier visit to Boston this season, "but that doesn't mean that there haven't been and there are not still large problems to face."

* * *

In the hotel room overlooking a late autumn, rain-drenched Boston Public Garden, there was a score of Wagner's "Siegfried" on a table, open to Act 3, scene 1. The windows were open wide, and Davis, with a day off between concerts, had been relaxing by working on a Covent Garden project still some years hence — "The Ring" — not necessarily his prime musical favorite. "But however I feel about it privately," he said, "it belongs in any representative repertory, and I intend to do it — even if badly."

The chance of Davis doing anything "badly" seems remote. He is well on his way, with the still to be released "Damnation of Faust," to round out an historic Berlioz Cycle, recorded for Philips, which brought back the epic "Troyens" both onstage and on disc, among other neglected works of this flamboyantly romantic composer. Davis has had brilliant artistic successes at the Metropolitan Opera with three non-box-office pieces, "Peter Grimes," "Wozzeck," and a new production of "Pelleas et Melisande" — ("I told Bing it was crazy of him to let me do them"). And in London he is held in high putlic regard, although from the start of his tenure in the top spot at Covent Garden he has known what adversity is.

"It was the bitterest disappointment of my life," he stated, "when Peter Hall resigned as my right hand. It's too long and complicated a story to tell, and we're still good friends, but there was nothing to do but go on with our plans without him." Hall, a bright light on Britain's theatrical scene, had joined Davis at the Royal Opera as stage director of Sir Michael Tippett's "The Knot Garden," and in a controversial "Tristan und Isolde" before he resigned from the theater's new regime. He has since become heir apparent to Sir Laurence Olivier as director of the National Theater of Great Britain.

* * *

The Davis "plans" have indeed gone forward. A new "Marriage of Figaro" is in the repertory with John Copley taking over as stage director, and the controversial history-based "Taverner," by Peter Maxwll Davis, one of Britain's younger, far-out composers, so far has rocked the press and roused the public. Which is precisely what Davis had in mind. In prospect are similarly revolutionary operatic projects — something by Tippett involving the Rolling Stones, dramatic works by John Taverner (distant relative of the Maxwell Davies operatic hero) and Olivier Messiaen, as well as a piece, still not categorized, by Hans Werner Henze. He has already disclosed his involvement in composing a dramatic happening, not unlike the Italian audience-involving "Orlando Furioso," which might be what will turn up at Covent Garden.

In addition, Davis has envisioned a new, smaller house to be run in connection with Covent Garden for experimental and chamber works ("What Sadler's Wells used to do, but no one does now"). Whether it will find a place in the still controversial plan for redoing the Covent Garden area remains to be seen.

About singers Davis's attitude is unlike some impresarios of recent note. "I find them charming, and wonderfully dedicated, but also increasingly high-priced," he said. "That is why we hope to find and use some young, up-and-coming artists at Covent Garden while we can still afford them."

* * *

The new, up-and-coming public is also being cultivated. In addition to the projected contemporary works mentioned, Covent Garden, with the assistance of the Midland Bank, is becoming part of the celebrated Proms agains in April when performances of "Aida," "Arabella," and "Cosi Fan Tutte" will take place in the opera house with its orchestra floor seats removed.

On his recording schedule, besides the Berlioz "Damnation of Faust," are both Tippett's "Knot Garden" and his Third Symphony (which he will also conduct with the Boston Symphony in 1973-74), and a new "Don Giovanni" with an international cast. The Sibelius symphonies are also on his recording agenda, with the First and the Fourth planned for this year.

Would Davis be amenable to a post in the United States? "It has been mentioned," he smiled, "but of course I am very much involved now at Covent Garden. And my family is my greatest weakness — I have three boys growing up, and it wouldn't seem right to displace them for a number of years at least. As I said, I have every reason to be grateful."

72.

Passionless Quality Marks Performance

Jessye Norman Sings with BSO

BY ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

Jessye Norman, the young black soprano who made her debut at Tanglewood last summer and was wildly cheered by voice buffs, repeated that debut program with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. Colin Davis conducted.

I did not hear Ms. Norman's

• Concert Review

Tanglewood performance, only reports about it, so I was especially looking forward to this appearance. Not only was the voice supposed to be exceptionally beautiful, but a dramatic soprano, and it isn't everyday that one of those turns up. I had heard nothing about how intelligently that voice was used, so that was another matter of curiosity.

The program was Wagner, the five Wesendonck Lieder and Isolde's "Liebestod," and, yes, the singing is beautiful, but I must admit that my reaction was somewhat more restrained than that of the Tanglewood audience. It seems that, although the voice is dark and lush, Ms. Norman still is not in complete control of it at all times and this manifests itself in a tendency to flatness (especially in sustained tones) and some strain in the top octave. This is something that probably can be ironed out with work and vocal maturity and isn't too serious.

What also needs ironing out is a rather incomplete notion of what this music is about. Ms. Norman's diction is excellent and, in certain moments, she knows just exactly what to do with the words, how to shape them and color them, so that at the end of "Im Treibhaus" and again in "Traume," she captured the intoxication (hokey as it seems to 20th century ears) that is written into this music.

But it didn't happen often enough and it was partly a problem of the instrumental playing too that led to the passionless quality of the performance. There was not enough real pianissimo to the dynamic range and the playing was generally a little ragged (the exposed endings of the songs suffered from problems of ensemble and pitch).

On the first half of the program, the music was by Mozart and included the Minuet in C. K. 409 and the Clarinet Concerto in A-major with Harold Wright as soloist. A certain lifelessness characterized the concerto performance with that really joyous first movement sounding not nearly vivacious enough and the second movement mannered and rather heavy on the rubato. Wright's playing, however, was superb; it's really a pleasure to hear someone who knows how to phrase.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654
MAR 3 1973 New England Newsclip

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 67,117
MAR 3 1973 New England Newsclip

Music: Soprano heard in Hub

By EDWIN SAFFORD

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, conducted by Colin Davis, at Symphony Hall, Boston.

The major attraction yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall was soprano Jerrye Norman. From recordings and word of mouth, the singer had an advanced reputation as someone to hear, a voice and a personality destined for important things.

Young, black, tall, amply proportioned, Miss Norman fulfilled expectations. She sang Wagner, all the Wesendonk songs and the Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde." The songs had exceedingly beautiful interpretations, while the "Tristan" excerpt went well.

The Norman voice was large, alto-dark in its lower register and never less than warm elsewhere. On its own, it filled Symphony Hall effortlessly. It did not have sufficient brightness to cut through orchestral fortes, even above the staff.

But the combination of pure, sensual tone and insight into the material was remarkable. The first two of the Wesendonk songs, "Der Engel" and "Stehe Still," held attention as rarely they do. And the three better known, "Im Treibhaus," "Schmerzen" and "Traeume," made a gorgeous effect.

Miss Norman sang everything with simplicity, standing almost motionless and allowing voice and text to carry her unquestioned artistry along. With Colin Davis and the Boston Symphony's glowing accompaniments, the impression left was lasting.

The program included the Mozart Minuet in C, K. 409, and clarinet concerto and the "Tristan" prelude. Harold Wright, the Boston's principal clarinetist, performed in the concerto.

The whole world is not gung-ho for Davis' Mozart, certainly not as gung-ho as Davis is for Mozart. Yesterday afternoon produced some answers why.

Where the program described the minuet as "full of verve and humor" and exuberant, the performance was cool and pastel. During the clarinet concerto these same attributes prevailed. If it is possible to be too tastefully civilized, that is how to describe the conductor's approach.

Well, such was his way. It rather kept the concerto down to an ensemble work more than a display piece, since Wright was very much within Davis' method. As a result, the coloristic, wonderfully ornamented line in the solo part was inside the orchestra too often when it should have had greater prominence.

Still, given this style of playing, there were lovely moments. Wright's agility, delicate as it was, and pearly sound, plus the transparency of the violins especially, were truly not to be demeaned. Only a trace of bravura would have been nice.

When it came to the larger orchestra in the Wagner prelude, where the music was carefully shaped by Davis into a spacious entity, no lack was to be noted. And there was, as well, this opportunity to be introduced to Jessye Norman. First meetings with new voices already beyond descriptions like potential are always a thrill.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
MAR 5 1973 New England Newsclip

Miss Norman, Mr. Davis, make music with BSO

By Louis Snyder

Two soloists with spectacular abilities have just been featured with the Boston Symphony for the first time at Symphony Hall. Harold Wright, the orchestra's principal clarinetist, stepped out from his colleagues as a concerto soloist, and soprano Jessye Norman, who had appeared with the BSO at Tanglewood but not in Boston, also made her debut here in a weekend concert program conducted by Colin Davis.

* * *

It was no surprise to discover in fuller measure the extraordinary virtuosity that Mr. Wright has evidenced in the context of orchestral and chamber music performances since joining the BSO. Mozart's Concerto for Clarinet in A (K. 622) provided him with plentiful opportunities to display impeccable musicality as well as the to play the subtle but demanding role the composer has given the soloist in partnership with a quartet formation of strings. His facility in coloring instrumental tone, and in controlling its intensity — the opening of the Adagio, for example — were amazing feats of technique which produced equal listening pleasure.

Mr. Davis's success in drawing distinctive Mozartian results from the orchestra was in evidence in the Concerto as it had been in the program's opening Minuet in C. (K. 409), a small but shining gem which seems to have been added by Mozart to his Symphony No. 34 in C for a Vienna performance. Whatever, on Friday and Saturday it served as an occasion for some bright orchestral playing, including delectable sounds by oboe (Wayne Rapier) and flute (Paul Fried). Latecomers don't know what they missed.

Colin Davis, conductor

Jessye Norman, soprano

The voice and presence of Miss Norman dominated the second half of the program, which was comprised of Wagner's Five Wesendonck Songs, and the Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde." However, the orchestra which has previously been transported to celestial regions by Wagner in recent weeks, was so again on this occasion by Mr. Davis. What ethereal sounds!

* * *

One could not but be impressed by the size and deep richness of Miss Norman's voice from the first note of "Der Engel," first of the songs that Wagner set to words by his Zurich hostess, Mathilde Wesendonck. And the singer's personal absorption in the texts of those that followed, however romantically overblown, complemented the beauty of the Wagnerian line. "Im Treibhaus" and "Schmerzen" were particularly splendidly realized in this regard.

* * *

On Friday, Miss Norman showed all the qualities which have launched her on an international career over the past five years: musical intelligence, tonal velvet, voluminous projection. There were times, however, when high notes surprisingly fell just short, seemingly from lack of support or a mishap of technique. In any case, however, this is a talent to be nourished carefully for its uniqueness and tremendous potential.

Following a superb orchestral performance of the "Tristan" Prelude, Miss Norman sang a majestic Liebestod, full of both passion and repose. She, Mr. Davis, and the musicians received standing acclaim from an audience obviously warmed and impressed.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
MAR 3 1973 New England Newsclip

Wright was bright but Thursday dull

Can most of Thursday evening's Boston Symphony concert, which Colin Davis conducted, have been as dull as it seemed? I think yes. For one thing, I can usually be interested in Sibelius — I admit, almost always to my surprise. I was, for instance, when Davis conducted the Third Symphony on a Friday in October, but this time both it and "Tapiola" sounded pushed low notes and the somewhat uneasy, unfree, soft high ones are scary danger signals in a singer still in her twenties.

MOZART CLARINET concerto soloist, Harold Wright.

Davis did a lovely job on the songs, and conducted controlled, classical, perhaps ever so slightly anti-Wagnerian performances of the "Tristan" Prelude and Love-death.

Davis's finely modulated conducting of Mozart, with its poise and warmth, I find very beautiful. I thought so last Saturday when he produced a superbly achieved performance of the Symphony No. 39, and again yesterday, both about the animated playing he got the orchestra to do in the concerto, and before that in the sapid C major Minuet, K. 409 (the one some conductors include in the Symphony No. 34).

The second half of yesterday's concert repeated the first half of one given at Tanglewood in August: the soprano, Jessye Norman, was soloist in Wagner's Wesendonk songs and in the Love-death from "Tristan." She is an intelligent, sensitive musician, though not, for me, moving. She has a big, rich voice, and I hope that in her sky-rocketing career she will be allowed to develop it properly: the

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
MAR 5 1973 New England Newsclip

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

She's known as "The Queen of Symphony Hall." When put end to end she is an entire block long and her insides contain 250 miles of wires. It costs a small fortune to give her a bath and she has two "handmen" ever ready and waiting to tend to her slightest whim for to replace her today would cost the Boston Symphony Orchestra $300,000. She is the huge concert organ that dominates the stage of Symphony Hall.

Her history, her workings plus his obvious love for her came through clearly on Friday morning at the third Stage Door Lecture in the 1972-73 series when organist for the B.S.O. and Boston Pops Berj Zamkochian spoke. That he loved his profession and in particular playing in Symphony Hall was evident and again and again he thanked the Friends of the B.S.O. attending the lecture for their support and help they give to the orchestra.

The lecture began in Symphony Hall itself, instead of in the basement of the building as is customary. This was so Mr. Zamkochian could demonstrate to his audience which he did in great form ending up with a magnificent rendition of Bach's "Toccata and Fugue for Organ."

From here the ladies adjourned to the old familiar basement where tables covered with gaily colored paper cloths and holding box luncheons at each place awaited them.

The upcoming Musical Marathon that begins over Radio Station WCRB at 7 p.m. next Thursday evening was very much in evidence. It was discussed by member of the Council of Friends of the B.S.O. Mrs. William Mixter of Dedham, wearing, as were so many others at the lecture, the Musical Marathon button and also a blue and white Musical Marathon scarf that has been presented to all the women members of the orchestra.

Among the many at this sold out series on Friday were Mrs. Louis Eaton of Cohasset; Mrs. C. Russell Eddy of Duxbury; Mrs. Mary-Louise Cabot, wearing a new and very becoming hair style; Mrs. Henry Ingram of Hingham; Mrs. Edwin Ohl of Dedham; Mrs. Walter Amory of Wellesley; Mrs. Charles Bartlett of Dedham; Mrs. Robert A. Lawrence of Westwood; Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky of Dedham; and Mrs. James Sampson of Hingham.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
MAR 5 1973
New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Orchestra performing at Boston Symphony Hall.

BSO to Perform in Springfield

Alan Hale, president of the Springfield Orchestra Association, announced today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Bernard Haitink conducting will make a special appearance in Springfield on Thursday, April 12 at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium. The the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, will begin at 8:30 p.m.

The Boston Symphony will be joined by the Chorus Pro Musica for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D Minor. Soloists will be announced.

Haitink has been permanent conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra since 1961 and was appointed principal conductor and artistic adviser to the London Philharmonic in 1967. Under his leadership, the Concertgebouw has become one of the leading European orchestras. In England, Haitink is regarded as one of London's most brilliant conductors.

The April appearance marks the first time in five years that the Boston Symphony has performed in Springfield.

Tickets for this concert are now available at the symphony office, 49 Chestnut Street. Reservations will be accepted by calling 739-4728.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
W. 3,650
MAR 8 1973
New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Will Appear In Springfield

SPRINGFIELD - Alan Hale, president of the Springfield Orchestra Association, has announced that the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Bernard Haitink conducting will appear in Springfield Thursday, April 12 at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium. Sponsored by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, the concert will begin at 8:30.

The Chorus Pro Musica will join the Boston Symphony for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D. Minor. Soloists will be announced at a later date.

Bernard Haitink is permanent conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra and Artistic Adviser and Principal Conductor to the London Philharmonic Orchestra. He has mad numerous guest appearanc with major orchestras in t United States and Europe Haitink has risen within a years to the top of the ductor's world.

Tickets for the Apr concert are now available Springfield Symphony of Chestnut Street.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398
MAR 6 1973
New England Newsclip

Tickets For BSO Available

Alan Hale, president of the Springfield Orchestra Association, has announced that tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance in Springfield on Thursday, April 12, are now available to the public.

The concert begins at 8.30 p.m. in Municipal Auditorium, sponsored by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

Bernard Haitink will conduct the orchestra and the Chorus Pro Musica in a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor. Soloists will be announced.

Haitink is permanent conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebous Orchestra and principal conductor and artistic adviser to the London Philharmonic Orchestra. His numerous guest appearances have included the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, London Philaharmonic Orchestra, BBC Symphony Orchestra, Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra and the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra.

Tickets are available at the Springfield Symphony Office, 49 Chestnut St. Reservations are accepted by calling 739-4728.

TIMES-UNION
BURLINGTON, MASS.
W. 7,200
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

FENCE VIEWER
SUDBURY, MASS.
W. 3,000
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

CITIZEN
BELMONT, MASS.
W. 4,350
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

MINUTE MAN
BEDFORD, MASS.
W. 2,993
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

JOURNAL
CONCORD, MASS.
W. 6,000
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

Conducts Symphony

On Friday, April 6 at 2 p.m., Saturday, April 7 at 8:30 p.m. and Tuesday, April 10 at 8:30 p.m., Bernard Haitink, Artistic Director and Conductor of the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Walton's Cello concerto with cellist Zara Nelsova soloist and Mahler's Symphony no. 1 in D.

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
MAR 25 1973
New England Newsclip

Symphony Concert Set in Springfield

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Bernard Haitink conducting, will appear in Springfield April 12 at 8:30 p.m. at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium, sponsored by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

The Chorus Pro Musica will join the Boston Symphony for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D Minor.

Bernard Haitink is permanent conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra and artistic adviser and principal conductor to the London Philharmonic orchestra and artistic adviser and principal conductor to the London Philharmonic Orchestra. He has made numerous guest appearances with major orchestras in the United States and Europe. For information, call the Springfield Symphony office, 739-4728.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398
MAR 8 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO to Dedicate Symphony to Israel

Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 will be dedicated to the State of Israel when performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Springfield Municipal Auditorium April 12 at 8.30 p.m.

Springfield Symphony Association president Alan Hale and Springfield Jewish Federation president Joel A. Leavitt made the joint announcement yesterday.

Leavitt said the performance will precede, by one month, Springfield's Salute to Israel Week to begin Sunday, May 13.

The Ninth Symphony, with its thematic emphasis on human development and brotherhood, dramatically illustrates the goals of Israel and the Jewish people and indeed of all peaceful peoples, Leavitt said.

Bernard Haitink, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its Springfield performance, has been principal conductor and artistic advisor to the London Philharmonic since 1967. He is highly regarded as a conductor in England.

JOURNAL REGISTER
PALMER, MASS.
W. 4,800
MAR 15 1973
New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Coming April 12

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Bernard Haitink conducting will appear in Springfield on Thursday, April 12, at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium. Sponsored by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, the concert will begin at 8:30 p.m.

The Chorus Pro Musica will join the Boston Symphony for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D Minor. Soloists will be announced at a later date.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
MAR 14 1973
New England Newsclip

BEETHOVEN'S NINTH —Bernard Haitink will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Chorus Pro Musica in a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium, Thursday, April 12 at 8:30 p.m. Concert is sponsored by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
MAR 5 1973
New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Orchestra performing at Boston Symphony Hall.

BSO to Perform in Springfield

Alan Hale, president of the Springfield Orchestra Association, announced today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Bernard Haitink conducting will make a special appearance in Springfield on Thursday, April 12 at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium. The the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, will begin at 8:30 p.m.

The Boston Symphony will be joined by the Chorus Pro Musica for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D Minor. Soloists will be announced.

Haitink has been permanent conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra since 1961 and was appointed principal conductor and artistic adviser to the London Philharmonic in 1967. Under his leadership, the Concertgebouw has become one of the leading European orchestras. In England, Haitink is regarded as one of London's most brilliant conductors.

The April appearance marks the first time in five years that the Boston Symphony has performed in Springfield.

Tickets for this concert are now available at the symphony office, 49 Chestnut Street. Reservations will be accepted by calling 739-4728.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
W. 3,650
MAR 8 1973
New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Will Appear In Springfield

SPRINGFIELD - Alan Hale, president of the Springfield Orchestra Association, has announced that the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Bernard Haitink conducting will appear in Springfield Thursday, April 12 at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium. Sponsored by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, the concert will begin at 8:30.

The Chorus Pro Musica will join the Boston Symphony for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D. Minor. Soloists will be announced at a later date.

Bernard Haitink is permanent conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra and Artistic Adviser and Principal Conductor to the London Philharmonic Orchestra. He has mad numerous guest appearanc with major orchestras in t United States and Europ Haitink has risen within a years to the top of the ductor's world.

Tickets for the Apr concert are now available Springfield Symphony of Chestnut Street.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398
MAR 6 1973
New England Newsclip

Tickets For BSO Available

Alan Hale, president of the Springfield Orchestra Association, has announced that tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance in Springfield on Thursday, April 12, are now available to the public.

The concert begins at 8.30 p.m. in Municipal Auditorium, sponsored by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

Bernard Haitink will conduct the Orchestra and the Chorus Pro Musica in a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor. Soloists will be announced.

Haitink is permanent conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebous Orchestra and principal conductor and artistic adviser to the London Philharmonic Orchestra. His numerous guest appearances have included the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, London Philaharmonic Orchestra, BBC Symphony Orchestra, Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra and the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra.

Tickets are available at the Springfield Symphony Office, 49 Chestnut St. Reservations are accepted by calling 739-4728.

TIMES-UNION
BURLINGTON, MASS.
W. 7,200
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

FENCE VIEWER
SUDBURY, MASS.
W. 3,000
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

CITIZEN
BELMONT, MASS.
W. 4,350
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

MINUTE MAN
BEDFORD, MASS.
W. 2,003
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

JOURNAL
CONCORD, MASS.
W. 6,000
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

Conducts Symphony

On Friday, April 6 at 2 p.m., Saturday, April 7 at 8:30 p.m. and Tuesday, April 10 at 8:30 p.m., Bernard Haitink, Artistic Director and Conductor of the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Walton's Cello concerto with cellist Zara Nelsova soloist and Mahler's Symphony no. 1 in D.

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
MAR 25 1973
New England Newsclip

Symphony Concert Set in Springfield

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Bernard Haitink conducting, will appear in Springfield April 12 at 8:30 p.m. at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium, sponsored by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

The Chorus Pro Musica will join the Boston Symphony for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D Minor.

Bernard Haitink is permanent conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra and artistic adviser and principal conductor to the London Philharmonic orchestra and artistic adviser and principal conductor to the London Philharmonic Orchestra. He has made numerous guest appearances with major orchestras in the United States and Europe. For information, call the Springfield Symphony office, 739-4728.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398
MAR 8 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO to Dedicate Symphony to Israel

Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 will be dedicated to the State of Israel when performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Springfield Municipal Auditorium April 12 at 8.30 p.m.

Springfield Symphony Association president Alan Hale and Springfield Jewish Federation president Joel A. Leavitt made the joint announcement yesterday.

Leavitt said the performance will precede, by one month, Springfield's Salute to Israel Week to begin Sunday, May 13.

The Ninth Symphony, with its thematic emphasis on human development and brotherhood, dramatically illustrates the goals of Israel and the Jewish people and indeed of all peaceful peoples, Leavitt said.

Bernard Haitink, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its Springfield performance, has been principal conductor and artistic advisor to the London Philharmonic since 1967. He is highly regarded as a conductor in England.

JOURNAL REGISTER
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
MAR 15 1973

Boston Symphony Coming April 12

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Bernard Haitink conducting will appear in Springfield on Thursday, April 12, at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium. Sponsored by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, the concert will begin at 8:30 p.m.

The Chorus Pro Musica will join the Boston Symphony for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, in D Minor. Soloists will be announced at a later date.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
MAR 14 1973
New England Newsclip

BEETHOVEN'S NINTH —Bernard Haitink will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Chorus Pro Musica in a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium, Thursday, April 12 at 8:30 p.m. Concert is sponsored by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

NEW CONDUCTOR — Seiji Ozawa, newly appointed music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is shown at a Symphony Hall rehearsal. The exciting Japanese conductor officially begins his position next fall, and by November it is expected he will be seen here with the BSO under the sponsorship of Portland Concert Association.

Sharps and Flats

PCA Slates Ozawa Appearance

By JOHN THORNTON

The Portland Concert Association officially begins its 1973-74 annual subscription drive today, and will continue the campaign through Saturday afternoon. According to good sources, ticket requests are far ahead of last year's drive, which ended in a sellout of City Hall Auditorium. It is expected the auditorium will again sell out, and rather quickly, since PCA has organized one of its best concert schedules in years.

Plans are for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Metropolitan Opera stars James McCracken and Sandra Warfield, and the popular pianist Peter Nero to appear in the city at dates to be announced shortly after the current drive ends.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new director, Seiji Ozawa, will conduct the concert here, expected in November, a few weeks after he assumes his new post. He is the youngest conductor to hold that position at Boston, and the first Japanese musician to become a director of a world famous orchestra of major rank.

Ozawa will continue also to be music director of the San Francisco Symphony, where he has a contract that does not terminate until 1976. However, the seasons of the two orchestras are divided in a manner that will not conflict too much with Ozawa's commitments, at least at the present time.

The last time PCA brought the Boston orchestra to Portland was in 1943 when it was led by Koussevitsky. Bowdoin College backed a Boston Symphony appearance at City Hall Auditorium in 1966. The special concert was dedicated to Vermont composer Carl Ruggles and conducted by Jean Martineau.

But for the enterprise of PCA, the great Boston orchestra might not have been induced to play here next season. The national agency representing the orchestra discouraged the idea, intimating the Bostonians would not visit a small city. But a determined PCA officer went to Boston and quickly succeeded in making an arrangement.

PRESS-HERALD
PORTLAND, MAINE
D. 54,974

MAR 1973 New England Newsclip

TIMES
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
D. 11,000

MAR 8 1973 New England Newsclip

UTICA DAILY PRESS
UTICA, N. Y.
D. 28,782

MAR 1 1973

'73-74 Great Artist Series

The Great Artist Series will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Seiji Ozawa, and five other musical attractions next season.

Roland E. Chesley, general manager, announced the 1973-74 bill last night at the last Great Artist Series presentation of this year, Whittemore and Lowe, duo-pianists, in the Stanley Theater.

Chesley said he had sought for more than a decade to bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Utica.

o o o

THE OTHER presentations will be the Krasnayarsk Dance Company; the Goldovsky Grand Opera Theater, Jorge Boet, pianist; Sherrill Milnes, baritone, and the Texas Boys Choir.

o o o

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY one of thw orld's highest ranking symphonic aggregations for nearly a century, will appear in April, 1974. Ozawa, its music director, was the recipient of the Koussevitzky Prize at the 1960 International Competition of Conductors. He has also served as music director of the Toronto Symphony, the Japan Philharmonic, the San Francisco Symphony and as assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic.

o o o

Daily Press Photo

COMING TO UTICA—Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Boston Symphony, will direct the symphony in Utica this April. The Boston Symphony will be brought to Utica as part of the Great Artist Series, it was announced last night.

Bill Plante's North Shore

The wit and electricity of Seiji Ozawa

Conductor Seiji Ozawa

On the podium, Seiji Ozawa comes on like an Indian rubber ball filled with Mexican jumping beans.

Black mane tossing above a compact flyweight's body, he reaches out and gathers the Boston Symphony orchestra to him and casts it out again over the audience with a zest and control delighting the eye as well as the ear.

But Seiji Ozawa, Music Adviser to the Boston Symphony, Artistic Director of the Berkshire Festival, Music Director of the San Francisco Symphony, and the man who will be coming to Boston as the Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra seated at a press conference is something else.

If electric spontaneity becomes him on the rostrum, modesty and wit delight at the head-to head with the press.

The press conference served as prelude to the now memorable Valentine's Day party at Boston Symphony Hall, and, in my own case, was a calm respite from the Press's head-to-head an hour before with the Joint Judiciary Committee concerning newsman's "Shield" legislation pending. With Ozawa, I merely listened.

He was in the middle of discussing the 1973-1974 season when I arrived at the Ancient Instruments Room, and I slid into a corner position about 15 feet away.

Black becomes Seiji Ozawa. His head is covered with a heavy shock of jet black hair, bushing out over a large pentagonal face. The total effect is startlingly handsome, the broad-square forehead, the flat plains of the cheekbone structure, the dark eyes crinkling at the corners with good humor, and the lines plunging downward and out to a firm, square jaw; an athlete's face.

And an athlete's body, as well, trim, compact, well-balanced on small, patent-leather-encased feet.

And the attire, for this occasion, all black, save for some beads and a turtleneck.

The voice: well-modulated, conversational, occasionally grouping for English expressions, but fluent in the language, melodious.

The wit; bubbling just under the surface, surging upward.

The knowledge: deep, profound, but with excitement, encyclopoedic: "I try to conduct, before I die, every kind of symphony . . ."

He meanders through the upcoming program: Berlioz, Brahms, Debussy, Holst, Ligeti, Mahler, Schonberg, Rachmaninoff, Schuller, Beethoven, Mozart, Tchaikovsky, Tippet, Sibelius, Stravinsky, Strauss, Vaughn Williams, Monteverdi, Paganini—sprinkling verbal footnotes like fine herbs with a light touch, fetching the reporters along with him.

And then the questions:

Yes, he hoped to stay more than three years. It was a new life for him. In fact, it had already changed, his life, that is, with the arrival of the offer to come to Boston. He had Tanglewood roots, of course. Offers are not lightly extended. They come slowly, after much deliberation. But with the offer, his life changed. Thought of little else, day and night for two months before deciding, a very serious thing.

"So my decision to come was a very strong decision," Ozawa said.

"Boston is the most musical city of North America," and "we have the responsibility to show for the Boston people what is going on."

I suspect that Seiji Ozawa will bring to Boston, through the genius with which he will conduct its symphony orchestra, an excitement that will stir us all.

This is no ordinary, run-of-the-mill musical talent, this Ozawa. Born in Hoten, Manchuria in 1935, he was graduated from the Toho School of Music in Tokyo where he excelled in composition and conducting. In 1959, he won the first prize at the International Competition of Conductors at Besancon. One of the judges was Charles Munch who invited him to Tanglewood as a conducting student. The following year, Ozawa received the Koussevitzky Memorial Scholarship as the outstanding young conductor at the Berkshire Music Center. He later directed the New York Philharmonic as an assistant conductor in 1961. That summer he returned to conduct 25 concerts in Japan with the NHK and Japanese Philharmonic Orchestras, where he was a sensation.

It has been all meteoric since, both in Europe and in America where he has conducted the world's greatest orchestras.

Seiji Ozawa becomes Music Director of the Boston Symphony next fall. It promises to be a most extraordinary event.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
MAR 12 1973
New England Newsclip

Ruggiero Ricci is soloist

Bartok Concerto a BSO feature

By Louis Snyder

Bartok's Second Violin Concerto, with Ruggiero Ricci as soloist, and Richard Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration," both out of the Boston Symphony's repertory for all of 10 years, with Mozart's G minor Symphony (No. 40, K.550), heard only last December, made up William Steinberg's weekend program at Symphony Hall. For Mr. Ricci, it was a return after 13 seasons.

Needless to say, attention was centered on the Bartok Concerto, which is a neglected masterpiece. Neglected, that is, when one considers the limited number of standard vehicles brought out on the rare occasions when any solo violinist appears with orchestra these days.

From the introductory strumming rhythms of harp (effectively played throughout by Ann Hobson) and strings, followed by the first appearance of the solo violin, there is no doubt that this is a work of striking originality and magnitude. It is violinistic without being virtuosic, tough and strong without being ultra-dissonant and abrasive. What one might have been led to expect from the ferocity of the Bartok solo rhapsodies, for instance, isn't the backbone of this work. Instead there is an intricate intertwining of the single player's musical line and parallel rich sonorities in all choirs, with frequent tempo switches in midstream, not just for effect but to lead off in other harmonic directions, often with the suavest of melodic inspirations.

* * *

The second, Adagio, movement, is in variation form, and a dream of aural invention. It has the aroma and texture of some exotic Magyar dish, smooth and yet curiously compelling. To conclude, in the Allegro molto, there is more of the Bartok with which one is familiar, tremendously visceral, dark, and frantically dance-like. One churns with the concerto from start to finish.

Mr. Ricci, who is a violinist first and a showman second, played this whopper of a work with style and surprising restraint, considering the platform histrionics it offers the susceptible. If this and the fact that he had the score on a music stand in front of him deceived some listeners, it is perhaps because they were more concerned with what they saw than what they heard. For Mr. Ricci's tone, technique, and expressiveness — particularly after the opening measures on Friday afternoon — ideally complemented the shifting, shimmering, and erupting sound that surrounded him. The difficult first movement cadenza, which certainly is anything but a soaring show-stopper, was navigated with artistic drive and skill, and in the second movement's lyric passages, Mr. Ricci's relaxed bow and sensitive approach spelled understanding and involvement.

* * *

Mr. Steinberg and the orchestra were with Bartok and Mr. Ricci all the way, and happily the audience responded with the degree of warmth this work and its performance deserved.

The Mozart G-minor symphony which opened the program is always a source of pleasure and wonder under any circumstances, even though this time it seemed to exude less vitality than it can command. The Strauss tone poem, in an obviously well rehearsed Boston Symphony performance, cannot be denied its fundamental appeal to the ear if one can separate it from the maudlin "program" with which it was either saddled, or whence it sprung. Perhaps not for everyone but for some, "Tod und Verklaerung" ranks high among several works that show Strauss ruled more by textual than musical inspiration.

The weekend program, conducted by Mr. Steinberg, with Mr. Ricci again as soloist, will be repeated tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514
MAR 7 1973
New England Newsclip

Steinberg to conduct

BOSTON — Former Music Director William Steinberg conducts the Orchestra on Friday March 9, at 2:00 p.m., Saturday March 10, at 8:30 p.m. , and Tuesday March 13, at 8:30 p.m. Steinberg opens the concert with Mozart's Symphony no. 40 in G minor, follows it with Bartok's Violin concerto with Ruggiero Ricci violin soloist, and Strauss' Tod und Verklarung (Death and Transfiguration).

William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, retired from his post in Boston at the end of last season and is now music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony. Under his leadership, the Boston Symphony has continued its steady progress as one of the foremost musical organizations in the world. He led concerts not only in Boston, in New York and in many other American cities, but also in the music centers of England, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain and France. Steinberg's is a celebrated name in music all over the world and he has the distinction of being a founder of the Israel Philharmonic.

A native of California, Ruggiero Ricci has performed in recital and with orchestras in all parts of the world. He made his debut in New York City at the age of nine. During his service with the US Army Air Force about twelve years later he often had to entertain in camps and hospitals where there was neither piano nor accompanist. He began to explore the solo repertoire very thoroughly, and has become particularly known for his interpretations of works such as the Partitas of Bach, the Caprices of Paganini, and unaccompanied pieces by Hindemith and Bartok. Apart from his annual tours of the United States and Europe, Ruggiero Ricci has performed in many parts of the USSR, Australia, Africa and South America. He appeared most recently with the Boston Symphony in 1960.

NEWS
MALDEN, MASS.
D. 12,420
MAR 9 1973
New England Newsclip

Steinberg Back At the BSO

BOSTON — Former Music Director William Steinberg conducts the Boston Symphony orchestra on Friday at 2 p.m., Saturday at 8:30 p.m. and Tuesday, March 13 at 8:30 p.m.

Mr. Steinberg opens the concert with Mozart's Symphony no 40 in G minor, follows it with Bartok's Violin concerto with Ruggiero Ricci violin soloist, and Strauss" Tod und Verklarung (Death and Transfiguration).

Steinberg, former music director of the orchestra, retired from his post in Boston at the end of last season and is now music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654
MAR 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Ricci's Violin Solo Warm

By ELLEN PFEIFER
(Music Critic)

The Bartok Violin Concerto No. 2, with Ruggiero Ricci as soloist, was the featured work on the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

This is the work in which Bartok had his little joke on Zoltan Szekely, leader of the Hungarian String Quarter and the performer who commissioned the work. It seems Szekely wanted a conventional work cast in the standard three-movement concerto form. Bartok, more experimental, suggested a continuous variation form — a procedure that he had been exploring. Szekely's will prevailed, or os he thought until Bartok pointed out that the three-movement completed concerto was indeed a large set of variation.

Actually, a variation set within a variation set, the work is also a prodigious virtuoso piece, long and immensely difficult. It is extremely vivacious, energetic and with some extraordinarily passionate lyricism.

The performance had a great deal going for it with Ricci as soloist. He can cut through the technical demands with assurance, providing the necessary warmth and esprit. The one reservation about his playing that I have is the tendency to flatness and an occasional bit of wobbly tone which was most obvious in the exposed opening of the second movement.

Unfortunately, the orchestra under

• Concert Review

William Steinberg proved a rather bland, washed-out partner for Ricci. The rhythms lacked bite; forte sections were just never big enough, and the occasional raucous moments (as in the development of the 1st movement) not really brash enough.

There was more brash than anyone could have wanted, however, in the Strauss "Tod und Verklaerung" which closed the concert. That is, in the roughness of the orchestral playing, and the strings in particular.

The Mozart Symphony No. 40, which opened the concert must have seemed rather long to the people programming the concert, especially coming before the half-hour Concerto. Perhaps it was because of that that after the first movement, repeats were not observed (even in the last movement which is a sonata form just as the first). Like the Concerto, it too seemed a little puny, a little bland.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
MAR 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Ruggiero Ricci performs with BSO

By Craig Smith
Globe Correspondent

The Boston Symphony Orchestra really ought to reconsider its policy of engaging soloist's for its subscription concerts.

Ruggiero Ricci's performance of Bartok's 2nd Violin Concerto yesterday afternoon was below the minimum level of taste and intelligence demanded by the work.

I am reasonably sure that just about any member of the BSO violin section would have played the work with more care and less crassness, and Mr. Silverstein's performances with the orchestra about ten years ago were simply in a different league from this.

The orchestra played with its familiar virtues, the-toned refined string playing, and some of its familiar faults, some raunchy, out-of-tune wind playing.

The conductor, William Steinberg, does not seem at home in this music: the carefully worked out tempo relationships in the piece were not correct and the sense of rubato, a crucial matter in this music, seemed unnatural.

The concert opened with Mozart's 40th Symphony. Steinberg does not give the highly profiled, opinionated kind of performance in this music that Davis or Karajan projects, but absolute understanding of the tradition and style are great virtues, especially in this era of slapdash conductors.

The transition into the recapitulation of the first movement was as fine as I have ever heard it, and the minuet had a solidity and clarity that are unusual in any performance of this piece.

Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" made up the second half of the concert. It is a remarkably threadbare piece, formless and vulgarly orchestrated.

It is surprising that the BSO has not played it in over ten years for it is one of those repertory pieces that seems omnipresent.

The performance was afflicted by balance problems. The brass far overbalanced the strings in the big exchanges in the center of the piece. The many wind solos were for the most part poorly played.

It was no loss really, for the piece belongs in the pops concerts, not in the subscription series.

EAGLE TRIBUNE
LAWRENCE, MASS.
D. 48,000
MAR 6 1973
New England Newsclip

Symphony notes

BOSTON — Former music director William Steinberg conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday at 2 p.m., Saturday, at 8:30 p.m. and Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. Mr. Steinberg opens the concert with Mozart's Symphony no. 40 in G minor, follows it with Bartok's Violin concerto with Ruggiero Ricci violin soloist, and Strauss' Tod und Verklarung (Death and Transfiguration).

Steinberg, retired from his post in Boston at the end of last season and is now music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony.

Under his leadership, the Boston Symphony has continued its steady progress as one of the foremost musical organizations in the world. He led concerts not only in Boston, in New York and in many other American cities, but also in the music centers of England, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain and France.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
MAR 12 1973
New England Newsclip

Ruggiero Ricci is soloist

Bartok Concerto a BSO feature

By Louis Snyder

Bartok's Second Violin Concerto, with Ruggiero Ricci as soloist, and Richard Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration," both out of the Boston Symphony's repertory for all of 10 years, with Mozart's G minor Symphony (No. 40, K.550), heard only last December, made up William Steinberg's weekend program at Symphony Hall. For Mr. Ricci, it was a return after 13 seasons.

Needless to say, attention was centered on the Bartok Concerto, which is a neglected masterpiece. Neglected, that is, when one considers the limited number of standard vehicles brought out on the rare occasions when any solo violinist appears with orchestra these days.

From the introductory strumming rhythms of harp (effectively played throughout by Ann Hobson) and strings, followed by the first appearance of the solo violin, there is no doubt that this is a work of striking originality and magnitude. It is violinistic without being virtuosic, tough and strong without being ultra-dissonant and abrasive. What one might have been led to expect from the ferocity of the Bartok solo rhapsodies, for instance, isn't the backbone of this work. Instead there is an intricate intertwining of the single player's musical line and parallel rich sonorities in all choirs, with frequent tempo switches in midstream, not just for effect but to lead off in other harmonic directions, often with the suavest of melodic inspirations.

* * *

The second, Adagio, movement, is in variation form, and a dream of aural invention. It has the aroma and texture of some exotic Magyar dish, smooth and yet curiously compelling. To conclude, in the Allegro molto, there is more of the Bartok with which one is familiar, tremendously visceral, dark, and frantically dance-like. One churns with the concerto from start to finish.

Mr. Ricci, who is a violinist first and a showman second, played this whopper of a work with style and surprising restraint, considering the platform histrionics it offers the susceptible. If this and the fact that he had the score on a music stand in front of him deceived some listeners, it is perhaps because they were more concerned with what they saw than what they heard. For Mr. Ricci's tone, technique, and expressiveness — particularly after the opening measures on Friday afternoon — ideally complemented the shifting, shimmering, and erupting sound that surrounded him. The difficult first movement cadenza, which certainly is anything but a soaring show-stopper, was navigated with artistic drive and skill, and in the second movement's lyric passages, Mr. Ricci's relaxed bow and sensitive approach spelled understanding and involvement.

* * *

Mr. Steinberg and the orchestra were with Bartok and Mr. Ricci all the way, and happily the audience responded with the degree of warmth this work and its performance deserved.

The Mozart G-minor symphony which opened the program is always a source of pleasure and wonder under any circumstances, even though this time it seemed to exude less vitality than it can command. The Strauss tone poem, in an obviously well rehearsed Boston Symphony performance, cannot be denied its fundamental appeal to the ear if one can separate it from the maudlin "program" with which it was either saddled, or whence it sprung. Perhaps not for everyone but for some, "Tod und Verklaerung" ranks high among several works that show Strauss ruled more by textual than musical inspiration.

The weekend program, conducted by Mr. Steinberg, with Mr. Ricci again as soloist, will be repeated tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514
MAR 7 1973
New England Newsclip

Steinberg to conduct

BOSTON — Former Music Director William Steinberg conducts the Orchestra on Friday March 9, at 2:00 p.m., Saturday March 10, at 8:30 p.m. , and Tuesday March 13, at 8:30 p.m. Steinberg opens the concert with Mozart's Symphony no. 40 in G minor, follows it with Bartok's Violin concerto with Ruggiero Ricci violin soloist, and Strauss' Tod und Verklarung (Death and Transfiguration).

William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, retired from his post in Boston at the end of last season and is now music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony. Under his leadership, the Boston Symphony has continued its steady progress as one of the foremost musical organizations in the world. He led concerts not only in Boston, in New York and in many other American cities, but also in the music centers of England, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain and France. Steinberg's is a celebrated name in music all over the world and he has the distinction of being a founder of the Israel Philharmonic.

A native of California, Ruggiero Ricci has performed in recital and with orchestras in all parts of the world. He made his bebut in New York City at the age of nine. During his service with the US Army Air Force about twelve years later he often had to entertain in camps and hospitals where there was neither piano nor accompanist. He began to explore the solo repertoire very thoroughly, and has become particularly known for his interpretations of works such as the Partitas of Bach, the Caprices of Paganini, and unaccompanied pieces by Hindemith and Bartok. Apart from his annual tours of the United States and Europe, Ruggiero Ricci has performed in many parts of the USSR, Australia, Africa and South America. He appeared most recently with the Boston Symphony in 1960.

NEWS
MALDEN, MASS.
D. 12,420
MAR 9 1973
New England Newsclip

Steinberg Back At the BSO

BOSTON — Former Music Director William Steinberg conducts the Boston Symphony orchestra on Friday at 2 p.m., Saturday at 8:30 p.m. and Tuesday, March 13 at 8:30 p.m.

Mr. Steinberg opens the concert with Mozart's Symphony no 40 in G minor, follows it with Bartok's Violin concerto with Ruggiero Ricci violin soloist, and Strauss" Tod und Verklarung (Death and Transfiguration).

Steinberg, former music director of the orchestra, retired from his post in Boston at the end of last season and is now music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654
MAR 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Ricci's Violin Solo Warm

By ELLEN PFEIFER
(Music Critic)

The Bartok Violin Concerto No. 2, with Ruggiero Ricci as soloist, was the featured work on the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

This is the work in which Bartok had his little joke on Zoltan Szekely, leader of the Hungarian String Quarter and the performer who commissioned the work. It seems Szekely wanted a conventional work cast in the standard three-movement concerto form. Bartok, more experimental, suggested a continuous variation form — a procedure that he had been exploring. Szekely's will prevailed, or os he thought until Bartok pointed out that the three-movement completed concerto was indeed a large set of variation.

Actually, a variation set within a variation set, the work is also a prodigious virtuoso piece, long and immensely difficult. It is extremely vivacious, energetic and with some extraordinarily passionate lyricism.

The performance had a great deal going for it with Ricci as soloist. He can cut through the technical demands with assurance, providing the necessary warmth and esprit. The one reservation about his playing that I have is the tendency to flatness and an occasional bit of wobbly tone which was most obvious in the exposed opening of the second movement.

Unfortunately, the orchestra under

• Concert Review

William Steinberg proved a rather bland, washed-out partner for Ricci. The rhythms lacked bite; forte sections were just never big enough, and the occasional raucous moments (as in the development of the 1st movement) not really brash enough.

There was more brash than anyone could have wanted, however, in the Strauss "Tod und Verklaerung" which closed the concert. That is, in the roughness of the orchestral playing, and the strings in particular.

The Mozart Symphony No. 40, which opened the concert must have seemed rather long to the people programming the concert, especially coming before the half-hour Concerto. Perhaps it was because of that that after the first movement, repeats were not observed (even in the last movement which is a sonata form just as the first). Like the Concerto, it too seemed a little puny, a little bland.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
MAR 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Ruggiero Ricci performs with BSO

By Craig Smith
Globe Correspondent

The Boston Symphony Orchestra really ought to reconsider its policy of engaging soloist's for its subscription concerts.

Ruggiero Ricci's performance of Bartok's 2nd Violin Concerto yesterday afternoon was below the minimum level of taste and intelligence demanded by the work.

I am reasonably sure that just about any member of the BSO violin section would have played the work with more care and less crassness, and Mr. Silverstein's performances with the orchestra about ten years ago were simply in a different league from this.

The orchestra played with its familiar virtues, fine-toned refined string playing, and some of its familiar faults, some raunchy, out-of-tune wind playing.

The conductor, William Steinberg, does not seem at home in this music: the carefully worked out tempo relationships in the piece were not correct and the sense of rubato, a crucial matter in this music, seemed unnatural.

The concert opened with Mozart's 40th Symphony. Steinberg does not give the highly profiled, opinionated kind of performance in this music that Davis or Karajan projects, but absolute understanding of the tradition and style are great virtues, especially in this era of slapdash conductors.

The transition into the recapitulation of the first movement was as fine as I have ever heard it, and the minuet had a solidity and clarity that are unusual in any performance of this piece.

Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" made up the second half of the concert. It is a remarkably threadbare piece, formless and vulgarly orchestrated.

It is surprising that the BSO has not played it in over ten years for it is one of those repertory pieces that seems omnipresent.

The performance was afflicted by balance problems. The brass far overbalanced the strings in the big exchanges in the center of the piece. The many wind solos were for the most part poorly played.

It was no loss really, for the piece belongs in the pops concerts, not in the subscription series.

EAGLE TRIBUNE
LAWRENCE, MASS.
D. 48,000
MAR 6 1973
New England Newsclip

Symphony notes

BOSTON — Former music director William Steinberg conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday at 2 p.m., Saturday, at 8:30 p.m. and Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. Mr. Steinberg opens the concert with Mozart's Symphony no. 40 in G minor, follows it with Bartok's Violin concerto with Ruggiero Ricci violin soloist, and Strauss' Tod und Verklarung (Death and Transfiguration).

Steinberg, retired from his post in Boston at the end of last season and is now music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony.

Under his leadership, the Boston Symphony has continued its steady progress as one of the foremost musical organizations in the world. He led concerts not only in Boston, in New York and in many other American cities, but also in the music centers of England, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain and France.

76-
The Seattle Daily Times
D. 247,540 SUN. 306,612

MAR 1 1 1973

Wayne Johnson

Smedvig toots Seattle's horn

Arts and Entertainment Editor

Mr. and Mrs. Egil Smedvig are not the only ones who are proud of their son Rolf.

The Seattle Symphony is proud. The Seattle Youth Symphony is proud. And a lot of young Seattle musicians who have performed with Rolf are proud.

The reason for all the pride? Rolf Smedvig has just been signed on as the assistant principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony. That's a nearly incredible achievement for a 20-year-old musician; it's roughly equivalent to a high-school football star being signed on as backup quarterback to Joe Namath.

Rolf Smedvig

Rolf was one of 157 applicants for the job; one of 87 accepted for auditions; one of the four semifinalists; and of course, the winner. Among his competitors were the assistant principal trumpet from the Cleveland Orchestra and the principal trumpet from the National Symphony.

ROLF PERFORMED a number of times as a soloist with the Seattle Symphony, the first time in 1966 when he was only 14. His mother is a member of the Symphony's second violin section, and his father is the instrumental music director at Thomson Junior High School.

Rolf played principal trumpet in the Seattle Youth Symphony for two years, and he is only one of an astonishing number of former Youth Symphony members who have gone on to find attractive niches in the music profession.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 121,654

MAR 16 1973

New England Newsclip

BU Junior Named By Hub Symphony

Rolf Smedvig, a 20-year-old junior at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, has been named assistant principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, effective Sept. 1973.

Smedvig, a native of Seattle, made his solo debut with the Seattle Symphony when he was 13. Smedvig has been playing trumpet since he was five. His father, a professional musician and music publisher "used to bring home instruments for me to try out," Smedvig says.

BSO's Joseph Silverstein shows paces in Los Angeles

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377

MAR 6 1973

New England Newsclip

GLOBE SPECIAL

LOS ANGELES — Last weekend was to have been Hans Werner Henze's with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, but in the wake of the composer-conductor's second cancellation here in two years came a substituting debutante with the orchestra — a violinist-conductor whose engagement inspired a good deal of musico-political speculation.

To set the scene: Los Angeles' concertmaster, Davis Frisina, will step down from his post at the end of the summer. The relationship between the L.A. Philharmonic's associate conductor, Gerhard Samuel, and the orchestra has been less than rosy, and Samuel's contract expires with the current season.

It didn't take much to put the pieces together and realize that Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Henze's replacement, might have been at the Pavilion of the Music Center for an audition.

The program as originally announced listed Mozart's Symphony No. 28, the Mozart Clarinet Concerto and Henze's own Sixth Symphony. Silverstein kept only the concerto part of the initial plan; he provided another Sixth Symphony, that of Prokofiev, and started each of his three concerts (March 1, 2 and 4, with an additional concerto in which he himself was the soloist.

As last Thursday's program opened with Haydn's Concerto No. 1 in C, Silverstein immediately proved himself sensitive to the demands of the Classical style. Playing along in the tuttis but otherwise offering only minimal guidance to the small orchestra (with harpsichord), the violinist provided attractive tonal variation, sensitive dynamics — especially in the smooth cantilena of the Adagio and generally fluent filagree. If a little less sweetness would have been welcome in the more extroverted passages, the congruity of Silverstein's performance proved nonetheless notable.

Michele Zukovsky, the Philharmonic's young co-principal clarinetist, was soloist in the Mozart concerto. Her delivery was marked by control, by smooth, well-shaped phrases, and by grace. But the delicate tone of Miss Zukovsky's clarinet seemed colorless as the movements progressed — and Silverstein did little to relieve the incipient dullness.

On the podium, the evening's guest coped primitively. Perhaps Silverstein still lacks the experience in this particular ruling role that would allow him to be comfortable with an ensemble unfamiliar to him. He seemed content simply to beat time (often with both hands); he buried his head in the scores; he threw cues with histrionic urgency all out of proportion to the musical effect.

The musical results were of a calibre somewhat higher than mere appearance might have suggested. In the Mozart, Silverstein kept the orchestra graciously in the background, and, after an Adagio that died a slow death, he gave the final Allegro appealing sway.

The conductor's metronomic style took its greatest toll in the Prokofiev Symphony. Neither interpretational depth nor compelling passion entered the opening Allegro; the Largo progressed Lackadaisically, and the Vivace, though bouncier and tauter, capped the opus and the evening incohesively.

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL
MILWAUKEE, WISC.
D. 346,067 SUN. 530,805

MAR 1 1 1973

Bo Has Bow, Will Travel—to Boston

By WALTER MONFRIED of The Journal Staff

AROUND 1950 a young Milwaukee cellist, Richard Kapuscinski, was a member of the Cleveland and Philadelphia Orchestras before joining the Boston Symphony. A few years later he took the position he now holds, on the Oberlin College faculty.

In 1954 a young Milwaukee violinist, John Fiasca, was accepted by the Boston Symphony. He remained a member until his untimely death, six years later, when the orchestra was touring Japan.

Now we are sending a third string player of notable ability to Boston. He is Bo Youp Hwang, 25, a native of Korea and assistant concertmaster of the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra. The Boston Symphony, of course, is one of the world's best and its pay scale is one of the best, too. Minimum per year is about $20,000.

"How did you land such a desirable job?" the friendly, soft spoken Hwang was asked here last week.

"Last fall an ad ran for several issues in our union paper, the International Musician," he answered. "It said there was one opening in the Boston string section, apply to William Moyer. I wrote Mr. Moyer, who invited me to come to Boston at my own expense, a few weeks later. He also told me to be prepared to play difficult passages from Richard Strauss, Bartok, Brahms and a few other composers.

"There were about 50 applicants for this one job, and the auditions were held in three sections. I was in a group of 20.

"The preliminary tests were held on the stage of Symphony Hall, the home of the Boston Orchestra. The judges were a committee of orchestra members. Between the committee and the applicants was a screen — they couldn't see us, we couldn't see them. We applicants were only numbers to the judges. I was No. 13 — not so unlucky, eh?

"We all played our selections and then waited around. Pretty soon Moyer told me to go back to Milwaukee and, a week later, to play in the finals at Philharmonic Hall in New York, where the Boston Orchestra was appearing. This time my expenses were paid.

"Of the original 50 applicants 10 men and two women were admitted to the finals. Some of them were gray haired veterans.

"For this test there were about 15 judges, headed by Seiji Ozawa, the newly named principal conductor of the Boston Symphony. They sat in scattered seats in the auditorium.

"I was the last to appear. With piano accompaniment, I was assigned to play excerpts from Sibelius and Mozart concertos for 20 minutes. Then came sight reading — Prokofiev, Haydn, Mozart — works I wasn't familiar with.

"I wasn't at all confident. I hadn't had much time to arm up.

"After we all finished, we were told to wait in the hall. We packed up and chatted. None of us expected to win, but we agreed it was a good experience.

"A half hour later Mr. Moyer came out to us. He thanked us for coming to Boston and added: 'Each of you played very well and each of you is good enough to be a member of our orchestra. Unfortunately, there is only one opening and you, Mr. Hwang, are the winner.'

The violinist, with his wife and year old son, will move to Boston in late May, after his Milwaukee season ends. He will play for a few weeks with the Boston Pops Orchestra, which is essentially the Boston Symphony without the first chair occupants. Then the Boston Symphony will be at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood for eight weeks.

Mrs. Hwang, the former Hai-Ok Chang, who also is Korean, will soon receive her master's degree in chemistry at Marquette University.

As a boy in Seoul, Hwang showed such musical aptitude that a Methodist church music director gave him special attention. When he was 19 he won a national competition for study abroad.

Bo Youp Hwang
—Journal Photo

About that time the Fine Arts Quartet of the University of Wisconsin—Milwaukee visited Korea on its Far East tour. Hwang and three other young Koreans auditioned for the quartet members. Hwang's respect for the quartet induced him to enroll at UWM and he studied violin with Abram Loft, a member of the quartet.

His admiration for Loft is immense — "the best teacher I ever had. I still consult him when I have a tough problem."

Four years ago Hwang auditioned for Kenneth Schermerhorn, conductor of the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra, who hired him at once.

Occasion to Trumpet; Seattleite in Bigtime

A 20-year-old Seattle man has been chosen, over 156 other applicants, as the first new appointment since 1952 in the trumpet section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Rolf Smedvig, an alumnus of Ingraham High School and currently a junior at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, replaces retiring Roger Voisin as assistant principal trumpet.

The appointment becomes effective in September, but Smedvig already is playing supplementary engagements with the orchestra.

He made his solo debut with the Seattle Symphony at the age of 14, when he performed in school concerts, and has been featured on the Seattle "Stars of The Future" series.

He participated in the Tanglewood Young Artists Program in 1969 and 1970, and in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in 1971 where Leonard Bernstein invited him to participate in performances of his "Mass," including the premiere at the opening of the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C.

ROLF SMEDVIG
With Boston orchestra

Smedvig's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Egil Smedvig of Broadview. His mother is a member of the Seattle Symphony second violin section and his father is instrument director at Thomson Junior High School.

Seattle
Post-Intelligencer
D. 206,733 SUN. 259,257

MAR 8 1973

around the world...

With ELEANOR MONAHAN

* * *

BAY STATE BUSINESS WORLD
NORWOOD, MASS.
W. 25,000 M.

MAR 7 1973

WCRB's annual benefit program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra begins at 7:10 PM on March 8, and will continue through 1:00 AM, March 12. During this time, listeners may request actual taped performances by the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops by making a donation to the orchestra at the rate of $1.00 per minute of music requested, with a minimum donation of $15.00; certain rare and historic performances carry specific prices.

In addition, special premiums, many involving members of the orchestra, are available to donors, the specific premium being dependent upon the size of the donation.

The Marathon Booklet lists musical selections and premiums, and is available at WCRB and Symphony Hall, as well as at numerous book and record outlets in the Boston area.

Requests will be accepted at 891-1234 until 1:00 A.M. Monday, March 12. Broadcast times of specific musical selections will be made daily at 9:00 A.M. and 8:00 P.M.

AMBLER, PA.
GAZETTE
W. 9,250

MAR 9 1972

Bostonian Adds Spice To Orchestra's Drive

The first fund-raising ball that Mrs. Harris Fahenstock chaired for the benefit of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra netted $2.45.

Years later and vastly more experienced at raising the hundreds of thousands of dollars needed to keep an orchestra on its feet, Mrs. Fahnestock traveled to Philadelphia last Thursday to help the women's committees of this city's reknowned orchestra kick off their 1972 membership campaign.

Included at the luncheon were two tables of active committee members from Chestnut Hill and three tables of enthusiastic supporters from the Old York Rd. area. Invitations were issued by Mrs. T. Wister Brown, chairman of the fund drive; and Mrs. James S. Hatfield, Chestnut Hill, chairman of the women's committees.

Friendly Rivalry

Currently a member of the board of trustees and the board of overseers of the Boston Symphony, Mrs. Fahnestock needled her audience of music lovers by noting the "tremendous friendly rivalry" that exists between our orchestra and hers.

"Tell Philadelphia that we train them in Boston, they get experience here and Philadelphia steals them," suggested the conductor of Boston's youth concerts when Mrs. Fahnestock asked her fellow musicians what she should say in her speech. Others had equally biting, though good-humored, comments.

"I'll be fair, though," she added, "seven of our principles are graduates of your Curtis Institute."

Candid comments on her feelins about each musician's effect on the orchestra followed, to the delight of the group who had gathered at the Academy of Music's ballroom for the annual event. Pointing out the similarities between all orchestras, Mrs. Fahnestock unflinchingly called the cellists "prima donas, conceited pains-in-the-neck." The basses she termed" cantankerous"; the oboes, "sour"; the bassoons, "sweet"; the trumpets, "dashing"; the first violinists, "the aristocrats"; and the second violinists, "who are just as good as the first, "unsung and frustrated."

Lack Money

But the greatest similarity among all orchestras, Mrs. Fahnestock said earnestly, is the need for more funds. She related that of the $30 million given to all the arts in 1970-71, only 16 percent, "a mere drop in the bucket", went to the symphony orchestras.

"The Big Five (Philadelphia, Boston, New York, Chicago and Cleveland) has a combined deficit of $22 million a year, she continued. Sixty-three percent is raised through ticket sales, but there remains an eight million dollar shortage.

Mrs. Fahnestock's Suggestions for raising funds include those which Boston has found successful: stimulating competition by listing categories of donations on the orchestra's programs; holding marathons on radio and television; and arranging a grand European tour with the orchestra, charging $1000 above the tour's actual cost.

Need New Outlook

Equally as important as raising money, asserted the speaker, who was recently named by Life Magazine as one of the 19 outstanding women in the country is the need for "a completely new outlook" when it comes to music.

Boston has recently initiated a new series of "very unconventional" concerts where members of the orchestra perform in their shirt-sleeves and play very unfamiliar music to an audience which has paid considerably less than the usual orchestra ticket of admission.

"It's a hard idea to sell; Boston and Philadelphia like the status quo", concluded Mrs. Fahnestock, "but it's marvelous....we must change...we must know our modern world."

A fiddler's turn to play the chef's role

MEDLEY / By BILL FRIPP

Guess who's coming to prepare the Phillips Ketchums' gourmet dinner?

Boston Symphony Orchestra violinist Amnon Levy, their friend and neighbor in Brookline.

The Ketchums won Levy's services over the annual station WCRB Musical Marathon fund raiser for the Symphony, which ended Sunday night after five days of round-the-clock programming. Levy's $100 gourmet dinner premium was one of many offbeat offerings of Symphony musicians, ranging from a $1000 concert at home to a $25 evening of ice skating with a bass player. Levy says he'll prepare a "sensuous" Hindu-style chicken dinner with Chinese shrimp, topped off by a light ice cream and creme de cacao desert. "Then Mrs. Ketchum and I will play a sonata. She's a very accomplished concert pianist. I'm very glad the Ketchums won my services."

Bassoonist Sherman Walt won Symphony board member Mrs. Barbara Thompson for his $50 spin on his BMW cycle. Last year, said Walt, he took Hesse Sargent, the governor's sister-in-law, on such a ride in the Berkshires. "I don't know where we'll end up. I drive the machine all over New England."

Four guest donors will join bass player John Salkowski on his $100 cruise of Boston Harbor on his lobster boat, capping the day with a lobster dinner at his Squantum home. "Last year," said Salkowski, "we went to George's and Calf islands and watched the bat gulls. It was nice, relaxed fun."

Symphony, still counting donations, raised close to $76,000 in this WCRB Marathon, or $16,000 more than last year. WCRB annually competes with Cleveland FM station WCLV, which sponsors its own marathon for the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, with the biggest money raiser paid off in champagne. WCLV buys the champagne this year.

BOSTON SYMPHONY MUSICIANS who offered their off-beat services to raise money for the BSO in the marathon dress for their roles. From left: Amnon Levy, gourmet cook, Sherman Walt, sports car driver, and John Salkowski, lobster fisher-

SUN
LOWELL, MASS.
D. 49,250

MAR 26 1973

New England Newspapers

A Place in... THE SUN

By FRANCES BERG

Speaking of the arts, have you noticed, among museums, for instance, and other organiaztions involved with items esthetic, the utter creative growing and growing in the realm of fund raising? For centuries, there's been the idea that artists needed patronage to survive — or these days, subsidies. Sort of on the idea that art just wasn't a "marketable" item, that people just didn't have sense enough to support anything so nebulous. But Boston's Museum of Fine Arts has memberships, young and old, by the scads, drawn by its unending array of fascinating programs. Boston's Museum of Science "packs 'em in" regularly at its fabulous planetarium shows. And, lately, we're gratified to hear the Boston Symphony is also proving no slouch at keeping its wives and kiddies in meat and potatoes. A recent drive aimed at $65,000 — but ended up with $75,915! . . .

Being able to listen to commercially unavailable taped BSO performances was only one gimmick of this one. Pledgers had a choice of over a hundred "special premiums," ranging from window decals to conductors' kits to recitals by BSO concertmaster Joseph Silverstein to benefit one's favorite charity.

IN EXCHANGE for raising over $1000 from their dormitory, students at MIT (Massachusetts Institute of Technology), for instance, requested a concert in their dorm this spring by the Boston Symphony's Chamber Players Woodwind Quartet, one member of whom, Charles Kovaloski, principal French horn with the BSO, has a Ph.D in nuclear physics and has done both research and teaching at MIT.

The drive also produced something of a popularity contest . . . Former BSO music director Erich Leinsdorf proved the most popular conductor; Beethoven's "Choral Fantasy," the most popular bit of music. And Arthur Fiedler and his Boston Pops were right in there, too, their most popular number proving to be Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" with soloist Peter Nero . . .

THE PAPER
78 · FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
W. 75,000
MAR 14 1973
New England Newsclip

Collage

Boston Symphony

MODERN CHAMBER ENSEMBLE featuring the work of 20th century composers is performed by Collage, a contemporary music group. Participating musicians are chiefly members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and in their offerings, the group incorporates the theatrical, to come up with a many-faceted performance of sight and sound.

CAPE COD STANDARD TIMES
HYANNIS, MASS.
D. 25,776
MAR 14 1973
New England Newsclip

Boston symphony aide to address Cape group

HYANNIS — Andrew Raeburn, Program Editor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will address the Board of Trustees of the Cape Cod Symphony Orchestra Association at a dinner meeting on Tuesday in the Heritage House.

Raeburn originally came to Boston to be assistant to Erich Leinsdorf, then Music Director of the Boston Symphony. A native of London, England, he was awarded his master's degree from King's College, Cambridge, and later became Music Dirctor of Argo Records.

In addition to his work as Program Editor, Raeburn has been active in the Boston Symphony's radio, television and recording activities.

RAEBURN

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 556,377
MAR 18 1973
New England Newsclip

Symphony Chamber Players in Brahms Piano Quartet

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players offered a really extraordinary performance of Brahms' A major Piano Quartet Sunday afternoon in Sanders Theater. The piece is one of Brahms' best, and far too little known. It was therefore doubly rewarding to hear the BSO String Trio (Silverstein, Fine and Eskin) with Gilbert Kalish play it with such richness and real sensitivity to the unique translucence of the work.

Earlier in the program the trio performed a delightful Haydn trio with elegance and a great feeling for the quirky, unusual phrase structures that permeate the piece. A very attractive brass trio by Daniel Pinkham was well played by Armando Ghitalla, trumpet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and William Gibson, trombone, although the trombone seemed lacking in presence in the ensemble. This could have been a problem with the hall, however.

The wind quintet performed Hindemith's "Kleine Kammermusik." It is one of the highpoints of the admittedly skimpy wind quintet literature and one hears it often, especially by student groups. Seldom does it sound quite so charming and really substantial as it did Sunday. There was a marvelous rhythmic bite and verve to the performance. Especially outstanding was Kavaloski's clean and colorful horn playing.

The program also included a rather too cute piece for flute and percussion by Leo Kraft entitled "Line Drawings." It was well played by Doriot Anthony Dwyer and Everett Firth.

—CRAIG SMITH

Minot Beale 'On Tour' With Boston Symphony

By DOROTHY KAVKA

A true harmony of view with theme symbolic of his skillful professionalism in music was the achievement of Minot A. Beale in his presentation of travel pictures at the Brockton Public Library Tuesday evening. Almost 300 slides which had been synchronized to pre-taped comment by him brought his audience vivid and faithful views of the "Good Will Ambassador Tour" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Orient, Australia and New Zealand a few years ago.

That this integration of voice with slides required many hours of effort to produce the smooth effect enjoyed was evident and the now retired violinist of the Symphony gave much credit to his son, Everett, who assisted him and who is a tympanist with the Symphony at present.

The orchestra with its conductor Charles Munch, flew from Seattle to Tokyo by way of Formosa, wearing typical air flight "happy coats" provided by the Japan Airlines. They visited Taiwan, another "emerald isle" inhabited by some 10 million people and owned until the mid 1940's by Japan. Still strongly Chinese-oriented in spirit, there are many Buddhist temples here with Confucius worship common despite Communistic "no-church" teaching. Taipei was described as the nerve center of the small Nationalist Chinese nation where tea and rice thrive in the fertile volcanic soil of terraced slopes and no bit of land is wasted which can be cultivated. The residence of Chiang Kai shek was shown, in addition to views of crude water wheels, aborigines in native dances, fisheries, sugar plantations, a funeral scene, lovely Sun-Moon Lake, hazardous pedicar rides in buggy-topped peddled carts, all on the "island beautiful." Bars which echoed to a weird combo of western music incorporating Oriental overtones were among the audible innovations Boston's Symphony experienced.

Japan, the "Source of the Sun," comprised of four islands, mostly mountainous and containing some 92 million people was a "revelation in cleanliness, courtesy, hospitality, in addition to its devoted family life, and love of flowers." The group visited Shinto temples where animal spirits were formerly worshiped, but whose religion has been replaced by Buddhism; toured the Diet, or government center, where the Emperor is no longer worshiped, but serves as representational head and social intermediary; and open-market-shopped in the neon-lighted streets of modern Tokyo.

Mt. Fuji, most famous and sacred mountain, now an extinct volcano, looms above five beautiful lakes. Views of interior of homes showed tables and beds at floor level with rice pillows and decorative wall hangings, while the popular theaters seating some 4,000 movie fans, as well as the Kabuki theater of mime and dance introduced the orchestra to true Oriental forms of entertainment. Ancient instruments accompanied the centennial performance of the Gagakui in which gongs, drums, flutes, oboes combined for a spectacular show, the performers wearing fantastically colorful robes.

The palace grounds of the Emperor, protected by a moat in olden times, today are open to visitors. The group visited Osaka, the "Venice of Japan," because of its many canals, and crossed the Inland Sea to visit Hiroshima, where they saw the tragic cenotaph erected to some 59,000 people, and the memorial to all the lost children in World War II's bombing.

Going north to Sapporo, the center of the dairy producing area, they saw barns and silos, parks filled with flowering tulips, the NHK Broadcasting Co. headquarters, and at Kioto, the cultural city of 600 temples dating from the 14th century, witnessed a group of talented Geisha dancers in the cherry blossom tradition.

Leaving Japan for the Philippines, they visited Luzon and Mindanao, names familiar during World War II, and discovered a school system much like our own in full swing and a university 25 years older than Harvard. Converted jeeps provide bus travel here in the shadow of President Garcia's residence and the group were royally welcomed by the Garcia family.

At Corregidor, 30 miles out of Manila Harbor, they saw the Tal Volcano and lakes surrounding it, groves of cocoanuts and bananas, papayas and pineapples, with water buffalos used as beasts of burden.

Calling the Philippines the "Pearl of the Orient," Mr. Beale showed the impressive cemetery at Ft. McKinley, the largest of all war memorial cemeteries, and the Manila Hotel where MacArthur made his headquarters after the defeat of the Japanese.

Flying on to Brisbane, Australia, a bustling city once a penal colony established by the British, his views included parks, rare flowers, black swans, and in Sydney, the largest city, the group attended a "very good" band concert. At Melbourne, an industrial city, the site of the 1954 Olympics, they saw a replica of Capt. Cook's home (given credit for discovery of Australia).

New Zealand, a slowly developing country now hastened "on its way" by air travel, they found a difficult landing because of the mountainous terrain.

The Fiji Islands were a revelation due to the stupendous advance of these only-recently-primitive people, into the 20th century. Many Hindus in business, lively soccer teams, sugar plantations, gold mining, modernized Malayan blacks (40% of the population) psalm-singing in friendly groups about their tiny churches, and the beautiful beaches at sunset, against a background of scenic hills, forests and open grasslands were all captured in Mr. Beale's sensitive camera.

His lecture was preceded by an organ recital by Mrs. Lionel LaBelle and he was introduced by assistant librarian, Mrs. Louise Newsom. The final lecture will bring Mrs. Evelyn Goodman of Boston to the series with a tour of Europe this evening.

Moods of Stravinsky

A pianist and a film maker combine their talents to capture the themes and moods of Igor Stravinsky's "Petrouchka Suite" in the WNET Opera Theater presentation "Alexis Weissenberg: The Piano," to air Monday at 9 p.m. on WMHT.

The program will air for alternate viewing next Saturday, at 3 p.m.

In a black and white film by Swedish director Ake Falck, the internationally famous pianist Alexis Weissenberg is seen performing the three movements of the Stravinsky work. Following the film, Weissenberg and Jordan Whitelaw, producer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra broadcasts, discuss Falck's cinematic treatment of the music. The discussion is filmed in color.

"Music should never be illustrated; it distracts people from listening," comments Weissenberg. The pianist, who has performed in every major capital of Europe and in the United Staters, notes that Falck, who has worked with Ingmar Bergman, attempts only to convey on impression of Stravinsky's work by using black and white film, shadowy lighting and angular attitudes, and approach in keeping with the angular patterns Stravinsky capturedin "Alexis Weissenberg: the Piano" within the music.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 95,638
MAR 17 1973

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
W.
MAR 22 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO ON TV—Channel 2 presents Michael Tilson Thomas conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Stravinsky's Les Noces and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe, in quadraphonic sound, Monday, April 2, at 8 p.m.

QUODLIBET / By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Monday evening's Boston Symphony telecast — Channel 2 at 8 — will look different. Some of it, anyway. Stravinsky's "Les noces," Michael Tilson Thomas conducting, will be handled in the usual way, with a visual script designed by Jordan Whitelaw. But for Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" they have come up with something else — abstract visual imagery devised on a piece of hardward called the video-synthesizer by Ron Hays, coordinator of Channel 2's Music-Image Workshop.

From the press release: ". . . the screen ebbs into a cascade of shimmering, luminescent forms, something like the most elemental and perfect of sea shells, of one-celled life, Then a kind of stellar force evolves, a rack of webs break against a reef — in perfect grace — and the forms shift back again to perfect, organic elements."

They have rediscovered the Bach Toccata portion of Disney's "Fantasia." It is visual noodling, responsive to the music's ebb and flow, rather hung up on symmetries and looking like an underwater Rorschach, pretty, and running out of ideas even sooner than Ravel. This is intercut with "normal" shots of Thomas and the orchestra, with too much fussy split screen stuff, but with the hard reality of musicians at work always a pleasure to return to from the other soporific banalities. Speaking of soporific, Hays suggests that you look at this not by the dim light most people prefer for TV watching, but in darkness. Think of it as a contribution to alleviating the energy crisis.

No, I was not sold on it, not at all. An abstract electronic ballet to Ravel (or others) is possible, as Balancine and Robbins make ballets with people to music of Stravinsky and Bach. But those ballets are primarily visual statements addressed to people who want something to look at. Balanchine and Robbins do not come to a person whose main interest is in listening to the Symphony in Three Movements or the Goldberg Variations and say, "When you listen, this is what you want to look at." By offering Hays's designs in the context of a BSO telecast (and in the context of views of the performance itself), that is what Channel 2 is saying.

I think that is wrong. I am an unsympathetic audience for concerts on TV anyway. I want to decide whether to look at the orchestra and if so, which part of it, or at the score, at my shoes, at the audience, at nothing, and I don't want even the intelligent, musical, and tasteful Jordan Whitelaw to make those choices for me. And I particularly don't want an "interpretation" thrust at me.

By the way, at the press showing, the musicians were the ones most consistently inclined to dislike what they saw or be bored by it. But have a look if you have color TV — I assume, at least, that in black-and-white it makes no sense at all. You are paying for it anyway: the project is largely funded by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514
MAR 21 1973
New England Newsclip

Lorin Maazel to conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra

BOSTON — On Friday, March 23 at 2 p.m. and Saturday, March 24 at 8:30 p.m., Lorin Maazel, music director of the Cleveland Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Beethoven and Schumann. Maazel opens the concert with Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont" and follows it with his Piano concerto no. 4 in G with Vladimir Ashkenazy piano soloist. The concert will close with Schumann's Symphony no. 2 in C.

Lorin Maazel, music director of the Cleveland Orchestra, was born in France, of American parents. He was brought up and educated in the United States. Starting musical studies at the age of four, he conducted the Interlochen Orchestra and the Los Angeles Philharmonic when he was nine. Two years later he was invited to Toscanini to conduct the NBC Symphony, and in 1943, just after his thirteenth brithday, he made his debut with the Cleveland Orchestra. In 1951, at the invitation of Serge Koussevitsky, he spent the first of two summers as a conducting fellow of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. The same year he began conducting leading European orchestras.

In 1960, Lorin Maazel conducted at Bayreuth, the youngest conductor and first American ever to do so. Since that time he has conducted in Australia, North and South America, Japan, the USSR, and at the international festivals at Salzburg, Edinburgh and Lucerne, and at the Metropolitan Opera and LaScala, Milan. He was associate principal conductor of the New Philharmonia of London from 1970 to 1972, and from 1965 until 1971 he was artistic director of the West Berlin Opera. Since 1965 he has also been music director of the Berlin Radio Symphony. He has appeared extensively on European television, and has made many recordings on Philips, Deutsche Grammophon, Angel and London labels. Lorin Maazel appeared last with the Boston Symphony in 1960.

Vladimir Ashkenazy, who has appeared with the Boston Symphony

He has made recordings of the London label. Vladimir Ashkenazy is now a citizen of Iceland.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
MAR 24 1973
New England Newsclip

Lorin Maazel impressive conducting Boston Symphony

MICHAEL STEINBERG

At his Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon, Lorin Maazel dealt impressively with the music and with the orchestra. The music was Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture and the G major Piano Concerto with Vladimir Ashkenazy, then Schubert's Symphony No. 2 in C major.

Structural intelligence, fascination with detail, a sense of musical character, rhythmic energy, quite consistently certain coolness and reserve, some distrust of spontaneity — those traits were present in all of Maazel's interpretations. It does not sound like the proper recipe for Schumann, but it worked. A conductor who can control the form and keep the sound transparent has a lot to give to Schumann. The sharply defined rhythms gave an attractive, athletic buoyancy to the quick movements, and though Maazel looked rather dispassionately at the wonderful Adagio, he spread it out with as compelling a sense of harmony and got the orchestra to phrase it so beautifully that he produced a statement of it that was very lovely in a different, highly refined way (I am grateful as well that Maazel did not fake the warmth he did not feel).

"Egmont" was clear, conrtolled, calm, powerful. The slow introduction was particularly eloquent, most so in its grand silences: it was as though the event was the attack of the silence rather than the end of the preceding chord, and the silences themselves thus became expressive and exciting events instead of mere spaces between events.

Maazel also built an extraordinary context — witty, subtly suspenseful, almost startling in what it revealed by way of "new" orchestral detail — for Ashkenzay's playing of the Concerto. It was a fine ensemble performance altogether, both partners being superb listeners. Yet, for all their sympathy and ease with each other, Maazel and Ashkenzay seemed to be after very different things with respect to Beethoven. Ashkenzay gave a reading that was totally without drama. If you can accept that as a given — and I admit to finding it hard — you get from him a marvelously played performance, transparent and unfailingly elegant in sound, and phrased with exquisite taste. He created an appealing sonorous object, but I thought he never got near the center of what Beethoven is about.

Here, too, the Boston Symphony played beautifully. Maazel's conducting is specific, active, and a shade idiosyncratic with its prevalence of forward movements (as opposed to up, down, and across). It works, and at the end of the concert the applause on stage was as warm as that from the auditorium.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 321,654
MAR 24 1973
New England Newsclip

A 'Controlled' Performance

Maazel Conducts Boston Symphony

By DAVID NOBLE

When Lorin Maazel conducts, he seeks not so much to interpret as to sculpt the music he is dealing with.

Immaculate shapes were there in plenty when he performed Beethoven with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. Most phrases had just such a profile and heft as he went through the "Egmont" overture and the Fourth Piano Concerto.

• Concert Review

It was not all a matter of control from headquarters: The cello statement of the first theme proper in the overture rolled out with a quirky rhythm that came from the players' bow motions more than from Maazel's right arm.

But the cello statement in the coda of the same work was a product of his close control, modulated with a keen ear for the striking effect.

Vladimir Ashkenazi, the soloist in the concerto, was a close soul mate to Maazel in their performance. He took a slow tack through the first two movements, almost taking a leaf out of Glenn Gould's book, then let things run in the finale. Only in his solo cadenzas did he let things get rapid and dicey, the last movement apart.

These things were in expert hands all around. For this listener, it mostly was so controlled and unspontaneous that it was like listening to a skillfull legal brief—remarkably well done, but you know too well what they're trying to say—but a majority of the patrons was enthusiastic.

Schumann's Second Symphony was given more of the orchestra's rehearsal time this week, but somehow came out not as well put together. The fact is, it isn't as well put together as Beethoven (almost nothing is).

But still, it was odd because Schumann's music, written a little later than Beethoven's, can respond to the self-conscious modern performing style more rewardingly.

A lyrical first movement that found the ensemble slightly out of sorts was followed by a minor marvel, a Scherzo that was not jittery despite a fast tempo — credit is due all around here. Maazel poured the oil of smooth phrasing over the slow movement — not necessary because things were quite solid underneath — and the elixir of forced phrasing into the finale.

The music played in the concert was all written before 1850. All of it is of "classical" stature, but it was a bit severe as a complete diet; perhaps the BSO planners think such an event is good for the general tone of the community.

The program will be repeated today at 8:30 p.m. in Symphony Hall.

Earl J. Dias review

BSO responds well to Maazel's baton

The fifth program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tuesday "B" Series in Symphony Hall was a sort of family affair. Serving as guest conductor for the concert was Lorin Maazel, music director of the Cleveland Orchestra, and appearing as soloist in Prokofiev's "Piano Concerto No. 3 in C, Opus 26" was Maazel's attractive wife, Israella Margalit, who is a native of Israel.

To open the program Maazel chose Samuel Barber's "Overture 'The School for Scandal' Opus 26," an early work (1932) by the distinguished American composer whose recent music has learned more and more toward dissonant counterpart and polyharmony. In this 40-year-old composition, however, Barber's romantic allegiance is still very much in evidence. The music is relatively simple and only mildly dissonant, and, rather than attempting to recount musically any of the scenes in Sheridan's famous comedy, it attempts, instead, merely to capture the light-hearted, comic spirit of the play. It succeeds, briefly and succinctly, in what is a lively and engaging orchestral selection well-played by the Boston Symphony musicians and crisply conducted by Maazel.

The Prokofiev concerto displays almost all facets of the composer's creative talent. Unfortunately, there was occasionally a lack of balance between pianist Margalit and the orchestra; in fact, her playing was often smothered. Whether this unhappy circumstance was caused by the fact that the texture of the piano writing and the orchestral accompaniment are not sufficiently contrasted in the score or by Ms. Margalit's own lack of genuine power is a moot question. Miss Margalit is an able keyboard performer, but neither she nor Maazel were able to convey well the percussionistic, rather abrasive quality of the work.

True, the performance had its rewarding moments — particularly in the lovely slow movement with its almost archaic dance theme — but, on the whole, something was lacking in the interpretation.

Concluding the program was Sibelius "Symphony No. 2 in D, Opus 43," which has long been one of the Finnish composer's most popular works. Composed early in his career (1902), the work is still the legitimate offspring of late 19th-Century romanticism even though, at times, there are passages that point toward the later Sibelius — the bleak grandeur, the frequently modern touches. Essentially, however, the symphony bears the recognizable fingerprints of Tschaikovsky and Brahms — with its dramatic statements, its emotional outbursts, its intensity and passion.

In this Sibelius selection conductor Maazel was at his best. As many music-lovers know, Maazel is something of a Sibelius specialist, having recorded all seven Sibelius symphonies for London Records. His reading of the "Symphony No. 2" has fire and excitement, skillful modulation, and, especially in that grand and glorious final movement, a remarkably-integrated tonal texture. It was well worth hearing, and the orchestra, for the most part, was unusually responsive to Maazel's direction, notably the brass and bass and cello sections.

79
The Evening Star
THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 203,900, SUN. 330,262
MAR 27 1973

Marvel of the Boston

By IRVING LOWENS
Star-News Staff Writer

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lorin Maazel, conductor. Soloist: Israela Margalit, piano. Presented in the Kennedy Center Concert Hall by the National Symphony Orchestra. Program: Overture, The School for Scandal, Op. 5, Barber; Piano Concerto No. 3 in C, Op. 26, Prokofieff; Symphony No. 2 in D, Op. 43, Siebelius.

Time was (and not too many years ago) when the Boston and Philadelphia Orchestra were the top contenders for the affections of musical Washingtonians. We were in love with both of them, and every time either showed up in Constitution Hall, the 3,800-seat auditorium was full of eager listeners.

Well, for the time being those days are gone. The battle is over, and the Philadelphians are hands-down winners. That's what the box-office tells us. They are coming down here with increasing frequency, and tickets to their concerts are getting to be family treasurers, passed down from generation to generation.

WITH THE Bostonians, exactly the opposite seems to be happening. They visit us less and less, and there's not the slightest trouble in finding seats. As the embarrassingly empty rows in the 2,800-seat Kennedy Center Concert Hall plainly demonstrated last night, the Boston name no longer has that certain magic in Washington. Indeed, the Houston Orchestra, completely sans glamor, drew a bigger house just a fortnight ago.

This is something of a pity, to my mind, because there is no artistic gap between the Boston and the Philadelphia that corresponds to the box-office gap, and as last night's concert just as plainly demonstrated, the Boston is still a marvel, still one of the eight wonders of the orchestral world. Its strings are just as magnificently lithe and accurate as ever, its winds as glorious, its brass as finely burnished.

ON THE PODIUM was guest conductor Lorin Maazel, newly appointed music director of the Cleveland Orchestra, whom we shall see in action with his own ensemble five times in May.

Within the last few years, Maazel has matured considerably as a conductor. He has always been a master technician — small wonder, since he begin his professional conducting career at the age of four—but until quite recently, his music-making was marred by a certain nervous edginess that communicated itself to his players. Now he appears relaxed and confident, on the threshold of greatness.

THE QUALITY of the evening was made manifest in the razor-sharp Barber overture which got things off to a fine start, and they got even better when Israela Margalit (Mrs. Maazel in private life) joined Maazel and the Bostonians in as beautiful a reading of the Prokofieff Third Piano Concerto as has been heard here in many a day. The contrasting moods of sentiment and irony were masterfully projected, and Miss Margalit demonstrated an unusually wide tonal palette in a piece that is usually performed monochromatically.

After the intermission came the Sibelius Second Symphony in a reading that called to mind Koussevitzky in its boldness and freedom. It was a plain triumph for Maazel.

COME BACK more often, BSO. There are still lots of people in town who love you.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
MAR 26 1973
New England Newsclip

Personal musical messages

Ashkenazy and Renata Tebaldi at Symphony Hall have adoring audiences standing, applauding

By Louis Snyder

The day of the virtuoso and the diva is still with us. Boston heard concerts by an internationally famous pianist, conductor, and soprano over the weekend, and after sitting transfixed by all of them, remained in Symphony Hall to stand and cheer.

The Boston Symphony's Friday afternoon and Saturday evening soloist was pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy who has appeared with the orchestra at Tanglewood and in solo and duo concerts in Boston, but not previously at Symphony Hall with the BSO. His playing of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G was of a quality to inspire legends.

For Mr. Ashkenazy is at the very top among the younger generation of pianists. His impeccable technique, patent intellect, and warmth of heart are put unqualifiedly at the service of the music at hand, with results of spectacular impact. In the Fourth Concerto, where the soloist plays the first notes alone, he established his position of shining prominence, shared equally later with the orchestra, especially in the seesaw dialogue of the Andante where his crystalline touch made keyboard notes sparkle in engaging contrast to the body of strings. The cadenzas were sheer poetry, and at the end of the work there was a brand of combined admiration and satisfaction expressed by sighs with shouts following.

* * *

Lorin Maazel, who is guest conducting the BSO for two weeks, is on the other hand an opposite musical personality, rather more stringent in his approach. Probably his kind of foursquare intellectualism operated to the advantage of the performance of the concerto, which has inherent aspects of a well meant contention of musical ideas. However, in the Beethoven "Egmont" Overture which opened the program, and Schumann's Symphony No. 2 in C which closed it, despite brilliant orchestral playing, the music seldon descended from a cerebral plane. There were flashing climaxes, pregnant pauses, and interesting departures in tempo — the beginning of "Egmont" was taken at a crawl, which is, after all, the conductor's privilege — but somehow, as was the case with the Second Symphony of Sibelius on Mr. Maazel's previous program of the week, the final message of personal conviction remained undelivered.

ENTERPRISE
BROCKTON, MASS.
D. 54,587
MAR 13 1973
New England Newsclip

Music: Maazel Explores

Worlds of Schumann and Beethoven Traversed by Boston Symphony

By DONAL HENAHAN

The symphonies of Schumann can be among the hardest nuts to crack in the orchestral repertory, only partly because of their occasionally murky and clumsy scoring. As in any significant artist's works, something singular hides in them that must be captured and communicated. Lorin Maazel and the Boston Symphony Orchestra penetrated Schumann's world on Wednesday night at Philharmonic Hall, by way of the Symphony No. 2 in C.

Although Mr. Maazel is an unpredictable conductor who sometimes does extremely mannered things, the Schumann was blessedly free of distortions. Although it had plenty of forward drive, Mr. Maazel did not whip the music into Berliozian frenzies; if a work can be grandly epic and yet warmly lyrical, simultaneously, it was the Schumann in this well-paced performance. The most impressive movement to these ears was the Adagio, which gave startling intimations of Mahler at times as the orchestra sustained it breathtakingly.

•

A different composer and a different world were being investigated earlier, when Vladimir Ashkenazy played Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 in G. The Soviet-born pianist, whom one has heard give big-scaled performances of late works such as the "Hammerklavier" Sonata, adopted a somewhat foreshortened view of the concerto. With Mr. Maazel lending aptly clear and restrained assistance, the pianist took the Beethoven at brisk tempos and without the heavy, dramatic accents that more Romantic interpreters favor.

Mr. Ashkenazy, however, played dazzlingly most of the time. Only fleetingly did his ideas get ahead of his fingers, as happened once in the cadenza (the first of Beethoven's two) to the first movement. But the great dialogue of the Andante, where the conflict and drama can hardly be stressed too much, seemed a little matter-of-fact. Mr. Ashkenazy's ideas did not always match Mr. Maazel's, either: The orchestra began the Rondo in a comfortable mood, but when the pianist entered he brusquely stepped up the pace.

Beethoven's Egmont" Overture, in a respendently sonorous and highly charged reading, opened Mr. Maazel's program.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,549
MAR 30 1973

In Concert

Maazels in Boston

By Peter M. Knapp

It was an evening with the Maazels at Tuesday's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Lorin Maazel, music director of the Cleveland Orchestra and the Berlin Radio Symphony, was on the podium completing his first guest series with the Boston orchestra since 1960. And he brought along his attractive wife, pianist Israela Margalit, who has been making her first appearances with the BSO.

Maazel, batonless and conducting from memory, opened with Samuel Barber's bustling early Overture, "The School for Scandal," and concluded with an eloquent reading of Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D. In between came Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C, with Miss Margalit as soloist.

From the opening chords of the Sibelius — firm, solid, confident — one had the sense that Maazel knew where he was going and would be firmly in command. And so it turned out, with all the inexorability of a train ride, and far more eventful.

Giving Them Room

It was a patient performance in the best sense, certainly taut enough, but paced so as to allow the musical events to have their say and tuck themselves into the fabric of the whole — spacious, yet on the move.

There were numerous examples of Maazel's control and experience — the spacing of the brass utterances of the second and fourth movements, for example, or the building of the climaxes of the finale, the foregoing peaks not making their successors anti-climax, or the majestic launching of the last movement, a superior realization of unbroken transition. Certainly a well-prepared, well-organized and passionately fulfilled conception of the Sibelius Second with excellent orchestral execution.

Clouded Prokofiev

The Prokofiev concerto sounded less comfortable. Maazel seemed more at home with the dark, serious statements of the romantic Finn than with the Russian composer's glittering caprices. The orchestra took on a peculiarly "cloudy" tone in the first movement, as if a French veneer had been superimposed on Prokofiev's clear surface, and there were several passages which sounded overly restrained or unidiomatic. By the last movement, though, the orchestra was playing in the proper spirit.

Miss Margalit has a lot of technique and did some pretty things with the quieter sections of the variations movement which showed a sensitivity for touch and nuance. As far as covering the notes, neither the scampering, toccata-like figurations nor the rapid octaves seemed to impose much strain, though the orchestra at times blanketed her playing.

But unfortunately she showed neither the power nor the bravura approach to really pull off Prokofiev. Her playing lacked the percussive, brittle touch the concerto demands, and there was too little of Prokofiev's icy sparkle and sardonic wit.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 846,132 S. 1,407,549
APR 2 1973
New England Newsclip

Maazel Leads the Boston, Wife Is Soloist

Israela Margalit's collaboration with Lorin Maazel and the Boston Symphony Saturday night at Carnegie Hall did not produce a really outstanding performance of the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 3. Miss Margalit, who is Mrs. Maazel, had a firm command of the notes, to be sure. But she did not offer enough of the driving, brilliant, hair-trigger panache this piece demands, nor did Mr. Maazel and the orchestra prove very sympathetic in matters of coordination or balance.

The conductor had, in fact, appeared to have invested the majority of rehearsal time on the final piece, the Sibelius Symphony No. 2, which benefited from unusual attention to detail. One might have complained that the ongoing line of the work was troubled by Mr. Maazel's concentration on shorter-range effects. But within its own terms, this was a distinguished reading. The concert began with Barber's virtuosically crafted "School for Scandal" overture.

JOHN ROCKWELL

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 500,118 SUN. 657,360
MAR 27 1973

The Boston Symphony

By Paul Hume

The Boston Symphony does not come to town as often as it used to.

Last night, for one of its infrequent appearances in the Kennedy Center, its guest conductor was Lorin Maazel who is now music director of the Cleveland Orchestra as well as of the Berlin Radio Symphony. With the Clevelanders, he will lead five concerts at the Kennedy Center the third week in May.

With the Bostonians last night, Maazel played three staples of the repertoire. Samuel Barber's "School for Scandal" Overture led off, followed by the Third Piano Concerto of Prokofiev and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. Soloist in the concerto was the conductor's wife, Israela Margalit.

Underlying much of Maazel's conducting is a basic kind of muscular tension that crops out in various ways, depending on the character of the music at hand. It was as useful in outlining the youthful vigor of Barber's overture, with its moods that alternate between playful wit and biting sarcasm, as in the driving brass perorations that pop up long before it is really time for perorations in the Sibelius.

Occasionally, this very brand of direction leads an orchestra into producing sounds with more raw bite to them than best suits the music at hand. It happened in the Barber and again, unpleasantly so, at the big F major chord shortly before the close of the first movement of the symphony. However, it must be said that the Boston Symphony is, and has been for some time, in a state of something like suspended animation as far as a permanent music director is concerned, since the next man to hold that title, Seiji Ozawa, has not yet taken the reins.

During such an interim, nothing about an orchestra is subject to greater fluctuation than the precise character of the sound it produces. Maazel concentrated decisively on the structure and design of the music, propelling it with power so that it could not drag. This is not to say that the tone of the players was not often beautiful, especially in the famous opening of the symphony. But the beauty was not, as it used to be in the era of Koussevitsky and often of Munch, a thing upon which you could depend.

The concerto brought a raft of other problems, most of them stemming from the fact of the soloist's extremely limited tone. Even with the orchestra reduced to a size that has not been seen here before in the Prokofiev, Miss Margalit's playing was often close to totally inaudible. When she had a clear field, as in the slow movement, the playing was lovely and marked by sensitive imagination.

But for this concerto, which made history with such greats as Kapell, Bachauer, the composer himself, and any number of other piano giants, a certain brand and amount of muscular involvement is an essential, especially in the kind of passage work where Margalit could offer the least. The repertoire is full of works for which she seems well suited.

FLUSHING, N. Y.
FRESH MEADOWS
TOWNSMAN
(NEW YORK CITY MARKET AREA)
W. 24,000
APR 5 1973

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert

By ETHEL R. PETER

We were privileged, indeed, to attend the Boston Symphony's concert Saturday evening, March 31st, at Carnegie Hall with American conductor, Lorin Maazel, ably and brilliantly conducting a very difficult, complex musical program. A stunning, lovely Israeli brunette and most talented pianist, Israela Margalit, played the Prokofiev Concerto No. 3 in C Major for Piano and Orchestra. This concerto, compostd by Prokofiev in 1921, contains many complicated atonal and syncopatel passages which Miss Margalit played splendidly with great ease.

A giant among musical conductors, Mr. Maazel, who conducted without musical notations, unified the virtuosity of the accomplished musicians of the venerable Boston Symphony Orchestra with Israela Margalit's expertise into a beautiful, exciting musical entity.

We regret that this evening's concert was the last of a series of four concerts for this season. However, reservations are now being accepted for the 1973-74 Boston Symphony Orchestra series to be presented again at the very famous landmark, the graciously elegant Carnegie Hall at West 57th Street and Seventh Avenue, Manhattan.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
APR 5 1973
New England Newsclip

Buffalo Evening News
D. 281,982 SAT. 297,247
MAR 29 1973

Solo Violin

PAUL ZUKOFSKY is one of the most outstanding of the younger violinists on the national tour. He will be soloist in the Wuorinen Concerto for Electric Violin on the Philharmonic programs Sunday and Tuesday in Kleinhans Music Hall, Michael Tilson Thomas conducting.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514

MAR 28 1973

New England Newsclip

Bernard Haitink will conduct the Boston Symphony

BOSTON — On Friday, April 6 at 2:00 p.m.; Saturday, April 7 at 8:30 p.m.; and Tuesday, April 10 at 8:30 p.m. Bernard Haitink, artistic director and conductor of the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Walton's Cello concerto with cellist Zara Nelsova soloist and Mahler's Symphony no. 1 in D.

Bernard Haitink, artistic director and conductor of the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam, and principal conductor of the London Philharmonic, was, like many conductors, originally a violinist. He was in his mid-twenties when he became principal conductor of Holland's Radio Philharmonic Orchestra. Shortly afterwards he made his debut with the Concertgebouw Orchestra, and was soon invited to be a guest conductor with other orchestras in Europe and the United States. In 1961 Bernard Haitink became joint permanent conductor of the Concertgebouw with Eugen Jochum, and toured with the Orchestra to many parts of the world, including Japan and the United States.

In 1964 Bernard Haitink became sole conductor of the Concertgebouw, and three years later was appointed to his post with the London Philharmonic. In recent seasons he has appeared not only with his own orchestras, but also with the Boston Symphony, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Halle, the BBC Symphony and the Berlin Philharmonic. He has been awarded the Bruckner and Mahler medals for his devotion to the work of these composers, all of whose symphonies he has recorded for Philips. He has also made many other recording on the Philips label.

Zara Nelsova comes from a distinguished Russian musical family. Born in Canada and educated in England, she is now a citizen of the United States. She made her debut with the London Symphony at the age of twelve, and since that time has toured regularly in Europe and the Americas. She has appeared as soloist with the world's major orchestras, among them the New York Philharmonic, the Cleveland, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Concertgebouw and L'Orchestre de la Suisse romande. Her festival engagements in recent seasons have included Aspen, Tanglewood, Flagstaff, Stanford, Prague and the Festival Casals. A distinguished recitalist, she has made regular coast-to-coast tours, often with her husband, the pianist Grant Johannesen. Zara Nelsova has recorded for London, Vanguard and Golden Crest labels. She appeared most recently with the Boston Symphony in the American premiere of Hugh Wood's Cello concerto at the 1971 Berkshire Festival.

On Friday, April 13 at 2:00 p.m.; Saturday, April 14 at 8:30 p.m. and Tuesday, April 17 at 8:30 p.m. Bernard Haitink, artistic director and Conductor of the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mozart's Piano concerto in B flat with pianist Nerine Barrett soloist, and Beethoven's Symphony no. 9 in D minor with Karen Altman, soprano, Joanna Simon, contralto, Dean Wilder, tenor, Thomas Paul, bass, and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson conductor as soloists.

Bernard Haitink, artistic director and conductor of the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam, and principal conductor of the London Philharmonic, was, like many conductors, originally a violinist. He was in his mid-twenties when he became principal conductor of Holland's Radio Philharmonic Orchestra. Shortly afterwards he made his debut with the Concertgebouw Orchestra, and was soon invited to be a guest conductor with other orchestras in Europe and the United States. In 1961 Bernard Haitink became joint permanent conductor of the Concertgebouw with Eugen Jochum, and toured with the Orchestra to many parts of the world, including Japan and the United States.

In 1964 Bernard Haitink became sole conductor of the Concertgebouw, and three years later was appointed to his post with the London Philharmonic. In recent seasons he has appeared not only with his own orchestras, but also with the Boston Symphony, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Halle, the BBC Symphony and the Berlin Philharmonic. He has been awarded the Bruckner and Mahler medals for his devotion to the work of these composers, all of whose symphonies he has recorded for Philips.

Pianist Nerine Barrett makes her debut with the Boston Symphony at these concerts. The winner of the first Michaels Award of Young Concert Artists in 1972, she appeared with the New York Philharmonic soon afterwards. Born in Jamaica in 1944, she lived in London for many years and her performances in England included extensive recital tours and appearances with leading orchestras, including the English Chamber and the Royal Philharmonic. During her five seasons in America, she has given recitals throughout the United States and Canada, including three in New York, and has played with the orchestras of Seattle, Spokane, New Jersey, Charleston, Greenwich and Norwalk.

Karen Altman, a native of McDonald, Pennsylvania, studied at the Juilliard School, then became a member of the Metropolitan Opera Studio. She has sung frequently in New York at Carnegie Hall and Philharmonic Hall, while other engagements with orchestras have included appearances with the Washington National Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Buffalo Philharmonic, the Kansas City Philharmonic and the Rochester Philharmonic. In Europe, Karen Altman has sung with the Frankfurt and Bordeaux Operas. She made her debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at these performances.

Joanna Simon, who has appeared with the Orchestra in recent seasons here in Boston, made her debut with the New York City Opera as Cherubino

Zara Nelsova ideal soloist

Haitink and BSO give fine concert

By Harry Neville
Globe Correspondent

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)

1973

New England Newsclip

Bernard Haitink was the conductor and Zara Nelsova the soloist yesterday afternoon in an unusually fine concert by the Boston Symphony. In the past this reviewer has on more than one occasion lamented a succession of guest conductors who, so it seemed, had staged a holding action until the real right thing should come along in the way of a permanent conductor. Yesterday's concert proved — to the satisfaction of this listener at least — that the BSO is alive and doing very well indeed. It only occasionally needs the talents of a man such as Haitink to remind us of that fact.

The program, Walton's Cello Concerto and Mahler's First Symphony, was a shrewd musical juxtaposition — both of them affecting and deeply felt, but the one all restraint and circumspection, the other lavishly and unabashedly emotional. Wit, pathos and grandeur are found in both works, but with Walton those elements have been filtered through a gentlemanly sensibility, with Mahler they stand stark and exposed — the English and Germanic sides of the same coin, one is tempted to say.

Nelsova was an ideal solist for the Walton concerto. The work presents no outrageous technical demands, yet its player must have absolute technical fluency in order to get to the core of the work. Nelsova displayed not only that but also perfectly sure intonation, an ability to make gentle, unharsh attacks and a lovely, relaxed tone—all prerequisites for the work's mellow, bittersweet mood.

Haitink's Mahler is by now a well-known quality, and I will mention only a few of the special and unusual qualities that recommend it: his remarkable fidelity to the composer's markings, especially to Mahler's abundant pianissimos, and his wide-awake yet full commitment to the ic's emotional content. ink, for example, gave arvelously long-drawn and atmospheric account of the opening, a moving performance of the funeral march (but not at all lacking in satiric bite), and a gripping presentation of the finale's highly wrought passages. Haitink had also an unusually poetic feeling for the subtle rubato of Mahler's music—all of this with never a loss of precision or a sense of overcalculation. Quite a remarkable program and one that will be repeated this evening.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.

1973

New England Newsclip

'Britishy' Program Again Holds Sway at BSO

• Concert Review

Friday's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra had another of those Britishy programs that have been popping up this season in Symphony Hall.

True, this weekend's conductor, Bernard Haitink, is a Netherlander, not an Englishman. But there is something of an axis of taste running between London and Amsterdam, as can be seen in the fact that Haitink directs the Lodon Philharmonic between chores at the Concertgebouw.

And also, while this week's program wasn't as made-in-England as the Elgar-Sibelius feast that Colin Davis did in various forms earlier in Boston's season, it was passingly British: the Cello Concerto of Sir William Walton and the First Symphony of Mahler, who has become almost a posthumously adopted Englishman in recent years.

It was indeed a Northern European idea of Mahler that was heard yesterday afternoon. Haitink obviously knew about the Viennese dance, military, and pop music blended into the composer's youthful effort, and made some of it sing with amusing nicety. But he apparently views with some alarm the young Bohemian's taste for splashy effects and orchestral razzamatazz. The first movement was beautifully pastoral, but the deliberately rough brass effects at the end of that section emerged rather out of sorts with their gentle surroundings. The scherzo, however, did come on with growly force (the controversial "Blumine" movement was not played).

There was beautiful string playing in the slow episodes of the later movements, particularly by the first violins (and by principal bassist Henry Portnoi, who was spotlighted in the slow march). Things were permitted to drag, and were buttered a little, but it was the very best butter.

Clarity was sternly imposed on the finale, which does splash around a lot in the score, but the victory was at the cost of much of its liveliness—it's best to let the kid do his thing and enjoy it.

Walton's concerto is of shockingly recent date — 1956 — as things have been going on Friday afternoons this season, but it wan't the sort of dissonant thing to chase anybody out of the room.

It turned out, in fact, to be better integrated and more contained than the violin and viola concertos Walton wrote earlier— not as exciting as the vola work, but delicious in flexible lyricism and quietly colorful orchestration.

Solist Zara Nelsova flowed through concerto's the autumnal first minutes with a grace that enchanced their subtle richness, but became rather too mercurial in the faster middle and final movements — they grow best out of evenness and not from "temperament." Haitink secured clarity and grayness throughout — a little bit more accenting would have worked wonders with the performance.

DAVID NOBLE

82

Music: Dies Irae

By Joe Hunt

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
At Symphony Hall

Verdi's Manzoni Requiem is a towering oratorical work which was written as a memorial to Alessandro Manzoni, the Italian nationalist and poet who led the risorgimento movement in the 1860s. In his own words, Verdi "revered him like a saint" and there is little doubt that Verdi regarded Manzoni as his spiritual alter ego. Verdi was not a religious man in any orthodox sense, but as a master of the theatrical and operatic forms it was natural for him to turn to the most dramatic form of ecclesiastical music, the requiem mass, to express his grief over the death of Manzoni.

The requiem or Mass for the Dead (Missa pro defunctis) follows the text of the normal mass, with the more joyful parts (as the Gloria in excelsis) and the Credo omitted, and the long thirteenth century hymn "Dies irae" (day of wrath) interpolated. Unlike the regular mass, where certain parts are variable from day to day, the movements of the requiem are fixed, with primary emphasis placed on death and the "last things." Composers have traditionally handled the text to provide solace for the aggrieved and hope for the souls of the departed that salvation is possible. In Verdi's hands, the text becomes an instrument of terror, particularly the monumental "Dies Irae" which creates and repeatedly accentuates an atmosphere of doom throughout the mass. Although Verdi penetrates the dark cloud with lyrical passages of surpassing beauty (such as the lovely lamentation 'Quid sum miser' and the sublime Agnus Dei), the mood is sustained to the end. Given his interpretation, reconciliation in the Christian sense would have been facile and that was clearly not Verdi's intention. Perhaps that is why Verdi's requiem seems the most contemporary, certainly the most personally wrought, of all the great masses for the dead.

The Boston Symphony's recent Friday performance of the Requiem was outstanding in several respects. The female soloists, Martina Arroyo and Lili Chookasian, were superb, far superior to their male counterparts. The chorus was beautifully trained, their singing was disciplined and exhibited none of the strain or hoarse shouting which sours so many performances. The Requiem is a little like a temperamental dish: even with the best ingredients it's hardly worth eating if it's overcooked. The most common flaw in Requiem performances is "conductor's overkill," trying to overdramatize Verdi by cheap flashes here and there and by distorting tempo relationships which work out so well if you follow Verdi's instructions. They are often ignored, which can be disastrous in a work which oscillates so precariously between moods of despair and tenderness.

On appearance (bland), William Steinberg looks like a loser, especially to someone weaned on the Toscanini style of conducting which can best be described as controlled frenzy with no holds barred. His conducting was physically minimal, to put it mildly. At times it seemed as though the baton must be moving him, however slightly. But his pacing of the orchestra was fine, and the sound they produced was not at all heavy, in fact perhaps a little light and thin in spots, perhaps also a little too controlled. There is abandon and raw power and finely honed control in Verdi's Requiem, and, in my hearing, only Toscanini has achieved this.

The music begins with the Requiem and Kyrie in a quiet ecclesiastical style, a conventional opening. The chorus and quartet develop this gentle invocation, a plea for mercy for the departed souls and by implication themselves. The whole builds up into a mass of sound through which the lines of the soloists' voices remain surprisingly clear.

Then the orchestra delivers four cracks of doom and the Dies Irae begins, the voices and orchestra sliding into whirling blackness. It is a magnificent showcase of theatrical music.

The music builds tremendous tension with dies irae waiting like a coiled spring about to be released at any moment. Even during the lovely "Quid sum miser" trio, led beautifully by Lili Chookasian, her voice lilting, wistful, imploring, the chorus moans the familiar refrain until the avalanche of terror descends again. This time it is the line "Rex tremendae majestis," which in the Berlioz and Mozart versions is the musical climax of the poem, making it primarily a hymn in praise of God. But Verdi uses it as an awe-ful phrase and he underscores "Salva me" two lines later, which with the constantly recurring dies irae makes the poem one of an individual's terror on the Day of Judgment. With this all pretense of praying for others is virtually cast aside. The succeeding verses go to the soloists. Berlioz throughout used his chorus, and Mozart even when he used his soloists made them sing as a quartet, a sort of liturgical consolation. Verdi strips that away, fragmenting the quartet into a cluster of anguished arias: the Recordare, a tender prayer sung with taste and deep feeling by Chookasian and joined by Arroyo whose voice is almost too rich and expansive for this duet, but marvelously vibrant; Ingemisco, the tenor solo which was shouted rather than sung; the Confutatis maledictus, and the lamentation Lacrymosa.

The rest of the mass moves swiftly by contrast with the Great Wrath. The Offertorium and Agnus Dei are the most liturgical movements and were sung beautifully by the soloists with sparing accompaniment. Arroyo was superb in the Domine Jesu and Cossutta surprisingly sensitive in the Hostia solo. The Sanctus with double-chorus is quick and powerful, not at all solemn and sacred as it usually is, and the chorus sang the great fugue as though they were going to shake down salvation with sheer joy. But then the prayer for light (Lux aeterna) becomes a requiem again, as at the beginning, and suddenly we discover that the swift pace has been deceptive. The final invocation, "Libera me", is a separate liturgy which Verdi added to balance the earlier Dies Irae climax. The soprano begins the liturgy with an unmeasured chant, the chorus takes it up, alternately whispering and singing their plea for freedom from eternal death. Verdi directs that the chorus sing "allegro risoluto," merrily and with resolution. But the magic of communion fades and each falls silent, then led by the soprano each breathes "Libera me" as the mass ends.

We are left with a vision of man who has passed beyond the assurance of faith, beyond even the arrogance of hope, to an elemental appeal for mercy to an unknown power, embodying in his solitude the proof of his own mortality. ■

LITHOGRAPH—KATHE KOLLWITZ

THE REAL PAPER
BOSTON, MASS
APR 1 1973
New England Newsclip

Verdi Requiem Moving Despite Performance

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

The Verdi Requiem is a wonder. In the middle of the most indifferent performance, one can still be greatly moved just by the work itself. The breadth of its emotional content, the force of its rhetoric, Verdi's continually beautiful melodies, the extraordinary ensembles cannot be diminished by less-than-wonderful performances.

And less-than-wonderful it was, too, in the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The problem seemed, curiously, a very localized one — the quartet of soloists. It was a case in which most of the bad habits of opera singing were transferred onto the concert stage with this most operatic of choral pieces.

• Concert Review

First the good things:

William Steinberg has a wonderful idea of what the Requiem is about, a fine sense of pacing, a way of moving the work logically and dramatically without its becoming hypertense or overwrought. If anything, it is just a shade on the side of understatement, the Dies Irae not as cataclysmic as one has heard it, the Ricordare not as lugubrious.

Also, the New England Conservatory Chorus was in splendid form, the singers obviously very much involved in this exciting music and singing with excellent diction and absolutely clean rhythm. There was only one section, the figure in Sanctus, where they seemed not quite sure of themselves and slightly muddled.

It is the soloists, however, who have maximum exposure in this work and it is largely their responsibility whether the performance works. Sadly, they were this performance's one liability.

Common to all four (Martina Arroyo, Lili Chookasian, Carlo Cossutta, Robert Hale) was forcing of the voice to the point of stridency. This was particularly noticeable in Miss Arroyo who sounded definitely strained and whose vocal production broke all the rules of good technique (raised shoulders and visible tension). This soprano role is much like Aida requiring a big sound, yet a flexible cantibile style and transparent top, a combination admittedly difficult to find. Miss Arroyo seemed to find the high notes dangerous territory and that shouldn't be; she ought to have those B-naturals very securely.

More serious from a musical standpoint, however, was the four soloists' rather cavalier way with the music, their casual way of doing the opposite of Verdi's directions (crescendos on the high notes marked diminuendo), their occasional non-observance of bits of fioriture, regular non-observance of pianissimo, and Mr. Hale's problem with counting. I won't even mention dramatic involvement.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
224,658
MAR 17 1973
New England Newsclip

Beethoven's Incomparable Ninth to Be Played Tonight at Auditorium

By RICHARD CONWAY

Through the auspices of the Springfield Orchestra Association, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the Chorus Pro Musica, also from Boston, will be at the Municipal Auditorium tonight to perform Beethoven's incomparable Ninth Symphony. The concert is also being made a part of the Massachusetts Music Educators Association All-State Conference now going on at the Baystate West Motor Hotel, with the Springfield Schools acting as host.

Unfortunately, because of prior professional commitments, this writer will be unable to attend the concert. But the Ninth holds a special place.

If memory serves me correctly, it was as a member of an enormous chorus made up of singers from many choral groups that I had my first opportunity to sing with a full symphony orchestra. It was at the old Syria Mosque in Pittsburgh, Pa. The Mosque was for years the home of the Pittsburgh Symphony, and Dr. William Steinberg, who had led the Pittsburgh orchestra for as long as I can remember, conducted the performance, which had been purposely designed to bring together singers of all races and creeds. (The performance tonight is being dedicated to the 25th anniversary of the State of Israel.) And, interestingly, I think the Ninth was one of the last works Steinberg conducted as director of the Boston Symphony last summer at Tanglewood.

I remember coming on stage with the singers at the beginning of the final movement and trying to find a place to stand in the tremendous throng that literally surrounded the orchestra. Singing the Ninth is an experience one never forgets. The vocal demands on soloists and choristers alike are impossible. Yet, one manages to do it, swept along in the surging power of Beethoven's music. The experience is emotionally and physically draining — and exhilirating and rewarding all at the same time.

Its impact on the audience is unmistakable also. I recall a close friend meeting me after the Pittsburgh concert and saying, "I don't know how you felt about it down there on stage, but that thing just gave me goose bumps all over." (I'll have to remember that for a critique sometime.)

Furthermore, whenever the work is performed up at Tanglewood, for example, it inevitably tends to draw record, or near record, crowds.

The choral theme has been adapted for use in many church hymnals — a move decried by many musical purists. But, it certainly makes for one of the strongest paeans of praise in the book.

And just recently the "pop" music world has discovered the theme and given it yet a different garb. After all, Schiller's "Ode to Joy," the poem that inspired Beethoven's music, a call for universal brotherhood, is a theme that surely knows no boundaries of time or age.

And surely, if any man's music is music that reaches the inner spaces of the human soul, it must be Beethoven's. Every year recordings of his music are at, or near, the top of classical music sales. And record throngs jam Tanglewood for the All-Beethoven weekends.

A few years ago, celebrating the composer's bi-centennial birthdate, one noted bumper stickers that proclaimed "Beethoven Lives!" His music certainly does. No one can forget an encounter with the master.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
APR 12 1973
New England Newsclip

TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
D. 30,000
APR 12 1973
New England Newsclip

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO PERFORM IN SPFLD. TONIGHT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Bernard Haitink of the London Philharmonic, will perform Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, the "Choral Symphony," tonight at 8:30 in Springfield Municipal Auditorium.

The symphony, in D Minor, will be preceded by the Coriolan Overture and a short intermission. Singing in the symphony will be a chorus pro musico and four soloists, two from the Metropolitan Opera in New York City.

The performance is dedicated to the 25th anniversary of the state of Israel.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398
APR 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Week-Long Celebration Set To Mark Israel's Birth

All Western Massachusetts residents have been invited to celebrate Israel's 25th birthday with the local Jewish community in May.

The state of Israel was formed May 14, 1948 and the 12,000 Jews in Greater Springfield are planning a week-long celebration to begin May 13 with a parade with 40 floats, 15 marching groups and 10 bands.

More than 1000 children will also compete that day in a full scale "Maccabiah" or Israeli-style Olympics which is open to all children in the community. Registration forms for children from kindergarten through 6th grade are available at the Jewish Community Center.

An Israeli trade fair featuring works of Israeli craftsmen and artists is also planned along with archaeological exhibits showing the history and development of the Jewish people in Israel.

A Victory Gala at Beth El Temple in the evening will feature a performance of the original Broadway musical "To Live Another Summer. . .To Pass Another Winter."

The day's activities will also include an Israel film festival, according to Herbert Levi, chairman of the local Salute to Israel.

Other tributes to Israel are planned in the coming weeks.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra which is performing Thursday night in Municipal Auditorium, Springfield, has dedicated Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in honor of the state of Israel.

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
S. 117,499
APR 8 1973
New England Newsclip

FIEDLER

HAITINK

Symphony Orchestra Concert Calendar

Two separate concerts highlight the Springfield Symphony Orchestra calendar next week, both featuring musicians from Boston.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Bernard Haitink, makes a guest appearance in Municipal Auditorium at 8:30 p.m. on Thrusday, April 12. Haitink, conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw and London Philharmonic Orchestra, will lead the BSO, Chorus Pro Musica and soloists in a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

On Sunday, April 15, Arthur Fiedler will guest conduct the Springfield Symphony Orchestra in a Family Pops program at 3 p.m. in Municipal Auditorium. Marking his twelfth consecutive appearance with the orchestra, Fiedler has prepared a concert of light and semi-classical favorites including a song fest and selections from "My Fair Lady."

Tickets for both the Boston Symphony and Arthur Fiedler concerts are available by calling 739-4728.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
APR 14 1973
New England Newsclip

Guest Artists Score With BSO

By DAVID NOBLE

Guest artists contributed handsomely to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday-Saturday Symphony-Hall feast of the best in music from 150-200 years ago, and visiting conductor Bernard Haitink scored a triumph in the epic choral finale of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Nerine Barrett, a Jamaica-born black woman pianist brought a rare quality to Mozart's Piano Concerto in B-flat, K. 450: a good sense of how the music's classical-period harmony interacts with basic four-, three-, and two-beat meters. That may look like nit-picking praise, but it makes all the difference in the world to a listener who sits through 20 or 25 minutes of such refined music—that is what that ball game is all about.

She and Haitink took a rapid, almost perilously rapid, tempo in the opening allegro, but the rhythmic definitions were strong enough all around to preserve the wit and the edges of sadness in the music. The slow movement was, by contrast, achingly slow, but also achingly beautiful.

In the scurrying finale, Ms. Barrett swung finale, rhythms so much she almost lost her classical cool, but the careful proportions of the music were remembered under the surface of her emphatic accents. The cadenza in this movement was a period of real soloistic impetuosity; the one in the first movement had delicate virtues that were not strengthened by the stagehand's error that brought on the house lights during Miss Barrett's unaccompanied musing.

• Concert Review

Haitink made only one small miscalculation here: He left almost all the violins on stage while banishing half the rest of the strings, which is generally correct for Mozart's music, but all those violins nearly covered the woodwinds.

Haitink conducted the Ninth with a peculiar tension for three movements before showing all his powers in the finale.

The result of Haitink's slightly jabby conducting in the earlier movements was rather dry playing with sharp accents. The scherzo benefitted from this, particularly when its main section was repeated at the end of the movement, but there were some blatty moments. Slow sections that appear for contrast were played smoothly and warmly, but the gamut of articulations that lie between sharp accenting and rich melodic statement was not entirely there —a weakness in a performance of such subtly written music.

The slow movement began movingly, but an unwelcome sharpness grew in the subsurface accents that weakened the overall flow and made this the weakest part of the concert; then came the choral finale.

Boston's Chorus Pro Musica sounded out directly and with strength — its singing of the first big mass-vocal section opened the floodgates of sound in just the way Beethoven was trying to bring off, and the rest was handsome, too.

Basso Thomas Paul was a pillar of strength, in his intoning of the shocking entry of the sung music and throughout. Soprano Karen Altman also was strong and clear in the solo quartet passages; the tenor and alto sang with less power and focus, although Dean Wilder came through stalwartly in a brief solo.

Haitink went through the rather sectionalized movement without imposing the pseudo-transitions often attempted to smooth it out; its variety of textures and styles was dazzling. A brisk tempo made it all something of a revue of disparate, ingenious ideas, but the overall effect was quite impressive.

84.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,012 SUN. 505,377
APR 14 1973
New England Newsclip

Haitink conducts BSO in 'Ninth'

By Harry Neville
Globe Correspondent

Control is not exactly the element one wants to notice most of all in a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, but at the end of yesterday's concert of the Boston Symphony it was conductor Bernard Haitink's control that stood out as the overriding fact of a well-played but curiously unmoving concert. As much as with anything else Beethoven wrote, one wants to be awed and exhilarated by the Ninth. Haitink seldom caused that to happen. Instead he led a performance that made one to admire his technique, his intelligence, his objectivity — a performance that left one realizing that however necessady those sualities are, they still aren't enough.

A week ago when Haitink conducted Mahler's First Symphony with the BSO, it was exciting to hear a performance that so successfully conveyed a sense of urgency and mystery without resort to exaggeration or interpretive chicanery. Yesterday again there was no exaggeration, but neither was there much sense of mystery or exaltation — not until the last movement, where it seemed not so much due to Haitink but to the Chorus Pro Musica, whose feeling for the surge and power of the music simply wasn't to be denied.

Haitink's rubato, so fine and poetic in the Mahler, seemed rather awkward and calculated yesterday, so that transitional passages lacked conviction and organic flow. I felt too that Haitink didn't really observe Beethoven's "molto" qualification of the second movement Vivace and the third movement Adagio.

Soprano Karen Altman, contralto Joanna Simon, tenor Dean Wilder and bass Thomas Paul made a competent but not compelling quartet of soloists.

Pianist Nerine Barrett was the soloist in Mozart's B-flat Major Concerto, K. 450. She gave a highly proficient but rather subdued performance, one that seemed to have little to say that was fresh or probing about the music.

STANDARD TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS
D. 72,371
APR 1 1973
New England Newsclip

E. J. Dias Review

BSO ends concert series with rafter-ringing finale

The concluding concert of this season's Tuesday "B" Series, performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, was of much interest because of three unusual factors.

First of all, on the podium as guest conducter was Bernard Haitink, currently artistic director of the first-rate Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra and of the London Philharmonic. Second, on hand as piano solist in Mozart's "Concerto in B Flat, K. 450" was the young Jamaican pianist, Nerine Barrett, familiar to Greater New Bedford music lovers for her appearance here several years ago in the Friends of Music Series.

And, finally, the only other selection on the program was Beethoven's glorious "Symphony No. 9 in D Minor," with its inspiring choral finale based on Schiller's "Ode to Joy" and its strange blend of fatefulness and transport, wild humor and superterrestrial beauty, mystery and exaltation, its tragic despair and its shouting among the stars.

To begin with Miss Barrett, the promise that she displayed here several seasons ago has been more than fulfilled. There was a cool elegance about her playing of Mozart (in fact, one would have welcomed more warmth in the slow movement) and lucid articulation. The concerto gives exceptional prominence to the soloist in long sections of bravura, in many passages of quickly changing rhythms. A cheerful, initmate work, it is also a demanding one, and maestro Haitink, Miss Barrett, and the orchestra rose to the occasion in a well-conceived, no-nonsense rendition.

As far as the Beethoven "Symphony No. 9" is concerned, Haitink conducted with meticulous attention to detail and musical architecture. Assisting in the rafter-ringing Finale were the admirable Chorus Pro Musica, soprano Karen Altman, contralto Joanna Simon (who sang here a season ago in the Greater New Bedford Concert Series), tenor Dean Wilder, and bass Thomas Paul. All four soloists were adequate, though not brilliant; the chorus was in excellent voice, and the orchestra responded well to Haitink's baton. In fact, Haitink, a good solid conductor, built beautifully to the climactic moments of the symphony, gave us a Presto that raced along remarkably and a slow movement on which he lavished considerable attention.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS
D. 79,398
APR 13 1973
New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Offers Magnificent Sound, Precision

By R. C. HAMMERICH

It was a great pleasure to see the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the stage of the Municipal Auditorium again Thursday night; and it was, of course, a great pleasure to hear its magnificent sound.

Alan Hale, president of the Springfield Orchestra Association, which sponsored the concert as a salute to Israel's 25th anniversary, said before the music started that it had been eight years since the orchestra was last here.

We should have it more often; but there were only about 2300 listeners there, which means the association lost money. Orchestras of the Boston - Cleveland - Philadelphia level are charging $15,000, on the average, these days for one out-of-town performance.

Bernard Haitink, artistic director of the Concertgebouw Ochestra of Amsterdam and one of the highest-ranking young conductors, led the orchestra, four soloists and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston through a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony that was expansive, carefully measured, stately . . . proud.

Haitink is a conductor apparently absolutely without mannerism. Although his arm motion was wide, he showed no movements or gestures that seemed superfluous or without specific usefulness. He is a no-nonsense conductor without fussiness.

The music reflected his manner. It was fluid but precise, flexible but steady, paced with an unhurried but strong, secure clarity.

The second movement was infused with an electric excitement, and the third with liquid charm and beauty. And the famous fourth, the one with all the BIG sound, demonstrated its inherent power impressively but was controlled just enough to keep it from exposing its moments of excess uncomfortably.

It was a genteel Ninth with all of its separate moments of grace, excitement and strength revealed clearly and plainly and apparently without interference.

Alfred Nash Patterson once more had prepared his chorus with precision (there were about 90 there Thursday), and the solo quartet, although a bit loose at first, performed its bit admirably. They were Karen Altman, soprano; Joanna Simon, contralto; Dean Wilder, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass.

Everyone will have two more opportunities to recreate their success; they are scheduled to perform the Ninth tonight and tomorrow in Boston.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
APR 18 1973
New England Newsclip

Beethoven's Ninth wins cheers for Haitink, BSO

Nerine Barrett's debut in Mozart piano concerto

By Louis Snyder

For the second time during his two-week guest visit as conductor of the Boston Symphony, Bernard Haitink has brought the Symphony Hall audience to its feet spontaneously at the end of a program. True, the first time was after a particularly searching reading of Mahler's First Symphony, now well ensconced in the public affections. Last weekend, it followed the choral finale of Beethoven's Ninth, which is also about as sure-fire as you can get.

But no piece of symphonic literature plays itself, and even some meticulous, musicianly performances of great works within the past season, under the batons of other conductors, have not brought about such enthusiastic demonstrations of friendly recognition. The Haitink-BSO combination must, indeed, be doing something right.

Michaels Award winner

The weekend program began with Mozart's Piano Concero in B flat (K. 450), played by Nerine Barrett in her local debut. A Jamaican who has studied and concertized in England for a number of years, Miss Barrett capped five seasons of appearances in the United States by winning the 1972 Michaels Award of Young Concert Artists, which has the built-in advantages of a New York recital and five orchestral engagements, including one with the BSO.

Miss Barrett's playing of the concerto, understandingly complemented by Mr. Haitink and the orchestra, revealed the facility, authority, and musicianship which undoubtedly won this prestigious prize for her. Whether Mozart was the ideal vehicle might be questioned, considering the strength (though never unduly percussive) of her touch. However, there was increasing poetry and persuasiveness as the work progressed, and sparks really flew in the brilliant concluding Allegro.

Mr. Haitink had as his collaborators in the Beethoven a fine quartet of soloists — contralto Joanna Simon and tenor Dean Wilder, who had sung in this season's earlier performances under Leonard Bernstein; Soprano Karen Altman, and bass Thomas Paul — and Alfred Nash Patterson's rich-voiced, ebullient Chorus Pro Musica. In the "Ode to Joy" he brought them together with stunning effect, carefully balanced in their relative projection — solo voices, chorus, and instruments. But the way had been well paved by the conductor's superbly molded concept of each of the three preceding movements, down-to-earth but anything but pedestrian. It was again a case of cumulative effect achieved by the subtlest of musical means.

The program will be repeated tomorrow evening at 7:30 in Symphony Hall.

Bernard Haitink

. . . is conductor of the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam, and visited Boston as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 251,094

APR 8 1973

National Ballet opens Famous Artists Series

Diva Leontyne Price, Seiji Ozawa in his first season as conductor of the Boston Symphony, and another full-scale production by the National Ballet will be offered by Famous Artists Series on its 1973-1974 season.

Executive producer Murray Bernthal said two additional events will be added as soon as negotiations have been completed.

The Washington-based ballet will open the season Oct. 18, in Loew's State Theater with its new production of "Romeo and Juliet."

Fourth Annual

It will mark the fourth annual fully-staged, full-length production from that troupe that FAS has presented, one each the past three years. Edward Villella and Vilette Verdy starred in "Giselle," followed by Dame Margot Fonteyn dancing the title role in "Cinderella." Last fall, without stars, the troupe nearly soldout Loew's with its "Sleeping Beauty."

LEONTYNE PRICE

Miss Price, who has been set for a Jan. 10 concert, is the second in a series of the launched this season with Renata Tebaldi.

Prima Donna

Within a few years, the American soprano has attained the accolade of "Prima Donna Assoluta."

She reigns in opera houses throughout the world, from New York to London to Paris to Vienna to Moscow. And from San Francisco to Buenos Aires to Salzburg to Berlin.

One major critic refers to Miss Price as "the Stradivarius of singers."

The Boston Symphony under Ozawa's baton for the initial time here will perform April 25. Famous Artists has been presenting it locally for more than a decade and a half.

When it returns to Syracuse, the orchestra will be nearing its 93rd year of existence, having been formed in 1881. It presents 210 concerts a year and its recordings, dating back to 1917, have sold more than 35 million discs.

15th Director

The 15th music director of the BSO, Ozawa was born 38 years ago in Manchuria. He has been music director of the Toronto Symphony, the Japan Philharmonic and assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic.

Ozawa will continue to hold the position of music director of the San Francisco Symphony during his Boston tenure.

He is no stranger to the orchestra, having made his debut with them in 1964. Four years earlier he was awarded the Koussevitsky Prize as outstanding student conductor at the Berkshire Music Center, the BSO's summer home in Lenox, Mass.

In addition, the new conductor won first prize at the 1959 International Competition at Besancon. He was principal guest conductor of the Ravinia Festival.

Making his first Syracuse appearance next season for Famous Artists will be Seiji Ozawa who will conduct the Boston Symphony. Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein is framed by Ozawa's arm and body.

ITEM
LYNN, MASS.

APR 30 1973

New England Newspaper

The Lively Arts

Intimate Portrait Of BSO's Osawa Is Enhanced By Tapley Interview

By NANCY POPKIN
Family Life Editor

Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Music Director Seiji Ozawa is the star of "Symphony!" — a one-hour color special to be shown on Channel 5 Saturday, May 12, at 10 p.m.

Viewers will have an "inside" look at Symphony Hall and the activities which take place backstage, as well as candid glimpses of the orchestra members prior to a concert and during intermission.

Television cameras followed Ozawa for an entire week while the youthful conductor was in Boston for a series of concerts with the Boston Symphony. During the hectic seven days, Ozawa attended a press conference, recorded for Deutsche Grammophon, rehearsed with the orchestra and Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, and met with Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, and Gunther Schuller, president of the New England Conservatory of Music.

He also found time to play tennis, house hunt with his wife, Vera, and do an interview with music critic and commentator Martin Bookspan, all of which will be shown on the special.

In addition, there will be interviews with members of the orchestra including Rolland Tapley, first violins, who joined the BSO in 1920 and is its oldest member. Tapley just gave his final concert as conductor of the North Shore Philharmonic Orchestra, which he has led since its inception in 1947.

A portion of the program will be devoted to a performance by the Boston Symphony of Berlioz' Roman Carnival Overture, an excerpt from his Symphony Fantastique and the Mozart Concerto No. 4 with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

SEIJI OZAWA

'Video artist'

TV—joining symphony, synthesizer

By David Sterritt

"When I listen to music I not only hear it, I see it."

Thus spake "media artist" Ron Hayes, who is currently in residence at Boston's educational-TV channel, WGBH.

As his words imply, Mr. Hayes is a dreamer. But he is no idle dreamer.

The proof — his new, carefully worked-out visual interpretation of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," to be broadcast tonight on Channel 2. The music will be provided by the Boston Symphony under Michael Tilson Thomas's baton, as part of the BSO's regular schedule of televised concerts.

The success of tonight's show stems largely from Mr. Hayes's deliberate and responsible approach. His images might be called video sculptures. They bear little relation to the "light shows" — fabrications of projections, strobe-lights, and whatnot — that often accompany rock-music concerts. Mr. Hayes is an artist with the brand-new medium of abstract video; and a grand new tool called the Paik-Abe Video Synthesizer. His creations are precise, concise, and utterly unique.

The "Daphnis and Chloe" airing marks Mr. Hayes's first broadcast venture with the Paik-Abe synthesizer. As the piece develops, he follows its themes, permutations, and musical images with a steady stream of abstract electronic images. They form, swell, split, merge, fade, shine, change color, lose color, cascade, flow, and ultimately subside with the music's end.

* * *

Ravel's composition indicates their course. But Mr. Hayes's talents choose, shape, and guide them. Sound becomes shape, music becomes electronic substance.

Quite a departure for the plain old TV-tube. And it is also quite a departure for "Daphnis and Chloe," which was written for a Diaghilev-inspired ballet. But on its own level, the experiment works. Mr. Hayes has not created profound visual art; his medium, and perhaps his own sensibilities, are too new for that. But he has fashioned a novel approach to televised music, and expanded our ideas about the environments in which music might effectively be placed.

One can also commend Mr. Hayes's cautious feelings about the use of synthesized images, particularly in relation to music. The "Daphnis" show often reverts to more conventional shots of the orchestra playing. Under Jordan Whitelaw's direction, these are also planned carefully according to the progression of the music, the succession of soloists, and so forth. Mr. Hayes does not feel that his abstractions should replace such representational shots. Instead, he seeks those pieces and passages where synthesized images can most effectively enhance the overall audiovisual effect.

* * *

Hence the choice of the lushly imagistic "Daphnis" for his Paik-Abe debut. Director Whitelaw feels that the more "classical" a piece, the less apt are abstract accompaniments. Mr. Hayes agrees that programmatic music makes a far better starting point for his work. And both directors — along with David Atwood, who coordinated the program — feel that a whole "Daphnis"-length of abstractions would be less effective than selected interjections. Tonight's program thus begins with a conventional airing of Stravinsky's fiery "Les Noces," entirely under Mr. Whitelaw's direction.

The synthesizer itself is an infernally complicated machine which hardly anyone fully understands. It occupies most of a small studio room at the WGBH building. It was built in 1969 by Korean artist Nam June Paik and Japanese artist Shuya Abe. Mr. Hayes came to it from a career as a commercial TV producer and an independent film producer/director.

He aims to relate today's burgeoning "image technology" to his own inner visions. He wants to find out "what we can use TV for, besides looking at representational things." Learning the ins and outs of the synthesizer has occupied much of his quest recently. On May 11, however, he will begin a series of late-night (11-11:30) "video concerts." These will feature more "visual interpretations" of music, and "image concerts" with no music at all.

In his "Daphnis" work, Mr. Hayes has responded impressively to a considerable challenge. The show represents the use of a new artistic device, operated in "real time" — as the orchestra actually played — and creating a precisely planned, notated, reproducible series of electronic "sculptures."

Writing in WGBH's "Prime Time" magazine, the young artist points out that, traditionally, "we tend to regard the tube with about as much artistic curiosity as we do the family car; we take it for granted." He is right. And he is doing a lot to change all that.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,261
APR 2 1973
New England Newsclip

SUNDAY HERALD ADVERTISER
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 121,795
APR 1 1973
New England Newsclip

MUSIC

Synthesizer experiments with BSO

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

Ron Hayes' speech is peppered with words like configurations, image, variable, amplitude, feedback, video-artist, "New ways of seeing." And he is so articulate in this video-ese — it all sort of rolls off his tongue — that the effect is almost trance-inducing. It gives me the same sort of feeling I used to have reading social science textbooks on systems analysis.

Hayes was principal spokesman at a luncheon recently at WGBH where members of the press were invited to watch a screening of a video-synthesizer performance and to eat beef Stroganoff (the caterer was already observing the meat boycott to judge by the rationing of meat cubes).

The Videosynthesizer is a new experimental television device that creates completely non-representational color images of infinite shapes and patterns. Hayes has been experimenting with it to discover possible relationships between the images and music in a project called the Music-Image Workshop, jointly funded by WGBH and the National Endowment for the Arts.

The screening was of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in which video images created by Hayes during a performance of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" are intercut with the more usual shots of orchestra and conductor. The show, by the way, will be broadcast on Channel 2 tomorrow night at 8 p.m. It is in color (and really needs to be seen that way) and in quadraphonic sound thanks to a hookup with Radio Station WCRB.

"When I listen to music, I see images in my mind," Hayes stated in the April WGBH "Prime Time" publication. The Videosynthesizer gives him a tool "that takes him at least part way toward realizing those mental pictures" and toward realizing a sheer visual entertainment on television.

THE SYNTHESIZER, Hayes points out, is not like some of those light organs that are hooked-up directly to music or sound waves. Rather it is operated manually and the images produced are purely the arbitrary design of the video-artist, dependent on his imagination and technique.

So what does it look like? And, in particular, how does it work with music as in the BSO broadcast?

The program opens with a view of the Symphony Hall stage with chorus members and musicians filing onstage. Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas makes his entrance and the concert begins with the quiet and atmospheric opening of "Daphnis." This is the first time I have seen Thomas on televison and the first time I have been able to watch him conduct from the front. It is fascinating. In fact, I find watching the musicians close-up a visual treat which enhances the musical performance — seeing the concentrated expressions as players ready themselves for an entrance, or prepare their reeds, or empty the condensation from French horns.

Then there is a fade-out, fade-in to the video images — spirals, fan shapes, geometric patterns of many varieties. The colors are predominantly in the purple-blue range (I have my first problem: "Daphnis and Chloe" just doesn't strike me as a purple piece) although there are shifts into black-and-white and momentary snatches of other colors.

As I watch, I find myself shifting back and forth between types of perception — one moment I'm predominantly looking, the next I'm predominantly hearing (obviously my perception has not kept up with the multi-media age).

AS THE PROGRAM continues I find myself becoming less interested in the shifting color images. They are pretty and remind me of those toy kalaidescopes one used to buy at carnivals. But the types of patterns are limited and begin to seem repetitious. Also the colors seem locked into that purple-blue end of the spectrum and I start mentally demanding green or a bright orange.

My greatest objection to the show, however, is that the images distract me from the music and therefore subtract from the music's importance. Basically I don't think music needs any other media to complement it: it is complete in itself and this sort of visual accompaniment only dilutes it. That, however, is the opinion of a music-oriented person and was certainly not shared by most of the people at the screening who tended to be what you might call video freaks.

This objection was thrown around a bit in the discussion which followed, but mainly the talk settled on the visual component and the technique behind it.

Video-synthesizer images may be one of the television programming alternatives of the future. By itself, as sheer visual entertainment, it might be very intriguing (although to judge from the limited view I have had I doubt if I would tune in to watch any more than I now watch situation comedies).

But as a multi-media experience superimposed on a musical performance, the Video-Synthesized images will probably have a rough time overcoming the reservations of serious music listeners.

QUODLIBET / By MICHAEL STEINBERG

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
APR 7 1973
New England Newsclip

Levine to fill Bernstein BSO dates

For Tuesday and Thursday Boston Symphony subscribers (or potluckers), there is a nice surprise. The last two concerts of this season, Apr. 24 and 26, were originally to have been conducted by Leonard Bernstein, repeating parts of his programs from November and December. That was on the assumption that Bernstein would be in residence at Harvard as Charles Eliot Norton Professor of Poetry. Then, when Bernstein put off the Norton lectures until November, his BSO dates were listed as "to be announced."

It now turns out they have gone to James Levine, who will conduct an all-Mozart program. Levine himself will play the A major Piano Concerto, K.414, and the program will also have the "Jupiter" Symphony and the Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, the latter with Joseph Silverstein and Burton Fine as soloists.

★ ★ ★

When Boston Symphony trumpeter Roger Voisin retired at the end of this season, his place in the section as third trumpet and assistant principal will be taken by Rolf Smedvig, a 20-year old junior at Boston University. Smedvig comes from Seattle, and at 13 he made his solo debut with the Seattle Symphony, in which his mother is a violinist. He was at Tanglewood in BU's Young Artists Program 1968-70, studying with Armando Ghitalla, BSO principal trumpet, and had a fellowship at the Berkshire Music Center in 1971. It took him till age 5 to discover he wanted to be a trumpeter ("because it made a lot of noise"), having started on the clarinet, his father's instrument, and flirted en route with drums. In high school, he led a rock band and at the University of Washington he competed in figure skating and swimming.

★ ★ ★

There is a story that an indignant old lady walked out of the first performance of Bach St. Matthew Passion on Good Friday 1729, exclaiming "Lord help us, 'tis surely an opera comedy." We should find her and get her to New North Church, Hingham, for the 11 o'clock service tomorrow. She could hear tenor William Flavin and soprano Susan Krueger sing duets from the first acts of Puccini's "Tosca" and "Madam Butterfly." The prelude to the service will be Desdemona's "Ave Maria" and Otello's "Niun mi tema" from Verdi's "Otello," and for the postlude they will sing another duet from "Tosca," Verdi, Puccini, Mozart, Boito, and others, have regularly been infiltrating Sunday services at New North since Ms. Krueger became soprano soloist there nearly a year ago.

★ ★ ★

Monday evening at 10, Channel 2 starts a new series about music. It is called Changing Music, Gunther Schuller is in charge, and the subject is the evolution of 20th Century music. Musical examples will be played by New England Conservatory students and faculty. Repeat showings of the 30-minute programs are Fridays at 9. The press release describes Iannis Xenakis as a "Greek ex-patriot." This is educational television?

TIMES
PEABODY, MASS.
W. 6,043
APR 25 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO appointments announced

BOSTON—Talcott M. Banks, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, today announced two new appointments in the managerial staff: Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager since 1954, has been appointed to the new post of executive director and Thomas W. Morris, of Wellesley Hills, as manager.

Perry will serve as the chief executive officer of the organization, reporting to the trustees, and being responsible for the general planning and supervision of the management, maintaining close liaison with the Music Director Seiji Ozawa, and the trustees and overseers. Morris, who is 29 years old, is presently the assistant manager in charge of business affairs and deputy treasurer. He will function as the chief operating officer, reporting to Perry, and being charged with full responsibility for the conduct of the managerial operations, staff personnel, schedules and planning, contracting and similar affairs.

Morris is a native of Rochester, New York, and a graduate of Princeton

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377
APR 14 1973
New England Newsclip

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
APR 26 1973
New England Newsclip

Silverstein to Replace Levine at Concerts

BOSTON — Joseph Silverstein has agreed to replace the indisposed James Levine as conductor in the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts of Tuesday and Thursday.

Silverstein's program is being performed at the suggestion of music adviser Seiji Ozawa. The program is as follows: Bach Brandenburg concerto no. 5 in D; Bach Piano concerto in E performed by Peter Serki, who has recently performed the work with Seiji Ozawa in San Francisco and the Mozart Symphony No. 41 "Jupiter."

Bernstein's BSO dates switch from Levine to Silverstein

QUODLIBET / By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Complications, complications ... Last week we ran a story that James Levine would be conductor and piano soloist with the Boston Symphony on Tuesday and Thursday, April 24 and 26, taking over the dates left vacant when Leonard Bernstein decided to put off his Norton lectures at Harvard until the Fall.

Levine now is ill, and those dates now go to Joseph Silverstein, the BSO's Assistant Conductor and concertmaster. He will conduct Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, and Peter Serkin will be piano soloist in Bach's Concerto in E major and, with Silverstein and flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, in Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 5. At the beginning of that week, Monday, 23 April, Serkin will play Messiaen's "Oiseaux exotiques" with Boston Symphony wind players, Leon Kirchner conducting. That is at Sanders Theater at 8:30, the rest of the program, which is open to the public free of charge, consisting of works by Schoenberg, Kirchner, and Webern, with Diana Hoagland as soprano soloist. As far as Serkin's Bach is concerned, that is a preview for next year's Celebrity Series subscribers: Serkin is on the books to play the E major Concerto with Alexander Schneider's Brandenburg Players.

Levine is also down to conduct Rossini's "Barber of Seville" here with the Metropolitan Opera, Saturday evening, April 28, but so far no replacement has been announced for him there. For the first time, the Met is using the recently restored version of "The Barber" with Rossini's original orchestration instead of the corrupt version that has been in circulation most of the last 150 years. Also some of the traditional cuts have been opened.

★

Of the three harpsichord recitals that I heard in the last month—a Bach program by Joseph Payne at MIT, another by Anthony Newman at Newton College of the Sacred Heart, and a mixed program by Suzanne Cleverdon in the Chapel of Emmanuel Church last Monday—Cleverdon's gave me the greatest pleasure, and by far.

She played a Louis Couperin Suite in D, four pieces by William Birde (as she likes to spell Byrd—why? and why not Wyllyam, as he appears in the records of Westminster Abbey?), a Toccata and a Suite by Froberger, and Bach's English Suite in E minor.

In her rhythm, there is sometimes an excessive tension — events come a hair too soon, and you wish for a little more breathing space — but that slight fault aside, Cleverdon's playing is enormously impressive, full of excitement, energy, and fantasy. She is superb at conveying the theater and grandeur of embellishments, she has an extraordinary sense of line (those Bach basses!), and she is as unpercussive a player of the harpsicord as I have heard. In her twenties she is a fine player, and likely to become a great one.

With that, let me report three peripheral pleasures: the Emmanuel Chapel, that splendid monument of American Gothic Revival, is one of the most pleasant, richly sonorous, small concert rooms in town. Then, Cleverdon's recital was a showcase for two superb examples of Boston craftsmanship in instrument-building, a harpsichord by John Nargesian, and, for the Byrd, a spinet by Joel van Lennep.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
APR 16 1973
New England Newsclip

Silverstein to lead final BSO programs

Joseph Silverstein will conduct the two final concerts this season by the Boston Symphony on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, April 24 and 26, at Symphony Hall. Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 in D, and Piano Concerto in E, and the Mozart "Jupiter" Symphony (No. 41) will comprise the program, which will have Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, and Peter Serkin, piano, as soloists.

88

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500

APR 19 1973

New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO—FINALE AND RETROSPECT

Among the sizable array of large and rapid changes in the Symphony's arrangements is the rhythm of the season. The season no longer ends—it grinds to a halt.

The weekend subscription series was, and mayhap still remains, the backbone of the structure, but the concerts are now down from 24 to 20, the Spectrum performances are interlaced with the orchestra's weeks away, and the loose-end Tuesday and Thursday concerts are done the week following the conclusion of the "season" and seem rather happenstantially docketed. Whether all of this presages a permanent new format, or whether it is the unavoidable consequence of having a permanent conductor not yet in permanent residence remains to be seen.

Anyhow, Bernard Haitink did the honors last weekend with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. It was a performance that was incisive to the point of briskness—a 65-minute transversal is seldom come by—but it was a reading which showed that Mr. Haitink knew what he wanted, that what he wanted made sense, and that he had the capabilities to weld the instrumental and vocal forces into a collaboration that had power, authority and sensibility. Those open tremulo measures followed by that awesome transition from D minor to A major, that archetypal slow movement, the scherzo whose sheerness of propulsion was to be followed but never quite equalled, and always the affirmation of the Ode and the Finale that leads up to it—bereft indeed is the listener on whom these ingredients no longer work their wondrousness. The quartet, Karen Altman, soprano, Joanna Simon, Contralto, Dean Wilder, tenor, Thomas Paul, bass, and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, were competent enough and caught the requisite fire.

Opening the program was the first performance in nearly a quarter of a century of Mozart's bejeweled B flat Piano Concerto, K. 450. The soloist, Nerine Barrett, is a young Jamaican native whose appearance here with the orchestra was her due for being the first contestant to win the newly established Michaels Award of Young Concert Artists. There must be quite a story behind this, for however large the number of black solo vocalists, the number of black instrumental soloists is less than minute.

Moreover, to eschew a flashy display piece and take on something as understated and mercilessly delicate and open as this Mozart concerto says a great deal about courage and musical integrity. Miss Barrett has not yet attained a command of expression that makes her a latter day Clara Haskil, but she has a secure technique, knows how to shape a phrase and shows a feel for classical line. On its completion I could have happily sat through her performance all over again.

How then did the season come off overall? By logic, it should have been a poor show. A virtuoso orchestra is supposed to have its own pungent personality, and that personality can only be conferred by a conductor around the place often enough to impress it with one. A series of visitors, by this reasoning, would homogenize any individuality at best, and wreck the ensemble for lack of control over discipline and internal organization at worst.

Actually, as has been emphasized in this space more than once, the orchestra is playing these days as well as anyone can remember. If fine sound and responsiveness and beautiful work from the principal chairs are the hallmarks, then one has the feeling that the inspiration of Harold Wright's clarinet and Charles Kavaloski's horn have catalyzed to completion the steady and successful rebuilding that commenced way back with Erich Leinsdorf and proceeded rather erratically thereafter until now.

This season almost half of the front line conductors of the day have visited here and a good deal of what this participatory autocracy has wrought has been memorable. It may be a bit invidious to recount highlights, but one does remember with particularity (but not hierarchically) all of the Berlioz performances of Colin Davis and Seji Ozawa, Leonard Bernstein's "Oedipus Rex" and Beethoven's "Pastoral." Steinberg's Mahler's Second and Verdi Requiem, Maazel's collaboration with Ashkenazy in Beethoven's G major Piano Concerto, Barenboim's 9th Bruckner, Haitink's 1st Mahler and Colin Davis's "Falstaff" of Elgar."

High standards of orchestral playing and outstanding performances are all very well, but there is another side or two to the matter. Not a single new work was introduced during the year except Walter Piston's Flute Concerto. In fact no really modern work was played all season in the weekend series and this is an incredible commentary that must keep Dr. Koussevitsky's spirit writhing. Could it be that the idea is to tuck modernity away into Michael Thomas's Spectrum? If so, we will soon be seeing polarized audiences—the stuffy old regulars for the subscription series and the kids who are With It for Mr. Thomas.

Another point. The programming often was banal to the point of insult—many of the works were the kind thing to be expected in an uninspired Great Music undergraduate course. How, outside of Arthur Fiedler's domain, do you justify in one season "The Afternoon of a Fawn," Mozart's G Minor Symphony, Beethoven's "Pastoral," Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnol," Schubert's "Unfinished," Tchaikovsky's Fifth, a great glut of Richard Strauss and the "Prelude and Love Death" from "Tristan" twice within a month?

So saying, any seasonal terrain consists of peaks and plateaus and valleys and a few gulches. On survey, the year 1972-1973 was one in which nevertheless the highlands predominated.

SUNDAY HERALD ADVERTISER
BOSTON, MASS.

APR 29 1973

New England Newsclip

Symphony completes schedule

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

Seiji Ozawa, who assumes the music directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in September, will conduct slightly less than one-third of next season's programs; the regular Friday-Saturday subscription series has been extended to 22 weeks; and conductor Carlo Maria Giulini will be back for a two-week visit after an absence of several years, according to the BSO's completed schedule for 1973-74 released last week.

The season, whose programs, conductors and soloists are detailed in the schedule, opens Sept. 28 with a performance of Berlioz' "The Damnation of Faust" (which has previously been done at Tanglewood) with Ozawa, singers Edith Mathis, Rene Kollo, Donald McIntyre, Thomas Paul and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Of the 22-week season, Ozawa will direct seven programs while Michael Tilson Thomas and Colin Davis, listed as Principal Guest Conductors, lead five and four programs respectively. William Steinberg, who according to local music gossip is gradually being phased out as a regular guest, will conduct two programs and Rafael Kubelik and Okko Kamu (a newcomer making his debut with the orchestra) complete the roster.

The expanded subscription series comes about through the inclusion of Michael Tilson Thomas' Spectrum Series (two of the planned three concerts) into the traditional Friday afternoon slot. This unique series, with its informal manner and unusual programming (often comtemporary music), will have Thursday and Saturday night performances as well so that all varieties of audience — the generally older, long-time subscribers and the younger, supposedly "with it" crowd Spectrum has previously attracted — may be exposed to it.

With the possible exception of Spectrum (whose programs have not been divulged), audiences will probably find the music selections quite comfortable.

To those who have been worried that Ozawa, who has a reputation (not especially well-deserved) as an exponent of contemporary music, will try to stretch their ears with all sorts of unpleasant, "unmusical" sounds, need have no fears. They will find the schedule quite ingratiating with its all-Tchaikovsky program, generous doses of Beethoven, its Haydn, Sibelius, and Strauss.

Some of the interesting and seldom-heard works planned include the Rachmaninoff Symphony No. 3; the Monteverdi Vespers of 1610; Tippett's Symphony No. 3; Schoenberg's "Ode to Napoleon," "Modern Psalms," and "Verklaerte Nacht;" also the Beethoven Mass in C.

For those with limited budgets or tastes that run toward Romantic music, there is a three-concert Romantic Series on Thursday nights that is neither particularly 19th Century nor the catch-all for a lot of concert potboilers that you might think it is. It has Haydn and Walter Piston as the outer extremes and includes works by Bruckner, Sibelius, Paganini and Strauss.

The list of soloists contains quite a few more of the "big names" than in some seasons. Leaning toward the pianists, the roster includes Christoph Eschenbach, David Oistrakh, Malcolm Frager, Henryk Szeryng, Jesseye Norman, Heather Harper, and Maurizio Pollini.

★

JUMPING BACK to the present, the Boston Symphony, at least without its first chair players, is making that annual spring metamorphosis in which it becomes the Boston Pops Orchestra for six weeks.

Pops season begins Tuesday night at Symphony Hall (— which also goes through a transformation from staid, dull-gold concert hall to green-laticed Biergarten) with Arthur Fiedler conducting every evening through Saturday. Guests this week include pianist Ralph Votapek, organist Virgil Fox, and soprano Anna Moffo.

★

JOHN HEISS, composer, flutist, and faculty member at the New England Conservatory, is one of three young American composers to receive commissions for new works from the Berkshire Music Center.

The commissions are awarded in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard which has long been a supporter of contemporary music activities at the Center which is located at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Heiss' commission is for a chamber music work for eleven players.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
251,912 SUN 566,377

APR 23 1973

New England Newsclip

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

APR 17 1972

New England Newsclip

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

It was hard to tell which the ladies enjoyed the most at the final Stage Door Lecture of the season on Friday in the basement of Symphony Hall — the delightful humor of the speaker, first clarinetist of the orchestra, Harold Wright; the spring flowers and decorations on all sides, or the welcome news that these lectures, sponsored by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have raised 11,000 much-needed dollars for the orchestra this season.

Mr. Wright was an easy speaker who was not averse to answering questions with great humor on every facet of a clarinet, from the music written for it to the influence Benny Goodman has had on the instrument. He gave the audience a vivid word picture of Pablo Casals as a musician and as a man, for Mr. Wright goes each season to perform in the Casals' Festival in Puerto Rico, He gave a superb rendering of a piece written for clarinet, making it even harder to believe that the army could have made him play bass drum and cymbals in a band while he was serving his hitch in the service.

Spring in all its glory was certainly present in the rather dreary basement of Symphony Hall. Great flowering branches of forced apple blossom were placed behind the podium, and graceful sprays of forsythia in full bloom were here and there around the room. A pink rhododendron greeted the subscribers as they came in through the Stage Door for the lecture, and the same shade was in the two big pots of hyacinths placed in front of Mr. Wright. Instead of flowers on the tables the committee had put runners printed with brilliantly colored daises on all the tables making splashes of color all over the room.

Several of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were at the lecture, among them the president of the trustees, Talcott Banks of Lincoln, who announced the staggering sum of $11,000 that had been raised by these events. He called for a rising vote of thanks for Mrs. George Bates who has been responsible, together with various cochairmen, for the lectures since their inception three years ago. Also there was trustee Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, delighted with the success of the Mini-Tour arranged for the Friends of the B.S.O. in which they accompanied the orchestra on its brief tour to New York.

The final lecture of 1971-72 was under the direction of the Marblehead and North Shore areas of the Council of Friends of the B.S.O. and members from these areas acted as hostesses.

Among the many at this lecture, the series of which have become so popular with Symphony-goers that the Council of Friends are scheduling a double series of them next winter, were Mrs. Ingersoll Cunningham of Needham; Mrs. Alfred Willmann, one of those who went on the Mini-Tour, wearing an off-the-face hat with a white brim and decorated with lillies-of-the-valley; Mrs. Howard Hansen of Wellesley; Mrs. John T. G. Nichols of Marblehead, another wearing a hat, hers a very Twentyish cloche in navy; Mrs. Jack Parker of Wellesley and Mrs. Roger Voisin.

ALISON ARNOLD

Into the social swim

There are very few private parties in Boston nowadays and little entertaining at home. Social life is now a give-and-take proposition and centers around parties to preserve cultural institutions or to support research for every disease under the sun.

Newcomers to Boston can easily get into the social swim if they read the social columns and offer to help with the countless projects. But they must say a price. They join an organization, get their names on lists and then receive invitations.

There are concerts, benefit dances, fashion shows, house tours, opera, luncheons, dinners and cocktail parties. They buy tickets, invite their friends, and the friends, in turn, do the same thing. So the ball starts rolling.

Anyone who gives $15 or more can be a Friend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and be invited to the stage door lectures. The top price for a season ticket to the Friday afternoon concerts is $229. Occasionally, there is a big benefit like the Symphony Ball a few years ago. Tickets for this were $350 a couple.

The Museum of Fine Arts has several categories of membership, ranging from a single membership of $20 a year to a donor for $50, a sustaining member for $100 and a supporting member for $250. You can be a patron for $5000 and a Fellow for $10,000.

To be a member of The Opera Company of Boston the price is $25. If you are a Friend it will cost you $50. An individual associate membership is $100 and a family associate costs $200. To be a patron you about $15.

$1,000. All these categories entitle you to certain privileges such as dinners before the opera for which the average charge is must give $500, and a benefactor gives

The sustaining membership of The Speech and Hearing Foundation of Massachusetts is $7 a year. For a life member it's $50. To be a Pathfinder you must give $200 a year. Tickets for the annual benefit ball in May are $60 a couple. If you take a table for 10 it will cost you $300.

These are but a few of the organizations you can join. There are many more. And you'll get on committees, your name will appear in the newspapers constantly, and the first thing you know, you'll be a publicized party-goer in the social whirl. The names change every five years or so. It used to take longer.

★

If you belong to the Gore Place Society, you'll be helping to preserve Gore Place in Waltham, a National Historic Landmark. If you live in Waltham it will cost you $5 a year to belong, but if you are a non-resident, you will have to pay $10.

This beautiful Federal mansion, once the country seat of Christopher Gore, 7th governor of Massachusetts, was opened for visitors April 15. You can visit it until Nov. 5. Admission is $2 for adults and 50 cents for children. There are guided tours Tuesdays through Saturdays, from 10 to 5, and Sundays, from 2 to 5. The lilacs and rhododendrons add to its beauty in the spring. Peter A. Wick is president of the Gore Place Society, which maintains the estate.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500
APR 19 1973
New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO—FINALE AND RETROSPECT

Among the sizable array of large and rapid changes in the Symphony's arrangements is the rhythm of the season. The season no longer ends—it grinds to a halt.

The weekend subscription series was, and mayhap still remains, the backbone of the structure, but the concerts are now down from 24 to 20, the Spectrum performances are interlaced with the orchestra's weeks away, and the loose-end Tuesday and Thursday concerts are done the week following the conclusion of the "season" and seem rather happenstantially docketed. Whether all of this presages a permanent new format, or whether it is the unavoidable consequence of having a permanent conductor not yet in permanent residence remains to be seen.

Anyhow, Bernard Haitink did the honors last weekend with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. It was a performance that was incisive to the point of briskness—a 65-minute transversal is seldom come by—but it was a reading which showed that Mr. Haitink knew what he wanted, that what he wanted made sense, and that he had the capabilities to weld the instrumental and vocal forces into a collaboration that had power, authority and sensibility. Those open tremulo measures followed by that awesome transition from D minor to A major, that archetypal slow movement, the scherzo whose sheerness of propulsion was to be followed but never quite equalled, and always the affirmation of the Ode and the Finale that leads up to it—bereft indeed is the listener on whom these ingredients no longer work their wondrousness. The quartet, Karen Altman, soprano, Joanna Simon, Contralto, Dean Wilder, tenor, Thomas Paul, bass, and the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, were competent enough and caught the requisite fire.

Opening the program was the first performance in nearly a quarter of a century of Mozart's bejeweled B flat Piano Concerto, K. 450. The soloist, Nerine Barrett, is a young Jamaican native whose appearance here with the orchestra was her due for being the first contestant to win the newly established Michaels Award of Young Concert Artists. There must be quite a story behind this, for however large the number of black solo vocalists, the number of black instrumental soloists is less than minute.

Moreover, to eschew a flashy display piece and take on something as understated and mercilessly delicate and open as this Mozart concerto says a great deal about courage and musical integrity. Miss Barrett has not yet attained a command of expression that makes her a latter day Clara Haskil, but she has a secure technique, knows how to shape a phrase and shows a feel for classical line. On its completion I could have happily sat through her performance all over again.

How then did the season come off overall? By logic, it should have been a poor show. A virtuoso orchestra is supposed to have its own pungent personality, and that personality can only be conferred by a conductor around the place often enough to impress it with one. A series of visitors, by this reasoning, would homogenize any individuality at best, and wreck the ensemble for lack of control over discipline and internal organization at worst.

Actually, as has been emphasized in this space more than once, the orchestra is playing these days as well as anyone can remember. If fine sound and responsiveness and beautiful work from the principal chairs are the hallmarks, then one has the feeling that the inspiration of Harold Wright's clarinet and Charles Kavaloski's horn have catalyzed to completion the steady and successful rebuilding that commenced way back with Erich Leinsdorf and proceeded rather erratically thereafter until now.

This season almost half of the front line conductors of the day have visited here and a good deal of what this participatory autocracy has wrought has been memorable. It may be a bit invidious to recount highlights, but one does remember with particularity (but not hierarchically) all of the Berlioz performances of Colin Davis and Seji Ozawa, Leonard Bernstein's "Oedipus Rex" and Beethoven's "Pastoral." Steinberg's Mahler's Second and Verdi Requiem, Maazel's collaboration with Ashkenazy in Beethoven's G major Piano Concerto, Barenboim's 9th Bruckner, Haitink's 1st Mahler and Colin Davis's "Falstaff" of Elgar."

High standards of orchestral playing and outstanding performances are all very well, but there is another side or two to the matter. Not a single new work was introduced during the year except Walter Piston's Flute Concerto. In fact no really modern work was played all season in the weekend series and this is an incredible commentary that must keep Dr. Koussevitsky's spirit writhing. Could it be that the idea is to tuck modernity away into Michael Thomas's Spectrum? If so, we will soon be seeing polarized audiences—the stuffy old regulars for the subscription series and the kids who are With It for Mr. Thomas.

Another point. The programming often was banal to the point of insult—many of the works were the kind thing to be expected in an uninspired Great Music undergraduate course. How, outside of Arthur Fiedler's domain, do you justify in one season "The Afternoon of a Fawn," Mozart's G Minor Symphony, Beethoven's "Pastoral," Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnol," Schubert's "Unfinished," Tchaikovsky's Fifth, a great glut of Richard Strauss and the "Prelude and Love Death" from "Tristan" twice within a month?

So saying, any seasonal terrain consists of peaks and plateaus and valleys and a few gulches. On survey, the year 1972-1973 was one in which nevertheless the highlands predominated.

SUNDAY HERALD ADVERTISER
BOSTON, MASS.
New England Newsclip

Symphony completes schedule

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

Seiji Ozawa, who assumes the music directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in September, will conduct slightly less than one-third of next season's programs; the regular Friday-Saturday subscription series has been extended to 22 weeks; and conductor Carlo Maria Giulini will be back for a two-week visit after an absence of several years, according to the BSO's completed schedule for 1973-74 released last week.

The season, whose programs, conductors and soloists are detailed in the schedule, opens Sept. 28 with a performance of Berlioz' "The Damnation of Faust" (which has previously been done at Tanglewood) with Ozawa, singers Edith Mathis, Rene Kollo, Donald McIntyre, Thomas Paul and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Of the 22-week season, Ozawa will direct seven programs while Michael Tilson Thomas and Colin Davis, listed as Principal Guest Conductors, lead five and four programs respectively. William Steinberg, who according to local music gossip is gradually being phased out as a regular guest, will conduct two programs and Rafael Kubelik and Okko Kamu (a newcomer making his debut with the orchestra) complete the roster.

The expanded subscription series comes about through the inclusion of Michael Tilson Thomas' Spectrum Series (two of the planned three concerts) into the traditional Friday afternoon slot. This unique series, with its informal manner and unusual programming (often comtemporary music), will have Thursday and Saturday night performances as well so that all varieties of audience — the generally older, long-time subscribers and the younger, supposedly "with it" crowd Spectrum has previously attracted — may be exposed to it.

With the possible exception of Spectrum (whose programs have not been divulged), audiences will probably find the music selections quite comfortable.

To those who have been worried that Ozawa, who has a reputation (not especially well-deserved) as an exponent of contemporary music, will try to stretch their ears with all sorts of unpleasant, "unmusical" sounds, need have no fears. They will find the schedule quite ingratiating with its all-Tchaikovsky program, generous doses of Beethoven, its Haydn, Sibelius, and Strauss.

Some of the interesting and seldom-heard works planned include the Rachmaninoff Symphony No. 3; the Monteverdi Vespers of 1610; Tippett's Symphony No. 3; Schoenberg's "Ode to Napoleon," "Modern Psalms," and "Verklaerte Nacht;" also the Beethoven Mass in C.

For those with limited budgets or tastes that run toward Romantic music, there is a three-concert Romantic Series on Thursday nights that is neither particularly 19th Century nor the catch-all for a lot of concert potboilers that you might think it is. It has Haydn and Walter Piston as the outer extremes and includes works by Bruckner, Sibelius, Paganini and Strauss.

The list of soloists contains quite a few more of the "big names" than in some seasons. Leaning toward the pianists, the roster includes Christoph Eschenbach, David Oistrakh, Malcolm Frager, Henryk Szeryng, Jesseye Norman, Heather Harper, and Maurizio Pollini.

★

JUMPING BACK to the present, the Boston Symphony, at least without its first chair players, is making that annual spring metamorphosis in which it becomes the Boston Pops Orchestra for six weeks.

Pops season begins Tuesday night at Symphony Hall (— which also goes through a transformation from staid, dull-gold concert hall to green-laticed Biergarten) with Arthur Fiedler conducting every evening through Saturday. Guests this week include pianist Ralph Votapek, organist Virgil Fox, and soprano Anna Moffo.

★

JOHN HEISS, composer, flutist, and faculty member at the New England Conservatory, is one of three young American composers to receive commissions for new works from the Berkshire Music Center.

The commissions are awarded in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard which has long been a supporter of contemporary music activities at the Center which is located at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Heiss' commission is for a chamber music work for eleven players.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
APR 23 1973
New England Newsclip

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
APR 17 1972
New England Newsclip

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

It was hard to tell which the ladies enjoyed the most at the final Stage Door Lecture of the season on Friday in the basement of Symphony Hall — the delightful humor of the speaker, first clarinetist of the orchestra, Harold Wright; the spring flowers and decorations on all sides, or the welcome news that these lectures, sponsored by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have raised 11,000 much-needed dollars for the orchestra this season.

Mr. Wright was an easy speaker who was not averse to answering questions with great humor on every facet of a clarinet, from the music written for it to the influence Benny Goodman has had on the instrument. He gave the audience a vivid word picture of Pablo Casals as a musician and as a man, for Mr. Wright goes each season to perform in the Casals' Festival in Puerto Rico, He gave a superb rendering of a piece written for clarinet, making it even harder to believe that the army could have made him play bass drum and cymbals in a band while he was serving his hitch in the service.

Spring in all its glory was certainly present in the rather dreary basement of Symphony Hall. Great flowering branches of forced apple blossom were placed behind the podium, and graceful sprays of forsythia in full bloom were here and there around the room. A pink rhododendron greeted the subscribers as they came in through the Stage Door for the lecture, and the same shade was in the two big pots of hyacinths placed in front of Mr. Wright. Instead of flowers on the tables the committee had put runners printed with brilliantly colored daises on all the tables making splashes of color all over the room.

Several of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were at the lecture, among them the president of the trustees, Talcott Banks of Lincoln, who announced the staggering sum of $11,000 that had been raised by these events. He called for a rising vote of thanks for Mrs. George Bates who has been responsible, together with various cochairmen, for the lectures since their inception three years ago. Also there was trustee Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, delighted with the success of the Mini-Tour arranged for the Friends of the B.S.O. in which they accompanied the orchestra on its brief tour to New York.

The final lecture of 1971-72 was under the direction of the Marblehead and North Shore areas of the Council of Friends of the B.S.O. and members from these areas acted as hostesses.

Among the many at this lecture, the series of which have become so popular with Symphony-goers that the Council of Friends are scheduling a double series of them next winter, were Mrs. Ingersoll Cunningham of Needham; Mrs. Alfred Willmann, one of those who went on the Mini-Tour, wearing an off-the-face hat with a white brim and decorated with lillies-of-the-valley; Mrs. Howard Hansen of Wellesley; Mrs. John T. G. Nichols of Marblehead, another wearing a hat, hers a very Twentyish cloche in navy; Mrs. Jack Parker of Wellesley and Mrs. Roger Voisin.

ALISON ARNOLD

Into the social swim

There are very few private parties in Boston nowadays and little entertaining at home. Social life is now a give-and-take proposition and centers around parties to preserve cultural institutions or to support research for every disease under the sun.

Newcomers to Boston can easily get into the social swim if they read the social columns and offer to help with the countless projects. But they must say a price. They join an organization, get their names on lists and then receive invitations.

There are concerts, benefit dances, fashion shows, house tours, opera, luncheons, dinners and cocktail parties. They buy tickets, invite their friends, and the friends, in turn, do the same thing. So the ball starts rolling.

Anyone who gives $15 or more can be a Friend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and be invited to the stage door lectures. The top price for a season ticket to the Friday afternoon concerts is $229. Occasionally, there is a big benefit like the Symphony Ball a few years ago. Tickets for this were $350 a couple.

The Museum of Fine Arts has several categories of membership, ranging from a single membership of $20 a year to a donor for $50, a sustaining member for $100 and a supporting member for $250. You can be a patron for $5000 and a Fellow for $10,000.

To be a member of The Opera Company of Boston the price is $25. If you are a Friend it will cost you $50. An individual associate membership is $100 and a family associate costs $200. To be a patron you about $15. $1,000. All these categories entitle you to certain privileges such as dinners before the opera for which the average charge is must give $500, and a benefactor gives

The sustaining membership of The Speech and Hearing Foundation of Massachusetts is $7 a year. For a life member it's $50. To be a Pathfinder you must give $200 a year. Tickets for the annual benefit ball in May are $60 a couple. If you take a table for 10 it will cost you $300.

These are but a few of the organizations you can join. There are many more. And you'll get on committees, your name will appear in the newspapers constantly, and the first thing you know, you'll be a publicized party-goer in the social whirl. The names change every five years or so. It used to take longer.

★

If you belong to the Gore Place Society, you'll be helping to preserve Gore Place in Waltham, a National Historic Landmark. If you live in Waltham it will cost you $5 a year to belong, but if you are a non-resident, you will have to pay $10.

This beautiful Federal mansion, once the country seat of Christopher Gore, 7th governor of Massachusetts, was opened for visitors April 15. You can visit it until Nov. 5. Admission is $2 for adults and 50 cents for children. There are guided tours Tuesdays through Saturdays, from 10 to 5, and Sundays, from 2 to 5. The lilacs and rhododendrons add to its beauty in the spring. Peter A. Wick is president of the Gore Place Society, which maintains the estate.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 227,061

24 1973

New England Newsclip

A new trumpeter joins BSO

Rolf Smedvig, who is a 20-year-old student at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, has been named assistant principal trumpet in the Boston Symphony, as of the beginning of the 1973-74 season. Born in Seattle, he first played in that city at the age of 13, and for three summers participated in BU's Tanglewood Institute as a member of its Young Artists Program. Since 1970, when he entered the university, he has studied wtih Armando Ghitalla, principal trumpet of the BSO, been the holder of a fellowship at the Berkshire Music Center, and is currently a member of the Empire Brass Quintet.

THE BOSTON HERALD
Traveler
D. 210,540 S. 260,961

APR 24 1972

New England Newsclip

Social Chatter

by Alison Arnold

Pre-Symphony Luncheon Goes East

THE ORIENT, so much in the news these days, was the theme for the decorations at the final Pre-Symphony Luncheon at Horticultural Hall, Friday. And since the Symphony's new music advisor, Seiji Ozawa, is Japanese, colorful paper dragons and Japanese lanterns festooned the hall.

There were exquisite Japanese flower arrangements of iris and magnolia blossoms, and on each luncheon table was a primrose plant. As an extra special touch, a tiny pink Japanese parasol was perched on each pastry. Mrs. Howard W. Davis of Concord was being congratulated for the Japanese decor.

Mrs. George Lee Sargent, chairman of the Council of Friends of the Symphony, had at her table the Rev. Edward G. Murray, a trustee of the orchestra, Roger Voisin, a trumpet player of the orchestra, and Mrs. Voisin, Mrs. William J. Mixter, chairman of Areas for the Council of Friends, Thomas Morris, assistant manager for business affairs, Andrew Raeburn, program editor and assistant to the music director, and Forrester C. Smith, director of development.

Mrs. William D. Manice Jr. and Mrs. M. Ducey Ryerson are co-chairmen of the luncheon series. The decorating committee for the luncheon included members from the Andover and Concord areas. They included Mrs. Philip Allen, Mrs. Joseph Daly, Mrs. James Grew, Mrs. N. Penrose Hallowell, Mrs. Hart Leavitt, Mrs. Alexander Warren, Mrs. Carl DeSuze, Mrs. Anatole A. Haemmerle, Mrs. E. Neal Hartley, Mrs. Anson W. Krickl, Mrs. William B. Moses Jr. and Mrs. Benjamin L. Wilson.

Among the many others at the luncheon were Mrs. Edwin T. Green, Mrs. Robert Watson, Mrs. Jack Parker, Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, Mrs. Harris Fahnstock, Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Victor Jones, Mrs. Charles F. Eaton Jr., Mrs. Alfred Willmann, Mrs. C. Chauncey Gray, Mrs. Albert Goodhue, Mrs. Robert Kistner, Mrs. John T. Grandin Jr., Mrs. Donald Sinclair and Mrs. Henry Hall Jr.

BSO and its traveling musicians

89.

One of the world's great cultural landmarks is rarely available to tourists visiting Boston on the fly.

So the Boston Symphony Orchestra buses over to Logan Airport every year and flies off to bring its music to audiences that would have little chance of ever getting tickets to Symphony Hall.

The Orchestra's itinerary often includes the capitals of the world, but it also embraces such cultural hinterlands as Providence, Brooklyn and Columbus.

When it goes off on chartered planes the orchestra follows precise, but unusual, logistics. It never flies all its 105 musicians and their 16,000 pounds of instruments and musical scores in one plane, although there'd be plenty of room in the newer jets.

Laning Humphrey, for many years the Orchestra's publicist and historian, explained "the practice began when the BSO first began flying – in the days when aviation safety was not as well-recognized as it is today.

"It was then arranged that half the personnel and half the instruments go in one plane and the other half in a second plane. In the event of a disaster the orchestra would still be able to put on a scheduled concert."

It took 92 years to develop the BSO, as Bostonians proudly refer to their Orchestra. Its musicians are among the world's most talented. Their instruments are of inestimable value.

"The BSO is not easily replaceable," said Humphrey.

Boston Symphony has twice been on concert tours to Europe – in 1952 and in 1956 – and once, in 1960, to Asia. Otherwise, its annual concert tours are within the United States.

But is has traveled since its beginning.

In the Orchestra's second season (1882-83) 26 rehearsals and concerts were given in Boston, and 25 outside Boston: six at Harvard University's Sanders Theatre, three each in Salem, Providence and Worcester, two each in Portland, Lowell, Fitchburg and New Bedford, and one each in Newport and Lynn.

The Orchestra went abroad for the first time in 1952 at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom and gave concerts in 11 cities.

Humphrey recalled that on that trip 21 years ago half the Orchestra went by plane and the other half by boat.

In 1956, the Boston Symphony Orchestra became the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union with two concerts in Leningrad and three in Moscow.

Its other concerts in Europe that year included one beneath the famed Rose Window in the Cathedral at Chartres to benefit the maintenance fund of that ancient church. Again that year, half the Orchestra went by plane and the other half by boat.

Twenty-five foreign board members of the Orchestra revisited their homelands during the six-weeks tour of 13 European countries.

In the long history of the Orchestra only one woman has ever had the distinction of being a principal player – the player who sits in the first chair, is in charge of that musical section and plays the exposed parts, or the solos..

She is Mrs. Dorio Anthony Dwyer, a flutist, who had to miss the 1956 European-Russian trip because – of all reasons – she was pregnant. Her seat was occupied temporarily by the associate flutist principal, James Pappoutsakis.

Mrs. Dwyer is one of eight women among the 93 male mucisians in the 1973 BSO. The other women are four violinists, one cellist, one piccolo player and one harpist.

There are other distinctions within the Orchestra, including where a musician sits. Humphrey recalled one occasion when a photographer was taking a picture of the entire orchestra.

Observing there would be better pictorial balance if a musician from the front row sat in the third row the musician said, "I can't do that. My friends would think I've been demoted."

In 1960, the Orchestra went in two sections to the west coast and, again in separate planes, across the Pacific for an eight-week tour of concerts, including two in Taiwan, 22 in Japan, three in the Phillipines, seven in Australia, and two in New Zealand.

The Boston Pops Orchestra, which more people get to hear because of its public concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, is an offshoot of the Symphony.

LANING HUMPHREY

It was organized in 1885 – four years after the BSO – to keep the BSO members from scattering around the world playing for other musical aggregations during the summer,

The Cleveland Press
D. 375,653

APR 10 1973

Rosen is soloist at concert here

Jerome Rosen, former member of the Cleveland Orchestra and now assistant concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, will be the guest soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra Sunday at the Tri-C Metro campus auditorium at 3 p.m.

Rosen will play the Mozart Violin Concerto No. 5 in A Major ("Turkish") and the orchestra, conducted by William Slocum, will play Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" and the Brahms First Symphony.

Tickets will be available at the door at $2.50 and Golden Agers $1.50.

SCHOOL MUSICIAN
DIRECTOR AND TEACHER
JOLIET, ILL.
MONTHLY 15,000

APR 1973

Five Boston Symphony Men Join Faculty at Boston University

Five distinguished musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra have accepted appointments to Boston University, effective September 1973, Norman Dello Joio, Acting Dean of the University's School of Fine and Applied Arts announced today.

The five, all principal players with the Symphony, are Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flautist, Ralph Gomberg, oboist, Harold Wright, clarinetist, Sherman Walt, bassoonist, and Charles Kavaloski, French horn player. They will join Boston University as Adjunct Professors of Music and as a performing ensemble, to be called the Boston University Woodwind Quintet.

Each of the five will continue to hold his first-chair position with the Boston Symphony in addition to the University appointments.

GRAPHIC
NEWTON, MASS.
W. 10,000

APR 19 1973

New England Newsclip

BSO Group Aids School Scholarships

On Sunday, May 6, at 3 p.m. a benefit concert by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and their associates will be presented for the All Newton Music School Scholarship Fund.

Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Burton Fine, viola; Blanche Winogron, harpsichord; Ruth Wright, flute; Fredy Ostrovsky, violin, and Joel Moerschel, cello, will perform two works by Mozart - "The Oboe Quartet, K. 370" and the "C Major Flute Quartet, K. 631."

They will also perform "Trio No. 3 in G Major For Flute, Viola and Harpsichord" by Carl Emmanuel Bach and Loeillet's "Trio For Flute, Oboe and Harpsichord."

Tickets, at $5 for adults and $4 for children under 15, are on sale at the music school office, 321 Chestnut St., West Newton. For reservations call 527-0102 or 527-4553.

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL
MILWAUKEE, WISC.
D. 346,967 SUN. 530,805

APR 22 1973

—Journal Photo

Violinist Bo Youp Hwang, soon to leave Milwaukee for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the soloist in Haydn's C major concerto in a concert by the Ars Musica Chamber Orchestra at 3 p.m. today at the Milwaukee Art Center. Gerald Stanick (right) will conduct.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 52,61

2 4 1973

New England Newsclip

A new trumpeter joins BSO

Rolf Smedvig, who is a 20-year-old student at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, has been named assistant principal trumpet in the Boston Symphony, as of the beginning of the 1973-74 season. Born in Seattle, he first played in that city at the age of 13, and for three summers participated in BU's Tanglewood Institute as a member of its Young Artists Program. Since 1970, when he entered the university, he has studied wtih Armando Ghitalla, principal trumpet of the BSO, been the holder of a fellowship at the Berkshire Music Center, and is currently a member of the Empire Brass Quintet.

THE BOSTON HERALD
Traveler
D. 210,510 S. 260,961

APR 24 1972

New England Newsclip

Social Chatter

by Alison Arnold

Pre-Symphony Luncheon Goes East

THE ORIENT, so much in the news these days, was the theme for the decorations at the final Pre-Symphony Luncheon at Horticultural Hall, Friday. And since the Symphony's new music advisor, Seiji Ozawa, is Japanese, colorful paper dragons and Japanese lanterns festooned the hall.

There were exquisite Japanese flower arrangements of iris and magnolia blossoms, and on each luncheon table was a primrose plant. As an extra special touch, a tiny pink Japanese parasol was perched on each pastry. Mrs. Howard W. Davis of Concord was being congratulated for the Japanese decor.

Mrs. George Lee Sargent, chairman of the Council of Friends of the Symphony, had at her table the Rev. Edward G. Murray, a trustee of the orchestra, Roger Voisin, a trumpet player of the orchestra, and Mrs. Voisin, Mrs. William J. Mixter, chairman of Areas for the Council of Friends, Thomas Morris, assistant manager for business affairs, Andrew Raeburn, program editor and assistant to the music director, and Forrester C. Smith, director of development.

Mrs. William D. Manice Jr. and Mrs. M. Ducey Ryerson are co-chairmen of the luncheon series. The decorating committee for the luncheon included members from the Andover and Concord areas. They included Mrs. Philip Allen, Mrs. Joseph Daly, Mrs. James Grew, Mrs. N. Penrose Hallowell, Mrs. Hart Leavitt, Mrs. Alexander Warren, Mrs. Carl DeSuze, Mrs. Anatole A. Haemmerle, Mrs. E. Neal Hartley, Mrs. Anson W. Krickl, Mrs. William B. Moses Jr. and Mrs. Benjamin L. Wilson.

Among the many others at the luncheon were Mrs. Edwin T. Green, Mrs. Robert Watson, Mrs. Jack Parker, Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, Mrs. Harris Fahnstock, Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Victor Jones, Mrs. Charles F. Eaton Jr., Mrs. Alfred Willmann, Mrs. C. Chauncey Gray, Mrs. Albert Goodhue, Mrs. Robert Kistner, Mrs. John T. Grandin Jr., Mrs. Donald Sinclair and Mrs. Henry Hall Jr.

BSO and its traveling musicians

89.

One of the world's great cultural landmarks is rarely available to tourists visiting Boston on the fly.

So the Boston Symphony Orchestra buses over to Logan Airport every year and flies off to bring its music to audiences that would have little chance of ever getting tickets to Symphony Hall.

The Orchestra's itinerary often includes the capitals of the world, but it also embraces such cultural hinterlands as Providence, Brooklyn and Columbus.

When it goes off on chartered planes the orchestra follows precise, but unusual, logistics. It never flies all its 105 musicians and their 16,000 pounds of instruments and musical scores in one plane, although there'd be plenty of room in the newer jets.

Laning Humphrey, for many years the Orchestra's publicist and historian, explained "the practice began when the BSO first began flying – in the days when aviation safety was not as well-recognized as it is today.

"It was then arranged that half the personnel and half the instruments go in one plane and the other half in a second plane. In the event of a disaster the orchestra would still be able to put on a scheduled concert."

It took 92 years to develop the BSO, as Bostonians proudly refer to their Orchestra. Its musicians are among the world's most talented. Their instruments are of inestimable value.

"The BSO is not easily replaceable," said Humphrey.

Boston Symphony has twice been on concert tours to Europe – in 1952 and in 1956 – and once, in 1960, to Asia. Otherwise, its annual concert tours are within the United States.

But is has traveled since its beginning.

In the Orchestra's second season (1882-83) 26 rehearsals and concerts were given in Boston, and 25 outside Boston: six at Harvard University's Sanders Theatre, three each in Salem, Providence and Worcester, two each in Portland, Lowell, Fitchburg and New Bedford, and one each in Newport and Lynn.

The Orchestra went abroad for the first time in 1952 at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom and gave concerts in 11 cities.

Humphrey recalled that on that trip 21 years ago half the Orchestra went by plane and the other half by boat.

In 1956, the Boston Symphony Orchestra became the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union with two concerts in Leningrad and three in Moscow.

Its other concerts in Europe that year included one beneath the famed Rose Window in the Cathedral at Chartres to benefit the maintenance fund of that ancient church. Again that year, half the Orchestra went by plane and the other half by boat.

Twenty-five foreign board members of the Orchestra revisited their homelands during the six-weeks tour of 13 European countries.

In the long history of the Orchestra only one woman has ever had the distinction of being a principal player – the player who sits in the first chair, is in charge of that musical section and plays the exposed parts, or the solos..

She is Mrs. Dorio Anthony Dwyer, a flutist, who had to miss the 1956 European-Russian trip because – of all reasons – she was pregnant. Her seat was occupied temporarily by the associate flutist principal, James Pappoutsakis.

Mrs. Dwyer is one of eight women among the 93 male mucisians in the 1973 BSO. The other women are four violinists, one cellist, one piccolo player and one harpist.

There are other distinctions within the Orchestra, including where a musician sits. Humphrey recalled one occasion when a photographer was taking a picture of the entire orchestra.

Observing there would be better pictorial balance if a musician from the front row sat in the third row the musician said, "I can't do that. My friends would think I've been demoted."

In 1960, the Orchestra went in two sections to the west coast and, again in separate planes, across the Pacific for an eight-week tour of concerts, including two in Taiwan, 22 in Japan, three in the Phillipines, seven in Australia, and two in New Zealand.

The Boston Pops Orchestra, which more people get to hear because of its public concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, is an offshoot of the Symphony.

LANING HUMPHREY

It was organized in 1885 – four years after the BSO – to keep the BSO members from scattering around the world playing for other musical aggregations during the summer,

The Cleveland Press
D. 375,653

APR 1 0 1973

Rosen is soloist at concert here

Jerome Rosen, former member of the Cleveland Orchestra and now assistant concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, will be the guest soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra Sunday at the Tri-C Metro campus auditorium at 3 p.m.

Rosen will play the Mozart Violin Concerto No. 5 in A Major ("Turkish") and the orchestra, conducted by William Slocum, will play Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" and the Brahms First Symphony.

Tickets will be available at the door at $2.50 and Golden Agers $1.50.

SCHOOL MUSICIAN
DIRECTOR AND TEACHER
JOLIET, ILL.
MONTHLY 15,000

APR 1973

Five Boston Symphony Men Join Faculty at Boston University

Five distinguished musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra have accepted appointments to Boston University, effective September 1973, Norman Dello Joio, Acting Dean of the University's School of Fine and Applied Arts announced today.

The five, all principal players with the Symphony, are Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flautist, Ralph Gomberg, oboist, Harold Wright, clarinetist, Sherman Walt, bassoonist, and Charles Kavaloski, French horn player. They will join Boston University as Adjunct Professors of Music and as a performing ensemble, to be called the Boston University Woodwind Quintet.

Each of the five will continue to hold his first-chair position with the Boston Symphony in addition to the University appointments.

GRAPHIC
NEWTON, MASS.
W. 10,000

APR 1 9 1973

New England Newsclip

BSO Group Aids School Scholarships

On Sunday, May 6, at 3 p.m. a benefit concert by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and their associates will be presented for the All Newton Music School Scholarship Fund.

Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Burton Fine, viola; Blanche Winogron, harpsichord; Ruth Wright, flute; Fredy Ostrovsky, violin, and Joel Moerschel, cello, will perform two works by Mozart - "The Oboe Quartet, K. 370" and the "C Major Flute Quartet, K. 631."

They will also perform "Trio No. 3 in G Major For Flute, Viola and Harpsichord" by Carl Emmanuel Bach and Loeillet's "Trio For Flute, Oboe and Harpsichord."

Tickets, at $5 for adults and $4 for children under 15, are on sale at the music school office, 321 Chestnut St., West Newton. For reservations call 527-0102 or 527-4553.

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL
MILWAUKEE, WISC.
D. 346,967 SUN. 530,805

APR 2 2 1973

—Journal Photo

Violinist Bo Youp Hwang, soon to leave Milwaukee for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the soloist in Haydn's C major concerto in a concert by the Ars Musica Chamber Orchestra at 3 p.m. today at the Milwaukee Art Center. Gerald Stanick (right) will conduct.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
APR 23 1973
New England Newsclip

A 'Celebration'

Venice's musical voice glows again in Boston

By Louis Snyder

Boston Symphony's Spectrum Concerts, under the direction of Michael Tilson Thomas who originated them last season, have come to an end this year with "Venice — A Musical Celebration." And once again local listeners are in Mr. Thomas's debt for a series of four programs of music old, new, and rare, put together with skill and imagination.

One is never quite sure what he is going to find going on at Symphony Hall in this series — brass in the balconies, or Steve Reich on the stage — but it is never dull, which cannot always be said about some more formally constituted concert occasions.

The "Venice" event, last Friday and Saturday evenings, had two blue festival banners from Peggy Guggenheim's Grand Canal palazzo as onstage decoration (courtesy of the Museum of Fine Arts, and this time the orchestra's dress was confined to white uppers and dark lowers — no gondoliers' get-ups. The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, which in Part I, like some instrumental sections of the BSO, appeared and reappeared in various parts of the hall, wore somber black choir robes.

Solemnity was certainly not the keynote of the music, however. Ecclesiastical though they were, the shining Canzone for brass, the full voiced choruses, lush excerpts from Symphoniae Sacrae for winds, strings, and voice, and the organ intonations, spaced through the continuous first half, made Venice's religious voice glow with the same beauty and elegance that the fabled city does itself.

Traffic control

As Mr. Thomas pointed out in his customary spoken program notes, the composers represented during the evening — Giovanni Gabrieli, Schuetz, Vivaldi, and Stravinsky (in a composition of his own and a Bach arrangement) — employed the extraordinary acoustical properties of Venice's Church of San Marco to great antiphonal advantage. Thus, in the artfully related vocal and instrumental numbers which followed one another successively in the program's first part, Symphony Hall's own famed acoustical qualities were put to good use by Mr. Thomas by means of a mobile traffic pattern which involved most of the musicians, most of the time. Except, of course, organist Berj Zamkochian, whose sonorous contributions were made from the same spot all evening.

Singers and instrumentalists moved onstage and offstage, to the sides of the first balcony, forward and to the rear of the auditorium, and Mr. Thomas himself turned this way and that as the situation demanded. It all worked very well, with results gratifying to the ear, which was its purpose, and a happy absence of traffic tie-ups or confusion, which might have happened with any less rehearsal. For anyone who could not be in Venice in the late 1500's or middle-to-late 1600's, the resultant sound could be accepted as a satisfying approximation.

Stravinsky's 20th-century "Canticum Sacrum," dedicated to the city of Venice and its patron saint, Mark, and the arrangement of Bach's "Vom Himmel Hoch," ("From highest heaven") made up the second half of the evening, during which, until the end, everyone remained more or less stationary. This despite the fact that the late composer's paean to his favorite city, lovingly projected by Mr. Thomas and his forces, and admirably sung by tenor Kenneth Riegel and baritone David Evitts, falls easily on only the most sophisticated ears and sensibilities.

It was the audience's turn to join the action in "Vom Himmel Hoch," Mr. Thomas having previously invited listeners to become singers or hummers of this rousing Bach-Stravinsky outpouring of faith. A majority rose to their feet and swelled the chorus, at the conclusion of which everyone applauded everyone else, giving substance to a 1770 remark by Dr. Charles Burney (quoted by Anthony Gishford in his book, "Grand Opera"): ". . . . the common people of Venice sing in . . . a cultured, noble manner as compared with the same class elsewhere."

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
APR 24 1973
New England Newsclip

In Concert

Aural Celebration

By Peter M. Knapp

"Venice — A Musical Celebration" was the theme chosen for the last of this season's three Spectrum concerts by Michael Tilson Thomas and the Boston Symphony.

~~And a~~ celebration it was, of some of the sonic splendors composed for the reverberant interior of St. Mark's Basilica during the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries, and the later homage of Stravinsky to one of his favorite cities. Saturday night's program, with its emphasis on ceremonial and liturgical music, also was an appropriate pre-Easter celebration.

For the occasion, Thomas had the stage wall decked with banners of white, black and blue, commissioned by Peggy Guggenheim to be hung before her Venetian palazzo on festival days. For polychoral and antiphonal effects, he deployed choristers and instrumental ensembles around the hall — brass choirs answering each other from the first balconies; choral groups on stage and in the various corners. The processions and redeployments of singers and players were part of the "ceremony", but it also became something of a game of musical chairs, eventually leaving the stage empty but for Thomas and organist Berj Zamkochian, whose playing contributed so much to the success of the event.

But it was primarily a celebration of the aural rather than the visual sense. For the first half of his program Thomas put together a shrewdly selected sampling of music by Giovanni Gabrieli (1555-1612), Heinrich Schuetz (1585-1672) and Antonio Vivaldi (1675-1741). There were instrumental pieces, choral works and elaborate mixtures of both, performed without a break with linking organ passages (sometimes providing a harmonic shock from abrupt changes to different tonalities).

Included were some extraordinarily opulent compositions, whose calculated aural splendor, layering of sound and spatial qualities perfectly suited the magnificence of the Adriatic city and its plundering merchant-princes.

Among the most striking were the majestic brass intonations of Gabrieli's Canzon duodecimi toni a 10 (No. 4), with its orotund trombone base and dazzling fanfare motifs; and the complex instrumental-choral "Es ging ein Saemann aus" of Schuetz with its brilliant and contrasting sections and groupings. And with all the shuffling about, this demanding music was vividly performed, a few mishaps in the brass or occasional mushiness by the Tanglewood Festival Chorus aside, and audience reaction was enthusiastic.

After intermission, Thomas turned to two Stravinsky works, the 1955 serial-based "Canticum sacrum ad honorem Sancti Marchi nominis," for which tenor Kenneth Riegel and bass David Evitts were soloists in this crisp performance, and Stravinsky's arrangement of Bach's chorale variations on "Von Himmel hoch da komm' ich her," designed as a companion piece for Venice. The variations, with their tiers of canons and fastidious orchestration, provided an exhilarating windup to this inventively conceived program even though the chorale is a Christmas song, and Thomas couldn't resist the gimmick of having the audience sing along with the final three stanzas.

The Boston Globe
(EVENING)
D. 195,032
APR 23 1973
New England Newsclip

MICHAEL STEINBERG

Spectrum well known; (it looked better, too)

Friday night's Boston Symphony Spectrum concert, presided over by Michael Tilson Thomas, was of Venetian music, and it was a more controlled event that its predecessors this season. It looked better. The stage was decorated with a pair of the handsome Timothy Hennessy banners commissioned by Peggy Guggenheim for her palazzo in Venice, and the men in the orchestra, presumably out of deference to the predominantly sacred character of the Good Friday program, wore white shirts instead of the usual hideous blue. Actually I still fail to see that shirtsleeves improve the concerts. If the players' comfort is the issue, it should equally be considered at regular concerts then some solution found that does not make the players look as though they forgot to finish dressing.

As to what was offered the ear, the program was skillfully put together — organ intonations, bass pieces, and motets by Giovanni Gabrieli, choruses by Gabrieli's pupli, Schuetz, and Vivaldi's beautiful "Al santo sepolcro" Sinfonia in B minor, for the first half; the "Canticum sacrum" in honor of St. Mark and the arrangement of Bach's "Vom Himel hoch" Variations by the elective Venetian, Stravinsky, for the second — and the coy game of unannounced extras was dropped. Thomas spoke to the audience, but only twice, briefly, and fairly helpfully (sense still gets sacrificed sometimes to rapture and the desire to charm).

In a way, the "Canticum sacrum" of 1955 now sounds like sketches for the two richer works that followed it, "Agon" and "Threni;" still, it has an austere dignity and a feeling for economy that command the greatest respect and interest. I hope that Thomas will soon find his way to conducting "Threni" and also "A Sermon, a Narrative and a Prayer" (both unheard in Boston). He does that music with unusual musical and technical skill, and Friday's performance of the "Canticum," with John Oliver's Tanglewood Festival Chorus, and with tenor Kenneth Riegel and baritone David Evitts as uncommonly fine soloists, was impressive.

"Von Himmel hoch" is a most Stravinskian mixture of reverence with haughtiness (S. wrote in the score, "Mit der Genehmigung des Meisters," with the Master's consent), wanting just a little more finesse than it got Friday. Taking a reprise of the plain four-part harmonization of the hymn and inviting the audience to sing proved a miscalculation: Three verses of enthusiastic congregational singing, fun to do and nice to hear, in sheer physical weight annihilate Bach's and Stravinsky's complex, delicately scored variations.

The presentation of the hour of older Venetian music was a little off, too. Thomas meant to offer not just a series of pieces but a cohesive pageant, and that was an interesting idea. When, however, you perform a dozen and a half piece with never more than five seconds silence between it gets to be a bit like forced feeding. It was right, too, to have players and singers in various parts of the hall for these multi layered antiphonal pieces, but the constant walking about during the music threatened to become as much of a show as the show itself. Berj Zamkochian, though handicapped by a hopelessly inappropriate, fat-sounding instrument, is a fine organist, and the brass playing was light and brilliant. The chorus, except for some reason in Schuetz's "Cantate Domino," sounded scrawny (and its German was awful), and Thomas's conducting of the vocal pieces seemed crude, especially given the standards set here in this repertory not going to take in a short by Thomas Dunn, John Ferris, and John Harbison.

Two players worth watching: pianist Robert Merfeld and violinist Miklos Szenthelyi. Merfeld, 27, created extraordinary life around the fine, if slightly stand-offish Schumann-playing of Arnold Steinhardt on the violin and the viola at Paine Hall, Harvard, Saturday night. He will be heard there again Thursday evening as a member of the Apple Hill Chamber Players in a program of Mozart, Debussy, Brahms, and Crumb. Szenthelyi, 22, played Beethoven and Brahms Sonatas ("Spring" and D minor) and Bartok's Romanian Dances with the pianist, Veronica Jochum, at the Gardner yesterday. He is musical, well-mannered, and violinistically expert, though he seemed better at playing than at listening to his partner's warm, generally relaxed music-making. Sunday, June 3, he returns to the Gardner for a recital of unaccompanied violin music, and that should be interesting.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
APR 23 1973
New England Newsclip

A 'Celebration'

Venice's musical voice glows again in Boston

By Louis Snyder

Boston Symphony's Spectrum Concerts, under the direction of Michael Tilson Thomas who originated them last season, have come to an end this year with "Venice — A Musical Celebration." And once again local listeners are in Mr. Thomas's debt for a series of four programs of music old, new, and rare, put together with skill and imagination.

One is never quite sure what he is going to find going on at Symphony Hall in this series — brass in the balconies, or Steve Reich on the stage — but it is never dull, which cannot always be said about some more formally constituted concert occasions.

The "Venice" event, last Friday and Saturday evenings, had two blue festival banners from Peggy Guggenheim's Grand Canal palazzo as onstage decoration (courtesy of the Museum of Fine Arts, and this time the orchestra's dress was confined to white uppers and dark lowers — no gondoliers' get-ups. The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, which in Part I, like some instrumental sections of the BSO, appeared and reappeared in various parts of the hall, wore somber black choir robes.

Solemnity was certainly not the keynote of the music, however. Ecclesiastical though they were, the shining Canzone for brass, the full voiced choruses, lush excerpts from Symphoniae Sacrae for winds, strings, and voice, and the organ intonations, spaced through the continuous first half, made Venice's religious voice glow with the same beauty and elegance that the fabled city does itself.

Traffic control

As Mr. Thomas pointed out in his customary spoken program notes, the composers represented during the evening — Giovanni Gabrieli, Schuetz, Vivaldi, and Stravinsky (in a composition of his own and a Bach arrangement) — employed the extraordinary acoustical properties of Venice's Church of San Marco to great antiphonal advantage. Thus, in the artfully related vocal and instrumental numbers which followed one another successively in the program's first part, Symphony Hall's own famed acoustical qualities were put to good use by Mr. Thomas by means of a mobile traffic pattern which involved most of the musicians, most of the time. Except, of course, organist Berj Zamkochian, whose sonorous contributions were made from the same spot all evening.

Singers and instrumentalists moved onstage and offstage, to the sides of the first balcony, forward and to the rear of the auditorium, and Mr. Thomas himself turned this way and that as the situation demanded. It all worked very well, with results gratifying to the ear, which was its purpose, and a happy absence of traffic tie-ups or confusion, which might have happened with any less rehearsal. For anyone who could not be in Venice in the late 1500's or middle-to-late 1600's, the resultant sound could be accepted as a satisfying approximation.

Stravinsky's 20th-century "Canticum Sacrum," dedicated to the city of Venice and its patron saint, Mark, and the arrangement of Bach's "Vom Himmel Hoch," ("From highest heaven") made up the second half of the evening, during which, until the end, everyone remained more or less stationary. This despite the fact that the late composer's paean to his favorite city, lovingly projected by Mr. Thomas and his forces, and admirably sung by tenor Kenneth Riegel and baritone David Evitts, falls easily on only the most sophisticated ears and sensibilities.

It was the audience's turn to join the action in "Vom Himmel Hoch," Mr. Thomas having previously invited listeners to become singers or hummers of this rousing Bach-Stravinsky outpouring of faith. A majority rose to their feet and swelled the chorus, at the conclusion of which everyone applauded everyone else, giving substance to a 1770 remark by Dr. Charles Burney (quoted by Anthony Gishford in his book, "Grand Opera"): ". . . . the common people of Venice sing in . . . a cultured, noble manner as compared with the same class elsewhere."

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
APR 24 1973
New England Newsclip

In Concert

Aural Celebration

By Peter M. Knapp

"Venice — A Musical Celebration" was the theme chosen for the last of this season's three Spectrum concerts by Michael Tilson Thomas and the Boston Symphony.

~~And a~~ celebration it was, of some of the sonic splendors composed for the reverberant interior of St. Mark's Basilica during the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries, and the later homage of Stravinsky to one of his favorite cities. Saturday night's program, with its emphasis on ceremonial and liturgical music, also was an appropriate pre-Easter celebration.

For the occasion, Thomas had the stage wall decked with banners of white, black and blue, commissioned by Peggy Guggenheim to be hung before her Venetian palazzo on festival days. For polychoral and antiphonal effects, he deployed choristers and instrumental ensembles around the hall — brass choirs answering each other from the first balconies; choral groups on stage and in the various corners. The processions and redeployments of singers and players were part of the "ceremony", but it also became something of a game of musical chairs, eventually leaving the stage empty but for Thomas and organist Berj Zamkochian, whose playing contributed so much to the success of the event.

But it was primarily a celebration of the aural rather than the visual sense. For the first half of his program Thomas put together a shrewdly selected sampling of music by Giovanni Gabrieli (1555-1612), Heinrich Schuetz (1585-1672) and Antonio Vivaldi (1675-1741). There were instrumental pieces, choral works and elaborate mixtures of both, performed without a break with linking organ passages (sometimes providing a harmonic shock from abrupt changes to different tonalities).

Included were some extraordinarily opulent compositions, whose calculated aural splendor, layering of sound and spatial qualities perfectly suited the magnificence of the Adriatic city and its plundering merchant-princes.

Among the most striking were the majestic brass intonations of Gabrieli's Canzon duodecimi toni a 10 (No. 4), with its orotund trombone base and dazzling fanfare motifs; and the complex instrumental-choral "Es ging ein Saemann aus" of Schuetz with its brilliant and contrasting sections and groupings. And with all the shuffling about, this demanding music was vividly performed, a few mishaps in the brass or occasional mushiness by the Tanglewood Festival Chorus aside, and audience reaction was enthusiastic.

After intermission, Thomas turned to two Stravinsky works, the 1955 serial-based "Canticum sacrum ad honorem Sancti Marchi nominis," for which tenor Kenneth Riegel and bass David Evitts were soloists in this crisp performance, and Stravinsky's arrangement of Bach's chorale variations on "Von Himmel hoch da komm' ich her," designed as a companion piece for Venice. The variations, with their tiers of canons and fastidious orchestration, provided an exhilarating windup to this inventively conceived program even though the chorale is a Christmas song, and Thomas couldn't resist the gimmick of having the audience sing along with the final three stanzas.

The Boston Globe
(EVENING)
D. 195,032
APR 23 1973
New England Newsclip

MICHAEL STEINBERG

Spectrum well known; (it looked better, too)

Friday night's Boston Symphony Spectrum concert, presided over by Michael Tilson Thomas, was of Venetian music, and it was a more controlled event that its predecessors this season. It looked better. The stage was decorated with a pair of the handsome Timothy Hennessy banners commissioned by Peggy Guggenheim for her palazzo in Venice, and the men in the orchestra, presumably out of deference to the predominantly sacred character of the Good Friday program, wore white shirts instead of the usual hideous blue. Actually I still fail to see that shirtsleeves improve the concerts. If the players' comfort is the issue, it should equally be considered at regular concerts then some solution found that does not make the players look as though they forgot to finish dressing.

As to what was offered the ear, the program was skillfully put together — organ intonations, bass pieces, and motets by Giovanni Gabrieli, choruses by Gabrieli's pupli, Schuetz, and Vivaldi's beautiful "Al santo sepolcro" Sinfonia in B minor, for the first half; the "Canticum sacrum" in honor of St. Mark and the arrangement of Bach's "Vom Himel hoch" Variations by the elective Venetian, Stravinsky, for the second — and the coy game of unannounced extras was dropped. Thomas spoke to the audience, but only twice, briefly, and fairly helpfully (sense still gets sacrificed sometimes to rapture and the desire to charm).

In a way, the "Canticum sacrum" of 1955 now sounds like sketches for the two richer works that followed it, "Agon" and "Threni;" still, it has an austere dignity and a feeling for economy that command the greatest respect and interest. I hope that Thomas will soon find his way to conducting "Threni" and also "A Sermon, a Narrative and a Prayer" (both unheard in Boston). He does that music with unusual musical and technical skill, and Friday's performance of the "Canticum," with John Oliver's Tanglewood Festival Chorus, and with tenor Kenneth Riegel and baritone David Evitts as uncommonly fine soloists, was impressive.

"Von Himmel hoch" is a most Stravinskian mixture of reverence with haughtiness (S. wrote in the score, "Mit der Genehmigung des Meisters," with the Master's consent), wanting just a little more finesse than it got Friday. Taking a reprise of the plain four-part harmonization of the hymn and inviting the audience to sing proved a miscalculation: Three verses of enthusiastic congregational singing, fun to do and nice to hear, in sheer physical weight annihilate Bach's and Stravinsky's complex, delicately scored variations.

The presentation of the hour of older Venetian music was a little off, too. Thomas meant to offer not just a series of pieces but a cohesive pageant, and that was an interesting idea. When, however, you perform a dozen and a half piece with never more than five seconds silence between it gets to be a bit like forced feeding. It was right, too, to have players and singers in various parts of the hall for these multi layered antiphonal pieces, but the constant walking about during the music threatened to become as much of a show as the show itself. Berj Zamkochian, though handicapped by a hopelessly inappropriate, fat-sounding instrument, is a fine organist, and the brass playing was light and brilliant. The chorus, except for some reason in Schuetz's "Cantate Domino," sounded scrawny (and its German was awful), and Thomas's conducting of the vocal pieces seemed crude, especially given the standards set here in this repertory not going to take in a short by Thomas Dunn, John Ferris, and John Harbison.

Two players worth watching: pianist Robert Merfeld and violinist Miklos Szenthelyi. Merfeld, 27, created extraordinary life around the fine, if slightly stand-offish Schumann-playing of Arnold Steinhardt on the violin and the viola at Paine Hall, Harvard, Saturday night. He will be heard there again Thursday evening as a member of the Apple Hill Chamber Players in a program of Mozart, Debussy, Brahms, and Crumb. Szenthelyi, 22, played Beethoven and Brahms Sonatas ("Spring" and D minor) and Bartok's Romanian Dances with the pianist, Veronica Jochum, at the Gardner yesterday. He is musical, well-mannered, and violinistically expert, though he seemed better at playing than at listening to his partner's warm, generally relaxed music-making. Sunday, June 3, he returns to the Gardner for a recital of unaccompanied violin music, and that should be interesting.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264

APR 23 1973 New England Newsclip

BSO Performs Works Written for Cathedral

By DAVID NOBLE

The idea behind the "Spectrum" concert played Friday and Saturday nights by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was, literally, magnificent.

The idea was to revive the glorious music created for Venice's St. Mark's Cathedral in the late 16th century, and to perform with it some equally spectacular works Stravin-sky wrote for the same church only two decades ago.

• Concert Review

With the older music, conductor Michael Tilson Thomas made a grand show, complete with marchings of musicians up and down Symphony Hall in a way that tastefully suggested late-Renaissance religious pageantry.

The music came off a little less well however, old and new suffering from the same problems. The weak links were the BSO's wind sections and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, which bore the burden of both Gabrieli's and Stravinsky's solutions to the acoustical problems posed by the echoey cathedral.

Whatever their merits in Brahms and Beethoven's symphonies, the orchestra's wind ranks simply do not have enough agreement among themselves about tone and phrasing to make complete sense out of the finely detailed music of the 16th and 20th centuries (many of the brass players simply had trouble cutting their parts, which in the case of the old works was written for ranks of virtuosos).

The chorus sang with unity and remarkable agility, but simply did not produce enough sound to bring the renaissance's most spectacular music back to full life. The acoustics of Symphony Hall, marvelous for 19th Century symphonies, were too "good" to let Gabrieli and his posterity make their case fully; the long reverberation time of the Ventian cathedral is written into their music, and the lack of echo is particularly felt when the performers of their music are producing less than resonant tones.

Subdued — wind choirs in balconies and choruses all over the hall—pageantry and shrewd musical pacing helped the old music give a hint, if not a full demonstration, of the days of Venice's musical

Michael Tilson Thomas

(and political) glory. The Stravinsky works played after intermission, however, were not susceptible to that kind of aid: it was not attempted, and they fell a little flat.

"Canticum Sacrum" was done at a reduced dynamic scale apparently dictated by the quietness of the chorus's work. Basso David Evitts daringly sang the austere "Jesus autem" in operatic style, half Italian and half Russian, and gave that episode hauntingly sorrowful expression; the chorus was similarly affecting in the subdued "Credidi"; the rest was undercooked.

A Stravinsky orchestration of a complex Bach organ work, written as a companion piece to "Canticum Sacrum," did not demand sonic magnificence but does require thoughtful, sympathetic work by solo winds.

This was not forthcoming most of the way through, so the first minutes became hash while the later sections were merely cute.

Having the audience sing the work's familiar theme at the end was good show biz, given the circumstances, but would have been a distraction if the performance had been good.

Thomas's spoken program notes were witty and incisive at the beginning, garrulous and irritating later on in the Saturday performance.

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264

APR 14 1973 New England Newsclip

BSO's final Spectrum

Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct the final Boston Symphony Spectrum concerts — "Venice — a Musical Celebration" — on Friday and Saturday evenings, April 20 and 21 at Symphony Hall. Ceremonial music by the Gabrielis, Schuetz, Vivaldi, Stravinsky, and Bach-Stravinsky are on the program which will have tenor Kenneth Riegel, baritone David Evitts, and organist Berj Zamkochian as soloists, with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and members of the audience encouraged to join in a celebration of sacred music through the ages.

92.

Boston Symphony shuffles management

By William A. Henry 3d
Globe Staff

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1954, has been moved up to the newly created post of executive director. The new manager, responsible for the day-to-day operation of the BSO, is Thomas W. Morris, 30, assistant manager for business affairs and a professional percussionist.

Both appointments are effective immediately, trustee president Talcott M. Banks said yesterday.

Perry will continue to hold "full executive power" and will be the chief staff officer on all policy questions, Banks said. "The change was made because, in effect, the traditional position of manager has become too complex and too taxing for one man to discharge," he explained.

"There is not the slightest suggestion of Tod (Perry)'s retiring in this," Banks added. "Things are very informal at Symphony Hall, and we expect that Tod will continue to stay in close touch on day-to-day matters, and will maintain his active role in season scheduling and changes, artist selection, development and other matters."

Perry's designation as "chief executive officer," and Morris' as "chief operating officer," were announced during a trustee meeting Tuesday, Banks said.

The appointments are "internal matters that do not require a formal trustee vote," he said, "and so they were not actually approved. But the division of responsibilities arose out of several studies in which a number of trustees have been involved for some months."

Banks declined to comment on reports that David Rockefeller Jr., one of three assistant managers, will leave at the end of the season.

"David intended to stay with the Orchestra only a short time when he came to us," Banks said. "How long he wants to stay, I don't know."

THOMAS D. PERRY JR.
. . . BSO elder statesman

The Boston Globe
EVENING
APR 25 1973
New England Newsclip

Thomas D. Perry Jr. is given new title by BSO trustees

BOSTON — The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have appointed Thomas D. Perry Jr., longtime manager, to the newly created post of executive director.

Perry's title of manager and chief administrative officer has been given to Thomas W. Morris, 30, up to now the assistant manager for business affairs and a professional percussionist.

Long-range planning

The shift "puts two people in the principal administrative spot," Perry said today. He cited the increasing complexity of the job of orchestra manager as the chief reason for the executive reshuffling.

The shift officially puts Morris in charge of the day-to-day operation of the orchestra, with Perry responsible for long-range planning as well as for relations with the BSO trustees and with the musical director, Seiji Ozawa.

"We both think it's an absolutely swell arrangement," Perry said, speaking for himself and Morris.

Perry, 59, has been general manager of the BSO since 1954, when he took over from George E. Judd. In his 19 years there, the annual budget of the orchestra has more than tripled and now exceeds $4.5 million. The Boston Symphony was one of the first orchestras in the country to provide a full year's season for its members, with 40 weeks spent in Boston and eight at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Michigan native

Before coming to the BSO, Perry, a native of Grand Rapids, Mich., worked as an English teachers, an advertising executive and a manager of concert halls in Philadelphia and Boston. He began as an assistant manager with the Boston Symphony in 1946, after serving in the U.S. Navy Medical Corps.

He is married to the former Helen Roberts of Philadelphia, and they have been summer residents of West Stockbridge since 1964, when they built an award-winning house on Baker Hill there.

Perry said today that orchestra financing, always a problem for an operation as large as the BSO, has improved somewhat over the last few years.

"We're feeling somewhat optimistic," he said. "Private contributions are up, and government support is up somewhat. Our support is changing, coming from different and more numerous sources."

He said the increase in donations has not kept pace with the general inflation of the orchestra's expenses.

Ticket sales for the 1973 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Perry said, have already begun for the series' regular patrons.

He added that a complete schedule and general sales for the eight-week program, which begins July 6, would be starting very soon.

Trustee meeting

Perry's new appointment was announced at a trustees meeting last week, according to Talcott M. Banks, president of the board, and came as the result of several studies made by the BSO governing board over the last several months. Banks said the appointments are "internal matters that do not require a formal vote."

"Things are very informal at Symphony Hall," he said, "and we expect that Tod (Perry) will continue to stay in close touch on day-to-day matters, and will maintain his active role in season scheduling and changes, artist selection, development and other matters."

Thomas D. Perry Jr.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,150
APR 27 1973
New England Newsclip

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514
APR 25 1973
New England Newsclip

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
APR 28 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO appointments announced

BOSTON—Talcott M. Banks, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, today announced two new appointments in the managerial staff: Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager since 1954, has been appointed to the new post of executive director and Thomas W. Morris, of Wellesley Hills, as manager.

Perry will serve as the chief executive officer of the organization, reporting to the trustees, and being responsible for the general planning and supervision of the management, maintaining close liaison with the Music Director Seiji Ozawa, and the trustees and overseers. Morris, who is 29 years old, is presently the assistant manager in charge of business affairs and deputy treasurer. He will function as the chief operating officer, reporting to Perry, and being charged with full responsibility for the conduct of the managerial operations, staff personnel, schedules and planning, contracting and similar affairs.

Morris is a native of Rochester, New York, and a graduate of Princeton

PITTSFORD, N. Y.
BRIGHTON-PITTSFORD
POST
W. 12,000
APR 26 1973

It All Started with Toy Drum

Brighton Man Will Manage Boston Symphony

Thomas W. Morris

By Beneth Morrow

A young man who grew up in Brighton with a passion for music and a dream of playing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra has just been named manager of that prestigious Brahmin musical organization.

Thomas W. Morris, 29, the son of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Morris, Shoreham Dr., and grandson of Mr. M. Herbert Eisenhardt, and the late Mrs. Eisenhardt of East Ave., was named to the position last week.

It all started with a toy drum years ago. Not only is Morris one of the youngest managers ever named by a major orchestra, he may be unique in the country as a playing manager. He frequently takes over a percussion position when a regular member of the orchestra is absent, and he delights in joining the Boston Pops when Arthur Fiedler conducts in the Boston area.

Morris was graduated from Allendale School in 1961, and during his high school career he played in both the Rochester inter-high band and orchestra.

He studied with William Street and John Beck at Eastman, and won the coveted Albright Award from the Civic Music Association as the outstanding high school musician in the area, soloing with the Philharmonic Orchestra at the annual Youth Concert at Eastman Theater.

Although Morris had long since traded in his toy drum for better instruments, he continued to play during his years at Princeton, in both the university orchestra and marching band, and with the Trenton Symphony. Although he majored in music, he finally decided that playing for a living has its limits, and turned toward management.

Under a Ford Foundation grant, he served for two years as a managerial intern with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra from 1965-1967 when Max Rudolph was conductor there.

The orchestra was chosen by the State Department for a three-month world concert tour, and Morris and his wife, Jane, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C.R. Allison, Vick Park A, Rochester, had an unforgettable experience shepherding 130 musicians and their instruments on the grand tour.

After two years in Cincinnati Morris decided to get a business education and he earned his M.B.A. from the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce in Philadelphia. Almost unbelievably, there was an opening with the Boston Orchestra when he finished at Wharton in 1969.

He has been assistant manager and will now take over as chief operating officer charged with full responsibility for the conduct of operations, staff personnel, schedules and planning, and all contracts, with, of course, a close liaison with the new music director, Seiji Ozawa.

It's a day and night job, his father said this week, with responsibilities for the Summer program at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, television programming, and the inevitable financial difficulties of any symphony orchestra.

But also, a happy, music-filled life. Morris lives in Wellesley Hills with his wife and two small children.

MORRIS FAMILY. Musician-manager and wife, Jane, in a recent family portrait with their two small children.

Name in the News

Drummer in the counting house

When the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra named Thomas W. Morris manager and chief administrative officer last week, it was obvious to all concerned that the goal was more bang for the buck. For in addition to having his master of business administration degree from the Wharton School of Finance, the 29-year-old Morris is a professional percussionist. He quite often sits in on BSO and Pops concerts when there is need for an alternate or substitute whomper of hides or metal clangers.

* * *

The finance aspect is the key to the change, however, because the Boston Symphony is a $6.5 million-a-year business and the day-to-day money problems have to be faced along with the music. Therefore, the shift of longtime manager Thomas D. "Tod" Perry Jr. to executive director was no "kick upstairs," according to BSO officials, but only a realistic approach to the problems of the day.

"Tod is my boss," says Morris, "and he is still in charge of management. His responsibility will be in working with the new musical director, Seiji Ozawa, on long-range planning, while I will be responsible for day-to-day operations, working with the staff and planning for the season. Two other of the major orchestras are doing almost exactly the same thing we are."

* * *

Be that as it may, Morris now will be in the forefront when it comes to public recognition of management. Symphony orchestras are extremely complex organizations both musically and fiscally, and in this day of inflation, it is difficult to maintain artistic and budget standards.

Despite his youth, Morris has had solid experience in both the musical and fiscal worlds. A native of Rochester, N.Y., where his father is an attorney, he received an A.B. degree in music from Princeton in 1965 and his M.B.A. from the Wharton School in 1969. Between college and graduate school, he served two years as an administrative intern in the arts with the Cincinnati Symphony on a Ford Foundation fellowship.

Morris joined the Boston Symphony in 1969 as an administrative assistant in the treasurer's office, and was named assistant treasurer in January 1970 and assistant manager for business affairs in September 1971, the post he held until his elevation last week.

* * *

He is married to the former Jane Allison of Rochester ("not a childhood sweetheart, but I knew she was there"), and they have a daughter, Elisa, almost 5, and a son, Charles, 2½. For the past four years, the family has been renting a cottage on Stockbridge Bowl, which they will also do this summer, but the thought of owning a place of their own has crossed their minds.

Morris is naturally quite excited about his new position, but there are no quick plans for revolutionizing either Symphony Hall or Tanglewood. "The orchestra is on the verge of a new era," he says, "with a new director, and everyone is terribly enthusiastic and terribly positive. Our biggest need is to find new sources of revenue both from private and federal sources."

Mr. Morris: Mixing music and money.

Since it is impossible for orchestras to increase the size of their concert halls, it is necessary from time to time to up the prices of tickets. BSO officials have been careful about this, because they fear there is a point of no return and they also worry that the average man will not be able to afford good music. "We are raising the price of all Shed tickets 50 cents this summer," said Morris, "but we will keep the lawn prices at $3 and make admission to the open rehearsals $3."

* * *

Much thought is also being given to finding ways to increase the usage of Tanglewood for more than the eight-week season. Management is considering the popular music concerts which drew large crowds on several occasions but were dropped last season while the idea was reassessed. The BSO wants to make sure that the popular artists it brings in also do not bring a riotous aspect to staid Tanglewood. All of the popular artists are weighed with the same care as if they were applying to a bank for a loan.

But Tanglewood has done very well the past two seasons, and Morris expects that this summer also will be a good one. He is working hard to accomplish this. When asked what his hobbies are, what he does to relieve the tensions of the job, he answers simply: "Music. I have a fanatical love of music."

Au Courant Des Arts
OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

By: PHOEBE BOURDEAU
BOX 181, NEW CASTLE, NEW HAMPSHIRE 03854

UNION LEADER
MANCHESTER, N. H.
D. 21,008
APR 7 1973
New England Newsclip

UNH Events

Tomorrow at 3 p.m. in Johnson Theatre, Paul Creative Arts Center, Dr. Henry Wing, tenor and head of the University Voice Department will present a recital assisted by Ruth Edwards at the piano and Jeanine Kelley, contralto. Also, at 8 p.m. the same day, Joan Stolar will present a Harpsichord Recital in Bratton Hall, Paul Arts Center.

April 9-14 are the dates for the Children's Theatre Repertory, "Much Too Much," Funnied Fairy Tales," and "The Zim-Zam Birthday Jam." For further information call 862-2290.

Phyllis Curtin, internationally renowned soprano, and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will perform works of Bach, Schubert, Stravinsky and others at 8 p.m. in Johnson Theatre. This concert is sponsored by the University Blue & White Series.

UNION LEADER
MANCHESTER, N. H.
D. 21,008
APR 13 1973
New England Newsclip

Soprano Triumphs at UNH Concert

Miss Curtin Rates Bravos

By PHOEBE BOURDEAU

The vital beauty and consummate talent of Phyllis Curtin, soprano, supported by the skill and musicianship of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players furnished the audience in Johnson Theatre, UH, with some of the finest artistic interpretation to be heard on concert stage. The large audience expressed their appreciation with many "Bravos" and three curtain calls.

The concert, fifth in the Blue and White Concert Series was as diverse a mixture of styles and periods as one could want, with the exception of the opening J. S. Bach arias from the Cantatas No. 199 and No. 187 respectively.

Both "Stumme Seufzer" and Gott versorget" are quiet, serious works, demanding a bit more warm-up than they received by these artists. The oboe and continuo accompaniment were often not together, "Pro style" and Miss Curtin also exhibited a certain diffidence no doubt because the range of these works do not capture the brilliance of which she is capable. One could be just as pleased were these two arias not performed, for the remainder of the program was both contrasting and complementing enough without them.

The Sounds of Music

The Shostakovich "Romances on words of Alexander Block, op. 127" were the intellectual and artistic high point of the evening. Miss Curtin's tender, sensitive interpretation of "We were Together" and "The City Sleeps" was dramatically opposed with the gathering force of "The Storm" and the exclamatory phrase in "The Music": "Oh, how much music is with God and what sounds are on earth:" Only an artist of Mis Curtin's stature with an orchestra of the quality of BSO Players could have given a justifiable performance of these difficult and beautiful poems.

Villa-Lobos' "Suite for Voice and Violin" ended the first half of the program on a whimsical note. "The Young Girl and the Song," "I Want to be Happy" and "The Countrywoman" were a trio of gypsy-style, humorous expressions—expressions, indeed, being the word to best describe these songs of vocalises with few words. Especially amusing was "The Countrywoman" describing her rifle and knife with screams and "pow-pow's."

PHOEBE BOURDEAU

The second half of the performance opened with Schubert's "Auf dem Strom" (On the River) which describes a parting, a ride on the river away from the beloved, and the pain caused by the parting. Ryan Edwards, pianist and Charles Kavaloski, French Horn accompanied Miss Curtin and to them belongs the credit for their fine style of German lieder accompaniment. The sweeping legato vocal line so characteristic in Schubert's works was not to be found in Miss Curtin's style. This artist's fiery interpretation was disconnected in sound and emotion from the river of gentle piano arpeggios and muted, mellow French horn.

"L'Histoire du Soldat" (Soldier's Story), a Concert Suite by Igor Stravinsky followed the Schubert and was performed by all the chamber players.

This bagatelle of delightful musical ideas was light-hearted and employed a child-like, but sophisticated playfulness. "The Soldier's March," "Pastorale," "Three Dances," "Devil's Dance and Triumphant March" possessed to lesser degree the elements which make Stravinsky's ballet works so beloved. Truly these dance-like sounds and stories were a perfect cap to an evening of unusual and difficult art.

The American-Statesman
AUSTIN, TEXAS
SAT & SUN. 73,021
APR 22 1973

The Dallas Morning News
DALLAS, TEXAS
D. 242,948 SUN. 384,097
APR 23 1973

Musicians Plan Program

AUSTIN—The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, which is composed of the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a free lecture-demonstration May 2 at the University of Texas.

The 12-member group includes the Symphony's concertmaster and principal violist, violoncellist, bassist, timpanist, trumpeter, trombonist, French hornist, flutist, oboist, clarinetist and bassoonist.

The program is open to any interested student or personnel of bands or orchestras. Those attending the clinics are urged to bring their own instruments.

Boston Symphony Musicians

UT Sponsors Boston Chamber Players

After a concert by the Boston Symphony Chambers Players last season, the Harvard Crimson observed:

"It is a very rare thing to attend a concert and come away with a feeling of complete satisfaction . . . . .

."But occasionally an entire concert can be felt as a highly polished, sparkling gem, utterly without defect, and such a one was that of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players . . . ."

The main concert series of the Chamber Players, comprised of the first-desk players of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, is at Sanders Theatre of Harvard University each season.

In addition, the 12-member ensemble appears in concerts across America and on tour around the world.

The Chamber Players will be in Austin for a concert May 1 in Hogg Auditorium at 8 p.m. as the final event of this season's Chamber Music Celebration, sponsored by the UT Department of Music and the Cultural Entertainment Committee.

Exploring the vast range of music for ensemble, the group will play Beethoven's String Trio, Op. 9, No. 1; John Ferritto's 1970 composition "Frammento," Op. 10, for trumpet, vibraphone and double bass; Hindemith's woodwind quintet "Kleine Kammermusik," Op. 24, No. 2; and Beethoven's Septet in E-Flat for Strings and Winds, Op. 20.

The Chamber Players are musically more flexible than a single ensemble with a fixed number of performers, thus allowing them to take advantage of the wide variety of instrumental combinations available among the Orchestra's virtuoso principal players. Their wide repertoire includes music that is infrequently performed as well as works for the more standard chamber music ensembles.

Among the principals of the Boston Symphony that make up the Chamber Players is Everett Firth, principal timpanist and head of the percussion section. A graduate of the New England Conservatory, Firth was the youngest player to be appointed a principal in the Boston Symphony since 1898. The Harvard Crimson said last season that he "played with stunning, literally breathtaking technique on a variety of percussion instruments." Currently on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, Firth has concentrated on the highly varied problems and techniques of the percussion player and has written many books on the subject.

Armando Ghitalla, described in the same review as "brilliant and versatile" on the trumpet, studied with William Vacchiano at the Juilliard School of Music. He has been a member of the New York City Center Opera and Ballet Company, the Houston Symphony and was soloist with Paul Lavelle's Band of America. He is currently on the faculties of Boston University and the Berkshire Music Center.

Trombone principal William Gibson studied with C. E. Gierhard and Marcel Tabuteau at the Curtis Institue of Music. A former member of several nationally renowned orchestras, the versatile first trombonist devotes his spare time to designing brass instruments, building hi-fi equipment, and, at the behest of his sons, managing a Little League baseball team and working with the Boy Scouts. He also teaches at the New England Conservatory and the Berkshire Center.

Henry Portnoi, holder of the principal bass chair, first studied violin with Nicholas Kassman and bass with Max Kunze and attended the Berkshire Center and Curtis Institute. He is a former member of the Indianapolis and Pittsburgh Orchestras and he toured South America as a member of Leopold Stokowski's All-American Orchestra. A member of the Boston Symphony for 30 years, he teaches at Boston University and is presently working on a method book on the double bass.

While the Boston Symphony Chamber Players are in Austin, they will also conduct special clinics on May 2 in Music Building East. The session will open with a lecture-demonstration that includes a performance of Stravinsky's "L'Histoire du soldat" at 10 a.m. and will then divide into separate clinics for woodwind, string, brass and percussion. Open to all interested persons at no charge, the clinics are sponsored by the Department of Music with the cooperation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Admission for the May 1 concert is $3. Admission is half-price on CEC and Solo Artist Series season tickets by advance sale and free on UT blanket tax in limited supply by advance drawing.

Ticket sales and drawing begin Wednesday at the University Box Office in Hogg Auditorium.

The box office is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. through Friday. Reservations or information may be obtained by telephoning 471-1444.

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 303,041 SUN. 383,214
APR 29 1973

Jules Eskin, Burton Fine and Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein are three of the 12-member Boston Symphony Chamber Players who appear here Thursday at 8:15 p.m. in Jones Hall in a Houston Civic Music Assn. concert.

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 303,041 SUN. 383,214
APR 29 1973

* * *

A distinguished chamber group from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to town this week when Houston Civic Music Assn. presents the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in concert Thursday at 8:15 p.m. in Jones Hall.

Three of the group's members are no strangers to Houston, having played at various times with the Symphony here. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, principal clarinet Harold Wright and principal trumpet Armando Ghitalla all spent time in the Houston orchestra.

On their performance here this week, the ensemble will play Mozart's Flute Quartet in D, K. 285; Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat," and Beethoven's Septet in E-flat, Op. 20.

* * *

Dallas Times Herald
D. 232,064 SUN. 275,535
APR 29 1973

Monday

Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Final concert of Dallas Civic Music Association. Program: Beethoven, Trio for Strings, Opus 9, No. 1; Ingolf Dahl, Ductino Concertante for Flute and Percussion; Hindemith, "Kleine Kammermusik," Opus 24, No. 2; Beethoven. Septet in E-flat. McFarlin Auditorium, 8:15 p.m. Phone 369-2210.

Borrowing an artist from the Boston Chamber Players, the Music Guild of Houston will stage its final subscription concert of the season Wednesday at 8:15 p.m. in the home of the Andre A. Crispins at 6040 Glen Cove.

Principal French horn of the Boston Symphony, Charles Kavaloski, will join Houston Symphony Concertmaster Ronald Patterson and UH faculty pianist Albert Hirsh in wors by Tartini, Persichetti, Beethoven and Brahms.

The concert is open to subscribers only, and memberships are sold out for the season.

94.

MEMBERS OF 12-PIECE BOSTON SYMPHONY CHAMBER PLAYERS
Cellist Jules Eskin, violist Burton Fine, concertmaster Silverstein

Boston Concertmaster Likes Chamber Players Tour Best

In an article by critic Harry Neville in the Boston Herald Traveler, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is quoted as saying:

"I enjoy solo work, I enjoy conducting and I enjoy playing with the Orchestra, but of all my Boston Symphony activities the one I enjoy most is working with the Chamber Players."

Silverstein and the other first-desk members of the Boston Symphony who make up the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give a concert in Austin on Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hogg Auditorium.

Tickets are now available at the Hogg Auditorium Box Office for the concert, the final event in this season's Chamber Music Celebration which is co-sponsored by the University of Texas Department of Music and the Cultural Entertainment Committee of the Texas Union.

The 12-member Chamber Players will perform Beethoven's Trio for strings, Op. 9, No. 1, and Septet in E-Flat for violin, viola, horn, clarinet, bassoon, cello and double bass, Op. 20; Ingolf Dahl's Duettino Concertante for flute and percussion (1966); and Hindemith's Quintet for wind instruments, Op. 24, No. 2 ("Kleine Kammermusik").

A member of the Boston Symphony since 1955, Silverstein has been concertmaster for eleven years and has appeared as soloist with the Orchestra and the Boston Pops on numerous occasions.

Presently he is a member of the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music and is Chairman of the Faculty of the Berkshire Music Center.

Principal violist Burton Fine came to the Boston Symphony from the world of science. For nine years, prior to joining the Symphony in 1963, Fine was a research chemist with the National Space and Aeronautics Administration in Cleveland. During his years with the federal agency he played with a number of chamber music ensembles including a string quartet with Ivan Galamian.

His background includes four years of study with Galamian at the Curtis Institute of Music and a Ph.D. from Illinois Institute of Technology.

He assumed his present position at the beginning of his second year with the Orchestra after winning extensive auditions that included some of the most distinguished and best-known orchestral and chamber music players in the country.

Fine is a member of the faculties of the Berkshire Music Center and the New England Conservatory.

Another musician of diverse interests is principal cellist Jules Eskin, who is a skilled photographer. Before joining the Boston Symphony, Eskin was cello principal with the Cleveland Orchestra.

He studied with Gregor Piatigorsky, Leonard Rose and Janos Starker. In 1954 he was the winner of the Naumburg Foundation Award and made his debut in Town Hall that year under the auspices of the Foundation.

His solo recitals include engagements in Boston and Washington, D.C., and a European tour. For three years he played with Casals in Puerto Rico and in Marlboro with Casals, Schneider and Serkin.

Admission for the Tuesday concert is $3. Admission is half-price on CEC and Solo Artist season tickets and free on UT blanket tax in limited supply by advance drawing.

The box office is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday. Ticket reservations or information may be obtained by telephoning 471-1444.

The Austin Statesman
The Oldest Morning Daily ... Texas
D. 50,...

APR 30 1973

The Houston Post
D. 294,590 SUN. 327,167

APR 29 1973

Music

The Dallas Morning News
DALLAS, TEXAS
D. 242,948 SUN. 281,097

APR 29 1973

These 12 principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra compose the Boston Symphony Chamber Players who will close out the 1972-73 Civic Music Association season with a concert at McFarlin Monday night.

CMA Finale To Honor Dragert

The final concert of the 1972-73 season for the Dallas Civic Music Association will be given at 8:15 p.m. Monday in McFarlin Auditorium by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. The program will be dedicated to the memory of the late Clarence H. Dragert, who served as president of the Civic Music Association from 1967 until his recent death.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players are composed of the 12 principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Henry Portnoi, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Harold Wright, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Charles Kavaloski, French horn; Armando Ghitalla, trumpet; William, Gibson, trombone, and Everett Firth, tympani.

Organized as a unit under the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1964, the players have presented some 200 concerts. A quartet from the group played once before in Texas, but this is the first time all 12 have toured within the state. Their first Texas concert is in Dallas, with concerts in Austin and Houston completing their stay in this area.

Previous tours have taken them to Europe twice, the Soviet Union, the Virgin Islands, and 14 states of the United States. They made a transcontinental tour of this country in 1966. This past September, they made their South American debut with concerts in Medellin and Bogota, Colombia.

Their New York debut in 1964 was a series of three concerts on the Hunter College Concert Series. They have played in that city many times since and appeared during the Lincoln Center summer programs of 1970 and 1971, at the "Mostly Mozart Festival."

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players are also acclaimed for their combination concerts and workshops for universities and schools. In Dallas, they will present such a combination for some 500 advanced players of the Dallas Independent School System at 8 a.m. Monday at Skyline High School. Under the sponsorship of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts, they have made numerous tours of that state in this dual capacity, and have presented master classes and clinics at such schools at the University of Florida, Pittsfield, Mass., and others.

From their repertoire of over 150 compositions, at least 30 have been recorded. Their first recording for RCA Victor received the Grammy Award for that year's best chamber music performance and a more recent Deutsche Grammophon release, "American Music of the 20th Century," received a nomination for the same award. They have been instrumental in a series of experimental TV programs for educational stations, and one of these, "The Double Reed," was given first award by the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

The Chamber Players have chosen a varied program for their Dallas concert. It will open with Beethoven's Trio for Strings, Opus 9, No. 1. A contemporary work by Ingolf Dahl, Duettino Concertante for Flute and Percussion, written in 1966 follows.

Wind instruments will then play Hindemith's Quintet, Opus 24, No. 2, after which Beethoven's Septet in E Flat, Opus 20, will close the program. This last number uses the violin, viola, horn, clarinet, bassoon, cello and doublebass.

A limited number of tickets for this concert are available at prices ranging from $3 to $8 by calling the Civic Music Office, 369-2210.

The famed Boston Symphony Chamber Players bring the current Civic Music season to a close with performances of Mozart's D-Major Quartet for Flute and Strings, K 285, Beethoven's Septet in E-flat Major and the suite from Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat" Thursday at 8:15 p.m. in Jones Hall. The 11 Boston Symphony principals appearing will be concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, principal violist Burton Fine, principal cellist Jules Eskin, principal double bass player Henry Portnoi, principal flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal clarinetist Harold Wright, principal bassoonist Sherman Walt, principal trumpet player Armando Ghitalla, principal trombonist William Gibson, principal timpanist Everett Firth and principal French horn player Charles Kavaloski.

Concert Slated Here By Chamber Players Of Boston Symphony

The entire ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Chamber Players will perform in Weston Auditorium at Fitchburg State College Tuesday, May 2, at 8 p.m.

The concert, featuring music for brass and percussion, as well as woodwinds and strings, will demonstrate the full range and variety of the twelve first-chair members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Proceeds from the sale of tickets will benefit a scholarship for a Montachusett youth to attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the Orchestra's summer music academy in the Berkshires. Tickets are available at: Fitchburg Music Store, The Corner Book Shop, the Book Shop, and at the door the evening of the concert. In Leominster tickets are available at Westside Pharmacy.

This is the second year local sponsors have joined with the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities to bring the Chamber Players to Fitchburg. The local sponsors are the Montachusett Community Concert Association, Fitchburg State College, and the Montachusett Association for the Performing Arts.

The program includes two works by Mozart and a divertimento for two winds and strings with contrabass by Haydn. Featured will be Igor Stravinsky's concert suite from "A Soldier's Tale," written for percussion, trombone, trumpet, bassoon, clarinet, violin and contrabass. One of Stravinsky's most popular works, "A Soldier's Tale" was originally written as a dance work with pantomime.

The concert in Fitchburg is part of a tour of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts by the Chamber Players, and is being sponsored by a grant from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

SENTINEL
FITCHBURG, MASS.
D. 20,300

APR 25 1972

New England Newsclip

The Austin American
AUSTIN, TEXAS
D. 46,725

APR 30 1973

Boston Concertmaster Likes Chamber Players Tour Best

In an article by critic Harry Neville in the Boston Herald Traveler, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is quoted as saying:

"I enjoy solo work, I enjoy conducting and I enjoy playing with the Orchestra, but of all my Boston Symphony activities the one I enjoy most is working with the Chamber Players."

Silverstein and the other first-desk members of the Boston Symphony who make up the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give a concert in Austin on Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hogg Auditorium.

Tickets are now available at the Hogg Auditorium Box Office for the concert, the final event in this season's Chamber Music Celebration which is co-sponsored by the University of Texas Department of Music and the Cultural Entertainment Committee of the Texas Union.

The 12-member Chamber Players will perform Beethoven's Trio for strings, Op. 9, No. 1, and Septet in E-Flat for violin, viola, horn, clarinet, bassoon, cello and double bass, Op. 20; Ingolf Dahl's Duettino Concertante for flute and percussion (1966); and Hindemith's Quintet for wind instruments, Op. 24, No. 2 ("Kleine Kammermusik").

A member of the Boston Symphony since 1955, Silverstein has been concertmaster for eleven years and has appeared as soloist with the Orchestra and the Boston Pops on numerous occasions.

Presently he is a member of the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music and is Chairman of the Faculty of the Berkshire Music Center.

Principal violist Burton Fine came to the Boston Symphony from the world of science. For nine years, prior to joining the Symphony in 1963, Fine was a research chemist with the National Space and Aeronautics Administration in Cleveland. During his years with the federal agency he played with a number of chamber music ensembles including a string quartet with Ivan Galamian.

His background includes four years of study with Galamian at the Curtis Institute of Music and a Ph.D. from Illinois Institute of Technology.

He assumed his present position at the beginning of his second year with the Orchestra after winning extensive auditions that included some of the most distinguished and best-known orchestral and chamber music players in the country.

Fine is a member of the faculties of the Berkshire Music Center and the New England Conservatory.

Another musician of diverse interests is principal cellist Jules Eskin, who is a skilled photographer. Before joining the Boston Symphony, Eskin was cello principal with the Cleveland Orchestra.

He studied with Gregor Piatigorsky, Leonard Rose and Janos Starker. In 1954 he was the winner of the Naumburg Foundation Award and made his debut in Town Hall that year under the auspices of the Foundation.

His solo recitals include engagements in Boston and Washington, D.C., and a European tour. For three years he played with Casals in Puerto Rico and in Marlboro with Casals, Schneider and Serkin.

Admission for the Tuesday concert is $3. Admission is half-price on CEC and Solo Artist season tickets and free on UT blanket tax in limited supply by advance drawing.

The box office is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday. Ticket reservations or information may be obtained by telephoning 471-1444.

NEWS
GARDNER, MASS.
D. 8,061

APR 24 1972

New England Newsclip

Symphony Orchestra To Perform

FITCHBURG, April 24 — The entire ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Chamber Players will perform a program of Mozart, Haydn and Stravinsky Tuesday night, May 2, at 8 in Weston Auditorium at Fitchburg State College.

Proceeds from the sale of tickets will benefit a scholarship for a Montachusett youth to attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer music academy in the Berkshires.

The Fitchburg concert, sponsored by a grant from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, is part of a tour of Massachusetts by the Chamber players.

The concert by the 12 first-chair members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature music for brass and percussion, as well as woodwinds and strings.

Tickets are available at Fitchburg Music Store, 175 Main Street; the Book Shop, 536 Main Street, or the Corner Book Shop, all in Fitchburg, or Westside Pharmacy, Leominster. Tickets will also be on sale the evening of the concert.

This is the second year local sponsors have joined with the Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities to bring the Chamber Players to Fitchburg. Local sponsors include the Montachusetts Community Concert Association, Fitchburg State College and the Montachusett Association for the Performing Arts.

CAPE CODDER
ORLEANS, MASS.
W. 14,000

MAY 8 1973

New England Newsclip

The string trio of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players has won acclain as one of the world's finest ensembles. It will be featured in a Beethoven masterpiece on the Cape when the nine-member Chamber Players appear in a concert at Monomoy Theatre in Chatham, Friday, May 11. The concert is sponsored by the Cape Cod Wall Council of the Cape Cod Conservatory, which will entertain at a reception for audiences after the concert. Shown in the picture, from left, are Jules Eskin, solo Cello; Burton Fine, principal viola; and Joseph Siverstein, distinguished violinist who is concertmaster of the Boston Symphony. A woodwind quintet and a nonet for the entire group will also be heard. Tickets for the concert are available at Chatham Jewelers, Chatham; H. H. S now's, Orleans; and at the Cape Cod Conservatory in Barnstable.

CAPE CODDER
ORLEANS, MASS.
W. 14,000

MAY 8 1973

New England Newsclip

Chamber Group Here Of Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will appear in concert at Monomoy Theatre, Chatham, on Friday, May 11, at 8 o'clock.

Nine members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, all principals and soloists, comprise the group coming to the Cape for the fourth straight year under Cape Cod Conservatory auspices. The Cape Cod Wall Council, of which Ernest F. White of West Chatham is Outer Cape chairman, is sponsoring the Chatham concert, and will be host at a reception for members of the audience immediately after the program.

Headed by Joseph Silverstein, distinguished violinist and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, the Chamber Players include Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Doriot Anthony Swyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg; oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Harold Wright, clarinet; Charles Kaveloski, horn; and Henry Portnoy, bass. All have appeared on the Lower Cape in previous years with the group, under Conservatory auspices, except Kaveloski, who joined the Boston orchestra only last summer at Tanglewood.

The tickets for the Chatham concert are available at Chatham Jewelers in Chatham and H.H. Snow's in Orleans. They may also be obtained at the Cape Cod Conservatory in Barnstable.

SHOPPERS COMPANION
ADAMS, MASS.
WEEKLY CNA

APR 25 1973

New England Newsclip

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHAMBER PLAYERS TO PERFORM AT BERK. COMM. COLLEGE

On Monday, May 7th, The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform at Koussevitzky Arts Center, Berkshire Community College, West Street, Pittsfield, Mass.

The program will be presented at 8:00 P.M. and will feature Beethoven and Hindemith.

Tickets may be purchased at the door, $1.50, students $.50. Advance tickets may be obtained at BCC Box Office, Sammy Vincent's and The Red Lion Inn. For information and ticket reservations phone Mrs. Richard W. Marcure 442-0977 or Mrs. James A. Kapteyn 528-0805.

The program will be sponsored by The Council of Tanglewood Friends, The Junior League of Berkshire County, Inc., and special gifts.

The Houston Post
D. 294,590 SUN. 327,167

MAY 4 1973

BSO Chamber Players play like angels

THE PROGRAM

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHAMBER PLAYERS — Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Iskin, cello; Henry Portnoi, double bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Harold Wright, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Armando Ghitalla, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone; Everett Firth, timpanist; Charles Kavaloski, French horn. Presented by the Houston Civic Music Association Thursday night in Jones Hall.

Quartet in D-Major for Flute and Strings, K. 285 (Mozart), "L'Histoire du Soldat" (Stravinsky) and Septet in E-flat Major (Beethoven).

By JEFF COLLINS

With so many different instruments available — violin, viola, cello, double bass, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, French horn, trumpet, trombone and percussion — the Boston Symphony Chamber Players are able to program pieces seldom heard in professional performance, pieces that would require special planning and added expense for most established performing groups.

Their Civic Music concert in Jones Hall Thursday night was just such a program: Mozart's D-Major Flute Quartet, Stravinsky's "L'Histoire du Soldat" and Beethoven's Septet. And one must add the performances were not just professional. They were the epitome of elegance. These musicians play like angels. For the Stravinsky, maybe it would be more appropriate to say "like the Devil."

Flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, who incidentally holds the distinction of being the first man to be a principal player in a major American symphony orchestra, was the main attraction in the Mozart quartet. Mozart supposedly did not have the greatest fondness for the flute as an instrument, but this piece certainly shows no signs of it.

Ms. Dwyer not only had the opportunity to show off her ability to spin out long, arched phrases, she also illustrated some rapid-fire tonguing. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, violinist Burton Fine and cellist Jules Eskin filled out the ensemble, playing exquisitely. Their chances to show off, though, came in the later pieces.

Post review

Silverstein, for instance, performed the several solos in Stravinsky's "L' Histoire" with just the right degree of dryness and scratchiness. there was, in fact, an attractive flavor of sarcasm about the whole performance.

The Tango was especially suave. The Waltz had its contageous circus atmosphere, as did the Royal March. Virtuosic tidbits were played cleanly by trumpet player Armando Ghitalla in the Royal March, as was the raucous opening passage by trombone player William Gibson.

Everett, Firth, the percussionist, also deserves special mention for his precise, crisp reading. The piece is also an admirable feat for a double bass player -- the double stops in the first movement, for instance — and Henry Portnoi made easy work of it.

The second half of the program was devoted entirely to Beethoven's E-Flat Major Septet, a six movement work. Silverstein, once again, was an important figure, and his tone here became sweet, his fingers especially agile. The theme and variations movement allowed violist Fine to reveal a yearning tone quality.

In the same movement, cellist Eskin performed one particular solo with an ear-catchingly full-bodied sound. Also attractive was the tawny timbre from bassoonist Sherman Walt, and the controlled dynamics of Charles Kavaloski, the French horn player.

Certainly equal to Silverstein in importance, though, was Harold Wright, the clarinetist. His attractively tart tone was best illustrated in the second movement, an Adagio, which seems like a dialogue between violin and clarinet.

The Austin American
AUSTIN, TEXAS
D. 35,725

APR 30 1973

Boston Concertmaster Likes Chamber Players Tour Best

In an article by critic Harry Neville in the Boston Herald Traveler, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is quoted as saying:

"I enjoy solo work, I enjoy conducting and I enjoy playing with the Orchestra, but of all my Boston Symphony activities the one I enjoy most is working with the Chamber Players."

Silverstein and the other first-desk members of the Boston Symphony who make up the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give a concert in Austin on Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hogg Auditorium.

Tickets are now available at the Hogg Auditorium Box Office for the concert, the final event in this season's Chamber Music Celebration which is co-sponsored by the University of Texas Department of Music and the Cultural Entertainment Committee of the Texas Union.

The 12-member Chamber Players will perform Beethoven's Trio for strings, Op. 9, No. 1, and Septet in E-Flat for violin, viola, horn, clarinet, bassoon, cello and double bass, Op. 20; Ingolf Dahl's Duettino Concertante for flute and percussion (1966); and Hindemith's Quintet for wind instruments, Op. 24, No. 2 ("Kleine Kammermusik").

A member of the Boston Symphony since 1955, Silverstein has been concertmaster for eleven years and has appeared as soloist with the Orchestra and the Boston Pops on numerous occasions.

Presently he is a member of the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music and is Chairman of the Faculty of the Berkshire Music Center.

Principal violist Burton Fine came to the Boston Symphony from the world of science. For nine years, prior to joining the Symphony in 1963, Fine was a research chemist with the National Space and Aeronautics Administration in Cleveland. During his years with the federal agency he played with a number of chamber music ensembles including a string quartet with Ivan Galamian.

His background includes four years of study with Galamian at the Curtis Institute of Music and a Ph.D. from Illinois Institute of Technology.

He assumed his present position at the beginning of his second year with the Orchestra after winning extensive auditions that included some of the most distinguished and best-known orchestral and chamber music players in the country.

Fine is a member of the faculties of the Berkshire Music Center and the New England Conservatory.

Another musician of diverse interests is principal cellist Jules Eskin, who is a skilled photographer. Before joining the Boston Symphony, Eskin was cello principal with the Cleveland Orchestra.

He studied with Gregor Piatigorsky, Leonard Rose and Janos Starker. In 1954 he was the winner of the Naumburg Foundation Award and made his debut in Town Hall that year under the auspices of the Foundation.

His solo recitals include engagements in Boston and Washington, D.C., and a European tour. For three years he played with Casals in Puerto Rico and in Marlboro with Casals, Schneider and Serkin.

Admission for the Tuesday concert is $3. Admission is half-price on CEC and Solo Artist season tickets and free on UT blanket tax in limited supply by advance drawing.

The box office is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday. Ticket reservations or information may be obtained by telephoning 471-1444.

NEWS
GARDNER, MASS.
D. 8,961

APR 24 1972

New England Newscip

Symphony Orchestra To Perform

FITCHBURG, April 24 — The entire ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Chamber Players will perform a program of Mozart, Haydn and Stravinsky Tuesday night, May 2, at 8 in Weston Auditorium at Fitchburg State College.

Proceeds from the sale of tickets will benefit a scholarship for a Montachusett youth to attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer music academy in the Berkshires.

The Fitchburg concert, sponsored by a grant from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, is part of a tour of Massachusetts by the Chamber players.

The concert by the 12 first-chair members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature music for brass and percussion, as well as woodwinds and strings.

Tickets are available at Fitchburg Music Store, 175 Main Street; the Book Shop, 536 Main Street, or the Corner Book Shop, all in Fitchburg, or Westside Pharmacy, Leominster. Tickets will also be on sale the evening of the concert.

This is the second year local sponsors have joined with the Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities to bring the Chamber Players to Fitchburg. Local sponsors include the Montachusetts Community Concert Association, Fitchburg State College and the Montachusett Association for the Performing Arts.

CAPE CODDER
ORLEANS, MASS.
W. 14,000

MAY 8 1973

New England Newscip

The string trio of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players has won acclain as one of the world's finest ensembles. It will be featured in a Beethoven masterpiece on the Cape when the nine-member Chamber Players appear in a concert at Monomoy Theatre in Chatham, Friday, May 11. The concert is sponsored by the Cape Cod Wall Council of the Cape Cod Conservatory, which will entertain at a reception for audiences after the concert. Shown in the picture, from left, are Jules Eskin, solo Cello; Burton Fine, principal viola; and Joseph Siverstein, distinguished violinist who is concertmaster of the Boston Symphony. A woodwind quintet and a nonet for the entire group will also be heard. Tickets for the concert are available at Chatham Jewelers, Chatham; H. H. S now's, Orleans; and at the Cape Cod Conservatory in Barnstable.

CAPE CODDER
ORLEANS, MASS.
W. 14,000

MAY 8 1973

New England Newscip

Chamber Group Here Of Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will appear in concert at Monomoy Theatre, Chatham, on Friday, May 11, at 8 o'clock.

Nine members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, all principals and soloists, comprise the group coming to the Cape for the fourth straight year under Cape Cod Conservatory auspices. The Cape Cod Wall Council, of which Ernest F. White of West Chatham is Outer Cape chairman, is sponsoring the Chatham concert, and will be host at a reception for members of the audience immediately after the program.

Headed by Joseph Silverstein, distinguished violinist and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, the Chamber Players include Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Doriot Anthony Swyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg; oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Harold Wright, clarinet; Charles Kaveloski, horn; and Henry Portnoy, bass. All have appeared on the Lower Cape in previous years with the group, under Conservatory auspices, except Kaveloski, who joined the Boston orchestra only last summer at Tanglewood.

The tickets for the Chatham concert are available at Chatham Jewelers in Chatham and H.H. Snow's in Orleans. They may also be obtained at the Cape Cod Conservatory in Barnstable.

SHOPPERS COMPANION
ADAMS, MASS.
WEEKLY CNA

APR 26 1973

New England Newscip

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHAMBER PLAYERS TO PERFORM AT BERK. COMM. COLLEGE

On Monday, May 7th, The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform at Koussevitzky Arts Center, Berkshire Community College, West Street, Pittsfield, Mass.

The program will be presented at 8:00 P.M. and will feature Beethoven and Hindemith.

Tickets may be purchased at the door, $1.50, students $.50. Advance tickets may be obtained at BCC Box Office, Sammy Vincent's and The Red Lion Inn. For information and ticket reservations phone Mrs. Richard W. Marcure 442-0977 or Mrs. James A. Kapteyn 528-0805.

The program will be sponsored by The Council of Tanglewood Friends, The Junior League of Berkshire County, Inc., and special gifts.

The Houston Post
D. 294,590 SUN. 327,167

MAY 4 1973

BSO Chamber Players play like angels

THE PROGRAM

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHAMBER PLAYERS — Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Iskin, cello; Henry Portnoi, double bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Harold Wright, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Armando Ghitalla, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone; Everett Firth, timpanist; Charles Kavaloski, French horn. Presented by the Houston Civic Music Association Thursday night in Jones Hall.

Quartet in D-Major for Flute and Strings, K. 285 (Mozart), "L'Histoire du Soldat" (Stravinsky) and Septet in E-flat Major (Beethoven).

By JEFF COLLINS

With so many different instruments available — violin, viola, cello, double bass, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, French horn, trumpet, trombone and percussion — the Boston Symphony Chamber Players are able to program pieces seldom heard in professional performance, pieces that would require special planning and added expense for most established performing groups.

Their Civic Music concert in Jones Hall Thursday night was just such a program: Mozart's D-Major Flute Quartet, Stravinsky's "L'Histoire du Soldat" and Beethoven's Septet. And one must add the performances were not just professional. They were the epitome of elegance. These musicians play like angels. For the Stravinsky, maybe it would be more appropriate to say "like the Devil."

Flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, who incidentally holds the distinction of being the first man to be a principal player in a major American symphony orchestra, was the main attraction in the Mozart quartet. Mozart supposedly did not have the greatest fondness for the flute as an instrument, but this piece certainly shows no signs of it.

Ms. Dwyer not only had the opportunity to show off her ability to spin out long, arched phrases, she also illustrated some rapid-fire tonguing. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, violinist Burton Fine and cellist Jules Eskin filled out the ensemble, playing exquisitely. Their chances to show off, though, came in the later pieces.

Post review

Silverstein, for instance, performed the several solos in Stravinsky's "L' Histoire" with just the right degree of dryness and scratchiness. there was, in fact, an attractive flavor of sarcasm about the whole performance.

The Tango was especially suave. The Waltz had its contageous circus atmosphere, as did the Royal March. Virtuosic tidbits were played cleanly by trumpet player Armando Ghitalla in the Royal March, as was the raucous opening passage by trombone player William Gibson.

Everett, Firth, the percussionist, also deserves special mention for his precise, crisp reading. The piece is also an admirable feat for a double bass player -- the double stops in the first movement, for instance — and Henry Portnoi made easy work of it.

The second half of the program was devoted entirely to Beethoven's E-Flat Major Septet, a six movement work. Silverstein, once again, was an important figure, and his tone here became sweet, his fingers especially agile. The theme and variations movement allowed violist Fine to reveal a yearning tone quality.

In the same movement, cellist Eskin performed one particular solo with an ear-catchingly full-bodied sound. Also attractive was the tawny timbre from bassoonist Sherman Walt, and the controlled dynamics of Charles Kavaloski, the French horn player.

Certainly equal to Silverstein in importance, though, was Harold Wright, the clarinetist. His attractively tart tone was best illustrated in the second movement, an Adagio, which seems like a dialogue between violin and clarinet.

96.

Symphony announces guest conductors for 1973-74

TIMES
PEABODY, MASS.
W. 6,043

MAY 2 1973

New England Newsclip

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced its conductors and programs for the 1973-74 season in Symphony Hall. Seiji Ozawa, who will preside as music director of the Boston Symphony as of September, 1973, will conduct the orchestra's opeing concert, Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, on September 28. Again this season, Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas are principal guest conductors.

Guest conductors for the season include: William Steinberg, Rafael Kubelik, Okko Kamu and Carlo Maria Giulini. Guest soloists include pianists Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Maurizio Pollini and Michael Roll; violinists David Oistrakh, Jerome Rosen, Joseph Silverstein and Henryk Szeryng; singers Heather Harper, Rene Kollo, Edith Mathis, Donald McIntyre, Jessye Norman, Thomas Paul, the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver director, and more.

This year's Friday-Saturday subscription series has been increased to 22 concerts over last year's 20. The increase provides time for Michael Tilson Thomas to bring two of his now-famous Spectrum concerts to the Boston Symphony's regular subscribers. And the Spectrum series itself will now be performed on three Thursdays instead of three series of Friday-Saturday evening concerts.

MAINE SUNDAY
TELEGRAM
PORTLAND, MAINE

MAY 1973

New England Newsclip

Portland Concert Assn. Lists Dates Of Artists

Dates for concerts organized by the Portland Concert Association have been announced by Mrs. Jocelyn Pollard, president of the organization.

The Boston Symphony under the direction of Seiji Ozawa will be at City Hall Auditorium Nov. 12 and the visit will be the first under local sponsorship in over a quarter century. Program agenda will be announced later this fall.

Metropolitan Opera stars James McCracken and Sandra Warfield are scheduled for appearance Dec. 5, and Peter Nero will be the guest artist Feb. 5.

Christina Ortiz

A fourth concert has been added for March 18, when the young Brazilian pianist, Cristina Ortiz will perform in solo recital. Miss Ortiz recently won the Van Cliburn competition and the coveted Enesco Award in Bucharest, and is one of the brightest young talents on the concert stage.

All dates however are subject to change in the event of illness or other unforeseeable circumstances, but PCA schedules almost always remain faithful to original commitment.

SEIJI OZAWA

. . . new musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be seen in "Symphony," a one-hour color special on Channel 5, Saturday night at 10, which should be of interest to classical music lovers in Greater Lowell.

BSO Announces Programs For '73-'74 Season at Hub

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its conductors and programs for the 1973-74 season in Symphony Hall. Seiji Ozawa, to preside as music director of the Boston Symphony as of September, will conduct the orchestra's opening concert, Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, on Sept. 28. Again this season, Colin Davis and Michael Tison Thomas are principal guest conductors.

Guest conductors for the season include William Steinberg, Rafel Kubelik, Okko Kamu and Carlo Maria Giulini. Guest soloists include pianists Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Maurizio Pollini and Michael Roll; violinists David Oistrakh, Jerome Rosen, Joseph Silverstein and Henryk Szeryng; singers Heather Harper, Rene Kollo, Edith Mathis, Donald McIntyre, Jessye Norman and Thomas Paul; the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor; the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver director, and more.

This year's Friday - Saturday subscription series has been increased to 22 concerts over last year's 20. The increase provides time for Michael Tilson Thomas to bring two of his now-famous Spectrum concerts to the Boston Symphony's regular subscribers.

The Spectrum series itself now will be performed on three Thursdays instead of three series of Friday-Saturday evening concerts.

Among other highlights of the season is a visit by Sir Michael Tippett to Symphony Hall to hear the first U. S. performance of his Symphony No. 3 conducted by Colin Davis with Heather Harper as soloist.

A complete concert listing is available upon request at Symphony Hall, 266-1492.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398

MAY 4 1973

New England Newsclip

All Star-Forum Sets New Season's Stars

Three concerts by Soviet artists or ensembles will be included in next season's All Star-Forum Series.

The Leningrad Philharmonic, conducted by Gennady Rozhdestvensky and with Alexander Slobodyyanik, pianist, will play Oct. 31 at the Academy of Music. It will be the first appearance of the Philharmonic here in a decade.

Other concerts will be by violinist David Oistrakh, Nov. 7, and pianist Sviatoslav Richter, Nov. 11.

The subscription series begins Oct. 15 with a recital by tenor Luciano Pavarotti. The other events will be the Vienna Johann Strauss Orchestra, Dec. 10; pianist Byron Janis, Jan. 17; pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy, Feb. 4.

Thomas Schippers will conduct the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra with French flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal, soloist, Feb. 28, and Seiji Ozawa will lead the Boston Symphony March 21, in his first appearance here with the BSO since he became music director.

Pianist Daniel Barenboim and his wife, cellist Jacqueline Du Pre, will appear in recital, March 27, and violinist Yehudi Menuhin will perform with his sister, pianist Hepzibah Menuhin, April 10. German baritone Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau sings a recital April 15.

The piano series and the dance series, sponsored by the All Star-Forum, will be announced later, according to Moe Septee, director.

Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 463,503 SUN. 867,310

MAY 9 1973

THE LEDGER
BROOKLINE, MASS.

MAY 4 1973

New England Newsclip

Scintillating season ahead for symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces its conductors and programs for the 1973-74 season in Symphony Hall.

Seiji Ozawa, who will preside as Music Director of the Boston Symphony as of September, will conduct the Orchestra's opening concert, Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, on Sept. 28. Again this season, Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas are Principal Guest Conductors.

Guest conductors for the season include: William Steinberg, Rafael Kubelik, Okko Kamu and Carlo Maria Giulini. Guest soloists include pianists Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Maurizio Pollini and Michael Roll; violinists David Oistrakh, Jerome Rosen, Joseph Silverstein and Henryk Szeryng, singers Heather Harper, Rene Kollo, Edith Mathis, Donald McIntyre, Jessye Norman, Thomas Paul, the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver director, and more.

This year's Friday Saturday subscription series has been increased to 22 concerts over last year's 20. The increase provides time for Michael Tilson Thomas to bring two of his now-famous Spectrum concerts to the Boston Symphony's regular subscribers. And the Spectrum series itself will now be performed on three Thursdays instead of three series of Friday/Saturday evening concerts. Among other highlights of the season is a visit by Sir Michael Tippett to Symphony Hall to hear the first U.S. performance of his Symphony No. 3 conducted by Colin Davis with Heather Harper as soloist.

The season opens Friday, Sept. 28, at 2 p.m., with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Orchestra in Berlioz' Damnation of Faust. Soloists are Edith Mathis, soprano, Rene Kollo, tenor, Donald McIntyre, bass, Thomas Paul, bass, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

A complete concert listing is available upon request at Symphony Hall, 266-1492.

Buffalo Evening News
D. 281,982 SAT. 297,247

MAY 18 1973

Philharmonic to Team With Boston Symphony

The Buffalo Philharmonic and Boston Symphony will join in a three-concert series in New York's Carnegie Hall next season, it is announced by conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, who will be on the podium for all three.

It is part of a large Carnegie Hall presentation, The International Festival of Visiting Orchestras.

The Buffalo Philharmonic dates are Oct. 24 and April 18, the Boston date Dec. 13. Buffalo maestro Thomas is also associate conductor of the Boston orchestra.

This will be in addition to the Buffalo Philharmonic's appearance in Carnegie Hall on May 19, as part of a week-long tour with concerts in five states, May 14-21.

The three-concert venture will be billed as a Spectrum Series, the title Mr. Thomas uses for his more adventurous programs in Boston.

They are somewhat similar to the Kaleidoscope Series in Buffalo, the more wide-ranging half of the full series. (The other half is the more classic-oriented Criterion Series.)

The Buffalo orchestra's Carnegie Hall program of Oct. 24 will be on the general theme Electronics, Old and New. The program April 18 will be under the heading of Music Theater.

The programs haven't been decided yet, but they should include works already prepared for the new Buffalo season. One piece pretty well agreed on is the Wuorinen Concerto for Electric Violin with Paul Zukofsky, heard here this season.

The Buffalo Philharmonic spring tour under Mr. Tmosas:

May 14, Oneida; May 15, Williamsport, Pa.; May 17, Montclair, N. J.; May 18, C. W. Pose College, L. I.; May 19, Carnegie Hall; May 20, New Bedford, Mass.; May 21, Concord, N. H.

Boston Symphony has great program for '73-74

By ALFRED W. BURKE
Sun Music Critic

Music

LOWELL — Announcement has been made concerning the roster of conductors and the programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1973-74 season which will be held in Symphony Hall.

Seidi Ozawa who will be the music director for he BSO as of September, will conduct the opening concert which is listed for Sept. 28. For the event, Maestro Ozawa has chosen the following program: Damnation of Faust (Berlioz); and the soloists will include, Edith Mathis, soprano; Rene Rollo, tenor; Donald McIntyre, bass; Thomas Paul, bas and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus which is directed by John Oliver.

Again this season, Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas will be the principal guest conductors. Guest conductors covering the entire season will be William Steinberg, Rafael Kubelik, Okko Kamu, and Carlo Maria Giulini.

The solo artist list has also been announced. Pianists will be Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Maurizio Pollini and Michael Roll. Violinists will be, David Oistrakh, Jerome Rosen, Joseph Silverstein (BSO Concertmaster), and Henryk Szeryng. The singers are, Heather Harper, Jessye Norman and the artists who have been listed above for the first concert of the season. In addition to the Festival Chorus will be the New England Conservatory Chorus under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron.

This year's Friday-Saturday subscription series has been increased to 22 concerts over last year's 20. The increase will provide time for Michael Tilson Thomas to bring two of his now-famous Spectrum concerts to the Boston Symphony's regular subscribers.

The Spectrum Series will now be performed on three Thursdays instead of three series of Friday-Saturday evening concerts.

AMONG OTHER highlights of the coming season will be a visit by Sir Michael Tippett to Symphony Hall to hear the first U.S. performance of his Symphony No. 3 which will be conducted by Colin Davis, with Miss Harper as soloist.

A complete concert listing is available at this time upon request at Symphony Hall by calling 266-1492.

Further news comes from Symphony Hall where it has been announced that three young American composers have received commissions for new compositions from the Berkshire Music Center, the summer training institute for young musicians operated at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The commissions are awarded in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard, long a supporter of contemporary music activities at Tanglewood.

The three composers receiving the 1973 commissions are James Drew who is teaching at Yale University; John Heiss who is currently teaching at the New England Conservatory of Music; and Peter Lieberson who is doing graduate work at Columbia University.

Their commissioned works will be premiered this summer at Tanglewood by the members oof the Fellowship Program of the Berkshire Music Center during the week-long Festival of Contemporary Music, Aug. 4-9.

This Festival is sponsored by the Boston Symphony and the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard, and will feature a wide range of music by contemporary composers from the U.S. and abroad.

SUN
LOWELL, MASS.
S. 40,129

MAY 6 1973

New England Newsclip

97.

LOWER CAPE COD
CHRONICLE
CHATHAM, MASS.
W. 14,000

MAY 8 1973 New England Newspaper

Boston Symphony Chamber Players To Perform In Chatham May 11

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will appear in concert at Monomoy Theatre, Chatham, on Friday, May 11, at 8 p.m.

Nine members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, all principals and soloists, comprise the group coming to the Cape for the fourth straight year under Cape Cod Conservatory auspices. The Cape Cod Wall Council, of which Ernest F. White of West Chatham is Lower Cape chairman, is sponsoring the Chatham concert, and will be host at a reception for members of the audience immediately after the program.

The program, both in Chatham and at a second concert in Falmouth on May 12, will include a string trio by Beethoven, a Hindemith quintet for woodwinds, and a nonet by Spohr for the entire ensemble.

"Headed by Joseph Silverstein, distinguished violinist and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, the Chamber Players include Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Doriot Anthony Swyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Harold Wright, Clarinet; Charles Kaveloski, horn; and Henry Portnoy, bass. All have appeared on the Lower Cape in previous years with the group, under Conservatory auspices, except Kaveloski, who joined the Boston orchestra only last summer at Tanglewood.

The Chamber Players have toured widely in this country and abroad to enthisiastic receptions and capacity audiences.

The tickets for the Chatham concert at $2.50 for adults and $1.00 for students, are available at Chatham Jewelers in Chatham and H. H. Snow's in Orleans. They may also be obtained at the Cape Cod Conservatory in Barnstable.

Boston Symphony Chamber Players from left seated, are Doriot Anthony Dwyer, solo flute, and Sherman Walt, principal bassoon, with Charles Kaveloski, solo horn; Harold Wright, principal clarinet; and Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe, standing. The quintet will present a concert in Monomoy Theatre, Chatham, on Friday, May 11, and that in Falmouth at St. Barnabas Hall is on Saturday, May 12. The Cape Cod Wall council of the Cape Cod Conservatory is sponsoring both events and will be host to a reception for the audience immediately after each concert. Tickets are available at Chatham Jewelers and H. H. Snow's in Orleans, and at the Conservatory in Barnstable.

Dallas Times Herald
D. 232,064 SUN. 275,535

MAY 1 1973

Concert in review

Bostonians close a season

By OLIN CHISM
Music Editor

The Dallas Civic Music Association wound up its best season in several years Monday night with a program by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in McFarlin Auditorium.

This has been a memorable year for the association: Marilyn Horne made her long-delayed appearance, Luciano Pavarotti sang his second American recital program ever, pianists Lili Kraus and Stephen Bishop played remarkable recitals and, finally, the cream of the crop from the Boston Symphony closed the organization's year.

Sadly, it was also the season that longtime Civic Music president Clarence Dragert died, and Monday night's program was dedicated to his memory.

FOR MOST OF the time the Boston Symphony Chamber Players may be buried, so to speak, within their city's remarkable symphonic ensemble, but at the end of each season they merge into a highly cohesive virtuoso ensemble of their own, while the rest of the Boston Symphony splits off to become to the Boston Pops Orchestra. The chamber group is made up of 12 first-chair players from the BSO.

Monday night these 12 split up into several smaller groupings and played four chamber works ranging from early Beethoven to Ingolf Dahl. The Beethoven was far and away the finest part of the evening, though everything was well played.

TO TAKE UP the least likable first, there was Dahl's "Duettino Concertante" for flute and percussion, composed in the fall of 1966.

This unusual pairing of instruments, or rather instrument against instrumental group, seems more of a stunt than piece of music. As the program notes said, it achieves "maximal exploitation of the expressive resources" of the instruments and does very little for the listener emotionally.

It was more interesting to watch than to hear, for percussionist Everett Firth went through almost acrobatic manuevers at times to play his rather large group of percussion pieces. He was very impressive.

THEN THERE was a step up to Hindemith's Quintet for Wind Instruments, Opus 24, No. 2, a more comfortable piece of music, though hardly something you would walk a mile to hear. The Bostonians did more than their duty to it, however, and that was enough to make it something to remember.

Best of all were the two Beethoven works that opened and closed the program, both from the composer's early years. These were the Trio for Violin, Viola and Cello, Opus 9, No. 1, and the Septet, Opus 20.

The trio, played by violinist Joseph Silverstein, violist Burton Fine and cellist Jules Eskin, was a bright piece full of great good cheer. It is remarkable how consistently fine Beethoven's music is from his earliest years to his last (this was written in his 20s).

THE THREE instrumentalists played beautifully, amply demonstrating that the best players in America's greatest orchestras are among the best players, period. They worked very well together as a chamber ensemlbe and would have been quite a respectable choice for a Dallas Chamber Music Society date.

Closing the program was the Beethoven septet for four string and three wind instruments, one of the composer's most popular pieces during his lifetime. Another cheerful work, it was given a brilliant, polished performance by the Boston seven.

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 303,041 SUN. 353,214

MAY 4 1973

Boston Chamber Group Civilized

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CHAMBER PLAYERS; Featuring first chair players of the Boston Symphony in the last Houston Civic Music Assoc. concert of the Season. One performance only Thursday night in Jones Hall.

PROGRAM

Mozart ..... Quartet in D Major, K. 285
Stravinsky ..... "L'Historie du soldat," concert suite
Beethoven ..... Septet in E. flat, Op. 20

BY SUSAN L. BUTLER
Fine Arts Staff

The first-chair players of one of the finest orchestras in America treated a Houston Civic Music Assn. audience to a concert that can be aptly described as civilized.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Chamber Players, comprised of 11 men and one woman, principal players of the string, woodwind and brass sections, plus a timpanist, presented a program well suited to the prime characteristic of this group: All excellent instrumentalists in their own right, but players accustomed to ensemble playing. So in the midst of the individual demands and specialties of the Mozart, Stravinsky and Beethoven on the program, the players were above all a group, working together.

The one work on the program that sounded more like a combination of individual performances, but not an exception to the ensemble rule, was Stravinsky's "L'Historie du soldat" in a concert version including only the violin, bass, clarinet, bassoon, trumpet, trombone and timpani.

For those accustomed to the fuller version of this musical story of a soldier vs the devil, this rendition sounds more like a set of conversations going on at once, rather than one history being related. And for some, this presents the work in a less interesting light, appearing even more disjointed and repetitive than the orchestral piece.

But it also clarifies some sections of the work. Some performances of the larger version only muddle Stravinsky's intent and the thrust of his music, because the particular impact of an instrument's presence is lost. Thursday night there was no such problem: the seven musicians kept the impact well within their and the audience's grasp.

In this work every performer had a chance to display his or her particular style and talent sometimes unencumbered by other sounds: First violinist Joseph Silverstein's tone was very mellow even during the more punctuated moments; Armando Ghitalla had some problems with the trickier trumpet passages, but when he hit them right (which was almost all the time) they were really right on target; and Sherman Walt's bassoon playing was unmuffled and seemingly produced without effort even in the upper register.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the only woman first flutist of a major American orchestra, was featured in the first work on the program, Mozart's Quartet in D Major, K. 285, for violin, viola and cello. Her woodwind tones contrasting with the string sounds projected her part in front of the others, and in all three movements her sharp tonguing of fast-fingered notes and buoyant renderings brightened the typical Mozartian music.

The musicians were technically wonderful: Charles Kavaloski's horn was pristine pure; Walt and Silverstein were as good as before; Harold Wright's clarinet playing was smooth. And, although the musicians catered to the dynamics of the work, very little emotion was conveyed through the playing.

This concert is the last of Civic Music's season, which included such artists as Roberta Peters, the Westminister Choir, James Oliver Buswell IV and National Ballet of Washington.

98

LOWER CAPE COD
CHRONICLE
CHATHAM MASS.
W. 14,000

MAY 10 1973 New England Newsclip

BSO Chamber Concerts This Weekend

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, eight first-chair principals of one of the world's great orchestras, are coming to the Cape again, this year for two concerts: Friday, May 11 at Monomoy Theatre in Chatham and Saturday, May 12, in St. Barnabas Hall, Falmouth, both at 8 p.m. This is the fourth year these distinguished musicians have appeared on the Cape under Cape Cod Conservatory auspices, in cooperation with the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities. The two concerts are sponsored by the Conservatory's Cape Cod Wall Council, which will welcome members of the audiences at a reception following each performance. The picture, taken at Boston's famous Symphony Hall., shows the nine who will play on Cape, headed by the BSO's distinguished concertmaster and solo violin, Joseph Silverstein (front). Others, from left, are Jules Eskin, cello: Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Charles Kavaloski, horn; Harold Wright, clarinet; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Burton Fine, viola. The program includes works by Beethoven, Mozart, and Carl Nielsen.

DALTON NEWS RECORD
DALTON, MASS.
W. 2,300

MAY 3 1973 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Group To Perform At B.C.C. May 7

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Chamber Players, the first desk musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present a concert Monday, May 7, at 8 p.m. in the new Koussevitzky Arts Center at Berkshire Community College on West Street in Pittsfield.

The concert, part of the dedication week of the new arts center, is sponsored by the Council of Tanglewood Friends and the Junior League of Berkshire County. The concert includes Beethoven's String Trio Op. 9, No. 1, Hindemith's Woodwind Quintet Op. 24, and Beethoven's Septet, Op. 20.

Tickets for the concert may be purchased at reasonable prices at the Berkshire Community College Box Office, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and at Sammy Vincent's in Pittsfield. For further information about the concert and ticket reservations, call either 442-0977 or 528-0805.

The morning of May 7, the Chamber Players present their third consecutive year of concerts and instrument demonstration clinics for students of Berkshire County at Taconic High School.

ORACLE
ORLEANS, MASS.
W. 15,700

MAY 10 1973 New England Newsclip

When the Boston Symphony Chamber Players bring their fame and artistry to the Cape for two concerts on Friday and Saturday, May 11-12, their woodwind quintet will be among the program features. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, solo flute; Sherman Walt, principal bassoon; Charles Kavaloski, solo horn; will be joined by Harold Wright, principal clarinet; and Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe.

The concerts are in Monomoy Theatre, Chatham on Friday, May 11 and in Falmouth at St. Barnabas Hall on Saturday, May 12, when the quintet will be heard in a work by Carl Nielsen. A Beethoven string trio and a Mozart quartet for flute and strings will complete the programs.

Tickets are available on the Lower Cape at H.H. Snow's, Orleans; Chatham Jewelers, Chatham; and at the Cape Cod Conservatory in Barnstable.

The Cape Cod Wall Council of the Conservatory is sponsoring both events and will host a reception for the audience after each concert.

The woodwind quintet of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will be featured in two Cape concerts on May 11 and 12. Shown against a background at Symphony Hall in Boston are Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Flute, and Sherman Walt, Bassoon, seated

Not all great musicians got that way doing nothing but practice 10 hours a day from the time they could walk. Members of the famous Boston Symphony Chamber Players, all principals of the Boston Symphpony and each in the top rank of his field, have wide and varied interests in addition to their art.

When they appear in concert at Monomoy Theatre in Chatham, Friday, May 11, and in Falmouth at St. Barnabas Hall on May 12, the audiences will be hearing and looking at two Ph.D.'s, one in chemistry and one in mathematics, an expert photographer, an enthusiastic gardener, a couple of ardent golfers, skiers, fisherman, and sports car fans.

Yet with all that, their achievements include two of the prized Naumburg Awards and several other honors. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, who leads the Chamber Players, has an honorary degree from Tufts and is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Jules Eskin, principal cello, is an expert cameraman. Burton Fine, principal viola, relinquished a career as a research chemist to devote himself to music. Charles Kavaloski, principal horn, not only has his doctorate in math, but was on several university math faculties before becoming one of the country's leading artists of the horn and coming to Boston.

While rising to become one of the first woman principals of a major orchestra, the flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer found time to qualify as an accomplished gardener. Sherman Walt, bassoon principal, is an outdoor sports enthusiast.

Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe, does not spend all his time with music, but it would not be surprising if he did. Of seven brothers and sisters in his family, five are graduates of the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, and two of the five, he and his brother Harold of the New York Philharmonic, are solo oboists with major orchestras. Harold Wright, principal clarinet, has been a member of the Houston, jDallas, and Washington symphonies before joining the Boston Symphony.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

MAY 8 1973 New England Newsclip

Music review

Boston Symphony Chamber Players

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE PROGRAM played by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players last night in the Koussevitzky Arts Center at the new Berkshire Community College consisted of two Beethoven works mainly for strings framing two contemporary compositions for wind instruments.

Ten masterful players, all first-desk musicians from the orchestra, performed in ensembles requiring from two to seven participants. The Beethoven String Trio, Op. 9, No. 1, exposed three virtuosos, but the exquisite delicacy and saccharine grace of the violin was not a fit complement to the more virile eloquence of the viola and cello so that a proper balance was rarely achieved.

* * *

IN THE CONCLUDING septet, Op. 20, a doublebass, clarinet, bassoon and horn joined the string trio for some of Beethoven's most felicitous utterances, offering a great variety and contrast of moods and character. A cadenza for the violin in the final movement was a flash of pyrotechnical splendor, but there was less than adequate bluster and solidity in the overall performance. Concentration on perfection robbed the spirit of ensemble of boldness and emancipation.

* * *

THE SPICE of the evening came with works by Leo Kraft and the late Paul Hindemith. Kraft's "Line Drawings" has four movements: fast, slow, bright and free, for flute and percussion. It would seem problematical how the sounds of two such unrelated instruments could blend or coalesce, but Kraft demonstrated how quite positively.

From the initial flute beep which was joined by a modest clap on a woodblock, there were timbral and rhythmic relationships which were fascinating and surprising. The lovely tone of the flute and the wide diversity of the percussion instruments — four drums from small snare to bass, triangles, gong, cymbal, and probably a couple not discernible — provided a menage in which miscegenation was perfectly tolerable. Basically, Kraft has imagination and poetry in his pen as well as a thorough penetration of the potentials of the instruments he required so that when he accompanies a flutter tongue with a discreetly restrained roll, it is a valid exploration into new but viable territory.

* * *

HINDEMITH'S quintet for wind instruments is from early in this century, but it is gay and humorous in spirit and polytonal and adventurous in means. He called it "Kleine Kammermusik," and no informative legends ever excelled his for aptness. It was immediately apparent, or rather made so by the outstanding performers, what the nature of the piece at hand was intended to portray. "Lustig" was certainly playful; the "Walzer" was deliriously enchanting; the "Ruhig und Einfach" placid and simple in contentment; and the "Schnell" was delightfully lively.

The artists were Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Henry Portnoi, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Harold Wright, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Charles Kovalaski, horn, and Everett Firth, percussion.

The evening was presented by the Council of Tanglewood Friends and BCC and was sponsored in part by the Junior League of Berkshire County.

98

LOWER CAPE COD
CHRONICLE
CHATHAM, MASS.
W. 14,000

MAY 10 1973 New England Newsclip

BSO Chamber Concerts This Weekend

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, eight first-chair principals of one of the world's great orchestras, are coming to the Cape again, this year for two concerts: Friday, May 11 at Monomoy Theatre in Chatham and Saturday, May 12, in St. Barnabas Hall, Falmouth, both at 8 p.m. This is the fourth year these distinguished musicians have appeared on the Cape under Cape Cod Conservatory auspices, in cooperation with the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities. The two concerts are sponsored by the Conservatory's Cape Cod Wall Council, which will welcome members of the audiences at a reception following each performance. The picture, taken at Boston's famous Symphony Hall., shows the nine who will play on Cape, headed by the BSO's distinguished concertmaster and solo violin, Joseph Silverstein (front). Others, from left, are Jules Eskin, cello: Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Charles Kavaloski, horn; Harold Wright, clarinet; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Burton Fine, viola. The program includes works by Beethoven, Mozart, and Carl Nielsen.

DALTON NEWS RECORD
DALTON, MASS.
W. 2,300

MAY 3 1973 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Group To Perform At B.C.C. May 7

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Chamber Players, the first desk musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present a concert Monday, May 7, at 8 p.m. in the new Koussevitzky Arts Center at Berkshire Community College on West Street in Pittsfield.

The concert, part of the dedication week of the new arts center, is sponsored by the Council of Tanglewood Friends and the Junior League of Berkshire County. The concert includes Beethoven's String Trio Op. 9, No. 1, Hindemith's Woodwind Quintet Op. 24, and Beethoven's Septet, Op. 20.

Tickets for the concert may be purchased at reasonable prices at the Berkshire Community College Box Office, the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, and at Sammy Vincent's in Pittsfield. For further information about the concert and ticket reservations, call either 442-0977 or 528-0805.

The morning of May 7, the Chamber Players present their third consecutive year of concerts and instrument demonstration clinics for students of Berkshire County at Taconic High School.

ORACLE
ORLEANS, MASS.
W. 15,700

MAY 10 1973 New England Newsclip

When the Boston Symphony Chamber Players bring their fame and artistry to the Cape for two concerts on Friday and Saturday, May 11-12, their woodwind quintet will be among the program features. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, solo flute; Sherman Walt, principal bassoon; Charles Kavaloski, solo horn; will be joined by Harold Wright, principal clarinet; and Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe.

The concerts are in Monomoy Theatre, Chatham on Friday, May 11 and in Falmouth at St. Barnabas Hall on Saturday, May 12, when the quintet will be heard in a work by Carl Nielsen. A Beethoven string trio and a Mozart quartet for flute and strings will complete the programs.

Tickets are available on the Lower Cape at H.H. Snow's, Orleans; Chatham Jewelers, Chatham; and at the Cape Cod Conservatory in Barnstable.

The Cape Cod Wall Council of the Conservatory is sponsoring both events and will host a reception for the audience after each concert.

Not all great musicians got that way doing nothing but practice 10 hours a day from the time they could walk. Members of the famous Boston Symphony Chamber Players, all principals of the Boston Symphpony and each in the top rank of his field, have wide and varied interests in addition to their art.

When they appear in concert at Monomoy Theatre in Chatham, Friday, May 11, and in Falmouth at St. Barnabas Hall on May 12, the audiences will be hearing and looking at two Ph.D.'s, one in chemistry and one in mathematics, an expert photographer, an enthusiastic gardener, a couple of ardent golfers, skiers, fisherman, and sports car fans.

Yet with all that, their achievements include two of the prized Naumburg Awards and several other honors. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, who leads the Chamber Players, has an honorary degree from Tufts and is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Jules Eskin, principal cello, is an expert cameraman. Burton Fine, principal viola, relinquished a career as a research chemist to devote himself to music. Charles Kavaloski, principal horn, not only has his doctorate in math, but was on several university math faculties before becoming one of the country's leading artists of the horn and coming to Boston.

While rising to become one of the first woman principals of a major orchestra, the flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer found time to qualify as an accomplished gardener. Sherman Walt, bassoon principal, is an outdoor sports enthusiast.

Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe, does not spend all his time with music, but it would not be surprising if he did. Of seven brothers and sisters in his family, five are graduates of the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, and two of the five, he and his brother Harold of the New York Philharmonic, are solo oboists with major orchestras. Harold Wright, principal clarinet, has been a member of the Houston, jDallas, and Washington symphonies before joining the Boston Symphony.

The woodwind quintet of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will be featured in two Cape concerts on May 11 and 12. Shown against a background at Symphony Hall in Boston are Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Flute, and Sherman Walt, Bassoon, seated

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

MAY 8 1973 New England Newsclip

Music review

Boston Symphony Chamber Players

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE PROGRAM played by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players last night in the Koussevitzky Arts Center at the new Berkshire Community College consisted of two Beethoven works mainly for strings framing two contemporary compositions for wind instruments.

Ten masterful players, all first-desk musicians from the orchestra, performed in ensembles requiring from two to seven participants. The Beethoven String Trio, Op. 9, No. 1, exposed three virtuosos, but the exquisite delicacy and saccharine grace of the violin was not a fit complement to the more virile eloquence of the viola and cello so that a proper balance was rarely achieved.

* * *

IN THE CONCLUDING septet, Op. 20, a doublebass, clarinet, bassoon and horn joined the string trio for some of Beethoven's most felicitous utterances, offering a great variety and contrast of moods and character. A cadenza for the violin in the final movement was a flash of pyrotechnical splendor, but there was less than adequate bluster and solidity in the overall performance. Concentration on perfection robbed the spirit of ensemble of boldness and emancipation.

* * *

THE SPICE of the evening came with works by Leo Kraft and the late Paul Hindemith. Kraft's "Line Drawings" has four movements: fast, slow, bright and free, for flute and percussion. It would seem problematical how the sounds of two such unrelated instruments could blend or coalesce, but Kraft demonstrated how quite positively.

From the initial flute beep which was joined by a modest clap on a woodblock, there were timbral and rhythmic relationships which were fascinating and surprising. The lovely tone of the flute and the wide diversity of the percussion instruments — four drums from small snare to bass, triangles, gong, cymbal, and probably a couple not discernible — provided a menage in which miscegenation was perfectly tolerable. Basically, Kraft has imagination and poetry in his pen as well as a thorough penetration of the potentials of the instruments he required so that when he accompanies a flutter tongue with a discreetly restrained roll, it is a valid exploration into new but viable territory.

* * *

HINDEMITH'S quintet for wind instruments is from early in this century, but it is gay and humorous in spirit and polytonal and adventurous in means. He called it "Kleine Kammermusik," and no informative legends ever excelled his for aptness. It was immediately apparent, or rather made so by the outstanding performers, what the nature of the piece at hand was intended to portray. "Lustig" was certainly playful; the "Walzer" was deliriously enchanting; the "Ruhig und Einfach" placid and simple in contentment; and the "Schnell" was delightfully lively.

The artists were Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Henry Portnoi, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Harold Wright, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Charles Kovalaski, horn, and Everett Firth, percussion.

The evening was presented by the Council of Tanglewood Friends and BCC and was sponsored in part by the Junior League of Berkshire County.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,100
MAY 14 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO flutist was a first

By BARBARA VAN NICE

Doriot Anthony Dwyer auditioned 21 years ago to be first flutist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra not because of any Women's Lib tendency, but because "I just wanted to play in the best orchestra I possibly could."

Accepted, she stirred criticism from a few skeptics, but acclaim from other reviewers.

Last week, Mrs. Dwyer performed with others in the BSO Chamber Players in a concert at Berkshire Community College where the student center is named for her great-great-aunt, suffragette Susan B. Anthony.

In the morning, they had given a brief concert and clinic sessions to students from the city's secondary schools who gathered at Taconic High School. It was the third annual such appearance, this time financed by the county Junior League.

Barbara Van Nice

Doriot Anthony Dwyer

Traveling for concert performances is "part of my life. I accept it," Mrs. Dwyer said in an interview at the school. She acknowledged, however, that "I prefer not to travel at all. I prefer to stay home." For the Tanglewood season, she has a cottage in Stockbridge.

A Chicago native, Mrs. Dwyer comes from Anthony stock that went West and became farmers. Her mother was a musician, one of five sisters who performed on the Chautauqua circuit. The women "were professionals at a time when women were not musicians," Mrs. Dwyer says.

Her mother, a flutist, played in the Chicago Ladies' Orchestra, forerunner of the Chicago Women's Symphony that was still going, as far as Mrs. Dwyer knows, in the 1930s.

The BSO's first flutist was the only one of the four Anthony children who followed the mother's lead, though the others also are musically talented, Mrs. Dwyer says.

Invited women

She said that in the early 1950s, when she was auditioning, the BSO was "one of the most fair" orchestras in allowing and even inviting women to try out. At that time, the BSO had had a female second flutist for about a year and both the Houston and Los Angeles Philharmonic had women for first flutists. (The latter orchestra was where she had second seat before joining the BSO.)

Fortunately, she says, the situation that made it difficult for women to become members of orchestras has changed with time.

In her short talk with students after the concert at Taconic, Mrs. Dwyer was asked whether she plays rock music. No, she answered, saying that classical style and music demands so much concentration that she focuses solely on it.

However, she confessed, "I have a Walter Mitty desire to play jazz."

SUN TRANSCRIPT
WINTHROP, MASS.
W. 4,800
MAY 9 1973
New England Newsclip

Robert Fritz Awarded Music Commission

Robert J. Fritz has recently been awarded a commission by Colage, the contemporary Music Ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The composition, entitled "Some say existence like a pirouet and pirouette, forever in one place stands still and dances, but it runs away," will be the featured work on a concert to be held May 13th at the Museum of Fine Arts, in connection with the opening of the Robert Motherwell exhibition.

Fritz is presently a member of the Composition Department of the Berklee School of Music. He has for the past few years, won positions in the Playboy Jazz and Pop Poll, and has recorded with Paul Stukie of Peter, Paul and Mary, and with Darius Brubeck.

The Houston Post
D. 294,590 SUN. 327,167
MAY 3 1973

Show business

Homer McCallon, recently retired as city manager of Loew's Theaters in Houston, will be honored at a testimonial dinner at the Houston Oaks May 22. His career stretches back to the opening of the Loew's downtown 45 years ago. Reservations can be made at 622-5446 . . . If it's true you can't tell the players without a program, then theatergoers at Lincoln Center and Carnegie Hall were in a dither. The program's division of Saturday Review, which furnished the Metropolitan opera, Philharmonic Hall, Tully Hall and Carnegie, found itself out of business when printers, owed a reported $1 million by Saturday Review, balked at continuing publication. Theater spokesman said offset printed programs will be substituted . . . Johnny Ray opens at the new Flavia 1400 club May 24 . . . Several reunions were in order when the Boston Symphony Chamber Players arrived in Houston Wednesday, prior to Thursday's Civic Music concert in Jones Hall. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the BSO, was formerly a Houston Symphony violinist. Boston Symphony principal trumpet player Armando Ghitalla and principal clarinetist Harold Wright are also former Houston Symphony members.

TOWNSMAN
WELLESLEY, MASS.
W. 8,500
MAY 17 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO Trombonist Performs For Tenacre Student

William Gibson, principal trombone of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and authority on antique brass instruments, gave a demonstration and concert for students at Tenacre Country Day School last Thursday. A native of Marlow, Oklahoma, Mr. Gibson makes his home in Needham, and has been with the Boston Symphony since 1955.

The program opened with the playing of the horn of a Texas steer, equipped with a mouthpiece, which showed the children how "horns" evolved into brass musical instruments and why they are called "horns". He then demonstrated a centuries-old serpentine instrument, borrowed from the permanent collection of the BSO, made of thin wood covered with leather.

Among the other instruments he played for the children were a brass trumpet, created for and used for the first time in a Wagner opera; an Alpine horn from Switzerland, ten feet long and made of natural wood; a contemporary baritone horn of the type used in marching bands. On the latter, he played selections from Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." Following this, Mr. Gibson chose several light pieces as well as excerpts from the symphonic repetoire.

At the end of the program, Mr. Gibson presented the Tenacre library with a book on the development of brass instruments.

NEWS
GARDNER, MASS.
D. 8,061
MAY 2 1972
New England Newsclip

College Plans Art Festival

The festival, with the exception of an environmental sculpture exhibition at the Pearl Street Campus, will be held on the lawn of or inside the Elm Street Campus.

Key artists include Walter Kamys, a distinguished artist, lecturer and teacher who will give a slide-lecture at 11 a.m. on his paintings.

The Guadagnini Quartet, six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present three musical selections during the afternoon of the festival. The quartet's 2 p.m. program in the college library is sponsored by the college's Distinguished Visitors Committee in conjunction with Mrs. Jean C. Tandy, professor of art and head of the festival.

Dr. Arthur F. Haley, college president; Dr. John H. Bassett, dean of faculty, and Dr. Samuel J. O'Neill, chairman of the Division of Humanities, will be present at the 9.30 a.m. welcoming ceremonies.

Many Mount Wachusett Community College students will have an opportunity to exhibit their works in a student film festival, painting, sculpture and ceramics exhibits, the potter's wheel, poetry readings and informal guitar concerts.

Gardner High School students will have an art exhibition at 10 a.m. in Room 201. Ensembles and soloists from Holyoke Community College will perform in the library. Films will delve into enameling and printmaking.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500
MAY 3 1973
New England Newsclip

Newton Symphony Concert Sunday

The Newton Symphony Orchestra will present its last subscription series concert Sunday, May 6, at 8 p.m. at Meadowbrook Junior High School. Michel Sasson will lead the orchestra in Schoenberg's transcription of J. S. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat Major, Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2 for Violin and Orchestra, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2.

The Prokofiev will feature violinist Cecylia Arzewski, a member of the Boston Symphony and a resident of Newton. Originally from Poland, Ms. Arzewski moved with her family to Israel and three years later, to the U.S. She studied in New York at the Julliard School and later with Joseph Silverstein at New England Conservatory of Music, before joining the Boston Symphony in 1970.

On Sunday, May 13, the Newton Symphony will perform in the Newton Centennial Celebration at Roberts Hall, Boston College. Featured work will be the premiere of Newton resident Henry Lasker's Oath of Hippocrates, commissioned by the Centennial Committee for this concert.

The Houston Post
D. 294,590 SUN. 327,167
MAY 3 1973

Music Guild hears thrilling finale

THE PROGRAM

THE MUSIC GUILD—Ronald Patterson, violin; Charles Kavaloski, French horn; Albert Hirsh, piano. Presented at 6040 Glen Cove Wednesday evening.

"Devil's Trill" Sonata (Tartini), Sonata for Unaccompanied F. violin (Persichetti), Sonata in C-minor for Violin and Piano, Opus 30, Number Two (Beethoven), Trio for Violin, Piano and French Horn, Opus 40 (Brahms).

By CARL CUNNINGHAM

By himself, Houston Symphony concertmaster Ronald Patterson bid fair to give the Music Guild an impressive display of violin playing at their final concert of the season Wednesday evening. But with the authoritative support of pianist Albert Hirsh and the guest appearance of Boston Symphony principal French horn player Charles Kavaloski, the concert became the kind of musical feast that organization rarely enjoys.

The main features immediately evident in Patterson's playing were strong, compelling tone projection and clean, dazzling technique. His tone was large and forceful, though certainly not unpleasant, and he could articulate rapid scale passages with a degree of clarity we are not accustomed to hearing from Houston violinists.

Patterson's tone could also be beguiling and attractive, as was immediately demonstrated in the slow movements of Tartini's "Devil's Trill" Sonata. Apart from his triumphant performance of its trill-bedecked finale, these were his most successful movements in this first work on the program.

Scattered flaw and scratchy tone on multiple stops also marred his performance of the first movement of Vincent Persichetti's Sonta for Solo Violin, immediately following. However, he gained total control of the music from its second movement onward and gave the remainder of this taut, sometimes tart piece a thoroughly convincing interpretation.

Patterson and Hirsh then turned to Beethoven's demanding C-minor Violin Sonata and gave the work the kind of commanding interpretation one does not soon forget. Though a beat or two seemed to be omitted during the first movement, their total performance gave the music a strongly chiseled profile and sinewy strength.

Post reviews

Brahms' E-flat Major Horn Trio put Patterson, Hirsh and Kavaloski to the test of playing, a test all three met handsomely. Patterson, in particularly, showed his ability to hold his own against the naturally larger sound of the French horn and thus shored up an inherent balance problem in this work.

Kavaloski proved to be a player with a cleanly focused, brilliant tone; thus he kept the more strongly stated passages in his part from becoming blatant or splayed in sound. Nevertheless, he joined Patterson in a marvelously exotic soft duet during the trio's slow movement.

Pianist Hirsh played with his customary alertness throughout the concert and unleashed a degree of tonal power that one does not usually hear in his ensemble performances.

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 303,041 SUN. 353,214
MAY 3 1973

Silverstein Has Moved Up Fast In His Musical Field

When Joe Silverstein left Houston, he didn't goof around.

Joining the Boston Symphony violin section, he rose rapidly to his current status as concertmaster and assistant conductor.

Tonight he'll bring his Boston Chamber Players, a group he helped organize nine years ago, to Jones Hall after a day of visits with old friends.

Silverstein played in the first-violin section of the Houston Symphony for three seasons under then-Concertmaster Ray Fliegel and assistant Andy Toth before moving on in the spring of '52.

He sees chamber groups such as the Boston, composed of orchestra principals, as only an adjunct — but an important one — to the orchestra and its various ensembles.

"We try to focus on new music by composers in the area," he explained Wednesday. "We've already done two works by Bostonians this season. I even conduct a little if a composer prefers not to."

Silverstein is highly optimistic about the Boston orchestra and its new conductor, Seiji Ozawa, who also heads up San Francisco's symphony.

"He's a man of incredible inner discipline," Silverstein says. "And the two orchestras' seasonsd on't run concurrently.

"And since Erich Leinsdorf left (conductor in '69), the orchestra formed a committee on artistic standards, both as a watchdog on management to be sure programming and rehearsal time are acceptable and to insure individual performing standards. There are no conspicuous holes in the orchestra now. With Ozawa coming in under those conditions, I've never seen morale so high."

Does Time magazine's current cover article rating the Boston orchestra and others strike Silverstein as fair?

"That whole rating business seems silly," he said. "Bill Bender (Time critic) would have to hear all top symphonies in the same hall one night all playing the same piece. And a lot is up to the conductor. Look at Eugene Ormandy, whom I believe to be underrated by critics. Philadelphia has stayed at the top for a long time.

"Personally, I think it's that little bald-headed man's fault!" — JOHN SCARBOROUGH.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,000

MAY 14 1973

New England Newsclip

BSO flutist was a first

By BARBARA VAN NICE

Doriot Anthony Dwyer auditioned 21 years ago to be first flutist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra not because of any Women's Lib tendency, but because "I just wanted to play in the best orchestra I possibly could."

Accepted, she stirred criticism from a few skeptics, but acclaim from other reviewers.

Last week, Mrs. Dwyer performed with others in the BSO Chamber Players in a concert at Berkshire Community College where the student center is named for her great-great-aunt, suffragette Susan B. Anthony.

In the morning, they had given a brief concert and clinic sessions to students from the city's secondary schools who gathered at Taconic High School. It was the third annual such appearance, this time financed by the county Junior League.

Barbara Van Nice
Doriot Anthony Dwyer

Traveling for concert performances is "part of my life. I accept it," Mrs. Dwyer said in an interview at the school. She acknowledged, however, that "I prefer not to travel at all. I prefer to stay home." For the Tanglewood season, she has a cottage in Stockbridge.

A Chicago native, Mrs. Dwyer comes from Anthony stock that went West and became farmers. Her mother was a musician, one of five sisters who performed on the Chautauqua circuit. The women "were professionals at a time when women were not musicians," Mrs. Dwyer says.

Her mother, a flutist, played in the Chicago Ladies' Orchestra, forerunner of the Chicago Women's Symphony that was still going, as far as Mrs. Dwyer knows, in the 1930s.

The BSO's first flutist was the only one of the four Anthony children who followed the mother's lead, though the others also are musically talented, Mrs. Dwyer says.

Invited women

She said that in the early 1950s, when she was auditioning, the BSO was "one of the most fair" orchestras in allowing and even inviting women to try out. At that time, the BSO had had a female second flutist for about a year and both the Houston and Los Angeles Philharmonic had women for first flutists. (The latter orchestra was where she had second seat before joining the BSO.)

Fortunately, she says, the situation that made it difficult for women to become members of orchestras has changed with time.

In her short talk with students after the concert at Taconic, Mrs. Dwyer was asked whether she plays rock music. No, she answered, saying that classical style and music demands so much concentration that she focuses solely on it.

However, she confessed, "I have a Walter Mitty desire to play jazz."

SUN TRANSCRIPT
WINTHROP, MASS.
W. 4,800

MAY 9 1973

New England Newsclip

Robert Fritz Awarded Music Commission

Robert J. Fritz has recently been awarded a commission by Colage, the contemporary Music Ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The composition, entitled "Some say existence like a pirouet and pirouette, forever in one place stands still and dances, but it runs away," will be the featured work on a concert to be held May 13th at the Museum of Fine Arts, in connection with the opening of the Robert Motherwell exhibition.

Fritz is presently a member of the Composition Department of the Berklee School of Music. He has for the past few years, won positions in the Playboy Jazz and Pop Poll, and has recorded with Paul Stukie of Peter, Paul and Mary, and with Darius Brubeck.

The Houston Post
D. 294,990 SUN. 327,167

MAY 3 1973

Show business

Homer McCallon, recently retired as city manager of Loew's Theaters in Houston, will be honored at a testimonial dinner at the Houston Oaks May 22. His career stretches back to the opening of the Loew's downtown 45 years ago. Reservations can be made at 622-5446 . . . If it's true you can't tell the players without a program, then theatergoers at Lincoln Center and Carnegie Hall were in a dither. The program's division of Saturday Review, which furnished the Metropolitan opera, Philharmonic Hall, Tully Hall and Carnegie, found itself out of business when printers, owed a reported $1 million by Saturday Review, balked at continuing publication. Theater spokesman said offset printed programs will be substituted . . . Johnny Ray opens at the new Flavia 1400 club May 24 . . . Several reunions were in order when the Boston Symphony Chamber Players arrived in Houston Wednesday, prior to Thursday's Civic Music concert in Jones Hall. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the BSO, was formerly a Houston Symphony violinist. Boston Symphony principal trumpet player Armando Ghitalla and principal clarinetist Harold Wright are also former Houston Symphony members.

TOWNSMAN
WELLESLEY, MASS.
W. 8,500

MAY 17 1973

New England Newsclip

BSO Trombonist Performs For Tenacre Student

William Gibson, principal trombone of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and authority on antique brass instruments, gave a demonstration and concert for students at Tenacre Country Day School last Thursday. A native of Marlow, Oklahoma, Mr. Gibson makes his home in Needham, and has been with the Boston Symphony since 1955.

The program opened with the playing of the horn of a Texas steer, equipped with a mouthpiece, which showed the children how "horns" evolved into brass musical instruments and why they are called "horns". He then demonstrated a centuries-old serpentine instrument, borrowed from the permanent collection of the BSO, made of thin wood covered with leather.

Among the other instruments he played for the children were a brass trumpet, created for and used for the first time in a Wagner opera; an Alpine horn from Switzerland, ten feet long and made of natural wood; a contemporary baritone horn of the type used in marching bands. On the latter, he played selections from Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." Following this, Mr. Gibson chose several light pieces as well as excerpts from the symphonic repetoire.

At the end of the program, Mr. Gibson presented the Tenacre library with a book on the development of brass instruments.

NEWS
GARDNER, MASS.
D. 8,061

MAY 2 1972

New England Newsclip

College Plans Art Festival

The festival, with the exception of an environmental sculpture exhibition at the Pearl Street Campus, will be held on the lawn of or inside the Elm Street Campus.

Key artists include Walter Kamys, a distinguished artist, lecturer and teacher who will give a slide-lecture at 11 a.m. on his paintings.

The Guadagnini Quartet, six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present three musical selections during the afternoon of the festival. The quartet's 2 p.m. program in the college library is sponsored by the college's Distinguished Visitors Committee in conjunction with Mrs. Jean C. Tandy, professor of art and head of the festival.

Dr. Arthur F. Haley, college president; Dr. John H. Bassett, dean of faculty, and Dr. Samuel J. O'Neill, chairman of the Division of Humanities, will be present at the 9.30 a.m. welcoming ceremonies.

Many Mount Wachusett Community College students will have an opportunity to exhibit their works in a student film festival, painting, sculpture and ceramics exhibits, the potter's wheel, poetry readings and informal guitar concerts.

Gardner High School students will have an art exhibition at 10 a.m. in Room 201. Ensembles and soloists from Holyoke Community College will perform in the library. Films will delve into enameling and printmaking.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500

MAY 8 1973

New England Newsclip

Newton Symphony Concert Sunday

The Newton Symphony Orchestra will present its last subscription series concert Sunday, May 6, at 8 p.m. at Meadowbrook Junior High School. Michel Sasson will lead the orchestra in Schoenberg's transcription of J. S. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat Major, Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2 for Violin and Orchestra, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2.

The Prokofiev will feature violinist Cecylia Arzewski, a member of the Boston Symphony and a resident of Newton. Originally from Poland, Ms. Arzewski moved with her family to Israel and three years later, to the U.S. She studied in New York at the Julliard School and later with Joseph Silverstein at New England Conservatory of Music, before joining the Boston Symphony in 1970.

On Sunday, May 13, the Newton Symphony will perform in the Newton Centennial Celebration at Roberts Hall, Boston College. Featured work will be the premiere of Newton resident Henry Lasker's Oath of Hippocrates, commissioned by the Centennial Committee for this concert.

The Houston Post
D. 294,990 SUN. 327,167

MAY 3 1973

Music Guild hears thrilling finale

THE PROGRAM

THE MUSIC GUILD—Ronald Patterson, violin; Charles Kavaloski, French horn; Albert Hirsh, piano. Presented at 6040 Glen Cove Wednesday evening.

"Devil's Trill" Sonata (Tartini), Sonata for Unaccompanied F. violin (Persichetti), Sonata in C-minor for Violin and Piano, Opus 30, Number Two (Beethoven), Trio for Violin, Piano and French Horn, Opus 40 (Brahms).

By CARL CUNNINGHAM

By himself, Houston Symphony concertmaster Ronald Patterson bid fair to give the Music Guild an impressive display of violin playing at their final concert of the season Wednesday evening. But with the authoritative support of pianist Albert Hirsh and the guest appearance of Boston Symphony principal French horn player Charles Kavaloski, the concert became the kind of musical feast that organization rarely enjoys.

The main features immediately evident in Patterson's playing were strong, compelling tone projection and clean, dazzling technique. His tone was large and forceful, though certainly not unpleasant, and he could articulate rapid scale passages with a degree of clarity we are not accustomed to hearing from Houston violinists.

Patterson's tone could also be beguiling and attractive, as was immediately demonstrated in the slow movements of Tartini's "Devil's Trill" Sonata. Apart from his triumphant performance of its trill-bedecked finale, these were his most successful movements in this first work on the program.

Scattered flaw and scratchy tone on multiple stops also marred his performance of the first movement of Vincent Persichetti's Sonta for Solo Violin, immediately following. However, he gained total control of the music from its second movement onward and gave the remainder of this taut, sometimes tart piece a thoroughly convincing interpretation.

Patterson and Hirsh then turned to Beethoven's demanding C-minor Violin Sonata and gave the work the kind of commanding interpretation one does not soon forget. Though a beat or two seemed to be omitted during the first movement, their total performance gave the music a strongly chiseled profile and sinewy strength.

Post reviews

Brahms' E-flat Major Horn Trio put Patterson, Hirsh and Kavaloski to the test of playing, a test all three met handsomely. Patterson, in particularly, showed his ability to hold his own against the naturally larger sound of the French horn and thus shored up an inherent balance problem in this work.

Kavaloski proved to be a player with a cleanly focused, brilliant tone; thus he kept the more strongly stated passages in his part from becoming blatant or splayed in sound. Nevertheless, he joined Patterson in a marvelously exotic soft duet during the trio's slow movement.

Pianist Hirsh played with his customary alertness throughout the concert and unleashed a degree of tonal power that one does not usually hear in his ensemble performances.

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 303,041 SUN. 353,214

MAY 3 1973

Silverstein Has Moved Up Fast In His Musical Field

When Joe Silverstein left Houston, he didn't goof around.

Joining the Boston Symphony violin section, he rose rapidly to his current status as concertmaster and assistant conductor.

Tonight he'll bring his Boston Chamber Players, a group he helped organize nine years ago, to Jones Hall after a day of visits with old friends.

Silverstein played in the first-violin section of the Houston Symphony for three seasons under then-Concertmaster Ray Fliegel and assistant Andy Toth before moving on in the spring of '52.

He sees chamber groups such as the Boston, composed of orchestra principals, as only an adjunct — but an important one — to the orchestra and its various ensembles.

"We try to focus on new music by composers in the area," he explained Wednesday. "We've already done two works by Bostonians this season. I even conduct a little if a composer prefers not to."

Silverstein is highly optimistic about the Boston orchestra and its new conductor, Seiji Ozawa, who also heads up San Francisco's symphony.

"He's a man of incredible inner discipline," Silverstein says. "And the two orchestras' seasonsd on't run concurrently.

"And since Erich Leinsdorf left (conductor in '69), the orchestra formed a committee on artistic standards, both as a watchdog on management to be sure programming and rehearsal time are acceptable and to insure individual performing standards. There are no conspicuous holes in the orchestra now. With Ozawa coming in under those conditions, I've never seen morale so high."

Does Time magazine's current cover article rating the Boston orchestra and others strike Silverstein as fair?

"That whole rating business seems silly," he said. "Bill Bender (Time critic) would have to hear all top symphonies in the same hall one night all playing the same piece. And a lot is up to the conductor. Look at Eugene Ormandy, whom I believe to be underrated by critics. Philadelphia has stayed at the top for a long time.

"Personally, I think it's that little bald-headed man's fault!" — JOHN SCARBOROUGH.

TIME
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 3,473,000

MAY 7 1973

Rating U.S. Orchestras

TIME's Music Critic William Bender, who wrote the cover story on Sir Georg Solti, here turns to other conductors and gives his considered, though to some perhaps arbitrary, ranking of U.S. orchestras:

THE TOP THREE

CHICAGO SYMPHONY
Sine qua non.

NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC
The musicians grumblingly nicknamed him "the French Correction," and some older subscribers yawn or go home early, but it is indisputable that Pierre Boulez, 48, has brought the orchestra smack into the middle of the century and given it a pristine technical polish.

PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA
After almost four decades at the helm, Eugene Ormandy at 73 commands an orchestra that remains a patrician marvel, even though Ormandy's interpretations occasionally tend to be more like glossy prints than the real music.

HONORS

BOSTON SYMPHONY
A great orchestra that lost its edge during the last years of Erich Leinsdorf's reign, and has been essentially without a ruler since his retirement in 1969. Seiji Ozawa, 37, takes over next season in an effort to restore the Boston to its traditional excellence.

CLEVELAND ORCHESTRA
Built in the image of George Szell, the Cleveland has been fervently searching for a new look since his death in 1971. After one season on the job, Lorin Maazel, 43, is going all out to provide it, even posing for a Maazel sweatshirt that the orchestra's fund-raising committee is selling for $20.

PITTSBURGH SYMPHONY
A perennial, dependable producer under the master hand of William Steinberg, 73.

MINNESOTA ORCHESTRA
Four years after adopting a more regional stance, the former Minneapolis Symphony has a broad base of audience popularity and an equally broad range of musical style, thanks largely to its stern, businesslike mentor, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, 49.

LOS ANGELES PHILHARMONIC
At 37, Zubin Mehta remains the most polished, versatile member of conducting's young generation, the orchestra a shiny steed for his charging musical ways.

SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY
Seiji Ozawa again, the only man to lead two major American orchestras at once. The peppery Japanese has excited not just his musicians but the subscribers as well —one reason the orchestra has finished in the black throughout the three years of his tenure.

ON THE RISE

CINCINNATI SYMPHONY
Always an astonishingly well-disciplined orchestra, the underrated Cincinnati has sprung to new life under Thomas Schippers, 43, one of America's finest native-born (Kalamazoo, Mich.) conductors.

BUFFALO PHILHARMONIC
Buffalo drew national attention to itself by the simple expedient of grabbing the hottest young conductor anywhere, Michael Tilson Thomas, 27, who drew his own national attention as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony. Though the Buffalo is not yet hale and hardy, Thomas appears to be winning the orchestra's fight for the youth audience.

GREATER MIAMI PHILHARMONIC
Miami's new cultural hero is slim, personable, vibrant Alain Lombard, 32. Director of the Strasbourg Music Festival in his native France, as well as a regular guest conductor at the Metropolitan Opera, Lombard has led the Philharmonic for six years and given it new dash, style and popularity.

From top: Boulez, Ormandy, Ozawa, Maazel, Steinberg, Skrowaczewski, Mehta, Schippers, Thomas, Lombard.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654

MAY 11 1973

New England Newsclip

101

Rose Walsh

BSO's Future Extremely Bright

Talcott M. Banks, president of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had all good news for the Friends of the BSO at their 39th annual meeting Wednesday noon, at Symphony Hall. Some 600 of them had gathered around the traditional Pops tables for "A Special Programme" with Arthur Fiedler rehearsing the orchestra, for Thursday night's "Bowdoin College Night At Pops."

Speaking about the famed maestro, Mr. Banks said, "he exemplifies Youth Eternal, and Symphony Hall, which is a delight any time, comes alive when he steps on the stage."

Further good news was Boston Symphony is entering into one of the finest periods in its history. We have the most gifted group of artists ever brought together in Symphony Hall. Our conductor Seiji Ozawa is not yet 38 years old; Michael Tilson Thomas will not be 29 until almost the end of this year and more young people of college age than ever before are lining up to attend the concerts.

Tribute was paid to Mrs. George Lee Sargent, chairman of the Council of Friends; Mrs. Harris Fahnestock and Mrs. James Perkins, trustees of the BSO, Mrs. Albert Goodhue and her Musical Marathon Committee's success; Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld and Mrs. Howard, chairman and co-chairman of the annual Friends Meeting and the Friends (now over 6000 members) whose contributions this year will break all records.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 500,377

MAY 13 1973

New England Newsclip

ARTHUR FIEDLER REHEARSES THE POPS ORCHESTRA. (Globe photos by Joseph Dennehy)

LISTENING—Mrs. Arthur Fiedler and Mrs. George Lee Sargent.

TASTY—Mrs. Jack Parker samples a box lunch.

Friendly people in a musical get-together

ALISON ARNOLD

More than 800 friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gathered in Symphony Hall Wednesday for their annual meeting.

They heard Arthur Fiedler rehearse the Pops Orchestra in Thursday evening's program that was Bowdoin College Night and featured Ilana Vered, young Israeli pianist, as guest artist. They also ate box luncheons at the small tables in the hall.

The little gold folding chairs were chained to the floor and the familiar pink gladioli and white chrysanthemums were banked on the stage under the sunbursts of lights. Raincoats and umbrellas were everywhere and one woman remarked: "I can't get over all the slacks running around Symphony Hall."

Talcott Banks, president of the trustees of the orchestra, told the Friends that this has been a good year and prophesied a most exciting year ahead.

"We're not looking backward, but forward," he said and pointed out that Seiji Ozawa, the new director, is 38, and Michael Tilson Thomas is 28. But he referred to 79-year-old Arthur Fiedler as a symbol of youth eternal and he received a standing ovation.

According to Banks, the romantic symphonic repertory is returning to favor and the "clunk, clank and hammer" will often be replaced by melodies and harmony.

Symphony Hall has had a facelift this year with red carpet everywhere. There is the new and attractively renovated Cabot-Cahners Room, and another new room will be decorated under the will of Maria Hatch. Air-conditioning throughout will make the Pops concerts comfortable on the warmest evenings.

Sitting with Banks were Mrs. George Lee Sargent, a trustee and chairman of the Council of Friends, Henry B. Cabot and Mrs. Arthur Fiedler. With Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, also a trustee, was her house guest, Dr. Carleton Smith, director of the National Arts Foundation of Lichtenstein and of the Getty Award Foundation, a new series of awards established by J. Paul Getty. Still another trustee at the meeting was Mrs. James M. Perkins.

FACES AMONG THE FRIENDS

102

BAY STATE BANNER
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 17,000

MAY 17 1973 New England Newsclip

'Mrs. Hunt appointed to Symphony Board

by Kay Bourne

Mrs. Jim Lee Hunt of Pasadena rd. in Dorchester was elected to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Board of Overseers this week.

"The board of overseers does just that," says Mrs Hunt. "It watches over the operation of the BSO. Each of us is placed on a committee involving the operation of the Symphony itself. We watch and contribute ideas and suggestions, and then come back and make reports.

"The board meets only three times each year. Most of our time is taken up with committee work," she says.

Rosa Hunt is the wife of Jim Lee Hunt, who played for the Patriots for eleven years, and who is now Assistant Commissioner for the Boston Parks and Recreation Department. They have one son, and are expecting a second child in June.

Mrs. Hunt was first brought into contact with the BSO operation two years ago, when Mrs. George Sargent, one of the owners of the Patriots, asked if she would be an area chairman for Roxbury-Dorchester for the Boston Friends of the Symphony.

"People think you have to give a lot of money to be a Friend of the

Cont. on p. 22

Rosa Hunt

•Rosa Hunt appointed to Symphony Board

Cont. from p. 1

Symphony," says Mrs Hunt. "But actually, you can give as little as one dollar. Other things Friends of the Symphony do is contribute time to do mailings, and help run events like the musical marathon on radio."

Mrs. Hunt feels however, that "black people in Roxbury and Dorchester might be musically minded, might even attend the Symphony, but they have just now other priorities for their time and money, priorities within the community.

"I told them I would not pressure anyone, and I have pretty much done what I can alone," she says.

Mrs. Hunt feels that in the future, people in Roxbury and Dorchester may take a more active interest in the BSO, once their immediate priorities have been met.

Mrs. Hunt is from Texas and attended public school in San Antonio, where her interest in music began.

"The Symphony there had a series for children," she says. "We each paid 75 cents and the school board made up the difference. If you didn't have the 75 cents, it was paid anyway, and you got to go because after all, you could listen. It was more important to the directors of the series that you were given the opportunity to listen to good music, than that you had 75 cents.

"The week prior to any concert, the music teacher prepared you for the music you were to hear, and you were bused to the Symphony on Friday. I so enjoyed it. And the Symphony players came into the school to teach instruments. At the end of the year, if you were good enough, you got to play at the Symphony. Once I got to play the violin, and it was a thrill to sit on that big stage and to sound good."

The BSO holds a variety of events in its hall. From September through April, there are series that mostly concentrate on the European music of dead masters, although, as Mrs. Hunt points out, American composers are more and more included. She also points out the Romanticists series of the past year. Youth concerts are also presented in the winter season.

The Pops are on stage in May and June, and hold outdoor concerts on the banks of the Charles River. In July and August, the Symphony moves out to Tanglewood in the Berkshires, and that program, says Mrs. Hunt, "is a lot tied up with teaching youth."

The BSO and its new music director, Seiji Ozawa, were the subject of a top-flight, one-hour TV special produced by WCVB-TV's Fred Schillp and aired last Saturday night over Channel 5. Leo L. Berenek, President of WCVB-TV, is also an overseer of the BSO.

Ozawa, who will assume directorship in the fall, was revealed as a dynamic person with a lively sense of humor. He will continue to direct the San Francisco Symphony, and says, "I thought about taking the Boston job day and night for two months. My wife got sick of it." The Ozawas will maintain homes in both cities.

Ozawa, who was born and grew up in Japan, says that his family was poor "and didn't have the money to take me to concerts," but he heard music in the church and "I could feel the music in my back." Scholarships, he says, made his music career possible, and "many people helped me."

Mrs Hunt says that before she became a Friend of the BSO, she attended the Symphony "periodically by myself and my husband and I went to the Pops."

She says of the BSO audiences that they are becoming increasingly a younger crowd. "The college group go in large numbers to listen, as do young adults. But they are far and few between black—there may be six or seven black couples at a concert."

For the past two years, Mrs. Hunt has given her support to Elma Lewis's "Celebrate," which benefits the National Center Of Afro-American Artist, and she says she plans to continue working on that project. She also takes classes at the Center.

Of her position as overseer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra she says, "Hopefully, what I contribute will benefit the community, and many, many black people will become active in the Symphony."

TOWN CRIER
WAYLAND, MASS.
W. 4,652

MAY 3 1973 New England Newsclip

BSO "friends" invited

A contribution to the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes a contributor a "Friend", and the friends have been invited to "A Special Programme" Wednesday, May 9, on the occasion of the 39th Friends meeting - a rehearsal for the Boston Pops Orchestra by Arthur Fiedler.

Friends will be seated at 11:15. After rehearsal follows the annual meeting and a box luncheon, which will honor Fiedler and orchestra members. The event is at Symphony Hall in Boston.

TOWNSMAN
WELLESLEY, MASS.
W. 8,500

MAY 3 1973 New England Newsclip

Friends of Symphony Invited to Rehearsal

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have invited the Friends to "A Special Programme" Wednesday, May 9, to celebrate the 39th Annual Meeting of the Friends of the Orchestra. The special program is Arthur Fiedler rehearsing the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Friends will be seated promptly between 11:15 and 11:30 during the intermission. Rehearsal will end at 12:30 and will be followed by brief remarks from Talcott M. Banks, President of the Board of Trustees. Arthur Fiedler and members of the Orchestra will be guests of honor at a box luncheon following the rehearsal and annual meeting. Chairman of this Annual Friends Meeting is Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld assisted by Mrs. Howard E. Hansen, Vice-Chairman, of Wellesley Hills.

The Friends also have been invited to a "Day at Tanglewood" July 26. The day will include a talk by guest speaker, Armando Ghitalla, a guided tour of the grounds, attendance at a rehearsal and luncheon in the Tanglewood tent. Those interested may sign up at the Annual Meeting May 9. Special buses will provide the transportation from Boston.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

MAY 11 1973 New England Newsclip

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

It wasn't only the music that was bright and cheerful on Wednesday morning in Symphony Hall. The atmosphere matched it and hopes ran high that Boston's great musical institution, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had turned the corner on its financial and cultural doldrums and was on the way to a new era of accomplishments.

All this and more was expressed by the president of the trustees of the BSO, Talcott Banks, when he spoke to the more than 800 Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gathered for their annual meeting in Symphony Hall. His optimism, his gratitude to the Friends organization that has now grown in numbers to a record 6,000 members, and his obvious admiration for the members of the orchestra seated behind him on the stage emanated an atmosphere of cheer that bodes well for the start of the 1973 season in September.

The annual meeting began with the Friends seated at the little round tables with which Symphony Hall is furnished for the Pops concerts. Here they enjoyed a rehearsal of the Boston Pops Orchestra conducted by the great Maestro himself, Arthur Fiedler. Following Mr. Banks' brief talk they were served with a complimentary cocktail and a box luncheon for which they were joined by the members of the orchestra who came down from the stage to sit with them at the tables.

Mr. Fielder and his wife joined the president of the Council of Friends of the BSO, Mrs. George Lee Sargent; trustee Mrs. James Perkins of Westwood and Mr. Banks at one of the tables. Mrs. Fielder had a charming pin in the shape of a violin pinned to her red dress that had been presented to her by her husband. Mrs. Perkins, one of the last Boston ladies left who always wears a hat, chose a white beret for this occasion, while Mrs. Sargent wore a lovely mandarin-style dress in orange and yellow silk that she had made on her recent trip to the Far East.

On each of the tables was a flyer giving information about the invitation to Tanglewood extended by the Friends there to the Friends here. July 26 is the day, with a bus provided for the long trip, a tour of Tanglewood promised, a rehearsal in the Berkshire Music Center, a talk by BSO trumpeter Armando Ghitalla, and lunch in the Tanglewood Tent.

Among those attending the annual meeting on Wednesday were Mrs. Joseph Lund of Duxbury, Mrs. William Mixter Jr. of Dedham, Mrs. Allison B. Durfee of Dedham, Mrs. Jack Parker of Wellesley, Mrs. Raymond Remick and Mrs. Mayo A. Shattuck Jr. who came together from Chosset; Mrs. Albert Titcomb and Mrs. Howard Hansen of Wellesley who was cochairman of the event with Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

MAY 31 1973 New England Newsclip

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

When a group works as hard and with as much genuine concern as the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it must be gratifying indeed to hear from their treasurer that their efforts have brought in to the coffers of this world-revered musical institution an additional $142,727 over last year's whopping $452,521 raised and donated by the Council.

This was just one of the heartening facts the members of the Council of Friends learned at yesterday's annual meeting held at Symphony Hall. For the first time the event took place in the new Cabot-Cahners Room, the erstwhile bare and echoing art gallery on the second floor of the building. Now completely done over in black and white from the ceiling that disappears up into what looks like an endless black sky, to the white chandeliers and black oak bars the room is completely contemporary and has proved to be the most popular gathering place for all music lovers before and after every concert as well as at intermission time.

Yesterday long tables had been placed throughout the room with the familiar black and chrome leather chairs that are a part of the regular decor of the room placed around them. Pots of white geraniums and topiary ivy were on each table, but the real color in the room came from the cheerful summer dresses worn by the members on one of the first really hot days of summer.

Sherry and Dubonnet were the aperitifs served before the guests sat down to enjoy a perfect luncheon for a warm day — chicken salad, raw vegetables and iced tea. Mrs. George Lee Sargent of Dover, chairman of the Council of Friends of the BSO, was in charge of the meeting that followed the luncheon, but she mercifully dispensed with many of the long reports so common at so many annual meetings. Instead she arranged to have a complete portfolio containing all the reports at every members seat. The longest report was the one read by Mrs. David Bird for the chairman of the Musical Marathon, Mrs. Albert Goodhue. As the news it contained was so cheerful and bode so well for the 1974 Marathon to be held over Radio Station WCRB next March, no one could object to its length. A total of more than $72,000 was brought in from this four-day event over the radio last March, making it possible for the Council of Friends to present more than $52,000 of it to the orchestra.

Almost everyone at the meeting was in a summer mood and almost all chose bright and cheerful colors to wear. Mrs. Thomas Franks of Wellesley, receiving a warm welcome back after her long and serious illness, wore a blue and white shirt-style dress. Her award-winning newspaperwoman daughter, Lucinda Franks, is now in New York with UPI, assigned to cover John Mitchell and Maurice Stans of Watergate fame exclusively. Mrs. Charles Devens of Milton, outgoing secretary of the Council of Friends, chose a shirt dress also, hers in a brilliant pattern of orange, green and pink flowers. Mrs. John Bradley, the vice chairman of the Council, wore a rose pink dress and jacket, most becoming with her dark hair and brown eyes.

Among the many attending this last meeting of the 1972-73 season, most of whom were heading for summer houses and estates from Maine to the Cape, and from New Hampshire to Vermont, were Mrs. Russell Eddy of Duxbury, Mrs. William Mixter of Dedham, just back from a tarpon fishing trip off Florida; Mrs. Frederick Stare of Wellesley, Mrs. Howard Hansen of Wellesley, Mrs. James Perkins of Westwood, wearing one of her famous hats; and Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky of Dedham.

102

BAY STATE BANNER
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 17,000

MAY 17 1973 New England Newsclip

'Mrs. Hunt appointed to Symphony Board

by Kay Bourne

Mrs. Jim Lee Hunt of Pasadena rd. in Dorchester was elected to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Board of Overseers this week.

"The board of overseers does just that," says Mrs Hunt. "It watches over the operation of the BSO. Each of us is placed on a committee involving the operation of the Symphony itself. We watch and contribute ideas and suggestions, and then come back and make reports.

"The board meets only three times each year. Most of our time is taken up with committee work," she says.

Rosa Hunt is the wife of Jim Lee Hunt, who played for the Patriots for eleven years, and who is now Assistant Commissioner for the Boston Parks and Recreation Department. They have one son, and are expecting a second child in June.

Mrs. Hunt was first brought into contact with the BSO operation two years ago, when Mrs. George Sargent, one of the owners of the Patriots, asked if she would be an area chairman for Roxbury-Dorchester for the Boston Friends of the Symphony.

"People think you have to give a lot of money to be a Friend of the

Cont. on p. 22

Rosa Hunt

•Rosa Hunt appointed to Symphony Board

Cont. from p. 1

Symphony," says Mrs Hunt. "But actually, you can give as little as one dollar. Other things Friends of the Symphony do is contribute time to do mailings, and help run events like the musical marathon on radio."

Mrs. Hunt feels however, that "black people in Roxbury and Dorchester might be musically minded, might even attend the Symphony, but they have just now other priorities for their time and money, priorities within the community.

"I told them I would not pressure anyone, and I have pretty much done what I can alone," she says.

Mrs. Hunt feels that in the future, people in Roxbury and Dorchester may take a more active interest in the BSO, once their immediate priorities have been met.

Mrs. Hunt is from Texas and attended public school in San Antonio, where her interest in music began.

"The Symphony there had a series for children," she says. "We each paid 75 cents and the school board made up the difference. If you didn't have the 75 cents, it was paid anyway, and you got to go because after all, you could listen. It was more important to the directors of the series that you were given the opportunity to listen to good music, than that you had 75 cents.

"The week prior to any concert, the music teacher prepared you for the music you were to hear, and you were bused to the Symphony on Friday. I so enjoyed it. And the Symphony players came into the school to teach instruments. At the end of the year, if you were good enough, you got to play at the Symphony. Once I got to play the violin, and it was a thrill to sit on that big stage and to sound good."

The BSO holds a variety of events in its hall. From September through April, there are series that mostly concentrate on the European music of dead masters, although, as Mrs. Hunt points out, American composers are more and more included. She also points out the Romanticists series of the past year. Youth concerts are also presented in the winter season.

The Pops are on stage in May and June, and hold outdoor concerts on the banks of the Charles River. In July and August, the Symphony moves out to Tanglewood in the Berkshires, and that program, says Mrs. Hunt, "is a lot tied up with teaching youth."

The BSO and its new music director, Seiji Ozawa, were the subject of a top-flight, one-hour TV special produced by WCVB-TV's Fred Schillp and aired last Saturday night over Channel 5. Leo L. Berenek, President of WCVB-TV, is also an overseer of the BSO.

Ozawa, who will assume directorship in the fall, was revealed as a dynamic person with a lively sense of humor. He will continue to direct the San Francisco Symphony, and says, "I thought about taking the Boston job day and night for two months. My wife got sick of it." The Ozawas will maintain homes in both cities.

Ozawa, who was born and grew up in Japan, says that his family was poor "and didn't have the money to take me to concerts," but he heard music in the church and "I could feel the music in my back." Scholarships, he says, made his music career possible, and "many people helped me."

Mrs Hunt says that before she became a Friend of the BSO, she attended the Symphony "periodically by myself and my husband and I went to the Pops."

She says of the BSO audiences that they are becoming increasingly a younger crowd. "The college group go in large numbers to listen, as do young adults. But they are far and few between black—there may be six or seven black couples at a concert."

For the past two years, Mrs. Hunt has given her support to Elma Lewis's "Celebrate," which benefits the National Center Of Afro-American Artist, and she says she plans to continue working on that project. She also takes classes at the Center.

Of her position as overseer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra she says, "Hopefully, what I contribute will benefit the community, and many, many black people will become active in the Symphony."

TOWN CRIER
WAYLAND, MASS.
W. 4,652

MAY 8 1973 New England Newsclip

BSO "friends" invited

A contribution to the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes a contributor a "Friend", and the friends have been invited to "A Special Programme" Wednesday, May 9, on the occasion of the 39th Friends meeting - a rehearsal for the Boston Pops Orchestra by Arthur Fiedler.

Friends will be seated at 11:15. After rehearsal follows the annual meeting and a box luncheon, which will honor Fiedler and orchestra members. The event is at Symphony Hall in Boston.

TOWNSMAN
WELLESLEY, MASS.
W. 8,500

MAY 8 1973 New England Newsclip

Friends of Symphony Invited to Rehearsal

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have invited the Friends to "A Special Programme" Wednesday, May 9, to celebrate the 39th Annual Meeting of the Friends of the Orchestra. The special program is Arthur Fiedler rehearsing the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Friends will be seated promptly between 11:45 and 11:30 during the intermission. Rehearsal will end at 12:30 and will be followed by brief remarks from Talcott M. Banks, President of the Board of Trustees, Arthur Fiedler and members of the Orchestra will be guests of honor at a box luncheon following the rehearsal and annual meeting. Chairman of this Annual Friends Meeting is Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld assisted by Mrs. Howard E. Hansen, Vice-Chairman, of Wellesley Hills.

The Friends also have been invited to a "Day at Tanglewood" July 26. The day will include a talk by guest speaker, Armando Ghitalla, a guided tour of the grounds, attendance at a rehearsal and luncheon in the Tanglewood tent. Those interested may sign up at the Annual Meeting May 9. Special buses will provide the transportation from Boston.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

MAY 11 1973 New England Newsclip

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

It wasn't only the music that was bright and cheerful on Wednesday morning in Symphony Hall. The atmosphere matched it and hopes ran high that Boston's great musical institution, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had turned the corner on its financial ~~and cultural doldrums~~ and was on the way to a new era of accomplishments.

All this and more was expressed by the president of the trustees of the BSO, Talcott Banks, when he spoke to the more than 800 Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gathered for their annual meeting in Symphony Hall. His optimism, his gratitude to the Friends organization that has now grown in numbers to a record 6,000 members, and his obvious admiration for the members of the orchestra seated behind him on the stage emanated an atmosphere of cheer that bodes well for the start of the 1973 season in September.

The annual meeting began with the Friends seated at the little round tables with which Symphony Hall is furnished for the Pops concerts. Here they enjoyed a rehearsal of the Boston Pops Orchestra conducted by the great Maestro himself, Arthur Fiedler. Following Mr. Banks' brief talk they were served with a complimentary cocktail and a box luncheon for which they were joined by the members of the orchestra who came down from the stage to sit with them at the tables.

Mr. Fielder and his wife joined the president of the Council of Friends of the BSO, Mrs. George Lee Sargent; trustee Mrs. James Perkins of Westwood and Mr. Banks at one of the tables. Mrs. Fielder had a charming pin in the shape of a violin pinned to her red dress that had been presented to her by her husband. Mrs. Perkins, one of the last Boston ladies left who always wears a hat, chose a white beret for this occasion, while Mrs. Sargent wore a lovely manderin-style dress in orange and yellow silk that she had made on her recent trip to the Far East.

On each of the tables was a flyer giving information about the invitation to Tanglewood extended by the Friends there to the Friends here. July 26 is the day, with a bus provided for the long trip, a tour of Tanglewood promised, a rehearsal in the Berkshire Music Center, a talk by BSO trumpeter Armando Ghitalla, and lunch in the Tanglewood Tent.

Among those attending the annual meeting on Wednesday were Mrs. Joseph Lund of Duxbury, Mrs. William Mixter Jr. of Dedham, Mrs. Allison B. Durfee of Dedham, Mrs. Jack Parker of Wellesley, Mrs. Raymond Remick and Mrs. Mayo A. Shattuck Jr. who came together from Cohasset; Mrs. Albert Titcomb and Mrs. Howard Hansen of Wellesley who was cochairman of the event with Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

MAY 31 1973 New England Newsclip

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

When a group works as hard and with as much genuine concern as the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it must be gratifying indeed to hear from their treasurer that their efforts have brought in to the coffers of this world-revered musical institution an additional $142,727 over last year's whopping $452,521 raised and donated by the Council.

This was just one of the heartening facts the members of the Council of Friends learned at yesterday's annual meeting held at Symphony Hall. For the first time the event took place in the new Cabot-Cahners Room, the erstwhile bare and echoing art gallery on the second floor of the building. Now completely done over in black and white from the ceiling that disappears up into what looks like an endless black sky, to the white chandeliers and black oak bars the room is completely contemporary and has proved to be the most popular gathering place for all music lovers before and after every concert as well as at intermission time.

Yesterday long tables had been placed throughout the room with the familiar black and chrome leather chairs that are a part of the regular decor of the room placed around them. Pots of white geraniums and topiary ivy were on each table, but the real color in the room came from the cheerful summer dresses worn by the members on one of the first really hot days of summer.

Sherry and Dubonnet were the aperitifs served before the guests sat down to enjoy a perfect luncheon for a warm day — chicken salad, raw vegetables and iced tea. Mrs. George Lee Sargent of Dover, chairman of the Council of Friends of the BSO, was in charge of the meeting that followed the luncheon, but she mercifully dispensed with many of the long reports so common at so many annual meetings. Instead she arranged to have a complete portfolio containing all the reports at every members seat. The longest report was the one read by Mrs. David Bird for the chairman of the Musical Marathon, Mrs. Albert Goodhue. As the news it contained was so cheerful and bode so well for the 1974 Marathon to be held over Radio Station WCRB next March, no one could object to its length. A total of more than $72,000 was brought in from this four-day event over the radio last March, making it possible for the Council of Friends to present more than $52,000 of it to the orchestra.

Almost everyone at the meeting was in a summer mood and almost all chose bright and cheerful colors to wear. Mrs. Thomas Franks of Wellesley, receiving a warm welcome back after her long and serious illness, wore a blue and white shirt-style dress. Her award-winning newspaperwoman daughter, Lucinda Franks, is now in New York with UPI, assigned to cover John Mitchell and Maurice Stans of Watergate fame exclusively. Mrs. Charles Devens of Milton, outgoing secretary of the Council of Friends, chose a shirt dress also, hers in a brilliant pattern of orange, green and pink flowers. Mrs. John Bradley, the vice chairman of the Council, wore a rose pink dress and jacket, most becoming with her dark hair and brown eyes.

Among the many attending this last meeting of the 1972-73 season, most of whom were heading for summer houses and estates from Maine to the Cape, and from New Hampshire to Vermont, were Mrs. Russell Eddy of Duxbury, Mrs. William Mixter of Dedham, just back from a tarpon fishing trip off Florida; Mrs. Frederick Stare of Wellesley, Mrs. Howard Hansen of Wellesley, Mrs. James Perkins of Westwood, wearing one of her famous hats; and Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky of Dedham.

Boston Symphony players take a concert break

Ozawa and the BSO: a close-up look

By ROBERT A. McLEAN
Globe Staff

Seiji Ozawa commands more musical talent than you can shake a stick at, with two symphony orchestras under his baton and a continent in between.

Musical director-elect of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ozawa will continue as director of the San Francisco Symphony when he takes over the BSO in the fall. Meanwhile he has become a transcontinental traveler, sometimes difficult to catch up with; but a camera crew of WCVB-TV (Ch. 5) managed to find him during a whirlwind concert stop-over in Boston last winter.

"Symphony," an intimate and revealing insight on this new musical relationship, as well as an unusual view of BSO members at ease, work and play, will be

TV 13

TV 11 Ozawa aired on Ch. 5 this Saturday from 10 to 11 p.m.

For a full week, while he conducted a series of winter program concerts, Ozawa was followed by TV cameras, to capture a series of formal and candid portraits.

Ozawa is seen at a press conference, and again on the courts, with tennis-playing Talcott M. Banks, president of the BSO trustees. He is filmed at a rehearsal, and a recording session.

One sustained segment brings him together with Martin Bookspan, music critic, commentator and writer.

The youthful (mid-30s), energetic Ozawa also meets with Arthur Fiedler, and with Gunther Schuller, president of the New England Conservatory of Music. In one revealing clip he is shown in serious rehearsal with the BSO's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein.

The Ch. 5 crew also went to the men and women in the BSO chairs who will be members of the Ozawa team, for a series of backstage interviews and scenes at Symphony Hall.

Among those appearing will be Rolland Tapley, first violinist and oldest member of the orchestra, who joined the BSO in 1920. The youngest member, cellist, Ronald Feldman, who joined the orchestra at age 19, six years ago, also is on camera.

Interviewed in special segments are Darlene Gray, second violinist, who came to the BSO in 1971; and principal bassoonist Sherman Walt, with the orchestra since 1953.

For a change of pace they move back to Ozawa and his wife Vera, house-hunting in Brookline in preparation for their residency here.

A portion of the special will be devoted to excerpts from the BSO in concert; including the performance of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture;" a segment from his "Symphony Fantastique;" and the Mozart Violin Concerto No. 4, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

"Symphony" was produced by WCVB-TV's Fred Schilipp. ■

THE COVER

Seiji Ozawa, new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is caught by the cameras in a busy round of activities for a WCVB-TV special, "Symphony!", which will be aired Saturday night from 10 to 11 on Ch. 5.

May 6, 1973

Seiji Ozawa

(Bos. Sym)

The new face in Boston's musical future. See Page TV-11

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
MAY 6 1973
New England Newsclip

104

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,012 SUN. 550,372
MAY 14 1973
New England Newsclip

A day--or two--in the life of Seiji Ozawa is shown

NIGHT WATCH / PERCY SHAIN

Symphony! Ch. 5 ★★★

This hour-long portrait of Boston Symphony's new music director, Japanese native Seiji Ozawa, Saturday night looked like a picture - on - the - run. It really was, since it was gathered in bits and spurts during a busy week of activities while he was here for a series of concerts as guest conductor in February.

But no matter. It fitted right in with his image as an exuberant, flamboyant, colorful personality who can turn jolly or serious at a moment's notice and who whirls his mop top like a busy-dusting housewife as he wields his baton and shakes those wonderful sounds out of his venerable ensemble.

It was an attractive, endearing profile that bodes well for Boston's musical future, and his new charges made known their affection and respect for this young man in no uncertain terms. It was quite as much a candid look at the BSO roster as it was at its maestro, particularly in one remarkable sequence of a splinter group, known as Collage, whose violin-shredding performance of a Peter Maxwell Davies injected a needed element of humor.

But most of the time it was busy just keeping up with Ozawa as he house-hunted with his wife, Vera, posed on-the-go for an album cover, played a spot of tennis, answered questions at a press conference, attended receptions and met with notables, discussed his life and philosophy with narrator-host Martin Bookspan, all interspersed with rehearsals with his concertmaster, and finally showed us a lively finger-pointing, stiff-armed sample of his conducting techniques in a low-key final movement of Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique that wound up typically with a grand flourish of drums.

While it was impossible to get very deeply into the fibre of the man in this sort of an hour, it did a flashy, impressionistic job with the aid of quick cuts and sharp photography that served its purpose admirably.

★

Freedom and Security: The Uncertain Balance ★★★

This Group W documentary had no connection with Watergate, of course, and yet it had the same feel of outrageous tampering, invasion of privacy, surveillance carried to extreme lengths and misuse of informers — all hallmarks of the present controversy.

In an hour Friday night it presented pretty solid evidence that government authorities and law enforcement officials have sometimes gone too far in their snooping tactics and that constitutional guarantees have been widely abrogated by misuse of such weapons as the grand jury system, the bank secrecy act and undercover informers who become agent provocateurs.

The special moved in two directions, first to show how easily bank records can be used against those who are charged with no crimes, and then to examine the whole area of law enforcement techniques that go far afield in their checking on political dissenters and racial minorities.

One segment of local interest revealed how the bank accounts of Boston's Unitarian Universalist Assn. had been thoroughly scrutinized because a subsidiary, Beacon Press, had published a four-volume version of the Pentagon Papers.

Other cases ranged from the Harrisburg 7 to the Camden 28, from City Hall snooping in New Rochelle to a Texas subterfuge to get some New Yorkers for suspected gun running to Ireland, in a trail of Justice Department and FBI tactics that bent the laws beyond the intent of Congress to stifle individual rights to the point of harassment.

The techniques were educational and revealing — but not as shocking as might have been expected — because we've been reading worse in the papers every day.

★

The Television Show, Ch. 2 ★★

Outside of some marvelous electronic and cinematic effects, and a few vintage Ernie Kovacks clips, this PBS special Saturday night wasn't much of a "Television Show."

Bushy-haired David Silver, an old local favorite, as host of the live 90-minute spread out of New York, which included phone calls from viewers, tried to range widely but randomly over the TV scene, with the help of critic John (Cycolps) Leonard and antic Marshall Ephron, but there was nothing youu could dig your teeth into.

Most footage went to a "Star Trek" convention and a tenement complex cable interview with two prostitutes. I don't get the connection.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUNDAY NEWS
MANCHESTER, N. H.
S. 60,988
MAY 6 1973
New England Newsclip

CAPE COD STANDARD TIMES
HYANNIS, MASS.
D. 25,776
MAY 5 1973
New England Newsclip

STANDARD TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
S. 63,259
MAY 6 1973
New England Newsclip

Channel 5 presents an intimate and revealing portrait of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its new Musical Director Seiji Ozawa on "Symphony!" — a one-hour color special to be telecast Saturday at 10 p.m. Part of the program will include an interview with Ozawa, left. and music commentator and critic Martin Bookspan, right. The Channel 5 special will also give viewers an "inside" look at Symphony Hall and the activities which take pace backstage. Members of the orchestra will be interviewed during the program and there will be an actual performance by the orchestra featuring works by Berlioz and Mozart.

WCVB-TV (Channel 5) presents an intimate and revealing portrait of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its new Musical Director Seiji Ozawa on "Symphony!" – a one-hour color special to be telecast Saturday, May 12. "Symphony!" will give viewers an "inside" look at Symphony Hall and the activities which take place backstage. Shown are Arthur Press and Matthew Ruggiero, right, playing chess during intermission. Seated between them is Sherman Walt and standing at right, Harry Shapiro. The program also features the Boston Symphony performing works by Berlioz and Mozart. "Symphony!" was produced by WCVB-TV's Fred Schilpp.

104

The Boston Globe
MORNING
MAY 13 1973
New England Newsclip

A day---or two---in the life of Seiji Ozawa is shown

NIGHT WATCH / PERCY SHAIN

Symphony! Ch. 5 ★★★

This hour-long portrait of Boston Symphony's new music director, Japanese native Seiji Ozawa, Saturday night looked like a picture - on - the - run. It really was, since it was gathered in bits and spurts during a busy week of activities while he was here for a series of concerts as guest conductor in February.

But no matter. It fitted right in with his image as an exuberant, flamboyant, colorful personality who can turn jolly or serious at a moment's notice and who whirls his mop top like a busy-dusting housewife as he wields his baton and shakes those wonderful sounds out of his venerable ensemble.

It was an attractive, endearing profile that bodes well for Boston's musical future, and his new charges made known their affection and respect for this young man in no uncertain terms. It was quite as much a candid look at the BSO roster as it was at its maestro, particularly in one remarkable sequence of a splinter group, known as Collage, whose violin-shredding performance of a Peter Maxwell Davies injected a needed element of humor.

But most of the time it was busy just keeping up with Ozawa as he house-hunted with his wife, Vera, posed on-the-go for an album cover, played a spot of tennis, answered questions at a press conference, attended receptions and met with notables, discussed his life and philosophy with narrator-host Martin Bookspan, all interspersed with rehearsals with his concertmaster, and finally showed us a lively finger-pointing, stiff-armed sample of his conducting techniques in a low-key final movement of Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique that wound up typically with a grand flourish of drums.

While it was impossible to get very deeply into the fibre of the man in this sort of an hour, it did a flashy, impressionistic job with the aid of quick cuts and sharp photography that served its purpose admirably.

★

Freedom and Security: The Uncertain Balance ★★★

This Group W documentary had no connection with Watergate, of course, and yet it had the same feel of outrageous tampering, invasion of privacy, surveillance carried to extreme lengths and misuse of informers — all hallmarks of the present controversy.

In an hour Friday night it presented pretty solid evidence that government authorities and law enforcement officials have sometimes gone too far in their snooping tactics and that constitutional guarantees have been widely abrogated by misuse of such weapons as the grand jury system, the bank secrecy act and undercover informers who become agent provocateurs.

The special moved in two directions, first to show how easily bank records can be used against those who are charged with no crimes, and then to examine the whole area of law enforcement techniques that go far afield in their checking on political dissenters and racial minorities.

One segment of local interest revealed how the bank accounts of Boston's Unitarian Universalist Assn. had been thoroughly scrutinized because a subsidiary, Beacon Press, had published a four-volume version of the Pentagon Papers.

Other cases ranged from the Harrisburg 7 to the Camden 28, from City Hall snooping in New Rochelle to a Texas subterfuge to get some New Yorkers for suspected gun running to Ireland, in a trail of Justice Department and FBI tactics that bent the laws beyond the intent of Congress to stifle individual rights to the point of harassment.

The techniques were educational and revealing — but not as shocking as might have been expected — because we've been reading worse in the papers every day.

★

The Television Show, Ch. 2 ★★

Outside of some marvelous electronic and cinematic effects, and a few vintage Ernie Kovacks clips, this PBS special Saturday night wasn't much of a "Television Show."

Bushy-haired David Silver, an old local favorite, as host of the live 90-minute spread out of New York, which included phone calls from viewers, tried to range widely but randomly over the TV scene, with the help of critic John (Cycolps) Leonard and antic Marshall Ephron, but there was nothing youu could dig your teeth into.

Most footage went to a "Star Trek" convention and a tenement complex cable interview with two prostitutes. I don't get the connection.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUNDAY NEWS
MANCHESTER, N. H.
S. 60,988
MAY 6 1973
New England Newsclip

CAPE COD STANDARD TIMES
HYANNIS, MASS.
D. 25,279
MAY 5 1973
New England Newsclip

STANDARD TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
S. 23,979
MAY 6 1973
New England Newsclip

Channel 5 presents an intimate and revealing portrait of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its new Musical Director Seiji Ozawa on "Symphony!" — a one-hour color special to be telecast Saturday at 10 p.m. Part of the program will include an interview with Ozawa, left. and music commentator and critic Martin Bookspan, right. The Channel 5 special will also give viewers an "inside" look at Symphony Hall and the activities which take pace backstage. Members of the orchestra will be interviewed during the program and there will be an actual performance by the orchestra featuring works by Berlioz and Mozart.

WCVB-TV (Channel 5) presents an intimate and revealing portrait of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its new Musical Director Seiji Ozawa on "Symphony!" -- a one-hour color special to be telecast Saturday, May 12. "Symphony!" will give viewers an "inside" look at Symphony Hall and the activities which take place backstage. Shown are Arthur Press and Matthew Ruggiero, right, playing chess during intermission. Seated between them is Sherman Walt and standing at right, Harry Shapiro. The program also features the Boston Symphony performing works by Berlioz and Mozart. "Symphony!" was produced by WCVB-TV's Fred Schilpp.

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
S. 106,767

MAY 6 1973

New England Newsclip

Portrait of BSO

Seiji Ozawa, the musical direcfor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, along with the orchestra itself, Boston's Symphony Hall and the activities which take place backstage, will be examined in a one-hour special, "Symphony!," via Channel 5 on Saturday at 10 p.m.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654

MAY 14 1973

New England Newsclip

Anthony La Camera

MUSIC DEPARTMENT: Over the weekend, Channel 5 presented an interesting, well-detailed portrait of Seiji Ozawa, new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, along with some segments dealing with the orchestra itself.

The locally-produced hour, titled "Symphony!" and narrated by Martin Bookspan, concentrated on the hectic seven days when the youthful Japanese music-maker was in Boston as guest conductor for a series of Boston Symphony concerts. He will assume his new directorship in September.

The Channel 5 cameras followed the colorful, dynamic Ozawa for the entire week — at a press conference, at a quadrophonic recording session, in rehearsals with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and with the full orchestra, at a cocktail party, in a tennis match at The Country Club with Talcott M. Banks, president of the Symphony board of trustees; in a Brookline house purchase with his wife, Vera; in an interview with narrator Bookspan, and in his formal conducting of "The Dream of the Witches' Sabbath" movement from Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique.

From all this, too emerged some pertinent material about the background and philosophy of director Ozawa, now in his late 30s. He talked about his boyhood in Japan, where he discovered classical music through a single symphony orchestra there and from hearing a pipe organ in a Catholic church. A rugby player in school and a piano student at home, he fractured two fingers in an athletic event and had to switch from piano playing to directing.

Ozawa revealed that he thought about the Boston directorship offer daily for two months "because it was really deciding my life." He finally accepted because "to me, Boston is the most musical city in North America."

Here and there, certain sequences in the orchestra segments paid too much attention to insignificant details which slowed down an otherwise good pace. No matter, the Fred Schilpp-produced "Symphony!" bore the stamp of professionalism.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 67,117

MAY 13 1973

New England Newsclip

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

MAY 12 1973

New England Newsclip

105

A Televised Week in the Life Of . . .

By Jon Lehman

Tonight at 10 on WCVB-TV (Channel 5) there is a chance to spend an hour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music ~~director-to-be,~~ Seiji Ozawa. The informal and quick-paced special captures with shirtsleeve accuracy the pulse and style of life in a big-time symphony orchestra, offstage and backstage as well as onstage, for the musicians and particularly for that phenomenon of the jet-age, the international conductor.

There is blessedly little of the hushed and saccharine reverence with which those who make music are often approached by those who don't. Instead, we see the young and lively Ozawa at work, picking his way through the early stages of rehearsal with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein for a performance of a Mozart violin concerto. We see Ozawa answering questions at a press conference concerning his selection as the new music director for the Boston Symphony; we see him at a cocktail party for the orchestra's financial supporters at Symphony Hall; we see him playing tennis in a moment of recreation at The Country Club; we see him househunting in Brookline with his wife, Vera, and 14-month-old daughter, Seira.

(Speaking of the hectic life of a present-day conductor, Ozawa remarks that his daughter has already traveled across Europe three times and America four.)

We see him at work, too, during the taping session for the just-released Deutsche Grammophon recording of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture and Symphonie Fantastique. And finally, as if to bring together the diverse elements of the man into the purpose for which he exists, conducting in the concert of last Feb. 13 the "Witches' Sabbath" movement from the same symphony.

Indeed, there is a tendency to ask why the program is not entitled "Seiji!" rather than "Symphony!"

The activity is intercut— in Channel 5's usual polished way — with an interview in which Ozawa talks with music critic Martin Bookspan about his early life and introduction to music in Japan, his hopes and aims for the Boston Symphony and his philosophy and method of conducting an orchestra.

The orchestra's musicians get their say, too. Sherman Walt, principal bassoonist, talks about the questionnaires orchestra members fill out on each guest conductor who works with the orchestra and reaffirms what has been long known in the Boston musical world, that "there was no question (Ozawa) was the overwhelming choice" of the members.

Seiji Ozawa, (left), the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new musical director, is shown being interviewed by music commentator and critic Martin Bookspan in a scene from 'Symphony!', a special to be telecast tonight at 10 on Channel 5.

Cellist Ronald Feldman, who was the orchestra's youngest member when he joined in 1969, discusses the new maestro's appeal to youth and his "ballet style" of conducting: "He is honest and sincere about the music . . . you can see him, up there on the podium, expressing, giving shape to, all of the music that is on the page."

And violinist Rolland Tapley, at 71 the oldest member of the orchestra, recalls the qualities of other music directors from the past — Pierre Monteux, Koussevitsky, Charles Munch, Erich Leinsdorf — and reflects that the orchestra itself is greater than anyone who leads it, that "they all learn something from the association."

The Channel 5 special includes some nicely humorous moments, as when it cuts from two members playing chess backstage before a concert to another group pickup up their winnings from an abbreviated poker game, or a stage crew dropping a piano they are moving into place for a rehearsal.

But the hour is not a completely satisfactory document — even in its own "a-week-in-the-life-of" terms. The problem is one of split personality — there is not enough room in an hour to deal adequately with both an interesting but largely unknown organization and with an exciting new "star" — which is what Seiji Ozawa is. This time out for WCVB and producer-director Fred Schilpp, less would have been more.

SV

Seiji Ozawa featured in Boston Symphony special at 10 p.m.

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
S. 106,767

MAY 6 1973

New England Newsclip

Portrait of BSO

Seiji Ozawa, the musical direcfor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, along with the orchestra itself, Boston's Symphony Hall and the activities which take place backstage, will be examined in a one-hour special, "Symphony!," via Channel 5 on Saturday at 10 p.m.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654

MAY 14 1973

New England Newsclip

Anthony La Camera

MUSIC DEPARTMENT: Over the weekend, Channel 5 presented an interesting, well-detailed portrait of Seiji Ozawa, new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, along with some segments dealing with the orchestra itself.

The locally-produced hour, titled "Symphony!" and narrated by Martin Bookspan, concentrated on the hectic seven days when the youthful Japanese music-maker was in Boston as guest conductor for a series of Boston Symphony concerts. He will assume his new directorship in September.

The Channel 5 cameras followed the colorful, dynamic Ozawa for the entire week — at a press conference, at a quadrophonic recording session, in rehearsals with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and with the full orchestra, at a cocktail party, in a tennis match at The Country Club with Talcott M. Banks, president of the Symphony board of trustees; in a Brookline house purchase with his wife, Vera; in an interview with narrator Bookspan, and in his formal conducting of "The Dream of the Witches' Sabbath" movement from Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique.

From all this, too emerged some pertinent material about the background and philosophy of director Ozawa, now in his late 30s. He talked about his boyhood in Japan, where he discovered classical music through a single symphony orchestra there and from hearing a pipe organ in a Catholic church. A rugby player in school and a piano student at home, he fractured two fingers in an athletic event and had to switch from piano playing to directing.

Ozawa revealed that he thought about the Boston directorship offer daily for two months "because it was really deciding my life." He finally accepted because "to me, Boston is the most musical city in North America."

Here and there, certain sequences in the orchestra segments paid too much attention to insignificant details which slowed down an otherwise good pace. No matter, the Fred Schilpp-produced "Symphony!" bore the stamp of professionalism.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,825

MAY 13 1973

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 67,117

MAY 13 1973

New England Newsclip

The World of Music:

105

A Televised Week in the Life Of . . .

By Jon Lehman

Tonight at 10 on WCVB-TV (Channel 5) there is a chance to spend an hour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music ~~director-to-be,~~ Seiji Ozawa. The informal and quick-paced special captures with shirtsleeve accuracy the pulse and style of life in a big-time symphony orchestra, offstage and backstage as well as onstage, for the musicians and particularly for that phenomenon of the jet-age, the international conductor.

There is blessedly little of the hushed and saccharine reverence with which those who make music are often approached by those who don't. Instead, we see the young and lively Ozawa at work, picking his way through the early stages of rehearsal with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein for a performance of a Mozart violin concerto. We see Ozawa answering questions at a press conference concerning his selection as the new music director for the Boston Symphony; we see him at a cocktail party for the orchestra's financial supporters at Symphony Hall; we see him playing tennis in a moment of recreation at The Country Club; we see him househunting in Brookline with his wife, Vera, and 14-month-old daughter, Seira.

(Speaking of the hectic life of a present-day conductor, Ozawa remarks that his daughter has already traveled across Europe three times and America four.)

We see him at work, too, during the taping session for the just-released Deutsche Grammophon recording of Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture and Symphonie Fantastique. And finally, as if to bring together the diverse elements of the man into the purpose for which he exists, conducting in the concert of last Feb. 13 the "Witches' Sabbath" movement from the same symphony.

Indeed, there is a tendency to ask why the program is not entitled "Seiji!" rather than "Symphony!"

The activity is intercut— in Channel 5's usual polished way — with an interview in which Ozawa talks with music critic Martin Bookspan about his early life and introduction to music in Japan, his hopes and aims for the Boston Symphony and his philosophy and method of conducting an orchestra.

The orchestra's musicians get their say, too. Sherman Walt, principal bassoonist, talks about the questionnaires orchestra members fill out on each guest conductor who works with the orchestra and reaffirms what has been long known in the Boston musical world, that "there was no question (Ozawa) was the overwhelming choice" of the members.

Seiji Ozawa, (left), the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new musical director, is shown being interviewed by music commentator and critic Martin Bookspan in a scene from 'Symphony!', a special to be telecast tonight at 10 on Channel 5.

Cellist Ronald Feldman, who was the orchestra's youngest member when he joined in 1969, discusses the new maestro's appeal to youth and his "ballet style" of conducting: "He is honest and sincere about the music . . . you can see him, up there on the podium, expressing, giving shape to, all of the music that is on the page."

And violinist Rolland Tapley, at 71 the oldest member of the orchestra, recalls the qualities of other music directors from the past — Pierre Monteux, Koussevitsky, Charles Munch, Erich Leinsdorf — and reflects that the orchestra itself is greater than anyone who leads it, that "they all learn something from the association."

The Channel 5 special includes some nicely humorous moments, as when it cuts from two members playing chess backstage before a concert to another group pickup up their winnings from an abbreviated poker game, or a stage crew dropping a piano they are moving into place for a rehearsal.

But the hour is not a completely satisfactory document — even in its own "a-week-in-the-life-of" terms. The problem is one of split personality — there is not enough room in an hour to deal adequately with both an interesting but largely unknown organization and with an exciting new "star" — which is what Seiji Ozawa is. This time out for WCVB and producer-director Fred Schilpp, less would have been more.

SV

Seiji Ozawa featured in Boston Symphony special at 10 p.m.

SCHOOL MUSICIAN
DIRECTOR AND TEACHER
JOLIET, ILL.
MONTHLY 15,000

MAY 1973

Rolf Smedvig New Asst. Principal Trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Rolf Smedvig, a 20-year-old junior at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, has been named assistant principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, effective September 1973.

Smedvig, a native of Seattle, made his solo debut with the Seattle Symphony, conducted by Milton Katims, seven years ago, when he was only 13, and has performed with that orchestra more than a dozen times since.

In 1968 Smedvig was a member of the Young Artists Program at Boston University's Tanglewood Institute, a summer program for exceptional high school musicians. He participated in the Young Artists Program again in 1969 and 1970, and in the fall of 1970 entered Boston University to continue studying with his teacher at Tanglewood, Armando Ghitalla, principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a member of the faculty at Boston University.

In 1971 Smedvig was awarded a fellowship to play in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, working with conductors such as Leonard Bernstein, who subsequently invited him to participate in performances of his "Mass," including the premiere performance at the opening of the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C.

Smedvig has been playing trumpet since he was five. His father, a professional musician (clarinet and saxophone) and music publisher (Saga Music Press), "used to bring home instruments for me to try out," Smedvig says. His mother, also a musician, is a violinist with the Seattle Symphony. Young Smedvig played clarinet at the age of four, switched to drums, and then, "because it made a lot of noise and I liked the feel of it," settled on trumpet. "And the next thing I knew, I was practicing!"

Leader of a rock band in high school, Smedvig also competed in figure skating events and demonstrated swimming at the University of Washington. Currently he is a member of the Empire Brass Quintet.

Smedvig, who will be third trumpet of the Boston Symphony in addition to assistant principal, replaces principal trumpeter Roger Voisin, who is retiring. The appointment is the first in the trumpet section since 1952.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

MAY 1973

Rolf Smedvig, 20-year-old junior at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, was named assistant principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, effective in September. A native of Seattle, Smedvig made his solo debut with the Seattle Symphony, under Milton Katims, seven years ago at age 13. Currently a member of the Empire Brass Quintet, he replaces trumpeter Roger Voisin in the B.S.O., who is retiring.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 135,000

MAY 2 1973

New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Names Director

BOSTON (AP) — Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1954, has been appointed executive director, and Thomas W. Morris has been named manager of the orchestra.

106

SCHOOL MUSICIAN
DIRECTOR AND TEACHER
JOLIET, ILL.
MONTHLY 15,000

MAY 1973

Rolf Smedvig New Asst. Principal Trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Rolf Smedvig, a 20-year-old junior at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, has been named assistant principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, effective September 1973.

Smedvig, a native of Seattle, made his solo debut with the Seattle Symphony, conducted by Milton Katims, seven years ago, when he was only 13, and has performed with that orchestra more than a dozen times since.

In 1968 Smedvig was a member of the Young Artists Program at Boston University's Tanglewood Institute, a summer program for exceptional high school musicians. He participated in the Young Artists Program again in 1969 and 1970, and in the fall of 1970 entered Boston University to continue studying with his teacher at Tanglewood, Armando Ghitalla, principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a member of the faculty at Boston University.

In 1971 Smedvig was awarded a fellowship to play in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, working with conductors such as Leonard Bernstein, who subsequently invited him to participate in performances of his "Mass," including the premiere performance at the opening of the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C.

Smedvig has been playing trumpet since he was five. His father, a professional musician (clarinet and saxophone) and music publisher (Saga Music Press), "used to bring home instruments for me to try out," Smedvig says. His mother, also a musician, is a violinist with the Seattle Symphony. Young Smedvig played clarinet at the age of four, switched to drums, and then, "because it made a lot of noise and I liked the feel of it," settled on trumpet. "And the next thing I knew, I was practicing!"

Leader of a rock band in high school, Smedvig also competed in figure skating events and demonstrated swimming at the University of Washington. Currently he is a member of the Empire Brass Quintet.

Smedvig, who will be third trumpet of the Boston Symphony in addition to assistant principal, replaces principal trumpeter Roger Voisin, who is retiring. The appointment is the first in the trumpet section since 1952.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

MAY 1973

Rolf Smedvig, 20-year-old junior at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, was named assistant principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, effective in September. A native of Seattle, Smedvig made his solo debut with the Seattle Symphony, under Milton Katims, seven years ago at age 13. Currently a member of the Empire Brass Quintet, he replaces trumpeter Roger Voisin in the B.S.O., who is retiring.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 135,000

MAY 2 1973

New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Names Director

BOSTON (AP) — Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1954, has been appointed executive director, and Thomas W. Morris has been named manager of the orchestra.

SUN
HUDSON, MASS.
D. 3,050
MAY 3 1973
New England Newsclip

May 10th Is Deadline For Concerts

Boo Symphony

MARLBORO — The City of Marlboro will once again take part in the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall program, it was announced today by Mrs. Robert Collier, chairman of the program.

This will mark the 15th season for the youth concerts which begin Saturday morning, Nov. 3, 1973.

Reservations for the 1973 - 74 series of concerts must be made by May 10, according to Mrs. Collier, who said applications with check or cash should be returned to the City Recreation Department on Bolton Street or to her personally at 9 Boston Post Road. Applications were distributed this week throughout the local schools.

Free bus transportation is provided by the Recreation Department for all school children who sign up for the concert series, which features both classical and contemporary music. Chaperones are provided for all concerts. Harry Ellis Dickson returns to the podium again next Fall with the same type of programs which entertained and delighted this year's audiences, Mrs. Collier revealed.

CRICKET
MANCHESTER, MASS.
W. 1,598
MAY 18 1973
New England Newsclip

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall

Miss Jane O'Brien, Town Chairman for YOUTH CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL, announced today that subscriptions for the 1973-1974 season must be returned by June 1, 1973.

The Youth Concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been sold out for the past fourteen seasons since their founding in 1959. Three series of three concerts are presented at 11 a.m. on Saturday mornings at Symphony Hall. Dates for Saturday Series A are: November 3, January 12, and March 30.

The programs are prepared for young people with the added benefit of hearing classical and contemporary works performed in the tradition-filled atmosphere of Symphony Hall by members of the Boston Symphony.

The Ancient Instruments Room at Symphony Hall, containing a priceless and rare collection of musical instruments is open to the young audiences before and after the concert. Lectures and demonstrations are available upon request.

Tickets are available for the Series only at $7.00 for the three concerts. All series were sold out by October last year, so avoid disappointment. Subscribe today!! Send money to school with child. All tickets are purchased in a block.

NASHOBA FREE PRESS
ACTON, MASS.
W. 1,955
MAY 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Youth Concerts

Do you remember the first concert you ever heard? If it was a Youth Concert at Symphony Hall, the answer is probably YES. That first trip to Symphony Hall...The first sight of an Orchestra on stage...it makes an impression that Youth Concerts is rightfully proud of. YOUTH CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL is an unusual musical event for thousands of Massachusetts students. It returns this fall on Saturday morning, November 3, for its fifteenth season, and Harry Ellis Dickson returns to the podium with imaginative programming for this year's series. Under Mr. Dickson's baton, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in classical and contemporary music selected to appeal to young people in grades five and over. Past concerts have included opera performances, dance arrangements, vocal and instrumental soloists, plus multi-media presentations. All were highly successful and the 1973-74 concert year promises to be equally exciting. Harry Ellis Dickson has surprises galore in store for these fortunate young audiences.

First, the concertgoers get a chance to see and hear members of the Boston Symphony. Then, Youth Concerts gets a chance to hear from the concertgoers. And this is some of what we hear...."Our favorite piece was the William Tell Overture. We had a ball!" "I enjoyed you and your orchestra. they were a smash hit. They could be on the top ten list if they made records." "I'd rather listen to your music than the music on the radio." "I was very pleased to be invited to your fine concert. It was the first time I was ever in Symphony Hall. I was amazed it was so beautiful."

YOUTH CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL offers more than just music to its audiences. It offers a chance to enjoy with a peer group the kind of experience that is so often held for "adults". A chance to listen quietly, to participate, to join in on what makes Youth Concerts the kind of thing you remember. Give your child that chance.....!

The concerts are given on Friday mornings at 10:15 and on Saturday mornings at 11 in three series of three programs each. SATURDAY SERIES A concert dates are: November 3, January 12, and March 30. SATURDAY SERIES B dates are: November 10, January 19, and April 6. FRIDAY SERIES dates are: November 9, January 18, and April 5. Tickets are sold for the series for three concerts and may be ordered from local Chairmen in cities and towns throughout the State, and from Supervisors of Music in the schools.

In Westford, please contact: Mrs. Germain Bouchard 455-5115. (Additional information is available from Mrs. Anita Kurland, Symphony Hall. Phones: 266-1492 or 267-0656.)

NEWS
MELROSE, MASS.
D. 2,300
MAY 16 1973
New England Newsclip

* * * *

MRS. LINDA ZALK of Beltran st., is serving as local chairman of the "Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall" program, and those interested in subscriptions to the various series of performances should contact her within the next few days.

The youth concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting members of the Boston Symphony, have been sold out since their founding some 14 seasons ago in 1959.

Though the programs don't begin until November, those wishing to make reservations should do so now. Reservations and further information may be obtained by contacting Mrs. Zalk.

ITEM
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
D. 7,200
MAY 18 1973
New England Newsclip

Youth Concert Series Announced

Lynnfield school pupils will have the opportunity of attending three of the world-famous youth concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the coming season.

Tickets for the concerts, Nov. 10, 1973, and Jan. 19 and April 6, 1974, may be purchased from Mrs. Douglas Weaver.

The youth concerts have been held since 1959 when they were founded by Harry Ellis Dickson. Thousands of children have attended them to get their first familiarity with the world's great music.

The concerts are all held Saturday mornings and present classical and contemporary music for pupils in grade 5 and above.

TIMES
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
D. 11,000
MAY 28 1973
New England Newsclip

Subscriptions due

MANCHESTER — Jane O'Brien, town chairman for youth concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston, announced that subscriptions for the 1973-74 season must be returned by June 1.

The youth concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been sold out for the past 14 seasons since their founding in 1959. Three series of three concerts are presented at 11 a.m. Saturday mornings and at 10:15 a.m. on Friday mornings at Symphony Hall. Dates for the Saturday series are: Nov. 3; Jan. 12; and March 30.

RECORD TRANSCRIPT
MILTON, MASS.
W. 5,735
MAY 17 1973
New England Newsclip

Youth Concerts Subscriptions Available Here

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, Inc., is selling subscriptions during May for next season's series in November, January and March. In addition to the two Saturday morning series there is planned a new Friday morning concert series.

Children with parental permission may be excused from school to attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts on these three occasions. All children who will be in grade 5 or over next year are invited to share in the pleasant learning experience provided for greater Boston students at Symphony Hall. Parents may accompany them.

In addition, Youth Concerts is encouraging expanding musical experiences for high school students by offering reduced cost tickets to evening Open Rehearsals of Tthe Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Inquiries may be directed to Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, which is listed in the Boston telephone directory, or to the Milton chairman, Mrs. Robert Corson, at 333-0514. Local campaign will close May 25.

ITEM
CLINTON, MASS.
D. 4,150
MAY 7 1973
New England Newsclip

Berlin youth concert tickets deadline listed

Mrs. Dean Goodwin, Berlin chairman for Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, announced today that subscriptions for the 1973-1974 season must be returned by May 10.

The Youths Concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been sold out for the past fourteen seasons since their founding in 1959. Three series of three concerts are presented at 11 a.m. on Saturday mornings and at 10:15 a.m. on Friday mornings at Symphony Hall. Dates for Saturday Series A are : November 3, January 12, and March 30. Saturday series B dates are : November 10, January 19, and April 6. Friday series dates are: November 9, January 18, and April 5. Berlin will attend Series B.

The programs are prepared for young people with the added benefit of hearing classical and contemporary works performed in the tradition-filled atmosphere of Symphony Hall by members of the Boston Symphony.

The Ancient Instruments Room at Symphony Hall, containing a priceless and rare collection of musical instruments is open to the young audiences before and after the concert. Lectures and demonstrations are available upon request.

All series tickets were sold out by October last year.

SUN
HUDSON, MASS.
D. 3,050
MAY 3 1973
New England Newsclip

May 10th Is Deadline For Concerts

Boo Symphony

MARLBORO — The City of Marlboro will once again take part in the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall program, it was announced today by Mrs. Robert Collier, chairman of the program.

This will mark the 15th season for the youth concerts which begin Saturday morning, Nov. 3, 1973.

Reservations for the 1973-74 series of concerts must be made by May 10, according to Mrs. Collier, who said applications with check or cash should be returned to the City Recreation Department on Bolton Street or to her personally at 9 Boston Post Road. Applications were distributed this week throughout the local schools.

Free bus transportation is provided by the Recreation Department for all school children who sign up for the concert series, which features both classical and contemporary music. Chaperones are provided for all concerts. Harry Ellis Dickson returns to the podium again next Fall with the same type of programs which entertained and delighted this year's audiences, Mrs. Collier revealed.

CRICKET
MANCHESTER, MASS.
W. 1,598
MAY 18 1973
New England Newsclip

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall

Miss Jane O'Brien, Town Chairman for YOUTH CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL, announced today that subscriptions for the 1973-1974 season must be returned by June 1, 1973.

The Youth Concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been sold out for the past fourteen seasons since their founding in 1959. Three series of three concerts are presented at 11 a.m. on Saturday mornings at Symphony Hall. Dates for Saturday Series A are: November 3, January 12, and March 30.

The programs are prepared for young people with the added benefit of hearing classical and contemporary works performed in the tradition-filled atmosphere of Symphony Hall by members of the Boston Symphony.

The Ancient Instruments Room at Symphony Hall, containing a priceless and rare collection of musical instruments is open to the young audiences before and after the concert. Lectures and demonstrations are available upon request.

Tickets are available for the Series only at $7.00 for the three concerts. All series were sold out by October last year, so avoid disappointment. Subscribe today!! Send money to school with child. All tickets are purchased in a block.

NASHOBA FREE PRESS
ACTON, MASS.
W. 1,955
MAY 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Youth Concerts

Do you remember the first concert you ever heard? If it was a Youth Concert at Symphony Hall, the answer is probably YES. That first trip to Symphony Hall...The first sight of an Orchestra on stage...it makes an impression that Youth Concerts is rightfully proud of. YOUTH CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL is an unusual musical event for thousands of Massachusetts students. It returns this fall on Saturday morning, November 3, for its fifteenth season, and Harry Ellis Dickson returns to the podium with imaginative programming for this year's series. Under Mr. Dickson's baton, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in classical and contemporary music selected to appeal to young people in grades five and over. Past concerts have included opera performances, dance arrangements, vocal and instrumental soloists, plus multi-media presentations. All were highly successful and the 1973-74 concert year promises to be equally exciting. Harry Ellis Dickson has surprises galore in store for these fortunate young audiences.

First, the concertgoers get a chance to see and hear members of the Boston Symphony. Then, Youth Concerts gets a chance to hear from the concertgoers. And this is some of what we hear...."Our favorite piece was the William Tell Overture. We had a ball!" "I enjoyed you and your orchestra, they were a smash hit. They could be on the top ten list if they made records." "I'd rather listen to your music than the music on the radio." "I was very pleased to be invited to your fine concert. It was the first time I was ever in Symphony Hall. I was amazed it was so beautiful."

YOUTH CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL offers more than just music to its audiences. It offers a chance to enjoy with a peer group the kind of experience that is so often held for "adults". A chance to listen quietly, to participate, to join in on what makes Youth Concerts the kind of thing you remember. Give your child that chance.....!

The concerts are given on Friday mornings at 10:15 and on Saturday mornings at 11 in three series of three programs each. SATURDAY SERIES A concert dates are: November 3, January 12, and March 30. SATURDAY SERIES B dates are: November 10, January 19, and April 6. FRIDAY SERIES dates are: November 9, January 18, and April 5. Tickets are sold for the series for three concerts and may be ordered from local Chairmen in cities and towns throughout the State, and from Supervisors of Music in the schools.

In Westford, please contact: Mrs. Germain Bouchard 455-5115. (Additional information is available from Mrs. Anita Kurland, Symphony Hall. Phones: 266-1492 or 267-0656.)

NEWS
MELROSE, MASS.
D. 2,300
MAY 16 1973
New England Newsclip

* * * *

MRS. LINDA ZALK of Beltran st., is serving as local chairman of the "Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall" program, and those interested in subscriptions to the various series of performances should contact her within the next few days.

The youth concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting members of the Boston Symphony, have been sold out since their founding some 14 seasons ago in 1959.

Though the programs don't begin until November, those wishing to make reservations should do so now. Reservations and further information may be obtained by contacting Mrs. Zalk.

ITEM
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
D. 7,206
MAY 18 1973
New England Newsclip

Youth Concert Series Announced

Lynnfield school pupils will have the opportunity of attending three of the world-famous youth concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the coming season.

Tickets for the concerts, Nov. 10, 1973, and Jan. 19 and April 6, 1974, may be purchased from Mrs. Douglas Weaver.

The youth concerts have been held since 1959 when they were founded by Harry Ellis Dickson. Thousands of children have attended them to get their first familiarity with the world's great music.

The concerts are all held Saturday mornings and present classical and contemporary music for pupils in grade 5 and above.

TIMES
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
D. 11,000
MAY 29 1973
New England Newsclip

Subscriptions due

MANCHESTER — Jane O'Brien, town chairman for youth concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston, announced that subscriptions for the 1973-74 season must be returned by June 1.

The youth concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been sold out for the past 14 seasons since their founding in 1959. Three series of three concerts are presented at 11 a.m. Saturday mornings and at 10:15 a.m. on Friday mornings at Symphony Hall. Dates for the Saturday series are: Nov. 3; Jan. 12; and March 30.

RECORD TRANSCRIPT
MILTON, MASS.
W. 5,735
MAY 1? 1973
New England Newsclip

Youth Concerts Subscriptions Available Here

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, Inc., is selling subscriptions during May for next season's series in November, January and March. In addition to the two Saturday morning series there is planned a new Friday morning concert series.

Children with parental permission may be excused from school to attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts on these three occasions. All children who will be in grade 5 or over next year are invited to share in the pleasant learning experience provided for greater Boston students at Symphony Hall. Parents may accompany them.

In addition, Youth Concerts is encouraging expanding musical experiences for high school students by offering reduced cost tickets to evening Open Rehearsals of Tthe Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Inquiries may be directed to Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, which is listed in the Boston telephone directory, or to the Milton chairman, Mrs. Robert Corson, at 333-0514. Local campaign will close May 25.

ITEM
CLINTON, MASS.
D. 4,150
MAY 7 1973
New England Newsclip

Berlin youth concert tickets deadline listed

Mrs. Dean Goodwin, Berlin chairman for Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, announced today that subscriptions for the 1973-1974 season must be returned by May 10.

The Youths Concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been sold out for the past fourteen seasons since their founding in 1959. Three series of three concerts are presented at 11 a.m. on Saturday mornings and at 10:15 a.m. on Friday mornings at Symphony Hall. Dates for Saturday Series A are : November 3, January 12, and March 30. Saturday series B dates are : November 10, January 19, and April 6. Friday series dates are: November 9, January 18, and April 5. Berlin will attend Series B.

The programs are prepared for young people with the added benefit of hearing classical and contemporary works performed in the tradition-filled atmosphere of Symphony Hall by members of the Boston Symphony.

The Ancient Instruments Room at Symphony Hall, containing a priceless and rare collection of musical instruments is open to the young audiences before and after the concert. Lectures and demonstrations are available upon request.

All series tickets were sold out by October last year.

108

PRESS-HERALD
PORTLAND, MAINE
D. 54,974

MAY 25 1973 New England Newsclip

Ogunquit Gallery Plans Busy '73

By ROBERT S. NISS
Staff Writer

OGUNQUIT — A concert by the Portland Symphony String Quartet, a performance by the Children's Theatre of Portland, a new film series, a demonstration-concert by a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a handful of exhibitions and workshops will highlight the forthcoming season at the Barn Gallery here.

Mrs. Michael C. Horn, president of the Barn Gallery Associates, says that an exhibition of paintings, sculpture and graphics by the professional members of the Ogunquit Art Association will launch the organization's season June 17.

The association's professional members will participate in a pair of other exhibitions during the season, the first opening July 22 and the second scheduled for Aug. 26 through Sept. 15.

The gallery's Dunaway Room will be decorated with the Hamilton Easter Field Art Foundation Collection throughout the gallery season, while weekly "talk-walks" conducted by trained gallery officials will be held in both the gallery and the sculpture court from June 25 to Aug. 28.

WILLIAM GIBSON, principal trombonist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present a special concert and demonstration at 8:30 p.m. June 23, accompanied by guitarist David Ripley.

The first of a 12-session print workshop will be held June 26 with the support of the Maine State Commission on the Arts and the Humanities under the instruction of Notre Dame Sisters Mary Gerold Mobley and Marie Vincent Brothers. Designed for both beginning and advanced students, other sessions will be held July 3, 5, 10, 17, 19, 24 and 31, and Aug. 2, 7, 14 and 16.

A five-part film series entitled "Museum Without Walls" from

FOSTER'S DEMOCRAT
DOVER, N. H.
D. 17,495

MAY 29 1973 New England Newsclip

Barn Gallery Opens For 1973 Season

OGUNQUIT — Mrs. Mildred C. Horn, president of the Barn Gallery Association, announces that the gallery will open for the 1973 season on Sunday, June 17. There will be an exhibition of paintings, sculpture, and graphics by the professional members of the association. They will also participate in two other exhibits during the season, the first opening on July 22 and the second scheduled for an opening on August 26 and continuing through September 15.

The Dunaway Room will be decorated with the Hamilton Easter Field Foundation Collection throughout the season. Weekly "talk-walks" will be conducted by gallery officials in the gallery and the sculpture court from June 25 to August 28.

A special concert and demonstration will be given by William Gibson, principal trombonist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday evening, June 23 accompanied by guitarist David Ripley.

BOSTON HERALD AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 90,731

MAY 13 1973 New England Newsclip

BSO's 'Collage' Enjoyable Group

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

• Concert Review

One of the premiums in recent Boston Symphony Orchestra Musical Marathons has been a concert by Collage, the BSO's contemporary music ensemble.

The donor of a specific contribution to the symphony could opt to have a contemporary concert for an occasion of his choice and the performance Sunday night at the Museum of Fine Arts in conjunction with an exhibit of Robert Motherwell lCollages was the result of that option being exercised.

THE PROGRAM, held in the gallery where the Motherwell exhibit is being shown, was a short one—about one hour—and featured music that was distinctly listenable.

Probably no ears were offended, although that is not to say that the choices were in any way condescending.

SELECTIONS included a Cappriccio for violin and two sound tracks by Henk Badings; Stravinsky's delightful settings of three charming Shakespeare lyrics; a repeat performance (from the Jordan Hall concert this season) of Robert Selig's Quartet: "Three Seasons of Autumn."

Also, the premiere of Robert Fritz' "Some say existence like a pirouot and pirouette, forever in one place stands still and dances, but it runs away" which was commissioned for this concert in honor of Motherwell.

BASED on an excerpt from Frost's "West Running Brook," Fritz' work for violin, cello, clarinet and bass has, according to his program notes, as "a structural basis" "the embodiment of a dynamic force in Nature, that of things in counter to themselves."

I'm not, after one hearing, exactly sure how much of this is meant to hear in the music except for some of the obvious manifestations such as the contrasts in character between the first and second divisions of the work and within the divisions.

WHEN it comes down to what is just interesting and attractive to listen to, one tends to favor the second division which, in contrast to the rather nervous, contrapuntal first section, is more static, emotionally intense, and lushly sustained.

It is definitely a piece one would want to go back to, and part of that was due to the sensitive ensemble playing by Ronald Knudsen, Ronald Feldman, Felix Viscuglia, and Lawrence Wolfe.

KNUDSEN provided some absolutely gorgeous playing on his own in Badings' Capriccio which, for this listener, was the standout work on the program. The fiddle has a lot of very 19th Century singing to do in the first section, a good bit of toccata-like virtuoso work in the second.

This is set against electronic sounds of a mostly percussive nature in a counterpoint that works very engagingly, with melodic lines and rhythms thrown back and forth between mediums.

I WAS GLAD to have another opportunity to hear Selig's work which, in the other performance, came near the end of a very long and diverse program thus making a really fair appraisal difficult, if not impossible.

I must say that the second movement, a vocalise (for soprano Joan Heller) with its jazzy, night-clubby sentimentality still seems a real anachronism, however, the outer movements are attractive, with some very nice things for percussion instruments (Frank Epstein), and, with a few cuts, the last has been crisped and shaped nicely.

SOUTH MIDDLESEX DAILY NEWS
FRAMINGHAM, MA.
D. 20,000

MAY 18 1973 New England Newsclip

Choral society conductor granted leave of absence

FRAMINGHAM — John Oliver of Westboro, conductor of the Framingham Choral Society since 1966, has been granted a year's leave of absence.

He will devote more time to his work as choral director of the Tanglewood Festival chorus in Lenox, the primary performing chorus of the Boston Symphony, and to his work as faculty member of the music department at M.I.T., Cambridge, where he is in charge of the Glee Club and Choral Society performances.

Oliver's leave takes effect July 1.

In recent years, the well known choral director has directed choral groups for the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston University and the John Oliver Chorale, a group he founded.

He first attracted public attention through the work of his boy choir with the Opera Company of Boston and the Boston Symphony

JOHN OLIVER
. . . on leave

NEWS
BANGOR, MAINE
D. 78,230

MAY 5 1973 New England Newsclip

Patrons of Arts exhibit at UMO refreshing social season's event

By Robert H. Newall
NEWS Arts Critic

THE ARTS
News and views

Fascinating Mosaic

Within a week I caught two Boston Symphony concerts, the first (Saturday, April 21) conducted by Thomas Tilson Thomas, the second (Thursday, April 26) by Joseph Silverstein. Thomas pieced together a fascinating mosaic of music composed in Venice, some for the brooding sanctuary of Saint Mark's Cathedral itself. Cast in an informal mold, the program attracted scores of young people, most delighted by the musical riches exhibited before them. Thus they heard compositions ranging from Gabrieli's Sonata piano forte a 8 from Symphoniae sacrae through Vivaldi's Sinfonia in B-minor for strings to Schutz' "Es ging ein Samann aus". With organ interludes by Berj Zamkochian and choruses by the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, the first half made n exciting organic whole, homas having deployed his ingers all around Symhony Hall in a laudable ffort to recreate some of ne acoustical uniquness of aint Mark's itself.

Still Immature

Still concentrating on Venice, Thomas directed Stravinsky's "Canticum sacrum ad honorem Sancti Marci nominis," a highly intricate and indubitably effective work, and Bach's Choral Variations on "Vom Himmel hoch," the latter punctuated by the audienced singing this sedately magnificent hymn tune. Like so many American talents, Thomas has suffered from over-exposure and over-praise in our press. Consequently, I expected much more of him than doubtless he could deliver. He is obviously a well-prepared, finely musical conductor, but that is at this point—or even later—another Bernstein is a ridiculous assumption. He is still immature.

Nonetheless, his musical conceptualization in offering a program like this —excitingly innovative—is something indeed that the powers-that-be of the Bangor Symphony might well wish to emulate one of these days. The theme that united the somewhat disparate music — disparate in style and in mood in order to insure proper variegation — was in this instance Venice, but the idea is remarkably protean. It is worth a try here.

The other program was devoted to Bach (Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 and the Piano Concerto in E) and Mozart (Symphony No. 41, the "Jupiter", the master's last effort in this form). In the Brandenburg the featured artists were Joseph Silverstein, violinist; Doriet Anthony Dwyer, flautist; and Peter Serkin, pianist. Both Silverstein and Dwyer played well (though the latter is inclined toward breathiness) but the chief interest focused on Serkin, whose playing is very tidy, all the details having been so meticulously worked out that there was no room left for spontaneity. His antiseptic approach did not hamper the fast movements very much, for his digital technique is quite prodigious; but the lack of depth and genuine feeling robbed the slow movement of the concerto of the profound feeling it ought to generate.

Not A Conductor

Silverstein should have remained in his role as a violinist, for his conducting of the Mozart, which should have had bubble and bite, was both pedestrian and leaden. Violinist he may be; conductor he is not.

SUNDAY HERALD ADVERTISER
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 821,165

JUN 3 1973 New England Newsclip

Rose Walsh

Boston Symphony's horizons look bright

Everything is coming up roses for the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season—at least that was the impression we received from Talcott M. Banks, president of its Board of Trustees, and Mrs. George Lee Sargent, chairman of the Council of Friends at Wednesday's annual meeting of the Council.

Members gathered at a festive luncheon in the Cabot-Cahners Room around tables centered with pots of ivy and white geraniums to hear all the glowing reports.

Rose Walsh

Three weeks ago The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra held their annual meeting. (All members of the Council also belong to The Friends.)

Mr. Banks' interesting news had to do with the famous Orchestra which he doesn't think has ever played so well as now, and with the fine new conductor, Seiji Ozawa.

He added, "Advance sales for Tanglewood (where the BSO does all its summer programs) are up between 25 and 30 percent. And the Boston Pops is enjoying the best season since its beginning."

Hester Sargent, the dynamic innovative chairman of the Council, in congratulating that group on their executive ability said, "Your time, talent and indefatigable spirit has produced $118,000, a wealth of good will and an ever-increasing public interest in the activities of the BSO.

"You wined, dined and lunched about 3500 people (meaning the Stage Door Lectures and Table Talk Suppers); you wrote reams of publicity, program and policies; you burned up the telephone lines for Spiral and Marathon; you walked miles touring the Hall (guided tours); and you did it all with wit, grace and great good humor."

Continued on Page 22, Section 6

Rose Walsh

Continued from Page 17, section 6

Mrs. William J. Mixter's report revealed that the "Spiral" project was successful in that it did raise over $26,000 for the Orchestra. But, quoting Mrs. Albert Goodhue, it was the great Musical Marathon "that ran way beyond its goal of $65,000 and raised $76,000. Our Marathon finally outdistanced Cleveland's which received only $65,000 in pledges."

Other happy tidings had to do with the increased membership in "The Friends"—4393 (120 more than last year) whose total contributions amounted to $595,248, some $42,000 over 1972. The Symphony Booklet, "Know Your Orchestra," first sold at the opening concert last fall ($1 a copy), has been in much demand and has brought in a net profit of $3020.

Among those attending the meeting were Thomas D. Perry, manager of the BSO; and Mrs. Perry; Don MacKenzie, whose talk, "My Friends, The Friends," pleased his audience; Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, reporting on the nominating committee and area chairmen; Mrs. James Perkins, a trustee; Mrs. Mary Lou Cabot, Mrs. Charles Devens, and Mrs. John Bradley.

Also, Mrs. Thomas E. Franks, Mrs. Jack S. Parker, Mrs. George E. Bates, Mrs. David Bird, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon, Mrs. Frank Whitty, Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld, Mrs. Albert Pagliarulo, Mrs. Richard H. Thompson, Mrs. Henrietta M. P. Kennard, Miss Mary Smith, Steven Solomon (received a citation for his "Musical Marathon" expertise), and his wife, Julie; Mrs. Bela Kalman, with a great many more.

N. E. REAL ESTATE JOURNAL ACCORD, MASS.
W. 9,000

JUN 29 1973 New England Newsclip

FISKE OF HUNNEMAN SELLS TO SEIJI OZAWA

BROOKLINE, MASS. — Seiji Ozawa, new musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his wife will soon move to 38 Cumberland avenue.

The Ozawas purchased the house from Dr. and Mrs. David Hurwitz for approximately $66,500 according to the Registry of Deeds.

Mrs. Robert Fiske of Hunneman & Co.'s local office was the broker.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUN 30 1973 New England Newsclip

BSO members named to BU faculty

Joseph Silverstein, assistant conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chairman of the faculty at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in the summer, has been named adjunct professor of music and conductor of the concert orchestra at Boston University. The announcement was made by Norman Della Joio, acting dean of the university's School of Fine and Applied Arts.

Teaching associate

Jerome Rosen, assistant concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and concertmaster of the Boston Pops Orchestra, was also appointed to the music faculty at Boston University. He will hold the position of teaching associate in music.

Silverstein is also first violinist and leader of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. During the past concert season he also appeared as guest conductor and soloist with the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

Prior to joining the Boston Symphony last year, Rosen was associate concertmaster of the Detroit Symphony and conductor and musical director of the Oak Party Symphony in Michigan.

HERALD NEWS
FALL RIVER, MASS.
D. 41,749

JUN 4 1973 New England Newsclip

Roman Totenberg

Leonard Shure

Boris Goldovsky

Dave Brubeck

Music Greats to Lead SMU Music Institute

An innovative summer music institute and festival will bring great names in chamber music, jazz, opera, choral music and instrumental recitals to Southeastern Massachusetts University in June and July.

The SMU Music Institute and Festival, featuring master classes, workshops, and public concerts, will be patterned on the famous music festivals which have attracted students and music lovers to Tanglewood in Lenox and to Marlboro College in Vermont.

The festival will feature a one-day jazz workshop on July 21, conducted by Dave Brubeck, internationally known jazz master. Brubeck will appear in concert after the workshop.

Boris Goldovsky, noted opera impresario, will lead a two-week opera workshop, beginning July 1, and Alexander Peloquin will direct a choral workshop from July 16 through July 22, with members of the Peloquin chorale.

The festival and institute will be sponsored by the university's division of continuing studies and will be guided by Prof. Josef N. Cobert, SMU's director of music. Cobert, a flutist, will also be on the master class and chamber music faculty.

"The intent of the area's first summer music festival," said Cobert, "is to foster a center of excellence in the performing arts, thereby fulfilling an obligation to enrich our community; and to inspire its participants through master artist teachers in fulfilling their individual aspirations."

Cobert said that the summer institute is also intended to focus university attention on the establishment of a complete major program in music at SMU, which would emphasize the performing arts and make the university "an important cultural center."

Several well-known instrumental artists will be on the faculty of a series of master and chamber music classes. They include Louis Moyse, flutist and composer; Roman Totenberg, professor of violin at Boston University; Nancy Cirillo, violinist, and Jay Humeston, cellist, both of the Wheaton College faculty; Victor Rosenbaum, assistant chairman of the piano department at the New England Conservatory of Music.

Five members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will also be artist-teachers in the master classes: Matthew Ruggiero, basson; Ralph Pottle, French horn; Roger Voisin, trumpet; Laurence Thorstenberg, oboe and English horn; and Harold Wright, principal clarinet.

Piano master classes will be taught from June 24 through July 22. Three internationally-known concert pianists will be on the faculty. Theodore Lettvin will conduct a late romantic seminar; Lily Dumont, a seminar on the works of Mozart; and Leonard Shure, a seminar on the music of Beethoven and Schubert. In addition, Joel Spiegelman, professor of music at Sarah Lawrence College, will teach early keyboard music, and Layton James, the use of keyboard in ensemble.

Co-teachers with Goldovsky at the opera workshop will be Fred Popper and Jacqueline Bazinet Cobert. The performing workshop will present arias, scenes and an opera production.

A two-week workshop on current trends in Orff Schulwerk will be presented by Patricia Brown and Maureen Kenney, both graduates of the Orff Institute in Salzburg, Austria. The method, developed by the composer Carl Orff, is a new approach to children's music study.

The master classes will confer academic credit. Applicants, except those for the Orff classes, must audition for acceptance, either in a personal rendition or by submission of a tape recording. Those who are not accepted as active participants may attend the courses as auditors.

Festival performances, all in the SMU auditorium, are scheduled as follows: chamber music, June 27-30; piano and harpsichord recitals, July 1, 4, 8, 12 and 20; opera arias, July 7; opera scenes, July 11; opera production, July 14; the Peloquin Chorale, July 19, and the Brubeck jazz concert, July 21.

Housing will be available in the family suite dormitories for summer residents, at $56 per week, per person. For the master courses, tuition averages $50 a week; and for the one-day Brubeck workshop, it is $15.

Requests for ticket information, program details, and general information on the institute should be addressed to Dr. Joseph N. Cobert, music director, Southeastern Massachusetts University Summer Music Institute, North Dartmouth, Mass, 02747.

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528

JUN 28 1973 New England Newsclip

Silverstein Named Professor at BU

Joseph Silverstein, assistant conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been named adjunct professor of music and conductor of the Concert Orchestra at Boston University, Norman Dello Joio, acting dean of the University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, announced today.

Jerome Rosen, assistant concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and concertmaster of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, was also appointed to the music faculty by Boston University's Board of Trustees. Rosen will hold the position of teaching associate in music.

Silverstein, in addition to being concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is also first violinist and leader of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players and, during the summer, chairman of the faculty at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox.

GLOBE (E)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 195,032

JUN 27 1973 New England Newsclip

WHO'S ON THE SCENE

Joseph Silverstein, who yesterday was named adjunct professor of music and conductor of the Boston University Orchestra, joined the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's violinists in 1955 — at 23, the youngest member.

Five years later he received the Naumberg Foundation Award, the largest prize ever awarded up to that time to a U.S. string player. Included with the cash prize was an appearance with the New York Philharmonic, a solo recital in New York, foreign and national concert tours, and a recording contract.

He became concertmaster of the BSO in 1962, and in 1969, made his conducting debut with the Symphony and the Boston Pops. During the past season he also appeared as soloist with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, thus sparking speculation he would take over that orchestra.

His present plans, however, call for continuation of his career here where he is also first violinist and leader of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players and, during the summer, chairman of the faculty at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood.

110

TIMES (E)
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514

JUL 2 1973

New England Newsclip

Silverstein becomes professor of music

BOSTON — Joseph Siverstein, assistant conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been named adjunct professor of music and conductor of the Concert Orchestra at Boston University, Norman Dello Joio, acting dean of the University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, announced today.

Jerome Rosen, assistant concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and concertmaster of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, was also appointed to the music faculty by Boston University's Board of Trustees. Mr. Rosen will hold the position of teaching associate in music.

Joseph Silverstein, in addition to being concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is also first violinist and leader of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players and, during the summer, chairman of the faculty at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Massachusetts.

A renowned concert soloist, Mr. Silverstein studied at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, and later with Joseph Gingold, Mischa Mischakoff, and Efrem Zimbalist. In 1959 he won third prize in the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Competition and in 1960 he received the Naumberg Foundation Award. That award, which he won when he was 28, was the largest prize ever awarded up to that time to a string player in the United States. Included with the cash prize was an appearance with the New York Philharmonic, a solo recital in New York, foreign and American concert tours, and a recording contract.

Mr. Silverstein joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1955. At 23, he was the youngest member. He became concertmaster in 1962, and in 1969 he made his debut as conductor with the symphony and with the Boston Pops. During the past concert season he also appeared as guest conductor and soloist with the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

Prior to coming to Boston, Mr. Silverstein was a member of the Houston and Denver Symphony Orchestras and the Philadelphia Orchestra. He also served as concertmaster with the Denver Symphony.

Mr. Silverstein is the recipient of an Honorary Doctorate of Music, awarded by Tufts University in 1970.

Jerome Rosen, like Mr. Siverstein, was born in Detroit. He began playing violin at the age of five and piano at six, and continued his musical studies while majoring in mathematics and philosophy at Western Reserve University in Cleveland. He has studied with Ivan Galamian, Josef Gingold, and Rafael Druian and performed as violinist, conductor, and keyboard player with the Cleveland Orchestra for seven seasons. He also appeared eight times with the Festival Casals Orchestra.

He has been a member of the Cleveland Piano Trio and the St. Clair String Quartet, and, prior to joining the Boston Symphony in 1972, was associate concertmaster of the Detroit Symphony and conductor and musical director of the Oak Park Symphony in Michigan.

HERALD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654

JUL 3 1973

New England Newsclip

Burglars Net $75,000 at Symphony Hall

Burglars stole an estimated $75,000 in cash and checks Sunday night from Boston's Symphony Hall, police reported yesterday.

The loot included $9,630 in cash and one check for $43,668. A stop payment was ordered on the check.

Another batch of checks amounting to $21,086 in various donations made out in the name of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were also missing.

Police said there was no sign of forced entry.

GLOBE (E)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 195,032

JUL 2 1973

New England Newsclip

$75,000 taken in cash, checks at Symphony Hall

Police are seeking burglars who last night broke into Symphony Hall, at 251 Huntington av., and made off with approximately $75,000 in checks and cash.

According to police, a safe was forced and one check in the amount of 43,668 taken. Also stolen were a group of checks, all donations to Boston Symphony. They amounted to $21,086.

Approximately $9630 in cash was included in the amount stolen.

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 131

Tanglewood

1973

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SEIJI OZAWA Music Adviser

COLIN DAVIS & MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Principal Guest Conductors

NINETY-SECOND SEASON 1972-1973

TANGLEWOOD 1973

the berkshires

the Berkshires

a place to think

Spend an evening—or a week—with us!

Design, layout, and construction by George S. Youngerman May 1974

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SEIJI OZAWA Music Adviser

COLIN DAVIS & MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Principal Guest Conductors

NINETY-SECOND SEASON 1972-1973

TANGLEWOOD 1973

the berkshires

the Berkshires

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

a place to think

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Spend an evening—or a week—with us!

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TANGLEWOOD LENOX MASSACHUSETTS

The Berkshire Festival Program is published by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Inc., Symphony Hall, Boston, Massachusetts 02115, and Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts 01240.

The advertising representatives are MediaRep Center Inc., 1425 Statler Office Building, Boston, Massachusetts 02116, telephone (617) 482-5233. Inquiries for advertising space should be addressed to Mr Stephen Campbell of MediaRep Center.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SEIJI OZAWA Music Adviser

COLIN DAVIS & MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Principal Guest Conductors

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN Assistant Conductor

first violins

Joseph Silverstein
concertmaster
Charles Munch chair
Jerome Rosen
Max Hobart
Rolland Tapley
Roger Shermont
Max Winder
Harry Dickson
Gottfried Wilfinger
Fredy Ostrovsky
Leo Panasevich
Sheldon Rotenberg
Alfred Schneider
Stanley Benson
Gerald Gelbloom.
Raymond Sird
Ikuko Mizuno
Cecylia Arzewski
Amnon Levy

second violins

Clarence Knudson
Fahnestock chair
William Marshall
Michel Sasson
Ronald Knudsen
Leonard Moss
William Waterhouse
Laszlo Nagy
Michael Vitale
Spencer Larrison
Marylou Speaker
Darlene Gray
Ronald Wilkison
Harvey Seigel
Bo Youp Hwang

violas

Burton Fine
Charles S. Dana chair
Reuben Green
Eugene Lehner
George Humphrey
Jerome Lipson
Robert Karol
Bernard Kadinoff
Vincent Mauricci
Earl Hedberg
Joseph Pietropaolo
Robert Barnes
Yizhak Schotten

cellos

Jules Eskin
Philip R. Allen chair
Martin Hoherman
Mischa Nieland
Jerome Patterson
Robert Ripley
Luis Leguia
Carol Procter
Ronald Feldman
Joel Moerschel
Jonathan Miller

basses

Henry Portnoi
William Rhein
Joseph Hearne
Bela Wurtzler
Leslie Martin
John Salkowski
John Barwicki
Robert Olson
Lawrence Wolfe

flutes

Doriot Anthony Dwyer
Walter Piston chair
James Pappoutsakis
Paul Fried

piccolo

Lois Schaefer

oboes

Ralph Gomberg
John Holmes
Wayne Rapier

english horn

Laurence Thorstenberg

clarinets

Harold Wright
Ann S. M. Banks chair
Pasquale Cardillo
Peter Hadcock
Eb clarinet

bass clarinet

Felix Viscuglia

bassoons

Sherman Walt
Ernst Panenka
Matthew Ruggiero

contra bassoon

Richard Plaster

horns

Charles Kavaloski
Charles Yancich
Harry Shapiro
David Ohanian
Richard Mackey
Ralph Pottle

trumpets

Armando Ghitalla
Roger Voisin
André Come
Gerard Goguen

trombones

William Gibson
Ronald Barron
Gordon Hallberg

tuba

Chester Schmitz

timpani

Everett Firth

percussion

Charles Smith
Arthur Press
assistant timpanist
Thomas Gauger
Frank Epstein

harps

Bernard Zighera
Ann Hobson librarians

Victor Alpert
William Shisler

stage manager

Alfred Robison

personnel manager William Moyer

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Berkshire Festival Concerts

WEEKEND PRELUDES at 7 pm each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Orchestra in short recitals offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

All programs subject to change!

OPEN REHEARSALS in the Shed each Saturday morning at 10:30 am benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund. They offer a relaxed look at the Orchestra, conductor, and soloists preparing Berkshire Festival music. Seats are unreserved, $3.00 each, and available the morning of the Rehearsal.

		PAGE
Wk #	1.	35.
	2.	41.
	3.	47.
	4.	57.
	5.	79.
	6.	87.
	7.	93.
	8.	103.
POPS		77.
Friends		69.
Fromm		111.
POPULAR ARTISTS		119.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Berkshire Festival Concerts

WEEKEND PRELUDES at 7 pm each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Orchestra in short recitals offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

All programs subject to change!

OPEN REHEARSALS in the Shed each Saturday morning at 10:30 am benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund. They offer a relaxed look at the Orchestra, conductor, and soloists preparing Berkshire Festival music. Seats are unreserved, $3.00 each, and available the morning of the Rehearsal.

Friday | Saturday | Sunday

		PAGE
WK #	1.	35.
	2.	41.
	3.	47.
	4.	57.
	5.	79.
	6.	87.
	7.	93.
	8.	103.
POPS		77.
FRIENDS		69.
Fromm		111.
POPULAR ARTISTS		119.

PAGE 111

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER 1973

FESTIVAL OF CONTEMPORARY MUSIC

August 4 to August 9
sponsored by the
BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER
AT TANGLEWOOD
in co-operation with the
FROMM FOUNDATION AT HARVARD

August 4 at 2.30 pm
RECITAL OF CONTEMPORARY VOCAL MUSIC

August 5 at 8.30 pm
August 6 at 8.30 pm
MUSIC THEATRE
including the American première of Bruno Maderna's Satyricon

August 7 at 8.30 pm
CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT
including the world première of a chamber work by John Heiss*

August 8 at 8.30 pm
CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT
including the world première of Concerto for four groups of instruments by Peter Lieberson*

August 9 at 8.30 pm
BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER ORCHESTRA
GUNTHER SCHULLER conductor including the world première of West Indian lights by James Drew*

*commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in co-operation with the Fromm Foundation at Harvard

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SEIJI OZAWA Music Adviser

COLIN DAVIS & MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Principal Guest Conductors

THE BOARD OF OVERSEERS OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA INC.

VERNON R. ALDEN Chairman
LEONARD KAPLAN Vice-Chairman
MRS STEPHEN V. C. MORRIS Secretary

HAZEN H. AYER
MRS FRANK G. ALLEN
ROBERT C. ALSOP
LEO L. BERANEK
DAVID W. BERNSTEIN
MRS CURTIS B. BROOKS
J. CARTER BROWN
CURTIS R. BUTTENHEIM
MRS MARY LOUISE CABOT
MRS NORMAN L. CAHNERS
LEVIN H. CAMPBELL III
ERWIN D. CANHAM
GEORGE H. A. CLOWES JR
SILVIO O. CONTE
JOHN L. COOPER
ROBERT CUSHMAN
MICHAEL J. DALY
NELSON J. DARLING JR
HENRY B. DEWEY
RICHARD A. EHRLICH
BYRON K. ELLIOTT
PAUL FROMM
CARLTON P. FULLER
MRS JOHN L. GRANDIN JR
STEPHEN W. GRANT
FRANCIS W. HATCH JR
MALCOLM HECHT JR
JOHN HOLT
MRS JIM LEE HUNT
DAVID O. IVES
MRS C. D. JACKSON
MRS LOUIS I. KANE
GEORGE H. KIDDER
LEON KIRCHNER
MAURICE LAZARUS
JOHN McLENNAN
LAWRENCE K. MILLER
MRS CHARLES L. MOORE
FRANK E. MORRIS
DAVID MUGAR
JOHN T. G. NICHOLS
DAVID R. POKROSS
MRS BROOKS POTTER
HERBERT W. PRATT
MRS FAIRFIELD E. RAYMOND
MRS GEORGE R. ROWLAND
MRS A. LLOYD RUSSELL
DONALD B. SINCLAIR
RICHARD A. SMITH
MRS RICHARD H. THOMPSON
STOKLEY P. TOWLES
ROBERT G. WIESE
VINCENT C. ZIEGLER

PAGE 77

BOSTON POPS
ARTHUR FIEDLER Conductor

BOSTON POPS
PENSION FUND
CONCERT
AT
TANGLEWOOD

Tuesday August 21
at 8.30 pm

AN EVENING OF FIEDLER'S FAVORITES

including
Rhapsody in blue
LEO LITWIN soloist
Pomp & circumstance no. 1
1812 Overture
Selections from Hair
and others

TICKETS PRICED AT
$4, $5, $5.50, $6.50,
$7.50, $8, $8.50, $9

AVAILABLE NOW FROM FESTIVAL BOX OFFICE
TANGLEWOOD
LENOX MASS 01240
tel: (413) 637-1600

PAGE 111

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER 1973

FESTIVAL OF CONTEMPORARY MUSIC

August 4 to August 9
sponsored by the
BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER
AT TANGLEWOOD
in co-operation with the
FROMM FOUNDATION AT HARVARD

August 4 at 2.30 pm
RECITAL OF CONTEMPORARY VOCAL MUSIC

August 5 at 8.30 pm
August 6 at 8.30 pm
MUSIC THEATRE
including the American première of Bruno Maderna's Satyricon

August 7 at 8.30 pm
CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT
including the world première of a chamber work by John Heiss*

August 8 at 8.30 pm
CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT
including the world première of Concerto for four groups of instruments
by Peter Lieberson*

August 9 at 8.30 pm
BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER ORCHESTRA
GUNTHER SCHULLER conductor
including the world première of West Indian lights by James Drew*

*commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in co-operation with the Fromm Foundation at Harvard

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SEIJI OZAWA Music Adviser

COLIN DAVIS & MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Principal Guest Conductors

THE BOARD OF OVERSEERS OF THE
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA INC.

VERNON R. ALDEN Chairman
LEONARD KAPLAN Vice-Chairman
MRS STEPHEN V. C. MORRIS Secretary

HAZEN H. AYER
MRS FRANK G. ALLEN
ROBERT C. ALSOP
LEO L. BERANEK
DAVID W. BERNSTEIN
MRS CURTIS B. BROOKS
J. CARTER BROWN
CURTIS R. BUTTENHEIM
MRS MARY LOUISE CABOT
MRS NORMAN L. CAHNERS
LEVIN H. CAMPBELL III
ERWIN D. CANHAM
GEORGE H. A. CLOWES JR
SILVIO O. CONTE
JOHN L. COOPER
ROBERT CUSHMAN
MICHAEL J. DALY
NELSON J. DARLING JR
HENRY B. DEWEY
RICHARD A. EHRLICH
BYRON K. ELLIOTT
PAUL FROMM
CARLTON P. FULLER
MRS JOHN L. GRANDIN JR
STEPHEN W. GRANT
FRANCIS W. HATCH JR
MALCOLM HECHT JR
JOHN HOLT
MRS JIM LEE HUNT
DAVID O. IVES
MRS C. D. JACKSON
MRS LOUIS I. KANE
GEORGE H. KIDDER
LEON KIRCHNER
MAURICE LAZARUS
JOHN McLENNAN
LAWRENCE K. MILLER
MRS CHARLES L. MOORE
FRANK E. MORRIS
DAVID MUGAR
JOHN T. G. NICHOLS
DAVID R. POKROSS
MRS BROOKS POTTER
HERBERT W. PRATT
MRS FAIRFIELD E. RAYMOND
MRS GEORGE R. ROWLAND
MRS A. LLOYD RUSSELL
DONALD B. SINCLAIR
RICHARD A. SMITH
MRS RICHARD H. THOMPSON
STOKLEY P. TOWLES
ROBERT G. WIESE
VINCENT C. ZIEGLER

PAGE 77

BOSTON POPS
ARTHUR FIEDLER Conductor

BOSTON POPS
PENSION FUND
CONCERT
AT
TANGLEWOOD

Tuesday August 21
at 8.30 pm

AN EVENING OF FIEDLER'S FAVORITES

including
Rhapsody in blue
LEO LITWIN soloist
Pomp & circumstance no. 1
1812 Overture
Selections from Hair
and others

TICKETS PRICED AT
$4, $5, $5.50, $6.50,
$7.50, $8, $8.50, $9

AVAILABLE NOW FROM FESTIVAL BOX OFFICE
TANGLEWOOD
LENOX MASS 01240
tel: (413) 637-1600

NEWS
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
W. 1,289

FEB 14 1973

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood items sought for exhibit

"Tanglewood Through the Years" is the title of an exhibit being prepared by Walter Scott, Stockbridge photographer, who is volunteering his efforts as a member of the Tanglewood Friends. He appeals for aid from anyone who has booklets, programs, photographs or other objects relating to Tanglewood from its start up to the present time.

With help from the Lenox Library he already has assembled a display of the earliest years which has been on display at Tanglewood and the Berkshire County Historical Society in Pittsfield. In addition to publications and photos, Mr. Scott asks the loan of objects such as musical instruments with a Tanglewood association. All materials will be returned after being photographed.

When completed, the exhibit will be loaned free to Berkshire County organizations. Mr. Scott may be contacted at his Stockbridge studio on Main Street.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

MAR 31 1973

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood opens July 6; programs, soloists listed

The 1973 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will open Friday July 6, and continue through Sunday Aug. 26. The season opens with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa will assume the additional post of music director of the Boston Symphony in the fall. On Sunday, July 8, Ozawa will conduct Haydn's "Creation" with orchestra, chorus and soloists. Ozawa will open the second weekend with an all-Mozart program which offers four of the Boston Symphony's principal players opportunity to perform as soloists. On the final Sunday, Aug. 26, Ozawa will conduct the Verdi Requiem.

During the summer the orchestra will perform all-Mozart, all-Brahms and all-Beethoven concerts. Eugene Ormandy will be at Tanglewood to conduct two all-Beethoven concerts. Principal guest conductors Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas will also conduct during the summer. Davis will conduct Mozart's "Coronation Mass" and Handel's "Messiah," among other works. Thomas's programs will include an all-Stravinsky concert.

Other conductors appearing at Tanglewood this season include: Arthur Fiedler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Riccardo Muti, James de Priest, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski and William Steinberg. Piano soloists include Philippe Entremont, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Byron Janis, Andre Watts and Earl Wild.

Other soloists for this season's festival are: organist Larry Smith; violinists Miriam Fried, Sidney Harth, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony; principal horn of the Boston Symphony Charles Kavaloski; principal clarinet Harold Wright; principal viola Burton Fine; principal oboe Ralph Gomberg; principal bassoon Sherman Walt and principal cello Jules Eskin.

Singers

Singers performing at the festival include Sheila Armstrong, Victor Braun, Phyllis Curtin, Ryland Davies, Stafford Dean, David Evitts, Maureen Forrester, James King, Peter Lagger, Seth McCoy, Kenneth Riegel, Joanna Simon, George Shirley, Thomas Stewart, Benita Valente, Mallory Walker, Helen Watts, Lou Ann Wyckoff and narrator Colin Fox.

The Tanglewood Festival Chorus under the direction of John Oliver will perform, as will the Boston Symphony Chamber Players with Phyllis Curtin and Ryan Edwards.

Brochures listing summer events will be available at Symphony Hall or by mail in the early part of April.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

MAR 6 1973

New England News

Tanglewood programs listed for summ

(Bos. Sym

Movies TV Ar

FIRST WEEKEND:

Friday, July 6
7pm Weekend Prelude
LARRY SMITH
9pm SEIJI OZAWA
Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 1
Bach: Concerto for Two Violins
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN
JEROME ROSEN
Cantata No. 189
SETH MCCOY
Bach: Cantata No. 52
BENITA VALENTE

Saturday, July 7
10:30am Open Rehearsal
8:30pm
STANISLAW SKROWACZEWSKI
Mozart program
Adagio and Fugue
Sinfonia Concertante for Winds
Concert Aria for Baritone
THOMAS STEWART
"Haffner" Symphony

Sunday, July 8
2:30pm SEIJI OZAWA
Haydn: Creation
BENITA VALENTE
SETH MCCOY
THOMAS STEWART
TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL CHORUS, John Oliver Director

SECOND WEEKEND

Friday, July 13
7pm Weekend Prelude
MALCOLM FRAGER
9pm SEIJI OZAWA
Mozart program
Horn Concerto No. 3 in D
CHARLES KAVALOSKI
Clarinet Concerto
HAROLD WRIGHT
Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN
BURTON FINE

Saturday, July 14
10:30am Open Rehearsal
8:30pm RICCARDO MUTI
Vivaldi: Concerto in A
Mozart: Piano Concerto
ANDRE WATTS
Mozart: Symphony No. 34
Rossini: Overture "La Scala di Seta"

Sunday, July 15
2:30pm SEIJI OZAWA
Handel: Concerto Grosso in B minor
Haydn: Sinfonia Concertan
RALPH GOMBERG
SHERMAN WALT
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN
JULES ESKIN
Mozart: Linz Symphony

THIRD WEEKEND

Friday, July 20
7pm Weekend Prelude
ANDRE WATTS
9pm EUGENE ORMANDY
Beethoven program
Leonore Overture No. 3
"Emperor" Concerto
PHILIPPE ENTREMONT
Symphony No. 5

Saturday, July 21
10:30am Open Rehearsal
8:30pm EUGENE ORMANDY
Beethoven program
Symphony No. 8
Symphony No. 9
PHYLLIS CURTIN
JOANNA SIMON
SETH MCCOY
PETER LAGGER
TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL CHORUS, John Oliver, Director

Sunday, July 22
2:30pm
STANISLAW SKROWACZEWSKI
Beethoven program
Overture "Coriolan"
Violin Concerto
SIDNEY HARTH
Symphony No. 3 "Eroica"

FOURTH WEEKEND

Friday, July 27
7pm Weekend Prelude
BOSTON SYMPHONY CHAMBER PLAYERS WITH PHYLLIS CURTIN, RYAN EDWARDS
9pm WILLIAM STEINBERG
Brahms program
Violin Concerto
MIRIAM FRIED
Symphony No. 1

Saturday, July 28
10:30am Open Rehearsal
8:30pm WILLIAM STEINBERG
Schubert: Symphony No. 8 "Unfinished"
Mahler: Das Lied von der Erde
soprano to be announced
JAMES KING

Sunday, July 29
2:30pm RAFAEL FRUHBECK DE BURGOS
Turina: Oracion de Torero for Strings
Bartok: Piano Concerto No. 2
CHRISTOPH ESCHENBACH
Brahms: Symphony No. 4

FIFTH WEEKEND

Friday, August 3
7pm Weekend Prelude
TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL CHORUS, John Oliver, Director
9pm MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Beethoven: Symphony No. 7
Copland: Symphony No. 3

Saturday, August 4
10:30am Open Rehearsal
8:30pm MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Stravinsky program
Firebird Suite
Canticum Sacrum
KENNETH RIEGEL, DAVID EVITTS, TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL CHORUS, John Oliver Director
Vom Himmel Hoch Variations
Symphony of Psalms
TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL CHORUS, John Oliver Director

Sunday, August 5
2:30pm MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Mozart: German Dances
Cage: Suite for Toy Piano
Strauss: Til Eulenspiegel
Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 2
MALCOLM FRAGER

SIXTH WEEKEND

Friday, August 10
7pm Weekend Prelude
PETER LAGGER
9pm COLIN DAVIS
Mozart program
"Prague" Symphony
Coronation Mass
SHEILA ARMSTRONG, HELEN WATTS, RYLAND DAVIES, STAFFORD DEAN, TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL CHORUS, John Oliver, Director

Saturday, August 11
10:30am Open Rehearsal
8:30pm COLIN DAVIS
Sibelius: Tapiola
Symphony No. 3
Tippett: Corelli Fantasy
Elgar: Enigma Variations

Sunday, August 12
2:30pm COLIN DAVIS
Handel: Messiah
SHEILA ARMSTRONG, HELEN WATTS, RYLAND DAVIES, STAFFORD DEAN, TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL CHORUS, John Oliver, Director

SEVENTH WEEKEND

Friday, August 17
7pm Weekend Prelude
EARL WILD
9pm LAWRENCE FOSTER
Berlioz: Overture "Corsair"
Bruch: Scottish Fantasy
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN
Prokofieff: Symphony No. 5

Saturday, August 18
10:30am Open Rehearsal
8:30pm ARTHUR FIEDLER
Dvorak "New World" Symphony
Rachmaninoff: Piano Concerto No. 2
EARL WILD
Wagner: to be announced

Sunday, August 19
2:30pm SEIJI OZAWA
Liszt: Tontentanz
ANDRE WATTS
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 4

EIGHTH WEEKEND

Friday, August 24
7pm Weekend Prelude
BOSTON SYMPHONY CHAMBER PLAYERS
9pm SEIJI OZAWA
Berlioz: Symphonie fantastique, "Lelio"
MALLORY WALKER, VICTOR BRAUN, COLIN FOX, TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL CHORUS, John Oliver. Director

Saturday, August 25
10:30am Open Rehearsal
8:30pm JAMES DE PRIEST
Rachmaninoff: Piano Concerto No. 2
BYRON JANIS
Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 5

Sunday, August 26
2:30pm SEIJI OZAWA
Verdi: Requiem
LOU ANN WYCKOFF, MAUREEN FORRESTER, GEORGE SHIRLEY, STAFFORD DEAN, TANGLEWOOD FESTIVAL CHORUS, John Oliver, Director

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 137,285

MAR 25 1973

Tanglewood Opens July 6

Special to The Times

LENOX, Mass. — The 1973 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open July 6 and continue through Aug. 26.

The season will open with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa, who will assume the additional post of music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the fall.

On July 8, Ozawa will conduct Haydn's Creation with orchestra, chorus and soloists and will open the second weekend with an all-Mozart program which will offer four of the Boston orchestra's principal players opportunity to perform as soloists.

The season will close Aug. 26 with Ozawa conducting the Verdi Requiem.

During the summer, the orchestra will perform all-Mozart, all-Brahms and all-Beethoven concerts.

Eugene Ormandy will be at Tanglewood to conduct two all-Beethoven concerts; principal Guest Conductors Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas also will be conducting during the summer.

Davis will conduct Mozart's Coronation Mass and Handel's Messiah, among other works. Thomas' programs will include an all-Stravinsky concert.

Other conductors appearing at Tanglewood this season include Arthur Fiedler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Riccardo Muti, James dePriest, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski and William Steinberg.

SEIJI OZAWA
. . . artistic director

The summer program:

First Weekend

July 6, 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude, Larry Smith, 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa. Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, Bach: Concerto for Two Violins, Joseph Silverstein, Jerome Rosen, Cantata No. 52, Benita Valente.

July 7, 8:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Mozart program, Adagio and Fugue, Sinfonia Concertante for Winds, Concert Aria for Baritone. Thomas Stewart, "Haffner" Symphony.

July 8, 2:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, Haydn: Creation, Benita Valente, Seth McCoy, Thomas Stewart, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver Director.

Second Weekind

July 13, 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude, Malcolm Fragar, 9 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, Mozart program, Horn Concerto No. 3 in D. Charles Kovalski, Clarinet Concertante in E Flat, Joseph Silverstein, Burton Fine.

July 14, 8:30 p.m. Riccardo Muti, Vivaldi: Concerto in A, Mozart: Piano Concerto, Andre Watts, Mozart: Symphony No. 34, Rossini: Overture "La Scala di Sela."

July 15, 2:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, Handel: Concerto Grosso in B minor, Haydn: Sinfonia Concertante, Ralph Gornbert, Sherman Wall, Joseph Silverstein, Jules Eskin, Mozart: Linz Symphony.

Third Weekend

July 20, 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude, Andre Watts. 9 p.m. Eugene Ormandy, Beethoven program, Leonore Overture No. 3, "Emperor" Concerto, Philippe Entremont, Symphony No. 5.

July 21, 8:30 p.m., Engene Ormandy, Beethoven program, Symphony No. 8, Symphony No. 9, Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Seth McCoy, Peter Lagger, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, Director.

July 22, 2:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Beethoven program, Overture "Coriolan" Violin Concerto. Sidney Harth, Symphony No. 3 "Eroica."

Fourth Weekend

July 27, 7 p.m., Weekend Prelude, Boston Symphony Chamber Players with Phyllis Curtin, Ryan Edwards. 9 p.m. William Steinberg Brahms program, Violin Concerto, Miriam Fried, Symphony No. 1.

July 28, 8:30 p.m, William Steinberg, Schubert: Symphony No. 8 "Unfinished", Mahler: Das Lied von der Ende, soprano to be announced, James King.

July 29, 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgas, Turina: Oracion de Torero for Strings. Bartok: Piano Concerto No. 2, Chrislaph Eschenbach, Brahms: Symphony No. 4.

Fifth Weekend

August 3, 7 p.m., Weekend Prelude, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, Director. 9 p.m., Michael Tilson Thomas, Stravinsky program. Firebird Suite, Canticum Sacrum. Kenneth Riegel, David Evitts, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, Director, Vom Himmel Hoch Variations, Symphony of Psalms, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Olivtr, Director.

August 5, 2:30 p.m., Michael Tilson Thomas, Mozart: German Dances, Cage: Suite for Toy Piano. Strauss: Til Eulenspiegel. Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 2, Malcolm Frager.

Sixth Weekend

August 10, 7 p.m., Weekend Prelude, Peter Lagger. 9 p.m., Colin Davis, Mozart program, "Prague" Symphony, Coronation Mass, Sheila Armstrong, Helen Watts, Ryland Davies, Stafford Dean, Tanglewood Festival Chorus. John Oliver, Director.

August 11, 8:30 p.m., Colin Davis, Sibelius: Tapiola, Symphony No. 3, Tippett: Corelli Fantasy, Elgar: Enigma Variations.

August 12, 2:30 p.m., Colin Davis, Handel: Messiah, Sheila Armstrong, Helen Watts, Ryland Davies, Stafford Dean, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, Director.

Seventh Weekend

August 17, 7 p.m., Weekend Prelude, Earl Wild. 9 p.m., Lawrence Foster, Berloiz: Overture "Corsair," Bruch: Scottish Fantasy, Joseph Silverstein, Prokofieff: Symphony No. 5.

August 18, 8:30 p.m., Arthur Fiedler, Dvorak "New World" Symphony, Rachmaninoff: Piano Concerto No. 2, Earl Wild, Wagner: to be announced.

August 19, 2:30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, Liszt: Tontentanz, Andre Watts, Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 4.

Eighth Weekend

August 24, 7 p.m., Weekend Prelude, Boston Symphony Chamber Players, 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, Berlioz: Symphonie Fantastique, "Lelio," Mallory Walker, Victor Braun, Colin Fox, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, Director.

August 25, 8:30 p.m., James De Priest, Rachmaninoff: Piano Concerto No. 2, Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 5.

August 26, 2:30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, Verdi: Requiem, Lou Ann Wyckoff, Maureen Forrester, George Shirley, Stafford Dean, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, Director.

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
S. 117,499

MAR 11 1973

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood schedule announced by BSO

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced programs for the 1973 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Weekend July 6-8: Friday Seiji Ozawa conducts a Bach program (including the spurious Cantata 189) with violinists Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen, soprano Benita Valente, and tenor Seth McCoy; Saturday Stanislaw Skrowczewski conducts a Mozart program including the Sinfonia Concertante for winds, and concertarias with baritone Thomas Stewart; Sunday Ozawa conducts Haydn's "Creation" with Valente, McCoy, Stewart, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. The Weekend Prelude is played by organist Larry Smith.

Weekend July 13-15: Friday Ozawa conducts a Mozart program with violinist Joseph Silverstein, violist Burton Fine, clarinetist Harold Wright, hornist Charles Kavaloski; Saturday Riccardo Muti conducts Mozart's C minor Concerto with pianist Andre Watts, and works of Mozart, Vivaldi, and Rossini; Sunday Ozawa conducts music by Handel, Haydn, and Mozart. Pianist Malcolm Frager plays the Weekend Prelude.

Weekend July 20-22: Friday and Saturday, Eugene Ormandy conducts Beethoven programs including the Emperor Concerto with Philippe Entremont and the 5th, 8th, and 9th Symphonies; Sunday Skrowaczewski in a Beethoven program with violinist Sidney Harth. Andre Watts plays the Weekend Prelude.

Weekend July 27-29: William Steinberg conducts a Brahms program Friday with violinist Miriam Fried, and Saturday Mahler's "Song of the Earth" with tenor James King and a mezzo to be announced; Sunday Rafael Fruehbeck de Burgos conducts Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach, and works by Turina and Brahms. The BSO Chamber Players with soprano Phyllis Curtin give the Weekend Prelude.

Weekend August 3-5: Michael Tilson Thomas conducts all three programs, including symphonies by Beethoven and Copland on Friday; a Stravinsky program on Saturday, including the "Firebird" Suite, Canticum Sacrum, "Von Himmel hoch" Variations, and Symphony of Psalms; Sunday works by Mozart, Cage, Strauss, with Malcolm Frager soloist in Brahms's Concerto No. 2. The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver conducting, sings the Weekend Prelude.

Weekend August 10-12: Colin Davis conducts all three programs, all Mozart on Friday, including the Coronation Mass and G major Violin Conerto with Silverstein; works by Sibelius and Elgar on Saturday; and Handel's "Messiah" on Sunday, with Sheila Armstrong, Helen Watts, Ryland Davies, Stafford Dean, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. Bass Peter Lagger sings the Weekend Prelude.

Weekend August 17-19: Friday Silverstein is soloist in Bruch's Scottish Fantasy, with Lawrence Foster conducting works by Berlioz and Prokofiev; Saturday Arthur Fiedler conducts Dvorak's "New World" Symphony and Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 with Earl Wild, who also plays the Weekend Prelude; Sunday Ozawa conducts Tchaikovsky's 4th, and Andre Watts is soloist in Liszt's "Totentanz."

Weekend August 24-26: Friday Ozawa conducts Berlioz's "Fantastique" and "Lelio;" Saturday James De Priest conducts Shostakovich's 5th, with Byron Janis soloist in Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 3; Sunday Ozawa finishes the season with Verdi's Requiem, with Lou Ann Wyckoff, Maureen Forrester, George Shirley, Stafford Dean, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. The Weekend Prelude is given by the BSO Chamber Players.

Friday symphony concerts begin at 9, Saturdays' at 8:30, and those on Sundays at 2:30. The weekend preludes, included in the Friday symphony tickets, are Fridays at 7. Tanglewood on Parade is scheduled for Tuesday, Aug. 14: Ozawa and Gunther Schuller will conduct, and Andre Watts will participate as piano soloist and as narrator in Copland's "Lincoln Portrait." A brochure will be available at Symphony Hall or by mail early in April.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566.377
MAR 4 1973
New England Newsclip

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514
MAR 7 1973
New England Newsclip

SUNDAY HERALD ADVERTISER
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 521,285
MAR 11 1973
New England Newsclip

Performers listed for Tanglewood

BOSTON — The 1973 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday, June 6 and continues through Sunday, August 26.

The season opens with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa assumes the additional post of music director of the Boston Symphony in the fall.

On Sunday, July 8, Ozawa conducts Haydn's Creation with Orchestra, Chorus and soloists.

Ozawa opens the second weekend with an all-Mozart program which offers four of the Boston Symphony's Prinicpal Players opportunity to perform as soloists. The season closes on Sunday, August 26 with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Verdi Requiem.

During the summer the orchestra performs all-Mozart, all-Brahms and all-Beethoven concerts. Eugene Ormandy will be at Tanglewood to conduct two all-Beethoven concerts: principal guest conductors Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas will also be conducting during the summer. Davis will conduct Mozart's Coronation Mass and Handel's Messiah, among other works. Thomas' programs will include an all-Stravinsky concert.

Other conductors apprearing at Tanglewood this season include: Arthur Fiedler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Fruhbeek de Burgos, Riccardo Muti, James de Priest, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski and William Steinberg. Piano soloists include Philippe Entremont, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcom Frager, Byron Janis, Andre Watts and Earl Wild.

The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, under the direction of John Oliver, will perform during the Tanglewood season, as will the Boston Symphony Chamber Players with Phyllis Curtin and Ryan Edwards.

Some advice of note on Tanglewood

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

Remember last year? Somewhere around the beginning of July, you decided to plan a weekend vacation to the Berkshires including in your itinerary a concert or two at Tanglewood. And all the motels and hotels were filled. Or you couldn't get tickets for the all-Beethoven weekend? Or you just wanted a little quiet and the traffic jams were worse than those you had been trying to escape in the city?

Well, the BSO has just announced its Tanglewood season — the dates, programs, conductors, and soloists—and it is probably not too early to begin making plans for that weekend away. At least, if you start thinking about it now, you can avoid all the frustrations of last year.

This article is meant to be a shoppers' guide to Tanglewood, a bit of advice to help decide now when to go and what to hear.

THE SEASON opens Friday, July 6 with a weekend prelude at 7 p.m. and an all-Bach program at 9 p.m. conducted by music director-elect Seiji Ozawa. The first two weekends, you may remember, are usually devoted to small-scale orchestra works by Bach, Mozart, Vivaldi etc. because a portion of the BSO is still in Boston participating in the Esplanade Concerts; however, this need not deter you because there are some real programs possibilities.

On the first weekend, the following works will be performed: On Friday, Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, the Concerto for Two Violins (Silverstein and Rosen), Cantata No. 189 (Seth McCoy) and Cantata No. 52 (Benita Valente—very worth hearing).

On Saturday, Stanislaw Skowaczewski conducts Mozart, Adagio and Fugue; Sinfonia Concertante for Winds; Concert Aria for baritone (Thomas Stewart) K. 539; "Haffner" Symphony. On Sunday afternoon, Ozawa conducts Haydn's "Creation" which I hope will not be cut as viciously as last year's "The Seasons" nor performed with as little sense of style.

THE SECOND weekend includes a weekend prelude on Friday night (July 13) with pianist Malcolm Frager which will probably be interesting enough to warrant hurrying through supper (It begins at 7 p. m.).

Following is an all-Mozart program with Ozawa on the podium including the Horn Concerto No. 3 (Charles Kavaloski); a repeat of the Clarinet Concerto (Harold Wright) which was performed at Symphony Hall March 2; the Sinfonia Concertante in E-flat (Silverstein and Fine).

Saturday's concert will be conducted by new-comer Riccardo Muti and features Vivaldi, Concerto in A; Mozart, Piano Concerto (no word yet on which one) with Andre Watts; Mozart Symphony No. 34; and Rossini, Overture to "La Scala di Seta." On Sunday, it's Ozawa with Handel, Concerto Grosso in B-minor; Haydn, Sinfonia Concertante; and Mozart, "Linz" Symphony.

THE THIRD weekend (July 20-22) is not only the all-Beethoven weekend but also the occasion of Eugene Ormandy's two guest appearances. Be fore-warned: It will be a mob scene. The traffic will be heaviest; the hotel rooms in shortest supply; the restaurants jammed.

With any luck at all, it will, like last year, also be the hottest weekend of the season. If you are looking for a quiet retreat, this is not the weekend for you. And if you are looking for outstanding music-making, I would, on the basis of his past performances suggest that Ormandy will probably not provide it.

If you must go, make reservations now at one of the hotels closest to Tanglewood and plan on walking or bicycling to the concerts or driving to them two hours early. Take a picnic dinner to eat on the lawn followed by a walk down to the lake before concert time. It's the only way to turn a potential nerve-jangler into a relaxing break.

Anyway, the program selections include: Friday, Prelude with Andre Watts followed by Ormandy in Leonore Overture No. 3, Emperor Concerto (Philippe Entremont) and Symphony No. 5.

Saturday features Symphonies No. 8 and 9 also with Ormandy and Sunday has Skrowaczewski conducting the "Coriolan" Overture, the Violin Concerto (Sidney Harth) and Symphony No. 3.

SEVERAL promising performances are scheduled during the July 27-29 weekend. After you get past the all-Brahms (Symphony No. 1 and Violin Concerto) night on Friday as well as the Weekend Prelude (the BSO Chamber Players and Phyllis Curtin, presumably repeating the program they did several weeks ago, and a very dull one it was at that) there is Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" in tandem with Schubert's "Unfinished" conducted by William Steinberg with tenor James King on Saturday night.

On Sunday afternoon, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos will conduct Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist, Turina's Oracion de Torero for Strings, and the Brahms Symphony No. 4.

THE FIFTH weekend offers one of the season's most interesting concerts — an all-Stravinsky program on Saturday, April 4 (corresponding with the annual Fromm Festival of contemporary music) conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas. Works programed are the "Firebird" Suite, Canticum Sacrum (Kenneth Riegel, David Evitts), Von Himmel Hoch Variations, and Symphony of Psalms.

This will be preceded on Friday night by a repeat of a Thomas concert from last fall—that is, the Beethoven Symphony No. 7 and Copland, Symphony No. 3. Sunday afternoon will include Mozart's German Dances, John Cage's Suite for Toy Piano, Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel," and the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2 (Malcolm Frager as soloist).

RENATA TEBALDI, Soprano, will give a Symphony Hall concert on Friday, March 23, at 8:30 p. m.

THE SIXTH weekend will appeal to choral music buffs who will hear an out-of-season performance of Handel's "Messiah" on Sunday afternoon and Mozart's "Coronation" Mass Friday evening. Colin Davis will conduct.

Mozart's "Prague" Symphony will be paired with the Mass and in between the two concerts is still another repeat of a concert performed in Boston this season—that is, Sibelius, "Tapiola" and Symphony No. 3; Elgar, Enigma Variations; and Tippett, Corelli Fantasy.

A semi-Pops atmosphere will prevail in the next to last weekend. Musical selections will generally be popular classics and my prediction is that this will be the second most crowded weekend of the season. Therefore, the precautions suggested for the all-Beethoven weekend are applicable here.

One further suggestion for those who wait too long to make hotel accommodations or whose budgets are limited: Try the guest houses.

The program: Friday night, Lawrence Foster conducting Berlioz, "Corsair" Overture; Bruch, Scottish Fantasy (Joseph Silverstein); Prokofiev, Symphony No. 5. Saturday, Arthur Fiedler conducting Dvorak, "New World" Symphony; Rachmaninoff, Piano Concerto No. 2 (with Earl Wild); and some unannounced Wagner work. On Sunday, Ozawa will conduct the Liszt "Totentanz (Andre Watts) and Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

THE FINAL weekend (Aug. 24-26) will be dominated by two concerts which were previously given during the winter season at Symphony Hall. If you've already heard them, this is the weekend to go to Jacob's Pillow or Wolf Trap Farm or just to the Cape. If you missed them, this is a second chance.

The programs in question are Ozawa's performances of Berlioz' Symphonie fantastique and "Lelio" with Mallory Walker, Victor Braun, and Colin Fox as soloists on Friday evening and, on Sunday afternoon, the Verdi Requiem.

In between is the Saturday evening program conducted by James De Priest which offers the second chance in two weeks to hear the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2. The soloist is Byron Janis, probably a better artistic choice than Wild, if he shows up. Because of a painful joint problem in his shoulder, Janis is a chronic canceler, but he is definitely worth the gamble. Also programmed that night is the Shostakovich Symphony No. 5 (the work which took the composer's name off the Soviets' artistic black list after the stir created by "Lady MacBeth of Mzensk."

BSO Lists Berkshire Festival

Editor's Note: The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make a special appearance in Springfield Municipal Auditorium at 8:30 p.m. on April 12, when Bernard Haitink will conduct BSO in a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

The 1973 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday, July 6 and continues through Sunday, Aug. 26.

The season opens with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa assumes the additional post of music director of the Boston Symphony in the fall.

On Sunday, July 8, Mr. Ozawa conducts Haydn's "Creation" with orchestra, chorus and soloists. Izawa opens the second week end with an all-Mozart program which offers four of the Boston Symphony's Principal Players opportunity to perform as soloists. The season closes on Sunday, Aug. 26 with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Verdi Requiem.

During the summer the orchestra performs all-Mozart, all-Brahms and all-Beethoven concerts. Eugene Ormandy will be at Tanglewood to conduct two all-Beethoven concerts: Principal guest conductors Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas will also be conducting during the summer. Davis will conduct Mozart's Coronation Mass and Handel's "Messiah," among other works. Thomas' programs will include an all-Stravinsky concert.

Other conductors appearing at Tanglewood this season include: Arthur Fiedler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Riccardo Muti, James de Priest, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski and William Steinberg. Piano soloists include Philippe Entrement, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Byron Janis, Andre Watts and Earl Wild.

Other soloists for this season's festival include organist Larry Smith; violinists Miriam Fried, Sidney Harth, Joseph Silverstein, Concertmaster of the Boston Symphony; principal horn of the Boston Symphony Charles Kavaloski; principal clarinet Harold Wright; principal viola Burton Fine; principal oboe Ralph Gomberg; principal bassoon Sherman Walt and principal cello Jules Eskin.

Singers performing at the festival include Sheila Armstrong, Victor Braun, Phyllis Curtin, Ryland Davies, Stafford Dean, David Evitts, Maureen Forrester, James King, Peter Lagger, Seth McCoy, Kenneth Riegel, Joanna Simon, George Shirley, Thomas Stewart, Benita Valente, Mallary Walker, Helen Watts, Lou Ann Wyckoff and narrator Colin Fox.

The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, under the direction of John Oliver, will perform during the Tanglewood season, as will the Boston Symphony Chamber Players with Phyllis Curtin and Ryan Edwards.

Brochures listing summer events will be available at Symphony Hall or by mail in the early part of April.

STANDARD TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
S. 63,259
MAR 11 1973
New England Newsclip

The Observer-Dispatch
UTICA, N. Y.
D. 45,005 SUN. 58,143
APR 1 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood programs announced

Signs of spring and summer are pleasantly evident in the announcement by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that its 1973 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will open on Friday, July 6, and will continue through Sunday, Aug. 26. The season opens with a concert conducted by Tanglewood artistic director, Sieji Ozawa, who assumes the additional post of music director of the Boston Symphony in the fall.

During the summer the orchestra will perform all-Mozart, all-Brahms, and all-Beethoven concerts. Eugene Ormandy, of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be at Tanglewood to conduct two all-Beethoven programs, and principal guest-condutors, Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas, also will be on hand; the former will conduct Mozart's "Coronation Mass" and Handel's "Messiah," among other works. Thomas' programs will include an all-Stravinsky concert.

Other conductors who will be appearing at Tanglewood include Arthur Fiedler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Riccardo Muti, James de Priest, Stanislaw Skrowanzewski, and William Steinberg. Piano soloists will include Philippe Entrement, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Byron Janis, Andre Watts and Earl Wild.

Incidentally, a complete brochure of the summer events will be available from Symphony Hall, Boston, 02115 in the early part of April.

25 Boston Symphony 6

A Calendar of Vacation Events

A guide for you and your family on what's going on where

Compiled by Frances Shemanski

APRIL

Easter Festival Week, St. Augustine, Fla., April 22-29.
Merry Monarch Festival, Hilo, Hawaii, April 25-29.
International Conservation Festival, Bottineau, N.D., April 26-29.
Festival Week, Tucson, Ariz., April 27-May 13.
Kentucky Derby Festival, Louisville, April 27-May 5.
Southern California Jumping Frog Contest, Del Mar, April 29.

MAY

Clothesline Fair, Wilmington, Del., May 1-2.
Mississippi Arts Festival, Jackson, May 1-6.
Heritage Month Observance, throughout Rhode Island, May 1-31.
Fresh Water Fishing Rodeo, Eufaula, Ala., May 4-6.
King Crab Festival, Kodiak, Alaska, May 4-6.
Shenandoah Valley Apple Blossom Festival, Winchester, Va., May 4-6.
Old Dover Days, Dover, Del., May 5-6. House tour.
Cotton Carnival, Memphis, Tenn., May 5-12.
Children's Services Horse Show, Farmington, Conn., May 11-13.
Preakness Festival Week, Baltimore, Md., May 11-20.
Lilac Festival, Spokane, Wash., May 12-20.
'73 Arts Festival, Augusta, Ga., May 15-27.
Three Rivers Arts Festival, Pittsburgh, Pa., May 26-June 3. Free.
Strawberry Festival, Buckhannon, W. Va., May 30-June 3.

JUNE

Elfreth's Alley Day, Philadelphia, Pa., June 2.
150th Anniversary Celebration of Founding of 21st California Mission, Sonoma, June 4-Sept. 30.
Sun Fun Festival, Myrtle Beach and Grand Strand Area, S. C., June 6-10.
International Country Music

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
S. 106,767
MAR 25 1973
New England Newsclip

GAZETTE
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 97,539
MAR 9 1973
New England Newsclip

Wallflowers Come Alive in Your Kaleidoscope

By DAVID D. OSWELL

"CYRANO' has been set to music and the dashing hero of Edmond Rostands romantic drama will be played by Christopher Plummer.

This musical version has book and lyrics by Anthony Burgess and music by Michael J. Lewis. Michael Kidd will direct.

It is due at Bostons Colonial Theater March 21 for three weeks before moving to Broadway for an April opening.

Rostands classic caused quite a sensation when it was originally presented in Paris in 1897. Theater historians back the theater of naturalism, symbolism and Ibsenism and became, without question, the supreme example of the romantic drama in the history of French theater.'

Rostands play is based on a real person the 17th century philosopher-swordsman and man of letters Savinien Cyrano de Bergerac. And, although De Bergerac was a gifted playwright and novelist, having influenced Moliere among others, it is the hero of Rostands play — the legendary Cyrano — who is most remembered.

Appearing with Plummer at the Colonial will be Leigh Beery as Roxana and Mark Lamos as the soldier Cyrano loses for the wooing of the woman he loves.

TANGLEWOOD'S 1973 Berkshire Festival in Lenox opens July 6 and continues through Aug. 26.

The seasons inaugural concert will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa, Tanglewood's artistic director. On July 8, Ozawa will conduct Haydn's "Creation" with orchestra chorus and soloists.

Ozawa also is scheduled to conduct the season's finale, the Verdi Requiem ,on Aug. 26.

Other conductors appearing during the summer season include Arthur Fiedler Lawrence Foster, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos Riccardo Muti, James de Priest Stanislaw Skrowaczewski and William Steinberg.

Brochures listing summer events will be available at Symphony Hall in Boston or by mail early next month.

"SOUTH PACIFIC" will be the next musical presented by The Westborough Players Club. It is scheduled at the town's junior high school April 12 through 14. Curtain is at 8:15 p.m. Tickets are $1.50 for students and senior adults, $2.50 for others.

CINEMATECH V opened its "Homage to William Wellman" film series last night with "Public Enemy," starring James Cagney and Jean Harlow.

Next is "Nothing Sacred" with Fredric March and Carole Lombard. It's to be shown at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Alden Memorial Hall on the Worcester Polytechnic Institute campus.

ERICH SEGAL, author of "Love Story," is the guest at Worcester Center's Breakfast in the galleria Tuesday. The

There's a ROGERS PAINT for every room available at
SHERWIN-WILLIAMS STORES
See Yellow Pages under paint for the nearest store.

July 4-August 19. Also instruction.
Boston Symphony Orchestra Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 6-August 26.
Santa Fe Opera Festival, Santa Fe, N.M., July 6-August 25.
Tour of Old Houses, Litchfield, Conn., July 7.
Mississippi River Festival—Black Opera, Helena, Ark., July 8-17.
N.H. Music Festival, Center Harbor, N.H., July 8-August 18.
Festival of Arts and Pageant of the Masters, Laguna Beach, Calif., July 13-August 26.
"The Old Homestead," Swanzey, N.H., July 13-15. American folk drama.
International Moon Walk Festival, Cocoa Beach, Fla., July 16-20.
Ohio Hills Folk Festival, Quaker City, Ohio, July 18-21.
Ancient Muster of Fife and Drums Corps, Deep River, Conn., July 21.
Cheyenne Frontier Days, Cheyenne, Wyo., July 21-29. Big rodeo.
Mid-America All-Indian Days Pow-Wow, Wichita, Kan., July 27-29.
Lumberjack World Championships, Hayward, Wis., July 27-29.

AUGUST

105th Annual Jousting Tournament, Cordova, Md., August 1.
White Marlin Tournament, Atlantic City, N.J., August 2-5.
Maine Seafoods Festival, Rockland, Maine, August 3-5.
International Sea Festival, Long Beach, Calif., August 4-19.
Czech Festival, Wilber, Neb., August 4-5.
40th League of N.H. Craftsmen Fair, Mt. Sunapee State Park, N.H., August 7-12.
Bootheel Rodeo, Sikeston, Mo., August 9-12.
Peter Britt Music and Arts Festival, Jacksonville, Ore., August 10-25.
Silver Salmon Derby, Seward, Alaska, August 11-19.
Lakefront Festival, Chicago, Ill., August 11-19.
National Canoe and Kayak Races, Seattle, Wash., August 11-12.
American Indian Exposition, Anadarko, Okla., August 13-18.
Watts Summer Festival, Los Angeles, Calif., August 15-19.
Festival of Nations, Red Lodge, Mont., August 19-26.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,638
APR 30 1973

Tanglewood Will Open On July 6

Tanglewood is upon us again. The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., announces its opening on Friday evening, July 6 at 9 p.m. with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of music adviser Ozawa Seiji conducting an all-Bach program.

The Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, the Concerto for Two Violins and two Bach cantatas will be the opening program. Violin soloists will be Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen. Soloists for the cantatas will be Seth McCoy and Benita Valente.

THE CLOSING concert of the 1973 season is August 26 at 2:30 p.m. with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Verdi Requiem with soloists Lou Ann Wyckoff, Maureen Forrester, Giuseppe Giacomini, Stafford Dean and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus under the direction of John Oliver.

For complete information about these and other outstanding programs planned for the summer season, write Festrival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Massachusetts, 02115, or call (617) 266-1492 until June 15. After that date, write Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, 01240. Call (413) 637-1600 after June 15 until the end of the season. A complete brochure is available on request.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
MAY 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Time for Tanglewood

By Louis Snyder

(C) Christian Science Monitor News Service

Less than two months from today, the 1973 Berkshire Festival will be in full swing at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Beginning July 6, there will be eight weekends of concerts by the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, through Aug. 26. Open rehearsals each Saturday morning at 10:30 will continue, while the public may attend a variety of weekday events on the Tanglewood grounds by fellows of the Berkshire Music Center for a small entrance fee.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, a day-long series of musical festivities, climaxed by fireworks, will take place on Tuesday, Aug. 14. In addition, on Tuesday evening, Aug. 21, the Boston Pops under Arthur Fiedler's direction, will play the traditional Pension Fund Concert.

A week-long Festival of Contemporary Music, again cosponsored by the Boston Symphony and the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard, will occur Aug. 4 through 9. Among the new works to be performed are three, commissioned for this festival-within-a-festival, by American composers James Drew, John Heiss, and Peter Lieberson.

Activities by the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which includes music, theater, dance, and painting will be scheduled, as will a number of performances by the Music Theater Project, now in its third year.

Conductors, in addition to Mr. Ozawa, who will direct concerts in the weekend series are: Colin Davis, Arthur Fiedler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Frubeck de-Burgos, Riccardo Muti, Eugene Ormandy, James de Priest, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, William Steinberg, and Michael Tilson Thomas.

Both vocal and instrumental soloists will be heard with the BSO: pianists Philippe Entremont, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Byron Janis, Andre Watts, Earl Wild; organist Larry Smith; violinist Miriam Fried and Sidney Harth. Principal members of the orchestra will also participate in solo capacities.

Singers, a number appearing at Tanglewood for the first time, include Sheila Armstrong, Victor Braun, Phyllis Curtin, Ryland Davies, Stafford Dean, David Evitts, Maureen Forrester, James King, Peter Lagger, Seth McCoy, Kenneth Riegel, Joanna Simon, George Shirley, Thomas Stewart, Benita Valente, Mallory Walker, Helen Watts, Lou Ann Wycoff, and Colin Fox (narrator).

Both the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, with John Oliver as director, and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players (with Miss Curtin and pianist Ryan Edwards) are scheduled. A number of the artists listed will perform at the Weekend Preludes at 7 p.m. preceding each Friday evening concert.

Included in the summer schedule, which may be obtainted by phoning (617) 266-1492 or writing Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, are concerts entirely of the works of Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Berlioz, Beethoven, and Stavinsky. Mahler's "Lied von der Erde" is listed, and there will be complete performances of Haydn's "Creation," Handel's "Messiah," and the Verdi Requiem. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the "Lelio," of Berlioz, and the "Canticum Sacrum" and Symphony of Psalms of Stravinsky are choral works planned for programs devoted to those composers.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
MAR 7 1973
New England Newsclip

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,638
MAY 19 1973

Yugoslavian Dancers Appear in Bonus Concert

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

A capacity Auditorium audience is expected to attend the Frula Yugoslavian Dance Production at 7 p.m. next Sunday.

It is the concluding event of the season's Worcester Community Concert Association which has a near-capacity audience this year.

The Furla's program is offered as a bonus concert to new members of the Association who respond promptly in the 1973-1974 membership campaign that opens today at 4 p.m. with a tea at Nick's Colonial Grille.

Bonus tickets will either be mailed in time for use or will be held at the Auditorium box office in the names of those who have applied for membership.

Next season's Community Concerts are the Bayanihan Philippine Dance Company, Monday, Oct. 1; Virtuosi di Roma, Tuesday, Nov. 6; Welsh Choir of Cardiff, Wed., March 20, 1974; Ferrante and Teicher, duo-pianists, Wednesday, April 17, 1974.

All are scheduled to begin at 8:15 p.m. in the Auditorium.

Membership for next year is $10 for the series of four concerts for adults; student season tickets, $5 and family plan tickets, $25.

Applications for new memberships and renewals are now being accepted at Worcester Community Concert Association, P.O. Box 1141, Worcester 01613.

Campaign headquarters' phone numbers in Worcester are 791-8352 and 791-8353.

A NUMBER OF unusual items have been included on the Boston Symphony programs of the Berkshire Music Festival this summer at Tanglewood.

Martina Arroyo

Some of these are Turina's "Oracion de Torero," conducted by Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, July 29; Copland's Symphny No. 3, Stravinsky's "Von Himmel Hoch Variations, and Cage's Suite for Toy Piano, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas, the weekend of August 3-5; Tippett's Corelli Fantasy, conducted by Colin Davis, Aug. 11; and Liszt's rarely played "Todtentanz," conducted by Seiji Ozawa, with Andre Watts as piano soloist, Aug. 19.

Other veatures are Beethoven programs conducted by Eugene Ormandy, July 20 and 21; Handel's Messiah, conducted by Davis, Aug. 12; and Verdi's Requiem, conducted by Ozawa, at the concluding concert, Aug. 26.

The festival begins Friday, July 6, with an all-Bach program conducted by Ozawa.

Concerts will be Friday nights at 9; Saturday nights at 8:30; and Sunday afternoons at 2:30.

Brochures listing summer events will be available at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, in the early part of April.

SPRINGFIELD SYMPHONY Orchestra, conducted by Robert Gutter, will present a fully staged production of Bizet's "Carmen" in the Municipal Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Mezzo-soprano Joy Davidson will sing the title role. Others are Salvatore Novoa as Don Jose; John Fiorito, Escamillo; Gretchen d'Arrill Milnes and Ruggero Raimondi.

Other productions are "Carmen" (Monday night); "Tosca" (Tuesday night); "Il Trovatore" (Wednesday night).

"Lucia di Lammermoor" (Thursday night); "Macbeth" (Friday night); "Aida" (Saturday matinee); "Barber of Seville" (Saturday night).

Evening performances begin at 8 sharp; the Saturday matinee at 1:30.

Further information may be obtained from the Boston Opera Association, Inc. (sponsor of the Met in Boston), 420 Boylston St., Boston 02116.

Editorials

Spring Lament

If there were any "darling buds of May" this month it has been either too cold, too rainy or too windy to enjoy them. Most certainly rough winds did shake them. Spring, 1973, must be rated as a flop.

Sure, the rain has made the grass grow, but cold weather has kept too many of the flowers in a state close to hibernation. The fish aren't biting. Golf is being played but for the most part only by the most avid and those who are second cousin to a duck. And so it goes in Metroland. Even so we might consider ourselves lucky.

There have been floods in the Mississippi Valley, blizzards in the plains, high seas in the Great Lakes and mid-May snows in such places as Syracuse and Oneonta.

Better than grouching, as most of us have been doing, perhaps we should be scraping together what few crumbs of optimism we may have left and looking forward to summer. Avoiding that inclination to lament that summer will bring nothing but sultry heat, it would be more salubrious to contemplate such summer promises as these:

Swimming. Among other places at the new state park at Grafton.

Summer theater. At the Area Theater at the State University in Albany, Williamstown, Saratoga Springs and the Colonie Coliseum.

Music and Dance. Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Tanglewood, Jacob's Pillow and numerous way stations.

Horse racing. Saratoga, naturally.

Auto racing. Here and there.

Picnicking. There are always the state parks. Lovely, lonely places are harder to find.

Rocking. Afraid it is a lost art since the disappearance of the front porch.

Lawn mowing. Hold it. There we go getting pessimistic again.

Forget this miserable spring, even though there remains another 30 days of it. Summer is coming. And may summer's sun shine sweetly here.

25 Boston Symphony 6

A Calendar of Vacation Events

A guide for you and your family on what's going on where

Compiled by Frances Shemanski

APRIL

Easter Festival Week, St. Augustine, Fla., April 22-29.
Merry Monarch Festival, Hilo, Hawaii, April 25-29.
International Conservation Festival, Bottineau, N.D., April 26-29.
Festival Week, Tucson, Ariz., April 27-May 13.
Kentucky Derby Festival, Louisville, April 27-May 5.
Southern California Jumping Frog Contest, Del Mar, April 29.

MAY

Clothesline Fair, Wilmington, Del., May 1-2.
Mississippi Arts Festival, Jackson, May 1-6.
Heritage Month Observance, throughout Rhode Island, May 1-31.
Fresh Water Fishing Rodeo, Eufaula, Ala., May 4-6.
King Crab Festival, Kodiak, Alaska, May 4-6.
Shenandoah Valley Apple Blossom Festival, Winchester, Va., May 4-6.
Old Dover Days, Dover, Del., May 5-6. House tour.
Cotton Carnival, Memphis, Tenn., May 5-12.
Children's Services Horse Show, Farmington, Conn., May 11-13.
Preakness Festival Week, Baltimore, Md., May 11-20.
Lilac Festival, Spokane, Wash., May 12-20.
'73 Arts Festival, Augusta, Ga., May 15-27.
Three Rivers Arts Festival, Pittsburgh, Pa., May 26-June 3. Free.
Strawberry Festival, Buckhannon, W. Va., May 30-June 3.

JUNE

Elfreth's Alley Day, Philadelphia, Pa., June 2.
150th Anniversary Celebration of Founding of 21st California Mission, Sonoma, June 4-Sept. 30.
Sun Fun Festival, Myrtle Beach and Grand Strand Area, S. C., June 6-10.
International Country Music July 4-August 19. Also instruction.
Boston Symphony Orchestra Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 6-August 26.
Santa Fe Opera Festival, Santa Fe, N.M., July 6-August 25.
Tour of Old Houses, Litchfield, Conn., July 7.
Mississippi River Festival—Black Opera, Helena, Ark., July 8-17.
N.H. Music Festival, Center Harbor, N.H., July 8-August 18.
Festival of Arts and Pageant of the Masters, Laguna Beach, Calif., July 13-August 26.
"The Old Homestead," Swanzey, N.H., July 13-15. American folk drama.
International Moon Walk Festival, Cocoa Beach, Fla., July 16-20.
Ohio Hills Folk Festival, Quaker City, Ohio, July 18-21.
Ancient Master of Fife and Drums Corps, Deep River, Conn., July 21.
Cheyenne Frontier Days, Cheyenne, Wyo., July 21-29. Big rodeo.
Mid-America All-Indian Days Pow-Wow, Wichita, Kan., July 27-29.
Lumberjack World Championships, Hayward, Wis., July 27-29.

AUGUST

105th Annual Jousting Tournament, Cordova, Md., August 1.
White Marlin Tournament, Atlantic City, N.J., August 2-5.
Maine Seafoods Festival, Rockland, Maine, August 3-5.
International Sea Festival, Long Beach, Calif., August 4-19.
Czech Festival, Wilber, Neb., August 4-5.
40th League of N.H. Craftsmen Fair, Mt. Sunapee State Park, N.H., August 7-12.
Bootheel Rodeo, Sikeston, Mo., August 9-12.
Peter Britt Music and Arts Festival, Jacksonville, Ore., August 10-25.
Silver Salmon Derby, Seward, Alaska, August 11-19.
Lakefront Festival, Chicago, Ill., August 11-19.
National Canoe and Kayak Races, Seattle, Wash., August 11-12.
American Indian Exposition, Anadarko, Okla., August 13-18.
Watts Summer Festival, Los Angeles, Calif., August 15-19.
Festival of Nations, Red Lodge, Mont., August 19-26.

Make wallflowers come alive in your

Kaleidoscope

By DAVID D. OSWELL

"CYRANO' has been set to music and the dashing hero of Edmond Rostands romantic drama will be played by Christopher Plummer.

This musical version has book and lyrics by Anthony Burgess and music by Michael J. Lewis. Michael Kidd will direct.

It is due at Bostons Colonial Theater March 21 for three weeks before moving to Broadway for an April opening.

Rostands classic caused quite a sensation when it was originally presented in Paris in 1897. Theater historians back the theater of naturalism, symbolism and Ibsenism and became, without question, the supreme example of the romantic drama in the history of French theater.'

Rostands play is based on a real person the 17th century philosopher-swordsman and man of letters Savinien Cyrano de Bergerac. And, although De Bergerac was a gifted playwright and novelist, having influenced Moliere among others, it is the hero of Rostands play — the legendary Cyrano — who is most remembered.

Appearing with Plummer at the Colonial will be Leigh Beery as Roxana and Mark Lamos as the soldier Cyrano uses for the wooing of the woman he loves.

TANGLEWOOD'S 1973 Berkshire Festival in Lenox opens July 6 and continues through Aug. 26.

The seasons inaugural concert will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa, Tanglewood's artistic director. On July 8, Ozawa will conduct Haydn's "Creation" with orchestra chorus and soloists.

Ozawa also is scheduled to conduct the season's finale, the Verdi Requiem on Aug. 26.

Other conductors appearing during the summer season include Arthur Fiedler Lawrence Foster, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos Riccardo Muti, James de Priest Stanislaw Skrowaczewski and William Steinberg.

Brochures listing summer events will be available at Symphony Hall in Boston or by mail early next month.

"SOUTH PACIFIC" will be the next musical presented by The Westborough Players Club. It is scheduled at the town's junior high school April 12 through 14. Curtain is at 8:15 p.m. Tickets are $1.50 for students and senior adults, $2.50 for others.

CINEMATECH V opened its "Homage to William Wellman" film series last night with "Public Enemy," starring James Cagney and Jean Harlow.

Next is "Nothing Sacred" with Fredric March and Carole Lombard. It's to be shown at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Alden Memorial Hall on the Worcester Polytechnic Institute campus.

ERICH SEGAL, author of "Love Story," is the guest at Worcester Center's Breakfast in the galleria Tuesday. The

There's a ROGERS PAINT for every room available at
SHERWIN-WILLIAMS STORES
See Yellow Pages under paint for the nearest store.

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
S. 106,767
MAR 25 1973
New England Newsclip

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,638
APR 30 1973

Tanglewood Will Open On July 6

Tanglewood is upon us again. The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., announces its opening on Friday evening, July 6 at 9 p.m. with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of music adviser Ozawa Seiji conducting an all-Bach program.

The Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, the Concerto for Two Violins and two Bach cantatas will be the opening program. Violin soloists will be Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen. Soloists for the cantatas will be Seth McCoy and Benita Valente.

THE CLOSING concert of the 1973 season is August 26 at 2:30 p.m. with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Verdi Requiem with soloists Lou Ann Wyckoff, Maureen Forrester, Giuseppe Giacomini, Stafford Dean and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus under the direction of John Oliver.

For complete information about these and other outstanding programs planned for the summer season, write Festrival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Massachusetts, 02115, or call (617) 266-1492 until June 15. After that date, write Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, 01240. Call (413) 637-1600 after June 15 until the end of the season. A complete brochure is available on request.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
MAY 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Time for Tanglewood

By Louis Snyder

(C) Christian Science Monitor News Service

Less than two months from today, the 1973 Berkshire Festival will be in full swing at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Beginning July 6, there will be eight weekends of concerts by the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, through Aug. 26. Open rehearsals each Saturday morning at 10:30 will continue, while the public may attend a variety of weekday events on the Tanglewood grounds by fellows of the Berkshire Music Center for a small entrance fee.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, a day-long series of musical festivities, climaxed by fireworks, will take place on Tuesday, Aug. 14. In addition, on Tuesday evening, Aug. 21, the Boston Pops under Arthur Fiedler's direction, will play the traditional Pension Fund Concert.

A week-long Festival of Contemporary Music, again cosponsored by the Boston Symphony and the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard, will occur Aug. 4 through 9. Among the new works to be performed are three, commissioned for this festival-within-a-festival, by American composers James Drew, John Heiss, and Peter Lieberson.

Activities by the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which includes music, theater, dance, and painting will be scheduled, as will a number of performances by the Music Theater Project, now in its third year.

Conductors, in addition to Mr. Ozawa, who will direct concerts in the weekend series are: Colin Davis, Arthur Fiedler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Frubeck de Burgos, Riccardo Muti, Eugene Ormandy, James de Priest, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, William Steinberg, and Michael Tilson Thomas.

Both vocal and instrumental soloists will be heard with the BSO: pianists Philippe Entremont, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Byron Janis, Andre Watts, Earl Wild; organist Larry Smith; violinist Miriam Fried and Sidney Harth. Principal members of the orchestra will also participate in solo capacities.

Singers, a number appearing at Tanglewood for the first time, include Sheila Armstrong, Victor Braun, Phyllis Curtin, Ryland Davies, Stafford Dean, David Evitts, Maureen Forrester, James King, Peter Lagger, Seth McCoy, Kenneth Riegel, Joanna Simon, George Shirley, Thomas Stewart, Benita Valente, Mallory Walker, Helen Watts, Lou Ann Wycoff, and Colin Fox (narrator).

Both the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, with John Oliver as director, and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players (with Miss Curtin and pianist Ryan Edwards) are scheduled. A number of the artists listed will perform at the Weekend Preludes at 7 p.m. preceding each Friday evening concert.

Included in the summer schedule, which may be obtainted by phoning (617) 266-1492 or writing Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, are concerts entirely of the works of Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Berlioz, Beethoven, and Stavinsky. Mahler's "Lied von der Erde" is listed, and there will be complete performances of Haydn's "Creation," Handel's "Messiah," and the Verdi Requiem. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the "Lelio," of Berlioz, and the "Canticum Sacrum" and Symphony of Psalms of Stravinsky are choral works planned for programs devoted to those composers.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
MAR 7 1973
New England Newsclip

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,638
MAY 19 1973

Yugoslavian Dancers Appear in Bonus Concert

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

A capacity Auditorium audience is expected to attend the Frula Yugoslavian Dance Production at 7 p.m. next Sunday.

It is the concluding event of the season's Worcester Community Concert Association which has a near-capacity audience this year.

The Furla's program is offered as a bonus concert to new members of the Association who respond promptly in the 1973-1974 membership campaign that opens today at 4 p.m. with a tea at Nick's Colonial Grille.

Bonus tickets will either be mailed in time for use or will be held at the Auditorium box office in the names of those who have applied for membership.

Next season's Community Concerts are the Bayanihan Philippine Dance Company, Monday, Oct. 1; Virtuosi di Roma, Tuesday, Nov. 6; Welsh Choir of Cardiff, Wed., March 20, 1974; Ferrante and Teicher, duo-pianists, Wednesday, April 17, 1974.

All are scheduled to begin at 8:15 p.m. in the Auditorium.

Membership for next year is $10 for the series of four concerts for adults; student season tickets, $5 and family plan tickets, $25.

Applications for new memberships and renewals are now being accepted at Worcester Community Concert Association, P.O. Box 1141, Worcester 01613.

Campaign headquarters' phone numbers in Worcester are 791-8352 and 791-8353.

A NUMBER OF unusual items have been included on the Boston Symphony programs of the Berkshire Music Festival this summer at Tanglewood.

Martina Arroyo

Some of these are Turina's "Oracion de Torero," conducted by Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, July 29; Copland's Symphny No. 3, Stravinsky's "Von Himmel Hoch Variations, and Cage's Suite for Toy Piano, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas, the weekend of August 3-5; Tippett's Corelli Fantasy, conducted by Colin Davis, Aug. 11; and Liszt's rarely played "Todtentanz," conducted by Seiji Ozawa, with Andre Watts as piano soloist, Aug. 19.

Other veatures are Beethoven programs conducted by Eugene Ormandy, July 20 and 21; Handel's Messiah, conducted by Davis, Aug. 12; and Verdi's Requiem, conducted by Ozawa, at the concluding concert, Aug. 26.

The festival begins Friday, July 6, with an all-Bach program conducted by Ozawa.

Concerts will be Friday nights at 9; Saturday nights at 8:30; and Sunday afternoons at 2:30.

Brochures listing summer events will be available at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, in the early part of April.

SPRINGFIELD SYMPHONY Orchestra, conducted by Robert Gutter, will present a fully staged production of Bizet's "Carmen" in the Municipal Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Mezzo-soprano Joy Davidson will sing the title role. Others are Salvatore Novoa as Don Jose; John Fiorito, Escamillo; Gretchen d'Arrill Milnes and Ruggero Raimondi.

Other productions are "Carmen" (Monday night); "Tosca" (Tuesday night); "Il Trovatore" (Wednesday night).

"Lucia di Lammermoor" (Thursday night); "Macbeth" (Friday night); "Aida" (Saturday matinee); "Barber of Seville" (Saturday night).

Evening performances begin at 8 sharp; the Saturday matinee at 1:30.

Further information may be obtained from the Boston Opera Association, Inc. (sponsor of the Met in Boston), 420 Boylston St., Boston 02116.

Editorials

Spring Lament

If there were any "darling buds of May" this month it has been either too cold, too rainy or too windy to enjoy them. Most certainly rough winds did shake them. Spring, 1973, must be rated as a flop.

Sure, the rain has made the grass grow, but cold weather has kept too many of the flowers in a state close to hibernation. The fish aren't biting. Golf is being played but for the most part only by the most avid and those who are second cousin to a duck. And so it goes in Metroland. Even so we might consider ourselves lucky.

There have been floods in the Mississippi Valley, blizzards in the plains, high seas in the Great Lakes and mid-May snows in such places as Syracuse and Oneonta.

Better than grouching, as most of us have been doing, perhaps we should be scraping together what few crumbs of optimism we may have left and looking forward to summer. Avoiding that inclination to lament that summer will bring nothing but sultry heat, it would be more salubrious to contemplate such summer promises as these:

Swimming. Among other places at the new state park at Grafton.

Summer theater. At the Area Theater at the State University in Albany, Williamstown, Saratoga Springs and the Colonie Coliseum.

Music and Dance. Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Tanglewood, Jacob's Pillow and numerous way stations.

Horse racing. Saratoga, naturally.

Auto racing. Here and there.

Picnicking. There are always the state parks. Lovely, lonely places are harder to find.

Rocking. Afraid it is a lost art since the disappearance of the front porch.

Lawn mowing. Hold it. There we go getting pessimistic again.

Forget this miserable spring, even though there remains another 30 days of it. Summer is coming. And may summer's sun shine sweetly here.

PASTE OVER

The Christian Science Monitor
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
MAY 8 1973
New England Newsclip

The Detroit News
D. 630,703 SUN. 850,078
MAY 1973

Tanglewood: eight weeks of alfresco BSO music

By Louis Snyder

Less than two months from today, the 1973 Berkshire Festival will be in full swing at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Beginning July 6, there will be eight weekends of concerts by the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, through Aug. 26. Open rehearsals each Saturday morning at 10:30 will continue, while the public may attend a variety of weekday events on the Tanglewood grounds by fellows of the Berkshire Music Center for a small entrance fee.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, a day-long series of musical festivities, climaxed by fireworks, will take place on Tuesday, Aug. 14. In addition, on Tuesday evening, Aug. 21, the Boston Pops under Arthur Fiedler's direction, will play the traditional Pension Fund Concert.

A week-long Festival of Contemporary Music, again cosponsored by the Boston Symphony and the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard, will occur Aug. 4 through 9. Among the new works to be performed are three, commissioned for this festival-within-a-festival, by American composers James Drew, John Heiss, and Peter Lieberson.

Activities by the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which includes music, theater, dance, and painting will be scheduled, as will a number of performances by the Music Theater Project, now in its third year.

Conductors, in addition to Mr. Ozawa, who will direct concerts in the weekend series are: Colin Davis, Arthur Fiedler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Frubeck de Burgos, Riccardo Muti, Eugene Ormandy, James de Priest, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, William Steinberg, and Michael Tilson Thomas.

Both vocal and instrumental soloists will be heard with the BSO: pianists Philippe Entremont, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Byron Janis, Andre Watts, Earl Wild; organist Larry Smith; violinists Miriam Fried and Sidney Harth. Principal members of the orchestra will also participate in solo capacities.

Singers, a number appearing at Tanglewood for the first time, include Sheila Armstrong, Victor Braun, Phyllis Curtin, Ryland Davies, Stafford Dean, David Evitts, Maureen Forrester, James King, Peter Lagger, Seth McCoy, Kenneth Riegel, Joanna Simon, George Shirley, Thomas Stewart, Benita Valente, Mallory Walker, Helen Watts, Lou Ann Wycoff, and Colin Fox (narrator).

Both the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, with John Oliver as director, and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players (with Miss Curtin and pianist Ryan Edwards) are scheduled. A number of the artists listed will perform at the Weekend Preludes at 7 p.m. preceding each Friday evening concert.

Included in the summer schedule, which may be obtained by phoning (617) 266-1492 or writing Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, are concerts entirely of the works of Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Berlioz, Beethoven, and Stravinsky. Mahler's "Lied von der Erde" is listed, and there will be complete performances of Haydn's "Creation," Handel's "Messiah," and the Verdi Requiem. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the "Lelio" of Berlioz, and the "Canticum Sacrum" and Symphony of Psalms of Stravinsky are choral works planned for programs devoted to those composers.

Festival's artistic director Seiji Ozawa

Seven conducting appearances include Haydn's 'Creation,' Verdi's Requi

Stanislaw Skrowaczewski

Minnesota Orchestra conductor a Tanglewood guests and artist-in-residence

British bass Stafford Dean

Soloist in Mozart, Handel, and Verdi choral works

SUN-CHRONICLE
ATTLEBORO, MASS.
D. 18,500
MAY 15 1973
New England Newsclip

PRESS
BRISTOL, CONN.
D. 18,000
MAY 31 1973
New England Newsclip

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS
MAY 4 1973
New England Newsclip

BSO seeking special permit for parking lot

LENOX — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, on behalf of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, is applying to the Zoning Board of Appeals for a special permit to build a parking lot on West Street.

Construction of the parking lot on a 10-acre site began several weeks ago without a permit. Initial approval of plans by the Planning Board was recently taken by the BSO as a green light to proceed. It is now stood.

Application seat

Later, in response to an application from a resident, the BSO asked its local attorney, Sydney F. Smithers of Pittsfield, to file for a special permit. According to Smithers, the application was mailed out yesterday.

Tanglewood operations manager James F. Kiley said Wednesday that work on clearing the wooded area would continue while the zoning action is pending. He expressed optimism that the special permit would be granted.

Kiley also said he hopes Tanglewood's "neighbors" on West Street, who are bothered by illegally parked cars during the summer months, will turn out for the hearing "to come to our defense."

MAY

14. Metropoli... Memphis, Tenn...

18. U. S. Gra... Until May 20.

International Fe... Until May 20. ... nations of Afric...

19. Dance Th... Auditorium Th... Classical, moder...

24. Shakespea... May 28 at Rod... Bob Jones Uni... S. C.

25. Three River... burgh, Pa. Until... and prizes, oper... and sculpture, ... for children, a... drama, poetry, ... events are free o...

26. Count Basie... Wildwood, N.J.

28. Go-Kart Races, Milford, Del.

Memorial Tribute to Fats Waller ... New York City. At ... ll, Lincoln ... Festival, Bu... il June 3.

Ojai Festiva... 3. Top arti... jazz and contempo-

...opment of Harle... and renewal tre... ings of archite... bit to be shown ... museum of Mode... 0th Anniversa... m Hospital Ce... ng, New York ... icana Hotel.

...nhouse Square ... Philadelphia, ... More than 2,00... play.

...onlands Festiva... , Utah. Also Ju... tain Heritage ... val, Charles ... June 10.

...valcade of Spo... N.J. Also June ... National Sand... l, Okla. Until ... t, boat races, g... , rodeo.

...Day and Flag ... tion, Philadelphia, ... 16. Special events fo...

15. Music Festival and Humanistic Studies, Aspen, Colo. Until August ... (tentative).

... Folk Festival, ... 17.

Berkshire Festival Set

By LOUIS SNYDER
Monitor News Service

LENOX — Less than two months from today, the 1973 Berkshire Festival will be in full swing at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Beginning July 6, there will be eight weekends of concerts by the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, through Aug. 26. Open rehearsals each Saturday morning at 10:30 will continue, while the public may attend a variety of weekday events on the Tanglewood grounds by fellows of the Berkshire Music Center for a small entrance fee.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, a day-long series of musical festivities, climaxed by fireworks, will take place on Tuesday, Aug. 14. In addition, on Tuesday evening, Aug. 21, the Boston Pops under Arthur Fiedler's direction, will play the traditional Pension Fund Concert.

A week-long Festival of Contemporary Music, again cosponsored by the Boston Symphony and the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard, will occur Aug. 4 through 9. Among the new works to be performed are three, commissioned for this festival-within-a-festival, by American composers James Drew, John Heiss, and Peter Lieberson.

Activities by the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which includes music, theater, dance, and painting will be scheduled, as will a number of performances by the Music Theater Project, now in its third year.

Conductors, in addition to Mr. Ozawa, who will direct concerts in the weekend series are: Colin Davis, Arthur Fiedler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Frubeck de Burgos, Riccardo Muti, Eugene Ormandy, James de Priest, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, William Steinberg, and Michael Tilson Thomas.

Both vocal and instrumental soloists will be heard with the BSO: pianists Philippe Entremont, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Byron Janis, Andre Watts, Earl Wild; organist Larry Smith; violinist Miriam Fried and Sidney Harth. Principal members of the orchestra will also participate in solo capacities.

Singers, a number appearing at Tanglewood for the first time, include Sheila Armstrong, Victor Braun, Phyllis Curtin, Ryland Davies, Stafford Dean, David Evitts, Maureen Forrester, James King, Peter Lagger, Seth McCoy, Kenneth Riegel, Joanna Simon, George Shirley, Thomas Stewart, Benita Valente, Mallory Walker, Helen Watts, Lou Ann Wycoff, and Colin Fox (narrator).

Both the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, with John Oliver as director, and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players (with Miss Curtin and pianist Ryan Edwards) are scheduled. A number of the artists listed will perform at the Weekend Preludes at 7 p.m. preceding each Friday evening concert.

Included in the summer schedule, which may be obtained by phoning (617) 266-1492 or writing Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, are concerts entirely of the works of Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Berlioz, Beethoven, and Stravinsky. Mahler's "Lied von der Erde" is listed, and there will be complete performances of Haydn's "Creation," Handel's "Messiah," and the Verdi Requiem. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the "Lelio" of Berlioz, and the "Canticum Sacrum" and Symphony of Psalms of Stravinsky are choral works planned for programs devoted to those composers.

Copyright The Christian Science Publishing Society

Berkshire Festival Is Slated To Open July 6

By LOUIS SNYDER
Christian Science Monitor

Less than two months from today, the 1973 Berkshire Festival will be in full swing at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Beginning July 6, there will be eight weekends of concerts by the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, through Aug. 26. Open rehearsals each Saturday morning at 10:30 will continue, while the public may attend a variety of weekday events on the Tanglewood grounds by fellows of the Berkshire Music Center for a small entrance fee.

The annual Tanglewood-on-Parade, a day-long series of musical festivities, climaxed by fireworks, will take place on Tuesday, Aug. 14. In addition, on Tuesday evening, Aug. 21, the Boston Pops under Arthur Fiedler's direction, will play the traditional Pension Fund Concert.

A week-long Festival of Contemporary Music, again cosponsored by the Boston Symphony and the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard, will occur Aug. 4 through 9. Among the new works to be performed are three, commissioned for this festival-within-a-festival, by American composers James Drew, John Heiss, and Peter Lieberson.

Activities by the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which includes music theater, dance, and painting will be scheduled, as will a number of performances by the Music Theater Project, now in its third year.

Conductors, in addition to Mr. Ozawa, who will direct concerts in the weekend series are: Colin Davis, Arthur Fiedler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Frubeck de Burgos, Riccardo Muti, Eugene Ormandy, James de Priest, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, William Steinberg, and Michael Tilson Thomas.

Both vocal and instrumental soloists will be heard with the BSO: pianists Philippe Entremont, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Byron Janis, Andre Watts, Earl Wild; organist Larry Smith; violinists Miriam Fried and Sidney Harth. Principal members of the orchestra will also participate in solo capacities.

Singers, a number appearing at Tanglewood for the first time, include Sheila Armstrong, Victor Braun, Phyllis Curtin, Ryland Davies, Stafford Dean, David Evitts, Maureen Forrester, James King, Peter Lagger, Seth McCoy, Kenneth Riegel, Joanna Simon, George Shirley, Thomas Stewart, Benita Valente, Mallory Walker, Helen Watts, Lou Ann Wycoff and Colin Fox (narrator).

Both the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, with John Oliver as director, and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players (with Miss Curtin and pianist Ryan Edwards) are scheduled. A number of the artists listed will perform at the Weekend Preludes at 7 p.m. preceding each Friday evening concert.

Included in the summer schedule, which may be obtained by phoning (617) 266-1492 or writing Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, are concerts entirely of the works of Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Berlioz, Beethoven, and Stravinsky. Mahler's "Lied von der Erde" is listed, and there will be complete performances of Haydn's "Creation," Handel's "Messiah," and the Verdi Requiem. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the "Lelio" of Berlioz, and the "Canticum Sacrum" and Symphony of Psalms of Stravinsky are choral works planned for programs devoted to those composers.

JULY

1. Freedom Festival, Provo, Utah. Until July 4.

...ng Bull Stampede, Mobridge, ...Until July 4. Rodeo.

...rnational Gospel Music Fes... Nashville, Tenn. Until July 7.

Booker T. Washington opened Tuskegee Institute in Ala., July 4, 1881. Special program at Tuskegee marks the 92nd anniversary.

6. Boston Symphony Orchestra Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Until August 26.

Amos Fortune Forum, Jaffrey Center, N.H. Until August 17 at Meeting House. (The forum derives its name from a former runaway slave, who escaped to New Hampshire and became a leading citizen.)

8. Bowling Tournament of the Americas, Miami, Fla. Until July 14.

Mississippi River Festival-Black Opera, Helena, Ark. Until July 17. Part of the Tri-centennial Celebration of the River.

10. Hollywood Bowl Summer Concerts, Hollywood, Calif. Until Sept. 15.

—Frances Shemanski.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
MAR 24 1973
New England Newsclip

A Place in... THE SUN

By Ann Shaw

All the music buffs in the area will be interested to learn that through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar.

The seminar, open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussions and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants need only have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite. Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. Anyone interested in more information should write to the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall in Boston.

BU-Tanglewood program plans auditions in Boston

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college and professional levels to participate in Boston University's summer program at Tanglewood will be held Saturdays, March 31 and April 14, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

Eighth year

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which will run from July 1 through Aug. 26, is in its eighth year. It offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the BU faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

This summer's institute will include applied music instruction, with study and practice in orchestral instruments supplemented by private lessons and master classes; the Young Artists program for high school instrumentalists, private lessons and performances in chamber music groups and with the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra; the choral institute, also for high school students, directed by prize-winning choir director Joseph Huszti; a seminar for choral conductors led by Huszti and Iva Dee Hiatt; and a piano seminar conducted by Bela Boszormenyi-Nagy which surveys the works of Debus Ravel, Bartok and Liszt.

Among those teaching mast classes are Roman Totenbe violinist; George Neikrug, ce ist; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, fl tist; Ralph Gomberg, obois Harold Wright, clarinetist; She man Walt, bassoonist; an Charles Kavaloski, French hor player. The last five, all princ pals with the BSO, have re cently joined the faculty of BU as the Boston University Wood wind Quintet.

In addition to the music programs at Tanglewood, there will be a workshop in stage movement and acting taught by Joseph Gifford, director and choreographer, and Rose Schulman, director, both of the theatre arts faculty at the university. The workshop, conceived for actors, teachers of acting, and teachers of stage movement and dance, will offer daily class study during July.

Advanced painting

A program in advanced painting and drawing, which includes landscape, figure painting, figure composition and still life, will be directed by Gabriel Laderman, a proponent of the new realism in art and recipient of the Tiffany award. Laderman's classes run from July 1 through Aug. 12.

Persons interested in applying should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 02215.

MESSENGER
NORWOOD, MASS.
W. 7,500
MAY 16 1973
New England Newsclip

LOMBARD, ILL.
SPECTATOR
TW. 12,200

Music scholarship available

BOSTON — Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar.

The seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which seminar members will attend.

In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants to the seminar should have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617-266-1492 extension 113.

Scholarshi Seminar A Tanglewoo

Through the generosity o Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities, Boston Symphony Orches summer academy Tanglewood will offer sev scholarships to Massachu residents for its new Liste and Analysis Seminar. Seminar is open to perform students, teachers, and mu laymen, and is intended broaden and deepen the m horizons of participants.

Daily classes will f discussion and analysis on the repertoire of Symphony Orchestra Berkshire Music Center certs and rehearsal Tanglewood, all of Seminar members will a In addition, guest tea drawn from the distingu composers, conductors soloists appearing Tanglewood this summer augment the daily discussions.

Applicants to the Sem should have a ge background in music; how raining at an advanced le not a prequisite.

Scholarships are availa the full eight week sessi or either July or augus more information on the listening and Analysis Se write the Berkshire Center at Symphony Boston 02115, or call (617 1492, Ext. 113.

MAY 4 1973

Tanglewood Auditions At Rosary College

Auditions for Boston University's summer program at Tanglewood, open to high school music students in the 10th, 11th and 12th grades, will be held at Rosary College on Saturday and Sunday, May 5 and 6, in the Fine Arts Building, Room 200, on the River Forest campus.

Robert Lee Tipps, music coordinator of Tanglewood will hold auditions for instrumentalists, to join an eight-week summer program, and singers for a month-long choral program. Both programs are held in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Students in the choral program receive repertoire training, attend classes in diction, solfege, conducting, body movement and madrigal groups, and appea in public performances.

Instrumentalists receive intensive training in orches tral repertoire and in chamber music ensembles as well as private study with facility members of Boston University's Division of Music and with selected members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Students in the program have access to the Berkshire Music Festival, including attendance at performances given by the Boston Symphony and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Students can obtain further information through their high school music departments, or call Sister Rita Simo at Rosary College.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The seminar is intended to broaden and deepen musical horizons of performers, students, teachers and musical laymen. Training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite. For more information write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115 or call 617-266-1492, Ext. 113.

MAY 1973
NEWS TRIBUNE
WALTHAM, MASS.
D. 16,641

The St. ild of Wi mmage s ll also be close th eetings. A e Rev. F plate pries Bolivia, lked abou

ASSABET VALLEY
BEACON
ACTON, MASS.
W. 8,200
MAY 17 1973
New England Newsclip

PORT WATCH
With The Lookout

Tanglewood scholarships

Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The seminar is open to performers, students, teachers and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepe of participants. Da discussion and a repertoire of Bosto and Berkshire Mus rehearsals at Tan seminar member teachers, drawn f composers, condu pearing at Tanglew class discussions.

Applicants to the s general background advanced training is not a prerequis

Scholarships are available for the eight-week session, or for either July August. For more information write

Grants offered at Tanglewood for listening, analysis seminar

BOSTON — Through grants from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents, for its new listening and analysis seminar.

The seminar is open to performer, students, teachers and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature dis on and analysis based on repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Center concerts and re als at Tanglewood, all of seminar members will at In addition, guest teach drawn from the distin ed composers, conductors soloists appearing at Tan ood this summer, will aug the daily class discussions. plicants to the seminar ld have a general back nd in music; however, ning at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight-week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and analysis seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

New England Newsclip
EAGLE TRIBUNE
LAWRENCE, MASS.
D. 48,000
MAY 11 1973
New England Newsclip
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
MAY 12 1973
New England Newsclip

Scholarships for Women Students

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

A number of new scholarships of $350 each are available to young women students of music, residents of Massachusetts, for the college year 1973-1974, from Young Artists Awards.

Beginning next September, these new scholarships will be in addition to those already awarded and subject to renewal by decision of the trustees.

For the seventh year since these awards were instituted in 1950, three fellowships of $500 each will be awarded to young women for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Auditions for the Tanglewood fellowships are being held at Symphony Hall, Boston, and names of the recipients will be announced shortly.

New candidates for the regular awards will be heard by a board of judges June 4 at M. Steinert & Sons Co., 308 Main St., Worcester.

Names of the judges will be announced later.

All auditions are by appointment only. Applications must be postmarked not later than Monday, May 21.

Recipients of these scholarships are to be "such female students of music who are residents of Massachusetts and who are in need of financial assistance, as deemed by the trustees to be the most worthy and deserving of assistance."

This year the trustees have removed age requirements.

Audition forms may be obtained by writing to Raymond Morin, chairman, Young Artists Awards, 45 West Hill Drive, Worcester 01609.

The scholarships are not available for graduate study. All candidates must be enrolled in, or accepted by an accredited institution of music, working for a bachelor degree in music.

Applicants may major in piano, voice, and any instrument of the symphony orchestra; also, organ, music education, sacred music, public school music, and musical therapy.

Present scholarship recipients are Deborah Irvine, Boston University; Diana Raffman, Yale University; Martha Lagoy, New England Conservatory of Music; Joyce Bernet, Bonnie Matterand and Hope Charlestream, Atlantic Union College; Amelia Sachetto and Christine Doud, Hartt College of Music; Cynthia Kuutti, Southern Missionary College; Melissa Howe, Oberlin College; and Susan Smith, Boston Conservatory of Music.

Since 1950, Young Artists Awards has assisted 114 young women with their musical education in 36 musical institutions throughout the country. Scholarships and fellowships have amounted to over $105,000.

HALF OF THE guest soloists for next season's concerts by the Hartford Symphony Orchestra are pianists. It will be the orchestra's 30th anniversary season, and Arthur Winograd's ninth as its conductor.

The pianists are Alicia de Larrocha, Malcolm Frager, Rudolf Firkusny, Leon Fleisher and Andre Watts.

Others are Alfred Wallenstein, guest conductor: Erick Friedman and Kishiko Sazumi, violinists; Leslie Parnas, cellist; and Maureen Forrester, contralto.

THREE YOUNG American composers have received commissions for new works from the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer training institute at Tanglewood. They are awarded in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard University.

They are James Drew, John Heiss and Peter Lieberson. Their commissioned works will be premiered this summer at Tanglewood during the week-long Festival of Contemporary Music, Aug. 4-9.

Drew is on the faculty of Yale University. Heiss teaches at the New England Conservatory, and Lieberson is completing a graduate degree at Columbia University.

MANY NEW NAMES appear on the Boston Symphony's roster for next season's concerts, beginning in September in Symphony Hall.

Guest conductors will be William Steinberg, Rafael Kubelik, Okko Kamu and Carlo Maria Giulini.

Guest soloists include pianists Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Maurizio Pollini and Michael Roll; violinists David Oistrakh, Jerome Rosen, Joseph Silverstein and Henryk Szeryng; singers Heather Harper, Rene Kollo, Edith Mathis, Donald McIntyre, Jessye Norman, Thomas Paul, New England Conservatory Chorus, and Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

One of the highlights will be a visit by Sir Michael Tippett to hear the American premiere of his Symphony No. 3, with Miss Harper as soloist.

MERRIMACK VALLEY
ADVERTISER
TEWKSBURY, MASS
W. 24,000
MAY 16 1973
New England Newsclip
TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
S. 106,767
MAY 6 1973
New England Newsclip

Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Mass residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music, however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and analysis seminar write the Berkshire Music center at Symphony hall, Boston 02115, or call 6-7-266-1492. extension 113.

EAGLE
WESTFORD, MASS
W. 2,200
MAY 17 1973

Scholarships Available to Residents For Tanglewoo

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS — Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617-266-1492 extension 113.

Scholarships Available For Tanglewood Seminar

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS — Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new may be made by calling Howard Vosburgh, 235-6513, who will arrange for pickup.

—0—

Formal kindergarten registration at the Williams School, 141 Grove St., Auburndale, for 1973-74 will take place on Tuesday afternoon from 1 to 3 o'clock in the kindergarten room. Parent should bring the child's birth certificate and record of immunization dates.

listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617-266-1492 extension 113.

HERALD
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
D. 18,643
MAR 21 1973
New England Newsclip

Summer Study Offered at Tanglewood

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college, and professional level ticipate in Boston Universi ty's summer programs at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Massachusetts, will be held on Saturday, March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which runs from July 1 through August 26, 1973, is now in its eighth year. It offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the Boston University music faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

Persons interested in applying for these programs should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 02215 for further information.

EAGLE TRIBUNE
LAWRENCE, MASS.
D. 48,000
MAY 10 1973
New England Newscli

Scholarships Offered for Tanglewood

BOSTON — Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachuset residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617 - 266-1492 extension 113.

PATRIOT LEDG
QUINCY, MASS
MAY 23 1973
New England Newscli

For Aspirants Only

The Proposition improvisational revue will hold an open audition in the Inman Square Theater, 241 Hampshire St., Cambridge on Friday, at 10 a.m. Actors and actresses who can improvise and sing will be considered for membership in the ensemble. Interested parties should bring a resume, a picture, and one prepared song. The Proposition will provide piano accompaniment.

Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood is offering several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The seminar is open to performers, students, teachers and musical laymen, and the classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of the orchestra at rehearsals and concerts, all of which seminar members will attend. Guest teachers, composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood will be present at the discussions. Applicants to the seminar should have a general background in music.

Registration is open for June classes at the Institute for Contemporary Dance in Brookline. Day and evening classes at all levels will be held in modern, jazz, blues, improvisation, Afro-American, Afro-Cuban and rhythm for dances. Morning courses will be held five times a week and evening classes twice a week. Information is available from the Institute at Post Office Box 616, Brookline Village.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
MAR 24 1973
New England Newsclip

A Place in... THE SUN

By Ann Shaw

All the music buffs in the area will be interested to learn that through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar.

The seminar, open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussions and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants need only have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite. Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. Anyone interested in more information should write to the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall in Boston.

BU-Tanglewood program plans auditions in Boston

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college and professional levels to participate in Boston University's summer program at Tanglewood will be held Saturdays, March 31 and April 14, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

Eighth year

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which will run from July 1 through Aug. 26, is in its eighth year. It offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the BU faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

This summer's institute will include applied music instruction, with study and practice in orchestral instruments supplemented by private lessons and master classes; the Young Artists program for high school instrumentalists, private lessons and performances in chamber music groups and with the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra; the choral institute, also for high school students, directed by prize-winning choir director Joseph Huszti; a seminar for choral conductors led by Huszti and Iva Dee Hiatt; and a piano seminar conducted by Bela Boszormenyi-Nagy which surveys the works of Debus Ravel, Bartok and Liszt.

Among those teaching mas classes are Roman Totenbe violinist; George Neikrug, ce ist; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, fl tist; Ralph Gomberg, obois Harold Wright, clarinetist; She man Walt, bassoonist; an Charles Kavaloski, French hor player. The last five, all princ pals with the BSO, have re cently joined the faculty of BU as the Boston University Wood wind Quintet.

In addition to the music programs at Tanglewood, there will be a workshop in stage movement and acting taught by Joseph Gifford, director and choreographer, and Rose Schulman, director, both of the theatre arts faculty at the university. The workshop, conceived for actors, teachers of acting, and teachers of stage movement and dance, will offer daily class study during July.

Advanced painting

A program in advanced painting and drawing, which includes landscape, figure painting, figure composition and still life, will be directed by Gabriel Laderman, a proponent of the new realism in art and recipient of the Tiffany award. Laderman's classes run from July 1 through Aug. 12.

Persons interested in applying should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 02215.

MESSENGER
NORWOOD, MASS.
W. 7,500
MAY 16 1973

LOMBARD, ILL.
SPECTATOR
TW. 12,200

Music scholarship available

BOSTON — Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar.

The seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which seminar members will attend.

In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants to the seminar should have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617-266-1492 extension 113.

Scholarshi
Seminar A
Tanglewoo

MAY 4 1973

Through the generosity o Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities, Boston Symphony Orches summer academy Tanglewood will offer sev scholarships to Massac residents for its new Liste and Analysis Seminar. Seminar is open to perform students, teachers, and mu laymen, and is intended broaden and deepen the m horizons of participants.

Daily classes will f discussion and analysis on the repertoire of Symphony Orchestra Berkshire Music Center certs and rehearsal Tanglewood, all of Seminar members will a In addition, guest tea drawn from the distingu composers, conductors soloists appearing Tanglewood this summer augment the daily discussions.

Applicants to the Ser should have a ge background in music; how raining at an advanced le not a prequisite.

Scholarships are availa he full eight week sessi or either July or augus more information on the listening and Analysis Se write the Berkshire Center at Symphony Boston 02115, or call (617 1492, Ext. 113.

Tanglewood Auditions At Rosary College

Auditions for Boston University's summer program at Tanglewood, open to high school music students in the 10th, 11th and 12th grades, will be held at Rosary College on Saturday and Sunday, May 5 and 6, in the Fine Arts Building, Room 200, on the River Forest campus.

Robert Lee Tipps, music coordinator of Tanglewood will hold auditions for instrumentalists, to join an eight-week summer program, and singers for a month-long choral program. Both programs are held in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Students in the choral program receive repertoire training, attend classes in diction, solfege, conducting, body movement and madrigal groups, and appear in public performances.

Instrumentalists receive intensive training in orchestral repertoire and in chamber music ensembles as well as private study with facility members of Boston University's Division of Music and with selected members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Students in the program have access to the Berkshire Music Festival, including attendance at performances given by the Boston Symphony and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Students can obtain further information through their high school music departments, or call Sister Rita Simo at Rosary College.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The seminar is intended to broaden and deepen musical horizons of performers, students, teachers and musical laymen. Training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite. For more information write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115 or call 617-266-1492, Ext. 113.

MAY 4 1973
NEWS TRIBUNE
WALTHAM, MASS.
D. 16,641

The St. ild of Wi mmage S ll also be close th eetings. A e Rev. F plate pries Bolivia, lked abou

New England Newsclip

PORT WATCH
With The Lookout

Tanglewood scholarships

Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The seminar is open to performers, students, teachers and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deep of participants. Da discussion and a repertoire of Bosto and Berkshire Mus rehearsals at Tan seminar member teachers, drawn f composers, condu pearing at Tanglew class discussions.

Applicants to the s general background advanced training is not a prerequis

Scholarships are available for the eight-week session, or for either July August. For more information, write

EAGLE TRIBUNE
LAWRENCE, MASS
D. 18,000

MAY 11 1973
New England Newsclip

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS

Grants offered at Tanglewood for listening, analysis seminar

BOSTON — Through grants from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents, for its new listening and analysis seminar.

The seminar is open to performer, students, teachers and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature dis on and analysis based on repertoire of Boston Sympho- Orchestra and Berkshire Center concerts and re- als at Tanglewood, all of seminar members will at- In addition, guest teach- drawn from the distin- ed composers, conductors soloists appearing at Tan- ood this summer, will aug- the daily class discussions. plicants to the seminar ld have a general back- nd in music; however, ning at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight-week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and analysis seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

Scholarships for Women Students

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

A number of new scholarships of $350 each are available to young women students of music, residents of Massachusetts, for the college year 1973-1974, from Young Artists Awards.

Beginning next September, these new scholarships will be in addition to those already awarded and subject to renewal by decision of the trustees.

For the seventh year since these awards were instituted in 1950, three fellowships of $500 each will be awarded to young women for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Auditions for the Tanglewood fellowships are being held at Symphony Hall, Boston, and names of the recipients will be announced shortly.

New candidates for the regular awards will be heard by a board of judges June 4 at M. Steinert & Sons Co., 308 Main St., Worcester.

Names of the judges will be announced later.

All auditions are by appointment only. Applications must be postmarked not later than Monday, May 21.

Recipients of these scholarships are to be "such female students of music who are residents of Massachusetts and who are in need of financial assistance, as deemed by the trustees to be the most worthy and deserving of assistance."

This year the trustees have removed age requirements.

Audition forms may be obtained by writing to Raymond Morin, chairman, Young Artists Awards, 45 West Hill Drive, Worcester 01609.

The scholarships are not available for graduate study. All candidates must be enrolled in, or accepted by an accredited institution of music, working for a bachelor degree in music.

Applicants may major in piano, voice, and any instrument of the symphony orchestra; also, organ, music education, sacred music, public school music, and musical therapy.

Present scholarship recipients are Deborah Irvine, Boston University; Diana Raffman, Yale University; Martha Lagoy, New England Conservatory of Music; Joyce Bernet, Bonnie Matterand and Hope Charlestream, Atlantic Union College; Amelia Sachetto and Christine Doud, Hartt College of Music; Cynthia Kuutti, Southern Missionary College; Melissa Howe, Oberlin College; and Susan Smith, Boston Conservatory of Music.

Since 1950, Young Artists Awards has assisted 114 young women with their musical education in 36 musical institutions throughout the country. Scholarships and fellowships have amounted to over $105,000.

HALF OF THE guest soloists for next season's concerts by the Hartford Symphony Orchestra are pianists. It will be the orchestra's 30th anniversary season, and Arthur Winograd's ninth as its conductor.

The pianists are Alicia de Larrocha, Malcolm Frager, Rudolf Firkusny, Leon Fleisher and Andre Watts.

Others are Alfred Wallenstein, guest conductor; Erick Friedman and Kishiko Sazumi, violinists; Leslie Parnas, cellist; and Maureen Forrester, contralto.

THREE YOUNG American composers have received commissions for new works from the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer training institute at Tanglewood. They are awarded in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard University.

They are James Drew, John Heiss and Peter Lieberson. Their commissioned works will be premiered this summer at Tanglewood during the week-long Festival of Contemporary Music, Aug. 4-9.

Drew is on the faculty of Yale University. Heiss teaches at the New England Conservatory, and Lieberson is completing a graduate degree at Columbia University.

MANY NEW NAMES appear on the Boston Symphony's roster for next season's concerts, beginning in September in Symphony Hall.

Guest conductors will be William Steinberg, Rafael Kubelik, Okko Kamu and Carlo Maria Giulini.

Guest soloists include pianists Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Maurizio Pollini and Michael Roll; violinists David Oistrakh, Jerome Rosen, Joseph Silverstein and Henryk Szeryng; singers Heather Harper, Renee Kollo, Edith Mathis, Donald McIntyre, Jessye Norman, Thomas Paul, New England Conservatory Chorus, and Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

One of the highlights will be a visit by Sir Michael Tippett to hear the American premiere of his Symphony No. 3, with Miss Harper as soloist.

MERRIMACK VALLEY
ADVERTISER
TEWKSBURY, MASS
W. 24,000
MAY 16 1973

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
S. 106,767
MAY 6 1973
New England Newsclip

Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Mass residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music, however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and analysis seminar write the Berkshire Music center at Symphony hall, Boston 02115, or call 6-7-266-1492. extension 113.

Scholarships Available to Residents For Tanglewoo

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS -- Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers students, teachers, and musica laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musica horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617-266-1492 extension 113.

Scholarships Available For Tanglewood Seminar

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS -- Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new may be made by calling Howard Vosburgh, 235-6513, who will arrange for pickup.

--0--

Formal kindergarten registration at the Williams School, 141 Grove St., Auburndale, for 1973-74 will take place on Tuesday afternoon from 1 to 3 o'clock in the kindergarten room. Parent should bring the child's birth certificate and record of immunization dates.

listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall Boston 02115, or call 617-266-1492 extension 113.

HERALD
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
D. 18,643
MAR 21 1973
New England Newsclip

Summer Study Offered at Tanglewood

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college, and professional level participate in Boston University's summer programs at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Massachusetts, will be held on Saturday, March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which runs from July 1 through August 26, 1973, is now in its eighth year. It offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the Boston University music faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

Persons interested in applying for these programs should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 02215 for further information.

TIMES
WOBURN, MASS
D. 10,500
MAY 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Scholarships Offered for Tanglewood

BOSTON — Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617 - 266-1492 extension 113.

For Aspirants Only

The Proposition improvisational revue will hold an open audition in the Inman Square Theater, 241 Hampshire St., Cambridge on Friday, at 10 a.m. Actors and actresses who can improvise and sing will be considered for membership in the ensemble. Interested parties should bring a resume, a picture, and one prepared song. The Proposition will provide piano accompaniment.

Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood is offering several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The seminar is open to performers, students, teachers and musical laymen, and the classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of the orchestra at rehearsals and concerts, all of which seminar members will attend. Guest teachers, composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood will be present at the discussions. Applicants to the seminar should have a general background in music.

Registration is open for June classes at the Institute for Contemporary Dance in Brookline. Day and evening classes at all levels will be held in modern, jazz, blues, improvisation, Afro-American, Afro-Cuban and rhythm for dances. Morning courses will be held five times a week and evening classes twice a week. Information is available from the Institute at Post Office Box 616, Brookline Village.

Events Announced for Jacob's Pillow

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Programs for the 1973 Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival are announced by Walter Terry, acting director, for nine weeks from July 1 through Sept. 1.

The 1972 festival was directed by John Christian who served for many years as Jacob's Pillow associate director under the late Ted Shawn, founder of the internationally known dance festival and school at Lee. Shawn died in January, 1972.

During Shawn's regime, Terry was associated with Jacob's Pillow as critic and lecturer.

Terry became dance critic for the New York Herald Tribune in 1939 and remained with the paper (later World-Journal-Tribune) until 1967.

He then began five years of dance reviews for Saturday Review, and on Jan. 1 of this year became dance critic of World Magazine.

For opening week, July 3-7, Margot Fonteyn will appear with a partner to be announced, as will Rosario Galan and her Ballet Espanol featuring her twin sister, Esperanza Galan.

Balance of the season:

July 10-14 — The Hartford Ballet, headed by Lisa Bradley and Michael Utkoff.

July 17-21 — Twyla Tharp, Sara Rudner, Rose Marie Wright, Isabel Garcia-Lorca, Kenneth Rinker and Nine Wiener will appear with the Ballet Trio, directed by Thomas Andrew.

July 24-28 — Dancers of the National Ballet of Washington, D.C. will present "The Story of Cinderella," especially staged for Jacob's Pillow by Ben Stevenson.

July 31-Aug. 4 — An all pas de deux program. Melissa Hayden will be partnered by Peter Martins. Jacqueline Rayet of the Paris Opera Ballet will make her American debut with a partner to be announced. Roni Mahler will dance with Paul Russell, and Jane Kosminsky and Bruce Becker will represent modern dance.

Aug. 7-11 — Carmen De Lavaladde and Company will perform a program including John Butler's "Chanson de Bilitis" and Gogol's "The Overcoat."

Aug. 14-18 — Marcia Haydee and Richard Gragun will share a program with the Cincinnati Ballet which will dance Lester Horton's "Salome."

Aug. 21-25 — Cynthia Gregory and Terry Orr will head a group of American Ballet Theater dancers.

Aug. 28-Sept. 1 — Eleanor D'Antuono and Ivan Nagy in pas de deux, and The Harkness Ballet.

Opening night performance (July 3) will be at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Friday and Saturday will be 8:40 p.m.; Thursday and Saturday matinees, 3 p.m. There will be no performances on Thursday evenings.

For subscription and single ticket information write to Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, Box 287, Lee, Mass. 01238.

WORCESTER Ballet Society will present the Boston Ballet Company in Delibes' "Coppelia," at 2 p.m. Nov. 18 in the Auditorium.

ASSOCIATE ARTISTS Opera Company of New England has solved its housing problem for at least the next season.

The Boston Center for the Arts has agreed to the opera acquired National Theater, 535 Tremont St., with Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte" scheduled for Nov. 16 and 18.

During the past season, the opera company has staged its production in the Cyclorama. The Mozart opera was scheduled to be given last month but was postponed for lack of funds.

National Theater will result from renovations and modifications to the old vaudeville house. It is expected that work will be completed by fall.

Associated Artists Opera will present a special production of Menotti's "Amahl and the Night Visitors" in the new theater on Dec. 17. Dates and operas to be performed in February and April will be announced in the near future.

WITH THE COOPERATION of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony's summer academy at Tanglewood, Berkshire Music Center, will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar.

Applicants should have a general background in music. However, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

For more information, contact the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 266-1492, extension 113.

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
S. 106,767
MAY 27 1973
New England Newsclip

ITEM
CLINTON, MASS.
D. 4,150
MAR 22 1973
New England Newsclip

NEWS
GOFFSTOWN, N.H.
W. 6,500
MAR 29 1973
New England Newsclip

Seminar Scholarships

Throught the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguised composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions. Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music; however,

continued on page 14

JOURNAL
CONCORD, MASS.
W. 6,500
JUN 28 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Star

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist André Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 981,661 SUN. 1,162,910
MAR 11 1973

★

Saturday morning, pianist Watts, recently named artist-in-residence the Berkshire Music Center (Tanglewood) in Lenox, Mass., for the summ of 1973, holds auditions for places in Tanglewood seminars. The auditi will be heard in the Baldwin Studi 3273 Wilshire Blvd. beginning at 10 a.m. on a first-come, first-heard basis. Auditionees should be prepared to play (1) a work of Bach, Scarlatti, Haydn or Handel, (2) a complete sonata of Beethoven, (3) a work from the Romantic period, and (4) a contemporary work.

SEMINAR SCHOLARSHIPS

continued from page 1

training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617-266-1492 extension 113.

SUNDAY SUN
LAWRENCE, MASS.
S. 9,007
MAY 13 1973

NEWS
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
W. 1,289
MAR 22 1973

Auditions set for B.U. program at Tanglewood

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college, and professional level to participate in Boston University's summer programs at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., will be held on Saturday, March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which runs from July 1 through August 26, 1973, is now in its eighth year. It offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the Boston University music faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~in-residence~~ at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

This summer's Institute programs will include Applied Music Instruction: study and practice in orchestral instruments supplemented by private lessons and master classes; the Young Artists Program for high school instrumentalists: private lessons and performances in chambee music groups and with the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra; the Choral Institute, also for high school students, directed by prizewinning choir director Joseph Huszti; a Seminar for Choral Conductors led by Mr. Huszti and Iva Dee Hiatt; and a Piano Seminar conducted by Bela Boszormenyi-Nagy which surveys the works of Debussy, Ravel, Bartok and Liszt.

In addition to the music programs at Tanglewood, there will be a Work-shop in Stage Movement and Acting taught by Joseph Gifford, director and choreographer, and Rose Schulman, director, both of the theater arts faculty at Boston University. The workshop, conceived for actors, teachers of acting, and teachers of stage movement and dance, will offer daily class study during the month of July.

A program in Advanced Painting and Drawing, which includes landscape, figure painting, figure composition, and still life, will be directed by Gabriel Laderman, a proponent of the new Realism in art, and recipient of the Tiffany Award. Mr. Laderman's classes run from July 1 through August 12.

Persons interested in applying for these programs should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 02215 for further information.

MAY 11 1973
New England Newsclip

Scholarships For Tanglewood Seminar

Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

The Des Moines Register
DES MOINES, IOWA
D. 246,841 SUN. 514,496
MAR 18 1973

Iowa pianists wishing to attend the Berkshire Music Center in July and August may have the opportunity to do so.

Piano virtuoso Andre Watts, who will be artist-in-residence at the Music Center for two three-week seminars from July 8 through 28 and from July 29 through Aug. 18, is holding auditions in Ames Mar. 28.

The Berkshire seminars are for advanced piano students with enrollment in each seminar limited to 20 pianists selected by Watts.

Watts is in Iowa to perform with the London Symphony Mar. 29 in the opening concert of a festival week on the campus of Iowa State University which runs through Apr. 2.

The Berkshire Music Center is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's advanced training center for young musicians near the famed Berkshire estate (Tanglewood) in Lenox, Mass.

Tuition for each seminar will be $250 and a limited number of scholarships will be provided through the Berkshire Music Center.

Audition points besides Ames are New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, San Antonio, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Toronto.

In Ames, the auditions begin at 10 a.m. in McKay Auditorium on the ISU campus and will be held on a first-come, first-heard basis.

Participants should be prepared to play a work by Bach, Scarlatti, Haydn or Handel, a work from the romantic repertory and a contemporary work.

Additional information may be obtained by writing the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115, or by telephoning 266-1492 in Boston (area code 617).

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
MAR 24 1973
New England Newsclip

ITEM
WAKEFIELD, MASS.

Following reports from committee chairmen, Mrs. Ferdinand Gianfranchi read a comprehensive report for the Service Committee to Crittenton Hastings House giving an itemized account of developments in the past year. The need still exists in 1973 to counsel and provide help for girls with problem pregnancies. Broadened social services will meet the needs of the 30 girls now in residence as well as those on a day care basis.

Mrs. John Bethel presented a gift of appreciation from the board and members to the retiring president, Mrs. Cornelius Dwyer. Mrs. Ferdinand Gianfranchi honored Mrs. Edward Lynch - also retiring - for her long and conscientious service as corresponding secretary to the Wakefield Circle with a gift.

Arrangements for the meeting and luncheon were made by Mrs. Dwight Steffen.

The Boston Globe
(EVENING)
MAR 31 1973

BU sponsors Tanglewood auditions

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college, and professional level to participate in Boston University's summer programs at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Massachusetts, will be held on Saturday, March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which runs from July 1 through August 26, 1973, is now in its eighth year. If offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the Boston University music faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

This summer's Institute programs will include Applied Misic Instruction: study and practice in orchestral instruments supplemented by private lessons and master classes; the Young Artists Program for high school instrumentalists: private lessons and performances in chamber

Artists Symphony Orchestra; the Choral Institute, also for high school students directed by prizewinning choir director Joseph Huszti; a Seminar for Choral Conductors led by Mr. Huszti and Iva Dee Hiatt; and a Seminar conducted b Boszormenyi-Nagy whic

veys the works of Ravel, Bartok and Liszt

Teachers

Among those teaching classes are Roman To violinist; George N

SUN-CHRONICLE
ATTLEBORO, MASS.
D. 18,500
MAY 30 1973
New England Newsclip

will be a Workshop in Stage Movement and Acting. The workshop, conceived for actors, teachers of acting, and teachers of stage movement and dance, will offer daily class study during the month of July.

A program in Advanced Painting and Drawing, which includes landscape, figure painting, figure composition, and still life, will run from July 1 through Aug. 12.

Persons interested in applying for these programs should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth ave, Boston 02215 for further information.

LISTENING ANALYSIS SEMINAR

Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities is offerin several scholarships to residents of the state for a new Liteni and Analyis Seminar to take place this summer during th Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Applicants to the seminar should have a general music background, though advanced training is not required. Dai classes for the eight-week period, or for either July or Augus will concentrate on the festival's repertory as played on BS and Berkshire Music Center programs, and will be conducte by musicians involved in Tanglewood concerts.

ITEM
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
D.
MAR 2[illegible] 1973
New England Newsclip

Auditions for Outstanding Musicians

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college, and professional level to participate in Boston University's summer programs at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., will be held on Saturday, March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth ave, Boston.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which runs from July 1 through Aug. 26, is now in its eighth year. It offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the Boston University music faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

This summer's Institute programs will include Applied Music Instruction: study and practice in orchestral instruments supplemented by private lessons and master classes; the Young Artists Program for high school instrumentalists: private lessons and performances in chamber music groups and with the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra; the Choral Institute, also for high school students, a Seminar for Choral Conductors, and a Piano Seminar.

In addition to the music programs at Tanglewood, there will be a Work-shop in Stage Movement and Acting taught by Joseph Gifford, director and choreographer, and Rose Schulman, director, both of the theater arts faculty at Boston University. The workshop, conceived for actors, teachers of acting, and teachers of stage movement and dance, will offer daily class study during the month of July.

A program in Advanced Painting and Drawing, which includes landscape, figure painting, figure composition, and still life, will be directed by Gabriel Laderman, a proponent of the new Realism in art, and recipient of the Tiffany Award. Mr. Laderman's classes run from July 1 through August 12.

Persons interested in applying for these programs should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 02215 for further information.

Tanglewood Auditions Scheduled

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college, and professional level to participate in Boston University's summer programs at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., ~~will be~~ held on Saturday, March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which runs from July 1 through August 26, 1973, is now in its eight year. It offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the Boston University music faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

This summer's Institute programs will include Applied Music Instruction: study and practice in orchestral instruments supplemented by private lessons and master classes; the Young Artists Program for high school instrumentalists: private lessons and performances in chamber music groups and with the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra; the Choral Institute, also for high school students, directed by prizewinning choir director Joseph Huszti; a Seminar for Choral Conductors led by Mr. Huszti and Iva Dee Hiatt; and a Piano Seminar conducted by Bela Boszormenyi-Nagy which surveys the works of Debussy, Ravel, Bartok and Liszt.

Among those teaching master classes are Roman Totenberg, vilinist; George Neikrug, cellist; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist; Ralph Gomberg, oboist; Harold Wright, clarinetist; Sherman Walt, bassoonist; and Charles Kavaloski, French horn player. The last five, all principals with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have recently joined the faculty of Boston University as the Boston University Woodwind Quintet.

In addition to the music programs at Tanglewood, there will be a Workshop in Stage Movement and Acting taught by Joseph Gifford, director and choreographer, and Rose Schulman, director, both of the theater arts faculty at Boston University. The workshop, conceived for actors, teachers of acting, and teachers of stage movement and dance, will offer daily class study during the month of July.

A program in Advanced Painting and Drawing, which includes landscape, figure painting, figure composition, and still life, will be diirected by Gabriel Laderman, a proponent of the new Realism in art, and recipient of the Tiffany Award. Mr. Laderman's classes run from July 1 through August 12.

Persons interested in applying for these programs should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 02215 for further information.

Scholarsh ps Available For Tanglewood Seminar

BOSTON — Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar.

The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617 266-1492 extension 113.

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
S. 117,499
MAY 27 1973

Auditions set for Tanglewood

Auditions for musicians at the high school, college, and professional levels to particiapte in Boston university's summer program at Tanglewood in Lenox will be held March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth av., Boston.

BU's Tanglewood Institute, which runs July 1-Aug. 26, offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist-instructors from the university's music faculty, and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. Academic credit is available for those who qualify.

Events Announced for Jacob's Pillow

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Programs for the 1973 Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival are announced by Walter Terry, acting director, for nine weeks from July 1 through Sept. 1.

The 1972 festival was directed by John Christian who served for many years as Jacob's Pillow associate director under the late Ted Shawn, founder of the internationally known dance festival and school at Lee. Shawn died in January, 1972.

During Shawn's regime, Terry was associated with Jacob's Pillow as critic and lecturer.

Terry became dance critic for the New York Herald Tribune in 1939 and remained with the paper (later World-Journal-Tribune) until 1967.

He then began five years of dance reviews for Saturday Review, and on Jan. 1 of this year became dance critic of World Magazine.

For opening week, July 3-7, Margot Fonteyn will appear with a partner to be announced, as will Rosario Galan and her Ballet Espanol featuring her twin sister, Esperanza Galan.

Balance of the season:

July 10-14 — The Hartford Ballet, headed by Lisa Bradley and Michael Utkoff.

July 17-21 — Twyla Tharp, Sara Rudner, Rose Marie Wright, Isabel Garcia-Lorca, Kenneth Rinker and Nine Wiener will appear with the Ballet Trio, directed by Thomas Andrew.

July 24-28 — Dancers of the National Ballet of Washington, D.C. will present "The Story of Cinderella," especially staged for Jacob's Pillow by Ben Stevenson.

July 31-Aug. 4 — An all pas de deux program. Melissa Hayden will be partnered by Peter Martins. Jacqueline Rayet of the Paris Opera Ballet will make her American debut with a partner to be announced. Roni Mahler will dance with Paul Russell, and Jane Kosminsky and Bruce Becker will represent modern dance.

Aug. 7-11 — Carmen De Lavaladde and Company will perform a program including John Butler's "Chanson de Bilitis" and Gogol's "The Overcoat."

Aug. 14-18 — Marcia Haydee and Richard Gragun will share a program with the Cincinnati Ballet which will dance Lester Horton's "Salome."

Aug. 21-25 — Cynthia Gregory and Terry Orr will head a group of American Ballet Theater dancers.

Aug. 28-Sept. 1 — Eleanor D'Antuono and Ivan Nagy in pas de deux, and The Harkness Ballet.

Opening night performance (July 3) will be at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Friday and Saturday will be 8:40 p.m.; Thursday and Saturday matinees, 3 p.m. There will be no performances on Thursday evenings.

For subscription and single ticket information write to Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, Box 287, Lee, Mass. 01238.

WORCESTER Ballet Society will present the Boston Ballet Company in Delibes' "Coppelia," at 2 p.m. Nov. 18 in the Auditorium.

ASSOCIATE ARTISTS Opera Company of New England has solved its housing problem for at least the next season.

The Boston Center for the Arts has agreed to the opera acquired National Theater, 535 Tremont St., with Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte" scheduled for Nov. 16 and 18.

During the past season, the opera company has staged its production in the Cyclorama. The Mozart opera was scheduled to be given last month but was postponed for lack of funds.

National Theater will result from renovations and modifications to the old vaudeville house. It is expected that work will be completed by fall.

Associated Artists Opera will present a special production of Menotti's "Amahl and the Night Visitors" in the new theater on Dec. 17. Dates and operas to be performed in February and April will be announced in the near future.

WITH THE COOPERATION of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony's summer academy at Tanglewood, Berkshire Music Center, will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar.

Applicants should have a general background in music. However, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

For more information, contact the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 266-1492, extension 113.

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
S. 106,767
MAY 27 1973
New England Newslip

ITEM
CLINTON, MASS.
D. 4,150
MAR 22 1973
New England Newslip

NEWS
GOFFSTOWN, N.H.
W. 6,500
MAR 29 1973
New England Newslip

Seminar Scholarships

Throught the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguised composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions. Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music; however,

continued on page 14

JOURNAL
CONCORD, MASS.
W. 6,500
JUN 28 1973
New England Newslip

Los Angeles Times
D. 981,661 SUN. 1,160,319
MAR 11 1973

★

Saturday morning, pianist Watts, recently named artist-in-residence the Berkshire Music Center (Tang wood) in Lenox, Mass., for the summ of 1973, holds auditions for places in Tanglewood seminars. The auditi will be heard in the Baldwin Studi 3273 Wilshire Blvd. beginning at 10 a.m. on a first-come, first-heard basis. Auditionees should be prepared to play (1) a work of Bach, Scarlatti, Haydn or Handel, (2) a complete sonata of Beethoven, (3) a work from the Romantic period, (4) a contemporary work.

SEMINAR SCHOLARSHIPS

continued from page 1

training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617-266-1492 extension 113.

SUNDAY SUN

Tanglewood Star

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist André Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

NEWS
WILLIMANTIC, MASS.
D. 1,250
MAR 22 1973

Scholarships For Tanglewood Seminar

Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar. The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen, and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

The Des Moines Register
DES MOINES, IOWA
D. 246,841 SUN. 514,496
MAR 18 1973

Iowa pianists wishing to attend the Berkshire Music Center in July and August may have the opportunity to do so.

Piano virtuoso Andre Watts, who will be artist-in-residence at the Music Center for two three-week seminars from July 8 through 28 and from July 29 through Aug. 18, is holding auditions in Ames Mar. 28.

The Berkshire seminars are for advanced piano students with enrollment in each seminar limited to 20 pianists selected by Watts.

Watts is in Iowa to perform with the London Symphony Mar. 29 in the opening concert of a festival week on the campus of Iowa State University which runs through Apr. 2.

The Berkshire Music Center is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's advanced training center for young musicians near the famed Berkshire estate (Tanglewood) in Lenox, Mass.

Tuition for each seminar will be $250 and a limited number of scholarships will be provided through the Berkshire Music Center.

Audition points besides Ames are New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, San Antonio, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Toronto.

In Ames, the auditions begin at 10 a.m. in McKay Auditorium on the ISU campus and will be held on a first-come, first-heard basis.

Participants should be prepared to play a work by Bach, Scarlatti, Haydn or Handel, a work from the romantic repertory and a contemporary work.

Additional information may be obtained by writing the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115, or by telephoning 266-1492 in Boston (area code 617).

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS
D. 30,430
JUN 24 1973
New England Newslip

Following reports from committee chairmen, Mrs. Ferdinand Gianfranchi read a comprehensive report for the Service Committee to Crittenton Hastings House giving an itemized account of developments in the past year. The need still exists in 1973 to counsel and provide help for girls with problem pregnancies. Broadened social services will meet the needs of the 30 girls now in residence as well as those on a day care basis.

Mrs. John Bethel presented a gift of appreciation from the board and members to the retiring president, Mrs. Cornelius Dwyer. Mrs. Ferdinand Gianfranchi honored Mrs. Edward Lynch - also retiring - for her long and conscientious service as corresponding secretary to the Wakefield Circle with a gift.

Arrangements for the meeting and luncheon were made by Mrs. Dwight Steffen.

Auditions set for B.U. program at Tanglewood

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college, and professional level to participate in Boston University's summer programs at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., will be held on Saturday, March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which runs from July 1 through August 26, 1973, is now in its eighth year. It offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the Boston University music faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

This summer's Institute programs will include Applied Music Instruction: study and practice in orchestral instruments supplemented by private lessons and master classes; the Young Artists Program for high school instrumentalists: private lessons and performances in chamber music groups and with the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra; the Choral Institute, also for high school students, directed by prize-winning choir director Joseph Huszti; a Seminar for Choral Conductors led by Mr. Huszti and Iva Dee Hiatt; and a Piano Seminar conducted by Bela Boszormenyi-Nagy which surveys the works of Debussy, Ravel, Bartok and Liszt.

In addition to the music programs at Tanglewood, there will be a Work-shop in Stage Movement and Acting taught by Joseph Gifford, director and choreographer, and Rose Schulman, director, both of the theater arts faculty at Boston University. The workshop, conceived for actors, teachers of acting, and teachers of stage movement and dance, will offer daily class study during the month of July.

A program in Advanced Painting and Drawing, which includes landscape, figure painting, figure composition, and still life, will be directed by Gabriel Laderman, a proponent of the new Realism in art, and recipient of the Tiffany Award. Mr. Laderman's classes run from July 1 through August 12.

Persons interested in applying for these programs should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 02215 for further information.

BU sponsors Tanglewood auditions

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college, and professional level to participate in Boston University's summer programs at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Massachusetts, will be held on Saturday, March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which runs from July 1 through August 26, 1973, is now in its eighth year. If offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the Boston University music faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

This summer's Institute programs will include Applied Misic Instruction: study and practice in orchestral instruments supplemented by private lessons and master classes; the Young Artists Program for high school instrumentalists: private lessons and performances in chamber

SUN-CHRONICLE
ATTLEBORO, MASS.
MAY 6 1973

Artists Symphony Orchestra, the Choral Institute, also for high school students directed by prize-winning choir director Joseph Huszti; a Seminar for Choral Conductors led by Mr. Huszti and Iva Dee Hiatt; and a Seminar conducted by Boszormenyi-Nagy whic

veys the works of Ravel, Bartok and Liszt

Teachers

Among those teaching classes are Roman To violinist: George N

will be a Workshop in Stage Movement and Acting. The workshop, conceived for actors, teachers of acting, and teachers of stage movement and dance, will offer daily class study during the month of July.

A program in Advanced Painting and Drawing, which includes landscape, figure painting, figure composition, and still life, will run from July 1 through Aug. 12.

Persons interested in applying for these programs should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth ave, Boston 02215 for further information.

LISTENING ANALYSIS SEMINAR

Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities is offerin several scholarships to residents of the state for a new Listenin and Analyis Seminar to take place this summer during th Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Applicants to the seminar would have a general music background, though advanced training is not required. Dai classes for the eight-week period, or for either July or Augus will concentrate on the festival's repertory as played on BS and Berkshire Music Center programs, and will be conducte by musicians involved in Tanglewood concerts.

Auditions for Outstanding Musicians

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college, and professional level to participate in Boston University's summer programs at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., will be held on Saturday, March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth ave, Boston.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which runs from July 1 through Aug 26, is now in its eighth year. It offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the Boston University music faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

This summer's Institute programs will include Applied Music Instruction: study and practice in orchestral instruments supplemented by private lessons and master classes; the Young Artists Program for high school instrumentalists: private lessons and performances in chamber music groups and with the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra; the Choral Institute, also for high school students, a Seminar for Choral Conductors, and a Piano Seminar.

In addition to the music programs at Tanglewood, there will be a Work-shop in Stage Movement and Acting taught by Joseph Gifford, director and choreographer, and Rose Schulman, director, both of the theater arts faculty at Boston University. The workshop, conceived for actors, teachers of acting, and teachers of stage movement and dance, will offer daily class study during the month of July.

A program in Advanced Painting and Drawing, which includes landscape, figure composition, and still life, will be directed by Gabriel Laderman, a proponent of the new Realism in art, and recipient of the Tiffany Award. Mr. Laderman's classes run from July 1 through August 12.

Persons interested in applying for these programs should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 02215 for further information.

Tanglewood Auditions Scheduled

Auditions for outstanding musicians at the high school, college, and professional level to participate in Boston University's summer programs at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., will be held on Saturday, March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute, which runs from July 1 through August 26, 1973, is now in its eight year. It offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist instructors from the Boston University music faculty and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. For those who qualify, academic credit is available.

This summer's Institute programs will include Applied Music Instruction: study and practice in orchestral instruments supplemented by private lessons and master classes; the Young Artists Program for high school instrumentalists: private lessons and performances in chamber music groups and with the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra; the Choral Institute, also for high school students, directed by prize-winning choir director Joseph Huszti; a Seminar for Choral Conductors led by Mr. Huszti and Iva Dee Hiatt; and a Piano Seminar conducted by Bela Boszormenyi-Nagy which surveys the works of Debussy, Ravel, Bartok and Liszt.

Among those teaching master classes are Roman Totenberg, vilinist; George Neikrug, cellist; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist; Ralph Gomberg, oboist; Harold Wright, clarinetist; Sherman Walt, bassoonist; and Charles Kavaloski, French horn player. The last five, all principals with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have recently joined the faculty of Boston University as the Boston University Woodwind Quintet.

In addition to the music programs at Tanglewood, there will be a Workshop in Stage Movement and Acting taught by Joseph Gifford, director and choreographer, and Rose Schulman, director, both of the theater arts faculty at Boston University. The workshop, conceived for actors, teachers of acting, and teachers of stage movement and dance, will offer daily class study during the month of July.

A program in Advanced Painting and Drawing, which includes landscape, figure painting, figure composition, and still life, will be diirected by Gabriel Laderman, a proponent of the new Realism in art, and recipient of the Tiffany Award. Mr. Laderman's classes run from July 1 through August 12.

Persons interested in applying for these programs should contact Boston University Tanglewood Institute, 855 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 02215 for further information.

Scholarships Available For Tanglewood Seminar

BOSTON — Through the generosity of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy at Tanglewood will offer several scholarships to Massachusetts residents for its new Listening and Analysis Seminar.

The Seminar is open to performers, students, teachers, and musical laymen and is intended to broaden and deepen the musical horizons of participants. Daily classes will feature discussion and analysis based on the repertoire of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center concerts and rehearsals at Tanglewood, all of which Seminar members will attend. In addition, guest teachers, drawn from the distinguished composers, conductors and soloists appearing at Tanglewood this summer, will augment the daily class discussions.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115, or call 617 266-1492 extension 113.

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
JUN 3 1973

Auditions set for Tanglewood

Auditions for musicians at the high school, college, and professional levels to particiapte in Boston university's summer program at Tanglewood in Lenox will be held March 31 and April 14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., at the School of Fine and Applied Arts Concert Hall, 855 Commonwealth av., Boston.

BU's Tanglewood Institute, which runs July 1-Aug. 26, offers programs of concentrated study with concert artist-instructors from the university's music faculty, and with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. Academic credit is available for those who qualify.

At Tanglewood

New Season Offers Traditional Works

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

These are the best and worst of times, and one sure way to dispel the November drizzle of the soul is to first contemplate and then make use of the riches that lie before us this summer.

First off the mark is the Berkshire Music Festival fondly known as Tanglewood, with 24 concerts by The Boston Symphony Orchestra under music adviser Seiji Ozawa, plus eight Friday Preludes by various artists, all of the first rank. The first weekend begins on July 6 with the Friday evening (7 p.m.) Prelude followed by Ozawa conducting an All-Bach program at 9 p.m.

THE PROGRAMMING is quite within the traditional bounds, the only possible exception being the "Suite for Toy Piano" by John Cage. But the rest of the programs are predictable even conservative, but even so, what they have is choice and the soloists, for the most part, are of the usual fine quality.

Of course the printed word, regardless of encomium or outright bias, cannot convey truly what is the essence of Tanglewood, which could be at least accurately described as a state of mind.

Virtually everything that is relative and germane to the festival contributes something to the outright seduction of one's senses by the design of both man and nature.

SEIJI OZAWA

The lovely immaculate grounds, set precisely in the rolling Berkshire mountains; the tall and ancient trees, the gentle green slope down to the lake assuages an eye all too accustomed to the trappings and detritus of our plastic world.

ON THE GROUNDS is the Hawthorne cottage, where the American author, one summer, convinced another writer that his idea of an epic novel about whales and ships was to be done and no nonsense about it. So Hern Melville began "Moby Dick" America's greatest work of art to date.

The coincidence, then, of the harmonies of nature, of the man made harmonies of a Mozart or Beethoven performed by a great symphony orchestra, is most proper.

As a general rule, people in the aggregate, great masses of them, are not examples of man at this best. But, it is a fact that the audiences at Tanglewood, are above all, civilized, sharing one of the most civilized experiences that one can find.

THEY ARE FROM every persuasion and background, they wear Puccis and Norells, jeans and T shirts, sandals and beards, motley and beads. They are all ages, they come from the left and the right, but here, they come for the same reason and they are not disappointed.

I remember a time last year, after 12,000 people had left the grounds on a Sunday and, having stayed behind for some reason, I walked out onto the empty lawn. There were only five or six pieces of paper on the whole lawn. This after thousands had picnicked on the grounds. Rare indeed, but those who come to Tanglewood really think of it as belonging to them and this relationship is a fine thing.

See TANGLEWOOD, Page 2

THE NATIONAL OBSERVER
WASHINGTON, D. C.
W. 524,265

JUN 2 1973

June
aron
ulez, igh-
sion
l the

Fes-
nber
music is the emphasis at the only festival south of North Carolina and east of New Mexico, with concerts slated for June 8-9, 15-16, and 23-24.

Wolf Trap Farm Park (Vienna, Va.; June 15-Sept. 9). The third season at the national park outside Washington, D.C., is strong on dance, with runs scheduled by the National, Joffrey, Bejart, Alvin Ailey, and New York City companies.

Harford Opera Theater (Bel Air, Md.; June 22-Sept. 9). Stars from New York, San Francisco, and Baltimore are in the casts of The Tales of Hoffman, The Turn of the Screw, Rigoletto, The Mother of Us All, and The Flying Dutchman.

Caramoor Festival (Katonah, N.Y.; June 23-Aug. 26). Julius Rudel directs this series of week-end concerts, to include evenings of Italian Renaissance music, Spanish medieval music, and Marco da Gagliano's Baroque opera La Dafne.

Ravinia Festival (Chicago, June 27-Aug. 17). The Chicago Symphony festival features the works of Mendelssohn, Debussy, and Berg; five Mozart piano concerti; the Joffrey Ballet; and Lotte Lenya in the new Berlin to Broadway: The Musical Voyage of Kurt Weill.

Connecticut College American Dance Festival (New London; June 28-Aug. 5). Dedicated to the late Jose Limon, the 26th annual reunion includes week-end performance by his company and those of Alwin Nikolais, Erick Hawkins, Arthur Mitchell, and Donald McKayle, among others.

Temple University Music Festival (Ambler, Pa.; June 29-Aug. 12). The Pittsburgh Symphony is in residence for a season including Puccini's Madama Butterfly, Brahms' Requiem, Haydn's Creation, and a variety of other classical, pop, and jazz offerings.

stars including Beverly Sills, Norman Treigle, Roberta Peters, and Franco Corelli.

Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival (Lee, Mass.; July 3-Sept. 1). Margot Fonteyn and the Rosario Galan Ballet Espanol open the festival that Ted Shawn founded, and succeeding performers include the Hartford, Twyla Tharp, National, Cincinnati, American Ballet, and Harkness companies.

Saratoga Festival (Saratoga, N.Y.; July 3-Aug. 25). The New York City Ballet, the Philadelphia Orchestra, and the City Center Acting Company (Measure for Measure, The Three Sisters) in residence at the renowned spa for improvers of the breed.

Hollywood Bowl (Hollywood, Calif.; July 4-Sept. 22). Opera evenings, musical marathons, and much more are on deck for the 52nd season in the popular amphitheater.

Blossom Festival (Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio; July 5-Sept. 1). The Cleveland Orchestra, the National Ballet, and various pop performers get together midway between Cleveland and Akron.

Claremont Music Festival (Claremont, Calif.; July 6-Aug. 4). A number of premieres during "American Music Week," July 25-29, highlight the fifth annual revival of this small but interesting series of Wednesday evening chamber music and Friday evening orchestral concerts.

Berkshire Festival (Lenox, Mass.; July 6-Aug. 26). Seiji Ozawa, Gunther Schuller, and others lead the Boston Symphony in the annual rites at Tanglewood, opening with a Bach program and closing with the Verdi Requiem.

Santa Fe Opera (Santa Fe, N.M.; July 6-Aug. 25). Benjamin Britten's Owen Wingrave heads the repertory at the Southwest's annual bash; other entries include La Boheme, The Marriage of Figaro, The Merry Widow, and The Flying Dutchman.

Lake George Opera Festival (Glens Falls, N.Y.; Aug. 2-19). One of the best of the operafests offers The Crucible, Rigoletto, The Barber of Seville, and Tosca.

Tanglewood Lists Events

Continued from Page 1

Some of the picnics on the lawn at Tanglewood range from a monastic one of bread, cheese and wine to a most sybaritic indulgence of the inner man. Wines and champagnes in silver buckets, Irish linens, crystal goblets, avocados stuffed with crab, cold salmon with Hollandaise, nova and bagels, ratatouille and cold chicken. And, (I've seen it) silver and brass candlesticks.

This is a design for living that indulges all one's senses in a most fulfilling way, and if you haven't tried it you haven't lived.

AND ALL THE time you are being served by the likes of Malcom Frager, Andre Watts, Maureen Forrester, Ozawa, Michael Tilson Thomas, Rafael Frubeck de Burgos, Eugene Ormandy, and, as they say, a cast of thousands.

From State and Pearl Street in Albany, Tanglewood is only 38 miles away, and, for most of the way, the trip itself is through some fine New England scenes.

Not so incidentally this summer's programs include eight choral works such as Stravinsky's "Canticum Sacrum" and "Symphony of Psalms"; Handel's "Messiah" Verdi's "Requiem" Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantasque "Lelio" and Mozart and Haydn works. Goody, goody.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUN 3 1973

BANNER
BENNINGTON, VT.
D. 6,000

JUN 2 1973

New England
Newsclip

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 222,900

JUN 10 1973

New England
Newsclip

The Lively World

Summer in the Berkshires: A swingin' gas shortage?

By MILTON R. BASS

IT APPEARS (now don't quote me on this) that this could be (you don't hear it here) one of the jumping-off (there could be any number of mitigating factors) summers the Berkshires (they're not just chinwagging about a gas shortage, you know) have ever known (this rainy spell might just go right on through November).

There are rumors that Tanglewood is 50 per cent ahead of last year at this time in advance reservations. Many people who might ordinarily go to Europe are planning to stay in the United States where people will accept a dollar, let alone not laugh at it. Even though there have been complaints in the past about gouging the tourist, our prices are as nothing to most of the other developed nations of the world, nor are they out of line when compared to other American tourist spots. And we, at least, give something for the money.

—o—

THERE IS GREAT interest in Tanglewood this year because there will be new leadership both at the musical and managerial levels. Seiji Ozawa is a man of definite ideas and desires, and the Boston Symphony will get new impetus to stay at the top of the heap. The programming for this summer has something for everyone, and it looks like everyone just might come.

The Williamstown Summer Theatre seems to be going through a rejuvenation this year with director Nikos Psacharopoulos scattering subsidiary companies throughout the county with the abandon of a Cambodian regimental commander. Have actors-singers, will travel to your bar mitzvah seems to be the motto. Williamstown is determined to get its share of the foundation money that has so far been almost exclusively lavished on the Berkshire Theatre Festival in Stockbridge. It has already announced plans for the mounting of a new musical, no mean theatrical or financial feat, and there will probably be a few other surprises when the schedule proper (or improper) is announced.

—o—

THE BERKSHIRE Theatre Festival supposedly has four original works lined up, two of them musicals, and some big names to go along with them. Broadway, of course, has come to look upon Stockbridge as a tryout house in the past decade, and there are producers who are willing to share some of the costs of mounting new productions here. The future of the BTF is shaky, but there are still a few persons vitally concerned about its welfare and willing to put their time and money into its preservation. They have enough money to start, but they'll need help to keep going.

The Lenox Arts center has moved a furlong down the road to Wheatleigh, and is also planning four original musical theatre productions this season. When the Lenox Arts Center says original, it means ORIGINAL. I took a staid old couple to one of their productions last season and he was shaken while she was shook. Every once in a while he gets a reflective look in his eye and says to me: "Remember that show you took us to last summer. Well..." And then goes on to comment how the country is going to hell.

THE LENOX Arts Festival at Music Inn is also planning some musical events, both pop and op, and Bousquet's has announced a supper theatre featuring old-time melodrama and vaudeville skits, and every little spot is going to have its live rock band, and there will be umpteen new art galleries to augment our umpteen old art galleries.

Don't worry about having enough gas for your vacation entertainment. Everything is within easy bicycle distance

Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

★ MUSIC ★

Berkshire Festival At Tanglewood
Lenox, Mass.

July 6 — Seiji Ozawa conducting an All-Bach program: Brandenburg Concerto No. 1; Concerto for Two Violins; Cantata No. 189, and Canatata No. 52. Guest artists, Joseph Silverstein, Jerome Rosen and Benita Valente.

July 7 — Stanislaw Skrowaczewski conducting a Mozart program: Adagio and Fugue; Sinfonia Concertante for winds; Concert Aria for baritone; "Haffner" Symphony. Guest artist, Thomas Stewart.

July 8 — Seiji Ozawa conducting. Haydn's "Creation." Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Benita Valente, Seth McCoy and Thomas Stewart, soloists.

July 13 — Seiji Ozawa conducting a Mozart program: Horn Concerto No. 3 in E Flat; Clarinet Concerto and Sinfonia Concertante in E. Flat. Guest artists: Joseph Silverstein, Charles Kovaloski and Burton Fine.

July 14 — Riccardo Muti conducting. Concerto in A for strings by Vivaldi; Piano Concerto in C minor by Mozart and Symphony No. 34 in Mozart. Guest artist, Andre Watts.

July 15 — Seiji Ozawa conducting. Concerto Grosso in B minor by Handel; Sinfonia Concertante by Haydn; and Linz Symphony by Mozart. Guest soloists are Ralph Gomberg, Sherman Walt, Joseph Silverstein, Jules Eskin.

July 20 — Eugene Ormandy conducting an all-Beethoven program: Leonore Overture No. 3; "Emperor" Concerto; and Symphony No. 5. Philippe Entremont, soloist.

July 21 — Eugene Ormandy conducting an all-Beethoven program: Symphony No. 8; Symphony No. 9 in D minor. Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Seth McCoy and Peter Lagger, soloists.

July 22 — Stanislaw Skrowaczewski conducting an all-Beethoven program: Overture "Coriolan" Violin Concerto and Symphony No. 3 "Eroica." Sidney Harth, soloist.

July 27 — William Steinberg conducting an all-Brahms program: Violin Concerto and Symphony. No. 1. Miriam Fried, soloist.

July 28 — William Steinberg conducting. Symphony No. 8 "Unfinished," Das Lied von der Erde by Mahler. James King, soloist.

July 29 — Rafael Fruhbeck De Burgos conducting. Oracion de Torero for Strings, by Turina; Piano Concerto No. 2 by Bartok; and Symphony No. 4 in E minor. Chistoph Eschenbach, solist.

Aug. 3 — Michael Tilson Thomas conducting. Symphony No. 7 by Beethoven and Symphony No. 3 by Copland.

Aug. 4 — Michael Tilson Thomas conducting a Stravinsky program. Firebird Suite, Canticum Sacrum, Von Himmel Hoch Variations and Symphony of Psalms. Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

Aug. 5 — Michael Tilson Thomas conducting German Dances by Mozart; Suite for Toy Piano by Cage; Till Eulenspiegel by Strauss and Piano Concerto No. 2 by Brahms. Malcolm Frager, soloist.

Aug. 10 — Colin Davis conducting a Mozart program, "Prague" Symphony; Violin Concerto No. 3 and "Coronation" Mass. Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Aug. 11 — Colin Davis conducting. Overture "Beatrice and Benedict," Symphony No. 84 by Haydn; and Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

Aug. 12 — Colin Davis conducting. Handel's "Messiah," Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Aug. 17 — Lawrence Foster conducting. Overture "Corsak" by Berlioz; Scottish Fantasy by Bruch; Symphony No. 5 by Prokofieff. Joseph Silverstein, soloist.

Aug. 18 — Arthur Fiekler conducting. Dvorak "New World" Symphony; Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2; Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger." Earl Wild, soloist.

Aug. 19 — Seiji Ozawa conducting. Franck's Symphonic Variations; Totentanz by Liszt; Symphony No. 4 by Tshaikovsky. Andre Watts, soloist.

Aug. 24 — Seiji Ozawa conducting: "Symphonie Fantastique" by Berlioz; Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Mallory Walker, Victor Braun and Michael Wager.

Aug. 25 — James De Preist conducting. Piano Concerto No. 3 by Rachmaninoff; Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch. Byron Janis, soloist.

Aug. 26 — Seiji Ozawa conducting. Verdi "Requiem." Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Lou Ann Wyckoff, Maureen Forrester, Giuseppe Giacomini and Stafford Dean, soloists.

Concerts are Fridays at 9 p.m., Saturdays at 8:30 p.m. and Sundays at 2:30 p.m. Ticket price range: $4 to $9. Ticket office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

Hartt College Chamber Music Series
University of Hartford

June 24 — Renato Bonacini, violin; Raymond Hanson, piano.
July 8 — Stradivari Quartet.
July 15 — Alfred Kanwischer, piano.

At Tanglewood

New Season Offers Traditional Works

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

These are the best and worst of times, and one sure way to dispel the November drizzle of the soul is to first contemplate and then make use of the riches that lie before us this summer.

First off the mark is the Berkshire Music Festival fondly known as Tanglewood, with 24 concerts by The Boston Symphony Orchestra under music adviser Seiji Ozawa, plus eight Friday Preludes by various artists, all of the first rank. The first weekend begins on July 6 with the Friday evening (7 p.m.) Prelude followed by Ozawa conducting an All-Bach program at 9 p.m.

THE PROGRAMMING is quite within the traditional bounds, the only possible exception being the "Suite for Toy Piano" by John Cage. But the rest of the programs are predictable even conservative, but even so, what they have is choice and the soloists, for the most part, are of the usual fine quality.

Of course the printed word, regardless of encomium or outright bias, cannot convey truly what is the essence of Tanglewood, which could be at least accurately described as a state of mind.

Virtually everything that is relative and germane to the festival contributes something to the outright seduction of one's senses by the design of both man and nature.

SEIJI OZAWA

The lovely immaculate grounds, set precisely in the rolling Berkshire mountains; the tall and ancient trees, the gentle green slope down to the lake assuages an eye all too accustomed to the trappings and detritus of our plastic world.

ON THE GROUNDS is the Hawthorne cottage, where the American author, one summer, convinced another writer that his idea of an epic novel about whales and ships was to be done and no nonsense about it. So Hern Melville began "Moby Dick" America's greatest work of art to date.

The coincidence, then, of the harmonies of nature, of the man made harmonies of a Mozart or Beethoven performed by a great symphony orchestra, is most proper.

As a general rule, people in the aggregate, great masses of them, are not examples of man at this best. But, it is a fact that the audiences at Tanglewood, are above all, civilized, sharing one of the most civilized experiences that one can find.

THEY ARE FROM every persuasion and background, they wear Puccis and Norells, jeans and T shirts, sandals and beards, motley and beads. They are all ages, they come from the left and the right, but here, they come for the same reason and they are not disappointed.

I remember a time last year, after 12,000 people had left the grounds on a Sunday and, having stayed behind for some reason, I walked out onto the empty lawn. There were only five or six pieces of paper on the whole lawn. This after thousands had picnicked on the grounds. Rare indeed, but those who come to Tanglewood really think of it as belonging to them and this relationship is a fine thing.

See TANGLEWOOD, Page 2

THE NATIONAL OBSERVER
WASHINGTON, D. C.
W. 524,265

JUN 2 1973

Daughter of the Regiment, stars including Beverly Sills, Norman Treigle, Roberta Peters, and Franco Corelli.

Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival (Lee, Mass.; July 3-Sept. 1). Margot Fonteyn and the Rosario Galan Ballet Espanol open the festival that Ted Shawn founded, and succeeding performers include the Hartford, Twyla Tharp, National, Cincinnati, American Ballet, and Harkness companies.

Saratoga Festival (Saratoga, N.Y.; July 3-Aug. 25). The New York City Ballet, the Philadelphia Orchestra, and the City Center Acting Company (Measure for Measure, The Three Sisters) in residence at the renowned spa for improvers of the breed.

Hollywood Bowl (Hollywood, Calif.; July 4-Sept. 22). Opera evenings, musical marathons, and much more are on deck for the 52nd season in the popular amphitheater.

Blossom Festival (Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio; July 5-Sept. 1). The Cleveland Orchestra, the National Ballet, and various pop performers get together midway between Cleveland and Akron.

Claremont Music Festival (Claremont, Calif.; July 6-Aug. 4). A number of premieres during "American Music Week," July 25-29, highlight the fifth annual revival of this small but interesting series of Wednesday evening chamber music and Friday evening orchestral concerts.

Berkshire Festival (Lenox, Mass.; July 6-Aug. 26). Seiji Ozawa, Gunther Schuller, and others lead the Boston Symphony in the annual rites at Tanglewood, opening with a Bach program and closing with the Verdi Requiem.

Santa Fe Opera (Santa Fe, N.M.; July 6-Aug. 25). Benjamin Britten's Owen Wingrave heads the repertory at the Southwest's annual bash; other entries include La Boheme, The Marriage of Figaro, The Merry Widow, and The Flying Dutchman.

Lake George Opera Festival (Glens Falls, N.Y.; Aug. 2-19). One of the best of the operafests offers The Crucible, Rigoletto, The Barber of Seville, and Tosca.

June
aron
ulez, igh-
sion
l the

Fes-
nber
music is the emphasis of the only festival south of North Carolina and east of New Mexico, with concerts slated for June 8-9, 15-16, and 23-24.

Wolf Trap Farm Park (Vienna, Va.; June 15-Sept. 9). The third season at the national park outside Washington, D.C., is strong on dance, with runs scheduled by the National, Joffrey, Bejart, Alvin Ailey, and New York City companies.

Harford Opera Theater (Bel Air, Md.; June 22-Sept. 9). Stars from New York, San Francisco, and Baltimore are in the casts of The Tales of Hoffman, The Turn of the Screw, Rigoletto, The Mother of Us All, and The Flying Dutchman.

Caramoor Festival (Katonah, N.Y.; June 23-Aug. 26). Julius Rudel directs this series of week-end concerts, to include evenings of Italian Renaissance music, Spanish medieval music, and Marco da Gagliano's Baroque opera La Dafne.

Ravinia Festival (Chicago, June 27-Aug. 17). The Chicago Symphony festival features the works of Mendelssohn, Debussy, and Berg; five Mozart piano concerti; the Joffrey Ballet; and Lotte Lenya in the new Berlin to Broadway: The Musical Voyage of Kurt Weill.

Connecticut College American Dance Festival (New London; June 28-Aug. 5). Dedicated to the late Jose Limon, the 26th annual reunion includes week-end performance by his company and those of Alwin Nikolais, Erick Hawkins, Arthur Mitchell, and Donald McKayle, among others.

Temple University Music Festival (Ambler, Pa.; June 29-Aug. 12). The Pittsburgh Symphony is in residence for a season including Puccini's Madama Butterfly, Brahms' Requiem, Haydn's Creation, and a variety of other classical, pop, and jazz offerings.

Tanglewood Lists Events

Continued from Page 1

Some of the picnics on the lawn at Tanglewood range from a monastic one of bread, cheese and wine to a most sybaritic indulgence of the inner man. Wines and champagnes in silver buckets, Irish linens, crystal goblets, avocados stuffed with crab, cold salmon with Hollandaise, nova and bagels, ratatouille and cold chicken. And, (I've seen it) silver and brass candlesticks.

This is a design for living that indulges all one's senses in a most fulfilling way, and if you haven't tried it you haven't lived.

AND ALL THE time you are being served by the likes of Malcom Frager, Andre Watts, Maureen Forrester, Ozawa, Michael Tilson Thomas, Rafael Frubeck de Burgos, Eugene Ormandy, and, as they say, a cast of thousands.

From State and Pearl Street in Albany, Tanglewood is only 38 miles away, and, for most of the way, the trip itself is through some fine New England scenes.

Not so incidentally this summer's programs include eight choral works such as Stravinsky's "Canticum Sacrum" and "Symphony of Psalms"; Handel's "Messiah" Verdi's "Requiem" Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantasque "Lelio" and Mozart and Haydn works. Goody, goody.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 115,169

JUN 3 1973

BANNER
BENNINGTON, VT.
D. 6,000

JUN 1973

The Lively World

Summer in the Berkshires: A swingin' gas shortage?

By MILTON R. BASS

IT APPEARS (now don't quote me on this) that this could be (you don't hear it here) one of the jumping-off (there could be any number of mitigating factors) summers the Berkshires (they're not just chinwagging about a gas shortage, you know) have ever known (this rainy spell might just go right on through November).

There are rumors that Tanglewood is 50 per cent ahead of last year at this time in advance reservations. Many people who might ordinarily go to Europe are planning to stay in the United States where people will accept a dollar, let alone not laugh at it. Even though there have been complaints in the past about gouging the tourist, our prices are as nothing to most of the other developed nations of the world, nor are they out of line when compared to other American tourist spots. And we, at least, give something for the money.

—o—

THERE IS GREAT interest in Tanglewood this year because there will be new leadership both at the musical and managerial levels. Seiji Ozawa is a man of definite ideas and desires, and the Boston Symphony will get new impetus to stay at the top of the heap. The programming for this summer has something for everyone, and it looks like everyone just might come.

The Williamstown Summer Theatre seems to be going through a rejuvenation this year with director Nikos Psacharopoulos scattering subsidiary companies throughout the county with the abandon of a Cambodian regimental commander. Have actors-singers, will travel to your bar mitzvah seems to be the motto. Williamstown is determined to get its share of the foundation money that has so far been almost exclusively lavished on the Berkshire Theatre Festival in Stockbridge. It has already announced plans for the mounting of a new musical, no mean theatrical or financial feat, and there will probably be a few other surprises when the schedule proper (or improper) is announced.

—o—

THE BERKSHIRE Theatre Festival supposedly has four original works lined up, two of them musicals, and some big names to go along with them. Broadway, of course, has come to look upon Stockbridge as a tryout house in the past decade, and there are producers who are willing to share some of the costs of mounting new productions here. The future of the BTF is shaky, but there are still a few persons vitally concerned about its welfare and willing to put their time and money into its preservation. They have enough money to start, but they'll need help to keep going.

The Lenox Arts center has moved a furlong down the road to Wheatleigh, and is also planning four original musical theatre productions this season. When the Lenox Arts Center says original, it means ORIGINAL. I took a staid old couple to one of their productions last season and he was shaken while she was shook. Every once in a while he gets a reflective look in his eye and says to me: "Remember that show you took us to last summer. Well..." And then goes on to comment how the country is going to hell.

THE LENOX Arts Festival at Music Inn is also planning some musical events, both pop and op, and Bousquet's has announced a supper theatre featuring old-time melodrama and vaudeville skits, and every little spot is going to have its live rock band, and there will be umpteen new art galleries to augment our umpteen old art galleries.

Don't worry about having enough gas for your vacation entertainment. Everything is within easy bicycle distance.

Applicants to the Seminar should have a general background in music; however, training at an advanced level is not a prerequisite.

Scholarships are available for the full eight week session, or for either July or August. For more information on the new listening and Analysis Seminar write the Berkshire Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.

JUN 10 1973

New England Newsclip

★ MUSIC ★

Berkshire Festival At Tanglewood
Lenox, Mass.

July 6 — Seiji Ozawa conducting an All-Bach program: Brandenburg Concerto No. 1; Concerto for Two Violins; Cantata No. 189, and Canatata No. 52. Guest artists, Joseph Silverstein, Jerome Rosen and Benita Valente.

July 7 — Stanislaw Skrowaczewski conducting a Mozart program: Adagio and Fugue; Sinfonia Concertante for winds; Concert Aria for baritone; "Haffner" Symphony. Guest artist, Thomas Stewart.

July 8 — Seiji Ozawa conducting. Haydn's "Creation." Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Benita Valente, Seth McCoy and Thomas Stewart, soloists.

July 13 — Seiji Ozawa conducting a Mozart program: Horn Concerto No. 3 in E Flat; Clarinet Concerto and Sinfonia Concertante in E. Flat. Guest artists: Joseph Silverstein, Charles Kovaloski and Burton Fine.

July 14 — Riccardo Muti conducting. Concerto in A for strings by Vivaldi; Piano Concerto in C minor by Mozart and Symphony No. 34 in Mozart. Guest artist, Andre Watts.

July 15 — Seiji Ozawa conducting. Concerto Grosso in B minor by Handel; Sinfonia Concertante by Haydn; and Linz Symphony by Mozart. Guest soloists are Ralph Gomberg, Sherman Walt, Joseph Silverstein, Jules Eskin.

July 20 — Eugene Ormandy conducting an all-Beethoven program: Leonore Overture No. 3; "Emperor" Concerto; and Symphony No. 5. Philippe Entremont, soloist.

July 21 — Eugene Ormandy conducting an all-Beethoven program: Symphony No. 8; Symphony No. 9 in D minor. Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Seth McCoy and Peter Lagger, soloists.

July 22 — Stanislaw Skrowaczewski conducting an all-Beethoven program: Overture "Coriolan" Violin Concerto and Symphony No. 3 "Eroica." Sidney Harth, soloist.

July 27 — William Steinberg conducting an all-Brahms program: Violin Concerto and Symphony. No. 1. Miriam Fried, soloist.

July 28 — William Steinberg conducting. Symphony No. 8 "Unfinished," Das Lied von der Erde by Mahler. James King, soloist.

July 29 — Rafael Fruhbeck De Burgos conducting. Oracion de Torero for Strings, by Turina; Piano Concerto No. 2 by Bartok; and Symphony No. 4 in E minor. Chistoph Eschenbach, solist.

Aug. 3 — Michael Tilson Thomas conducting. Symphony No. 7 by Beethoven and Symphony No. 3 by Copland.

Aug. 4 — Michael Tilson Thomas conducting a Stravinsky program. Firebird Suite, Canticum Sacrum, Von Himmel Hoch Variations and Symphony of Psalms. Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

Aug. 5 — Michael Tilson Thomas conducting German Dances by Mozart; Suite for Toy Piano by Cage; Till Eulenspiegel by Strauss and Piano Concerto No. 2 by Brahms. Malcolm Frager, soloist.

Aug. 10 — Colin Davis conducting a Mozart program: "Prague" Symphony; Violin Concerto No. 3 and "Coronation" Mass. Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Aug. 11 — Colin Davis conducting. Overture "Beatrice and Benedict." Symphony No. 84 by Haydn; and Symphony No 2 by Brahms.

Aug. 12 — Colin Davis conducting. Handel's "Messiah," Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Aug. 17 — Lawrence Foster conducting. Overture "Corsak" by Berlioz; Scottish Fantasy by Bruch; Symphony No. 5 by Prokofieff. Joseph Silverstein, soloist.

Aug. 18 — Arthur Fielder conducting. Dvorak "New World" Symphony; Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2; Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger." Earl Wild, soloist.

Aug. 19 — Seiji Ozawa conducting. Franck's Symphonic Variations; Totentanz by Liszt; Symphony No. 4 by Tshaikovsky. Andre Watts, soloist.

Aug. 24 — Seiji Ozawa conducting: "Symphonie Fantastique" by Berlioz; Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Mallory Walker, Victor Braun and Michael Wager.

Aug. 25 — James De Preist conducting. Piano Concerto No. 3 by Rachmaninoff; Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch. Byron Janis, soloist.

Aug. 26 — Seiji Ozawa conducting. Verdi "Requiem." Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Lou Ann Wyckoff, Maureen Forrester, Giuseppe Giacomini and Stafford Dean, soloists.

Concerts are Fridays at 9 p.m., Saturdays at 8:30 p.m. and Sundays at 2:30 p.m. Ticket price range: $4 to $9. Ticket office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

Hartt College Chamber Music Series
University of Hartford

June 24 — Renato Bonacini, violin; Raymond Hanson, piano.

July 8 — Stradivari Quartet.

July 15 — Alfred Kanwischer, piano.

Friday, July 20, Chautauqua Opera, Verdi's "Falstaff," repeated Monday, July 23.

Friday, July 20, Stratford: "Music for a Summer Day" Opus 1, featuring New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Michael Tilson Thomas, conductor, 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 p.m.

Friday, July 20, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with pianist Andre Watts, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, Philippe Entremont, piano, in All-Beethoven program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, July 21, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Milton Katims, conductor, Stephen Kates, cello.

Friday, July 27, Chautauqua Opera: Weill's "Street Scene," repeated Monday, July 30.

Saturday, July 28, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Evan Whallon, conductor, Leon Bates, piano.

Saturday, July 28, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, William Steinberg, conductor, and soloists, 8:30 p.m.

Saturday, July 28, Stratford: Ararat Trio, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, July 28, Eastman Theater: Benny Goodman and his Sextet.

Seiji Ozawa will be conducting numerous concerts at Tanglewood.

Saturday, July 21, Stratford: Toronto Winds, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, July 21, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, soloists and chorus, Beethoven's Symphonies 8 and 9.

Sunday, July 22, Caramoor: violinist Jamie Laredo, pianist Ruth Laredo.

Sunday, July 22, Saratoga: The Carpenters show.

Sunday, July 22, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, conductor, Sidney Harth, violin in all-Beethoven program.

Monday, July 23, Chautauqua Amphitheater: pianist Ozan Marsh.

Tuesday, July 24, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Milton Katims, conductor, Julia Lovett, soprano.

Wednesday, July 25, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Milton Katims, conductor.

Thursday, July 26, Lake George Opera: Rossini's "Barber of Seville," repeated July 28, Aug. 3, 11 and 16.

Sunday, July 29, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchester, Rafael Fruehbeck de Burgos, conductor, Christoph Eschenbach, piano.

Monday, July 30, Saratoga: Stephen Stills and Manassas.

Tuesday, July 31, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Boris Brott, conductor, Steven Staryk, violin.

Friday, July 27, "Opera Under the Stars," Highland Park Bowl: Menotti's "Saint of Bleeker Street," repeated Sat., July 28 (tentative).

Friday, July 27, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with Peter Lagger, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, William Steinberg, conductor, Miriam Fried, violin, in all-Brahms program.

AUGUST

Wednesday, Aug. 1, UR Interfaith Chapel: Summer Oratorio Reading Chorus and Orchestra, Taavo Virkhaus, conductor, Schubert Mass.

Wednesday, Aug. 1, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Boris Brott, conductor, Joseph Macerollo, accordion.

Wednesday, Aug. 1, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, Andre Watts, piano, in all-Brahms program.

Thursday, Aug. 2, Lake George Opera, Verdi's "Rigoletto," repeated Aug. 4, 10, 15 and 18 (matinee).

Thursday, Aug. 2, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Rafael Fruehbeck de Burgos, conductor, Thomas Stewart, baritone, all-Wagner program.

Friday, Aug. 3, Eastman Theater: "Arrangers' Holiday," Rayburn Wright and Manny Albam, conductors, Gerry Mulligan, sax, 8:30 p.m.

Friday, Aug. 3, Chautauqua Opera; Puccini's "Madama Butterfly," repeated Aug. 4 (matinee) and 6.

Friday, Aug. 3, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, Isaac Stern, violin.

Friday, Aug. 3, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with Tanglewood Festival Chorus, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Michael Tilson Thomas, conductor, 9 p.m.

Saturday, Aug. 4, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Boris Brott, conductor, Louis Quilico, baritone.

Saturday, Aug. 4, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Andre Kostelanetz, conductor, all-Gershwin program. Saturday, Aug. 4, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Michael Tilson Thomas, conductor, all-Stravinsky program, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 5, Caramoor: Cellist Janos Starker, pianist Alain Planes.

Sunday, Aug. 5, Saratoga: Sha Na Na.

Sunday, Aug. 5, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Michael Tilson Thomas, conductor, Malcolm Frager, piano.

Monday, Aug. 6, Chautauqua Amphitheater: George Shearing Quartet.

Monday, Aug. 6, Saratoga: Bread.

Tuesday, Aug. 7, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Nathan Gottschalk, conductor, "Old First Night" Gala.

Wednesday, Aug. 8, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Evan Whallon, conductor, George Shearing, piano.

Wednesday, Aug. 8, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Rafael Fruehbeck de Burgos, conductor, Gilda Cruz-Romo, soprano, featuring deFalla's "La Vida Breve" — complete opera in concert form.

Thursday, Aug. 9, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Youth Festival Orchestra, repeated Thursday, Aug. 16.

Thursday, Aug. 9, Lake George Opera, Ward's "The Crucible," repeated Aug. 11 (matinee), 13 and 17.

Thursday, Aug. 9, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, Rudolf Serkin, piano.

Friday, Aug. 10, Chautauqua Opera: Ravel's "L'Heure Espagnole" and Ibert's "Angelique," repeated Monday, Aug. 13.

Friday, Aug. 10, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Alexander Gibson, conductor, Pinchas Zukerman, violin.

Friday, Aug. 10, Tanglewood: "Weekend

er-composer John Denver will erform Saturday, June 30, at Saratoga.

Up Country
Pittsfield, Mass.

AUG 1973 New England Newsclip

Saturday, July 7, Stratford: Oxford String Quartet, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, July 7, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; all-Mozart program, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, conductor, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, July 8, Caramoor: Bach's music by New York Chamber soloists.

Sunday, July 8, Saratoga: Bette Midler show.

Sunday, July 8, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists in Haydn's "Creation."

Monday, July 9, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Paul Winter Consort.

Tuesday, July 10, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Werner Torkanowsky, conductor, Chaim Zemach, cello.

Wednesday, July 11, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Winograd, conductor, Mattiwilda Dobbs, soprano.

Thursday, July 12, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Eugene Moye, cello, Emanuel Ax, piano.

Friday, July 13, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Paul Winter Consort.

Friday, July 13, Chautauqua Opera, Briten's "Rape of Lucretia," repeated Monday, July 16.

Friday, July 13, "Opera Under the Stars," Highland Park Bowl, Rogers & Hammerstein's "Carousel," repeated Saturday, July 14.

Friday, July 13, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with pianist Malcolm Frager, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists in all-Mozart program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, July 14, Caramoor: Evening of Schubert, Mahler and Wagner, featuring songs by soprano Jessye Norman.

Saturday, July 14, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Winograd, conductor, Aldredge Piano Scholarship winner.

Saturday, July 14, Stratford: cellist Tsuyoshi Tsutsumi, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, July 14, Tanglewood: open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Riccardo Muti, conductor, Andre Watts, piano, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, July 15, Caramoor: Guarneri String Quartet.

Sunday, July 15, Saratoga: Virgil Fox show.

Sunday, July 15, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists.

Tuesday, July 17, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Walter Susskind, conductor, Millard Taylor, violin.

Wednesday, July 18, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Walter Susskind, conductor, Muriel Kilby, piano.

Thursday, July 19, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Roger Williams show.

Thursday, July 19, Lake George Opera: Puccini's "Tosca," repeated July 21, Aug. 4 (Matinee), 14 and 18.

Friday, July 20, Caramoor: Marco da Gagliano's early Baroque opera, "La Dafne," with New York Pro Musicia Antiqua; repeated Sat., July 21.

Continued

opera for theater, opens at 7:30 p.m., re-

Wednesday, Aug. 22, Chautauqua Amphi-

son show.

WE PAY THE MOST...

6% 6.27% 6.2%

First Federal pays a 6.27% effective annual yield on 6% Moneymaker Certificates and a 5.20% effective annual yield on 5% Day-To-Day and Regular Savings Accounts.

Every First Federal Certificate or Savings Account pays the highest rate permitted by regulations. So why take less? Stop at any First Federal office and see which type of Certificate or Savings Account is best for you.

You earn the most at First Federal—because we're doing more for you, and your money.

Your summer calendar save it

Upstate New York really is a summer festival, and we know you'll be joining in the fun.

That's why we've prepared this annual calendar of events including music (like Bette Midler at Saratoga); summer theater (like the Stratford and Town and Country Playhouse schedules); art (the Clothesline Show dates).

On Page 29, you'll find a special calendar for young people, wit camps, music events, trips and spor

You'll want to save it all, fo whole family's summer fun.

Summer music scene

JUNE

Tanglewood

Saturday, June 16, Aston Magna Baroque Music Festival, Great Barrington, Mass., opening concert at 6 p.m.; additional Baroque programs at 2:30 p.m., June 17 and 24; 6 p.m., June 23.

Sunday, June 17, Saratoga: Pink Floyd Show.

Saturday, June 23, Caramoor: Evening of Mozart Music conducted by Julius Rudel, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, June 24, Caramoor: Renaissance tone Ryan Edwards, and Boston Symphony Chamber Players, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin Davis, conductor, soloists and chorus in all-Mozart program.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Howard Hanson, conductor.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, soloists, in all-Rachmaninoff program.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Stratford: duo-pianists Bouchard et Morisset, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin David, conductor, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Caramoor: pianist Rosalyn Tureck.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Saratoga: Liberace show.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Stratford: "Music for a Summer Day" Opus 2, featuring Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Lawrence Foster, conductor, 9:30 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin Davis, conductor, soloists and chorus, in Handel's "Messiah."

Monday, Aug. 13, Saratoga: America.

Tuesday, Aug. 14, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Robert Irving, conductor; Patricia McBride and Jean-Pierre Bonnefous, dancers.

Wednesday, Aug. 15, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, David Zinman, conductor, Bunyan Webb, guitar.

Wednesday, Aug. 15, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Andre Kostelanetz, conductor; Patricia McBride and Edward Villella, dancers.

Wednesday, Aug. 15, Stratford: "Exiles" opera for theater, opens at 7:30 p.m., re-music: "Musica Reservata" conducted by Margherita Hastings.

Tuesday, June 26, Saratoga: '60s British Rock and Roll Revival.

Thursday, June 28, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Bill Cosby Show.

Friday, June 29, "Opera Under the Stars" at Highland Park Bowl: Vaughan Williams' "Poisoned Kiss," repeated Sat., June 30.

Saturday, June 30, Caramoor: Evening of Czech Music featuring cellist Zara Nelsova in Dvorak Concerto.

Saturday, June 30, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Chris Swansen and the Electronic Moog Trio.

Saturday, June 30, Saratoga: John Denver Show.

JULY

Sunday, July 1, Caramoor: pianist Gary Graffman.

Monday, July 2, Toronto's Ontario Place Forum: weekly Toronto Symphony concerts, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday through Aug. 10.

Tuesday, July 3, Chautauqua Amp ter: U.S. Army Band and Chorus.

Tuesday, July 3, National Arts Cent tawa: Mozart's opera "Don Giovanni" i lish; repeated July 6, 10, 12 and 14.

Wednesday, July 4, Chautauqua phony Orchestra, Werner Torkanowsk ductor.

Thursday, July 5, Chautauqua Amp ter: pianist Jose Iturbi.

Friday, July 16, Chautauqua Opera et's "Carmen," repeated Monday, July

Friday, July 6, Tanglewood: "We Prelude" with Larry Smith, 7 p.m.; B Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, cond and soloists in all-Bach program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, July 7, Caramoor: Cheru opera "Medea," repeated Friday, July 13.

Saturday, July 7, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Werner Torkanowsky, conductor, Carolyne James, mezzo.

Monday, July 2, Hubbell Auditorium, UR River Campus: Eastman Summer School of Music Chamber Music Festival, 8:30 p.m.; other programs July 9, 16, 23 and 30.

Thursday, Aug. 16, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, in "Romeo and Juliet" program.

Friday, Aug. 17, Chautauqua Amphitheater: guitarist Bunyan Webb, soprano Julia Lovett.

Friday, Aug. 17, Chautauqua Opera: Wagner's "Die Walkuere," repeated Aug. 20.

Friday, Aug. 17, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Aldo Ceccato, conductor.

Friday, Aug. 17, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with pianist Earl Wild, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lawrence Foster, conductor, Joseph Silverstein, violin, 9 p.m.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, David Zinman, conductor, Keith Womer, organ.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, William Smith, conductor, Benny Goodman and his Sextet.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Stratford: Czech String Quartet, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, Earl Wild, piano, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 19, Caramoor: pianist Jorge Bolet.

Sunday, Aug. 19, Saratoga: duo-pianists Ferrante & Teicher.

Sunday, Aug. 19, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, Andre Watts, piano.

Monday, Aug. 20, Saratoga: Glen Campbell show.

Tuesday, Aug. 21, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, David Zinman, conductor.

Wednesday, Aug. 22, Chautauqua Amphi- phia Orchestra, Continue piano, in all-Tschaikovsky program.

Thursday, Aug. 23, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Benny Goodman and his Sextet.

Thursday, Aug. 23, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, William Masselos, piano, in all-Beethoven program.

Friday, Aug. 24, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Roberto Benzi, conductor, Frederica von Stade, mezzo.

Friday, Aug. 24, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with Boston Symphony Chamber Players, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, soloists and chorus in all-Berlioz program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Barbershop Quartets.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Stratford: guitarist Oscar Ghiglia, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, James De Preist, conductor, Byron Janis, piano, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 26, Caramoor: Spanish Medieval Music by the Waverly Consort.

Sunday, Aug. 26, Saratoga: Ed McMahon show.

Sunday, Aug. 26, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, soloists and chorus in Verdi's Requiem.

Monday, Aug. 27, Saratoga: Beach Boys.

Tuesday, Aug. 28, Saratoga: Sonny & Cher (2 shows).

Sunday, Sept. 9, Saratoga: Kris Kristofferson show.

Singer-composer John Denver will perform Saturday, June 30, at Saratoga.

Up Country
Pittsfield, Mass.

AUG 1973 New England Newsclip

Saturday, July 7, Stratford: Oxford String Quartet, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, July 7, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; all-Mozart program, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, conductor, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, July 8, Caramoor: Bach's music by New York Chamber soloists.

Sunday, July 8, Saratoga: Bette Midler show.

Sunday, July 8, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists in Haydn's "Creation."

Monday, July 9, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Paul Winter Consort.

Tuesday, July 10, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Werner Torkanowsky, conductor, Chaim Zemach, cello.

Wednesday, July 11, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Winograd, conductor, Mattiwilda Dobbs, soprano.

Thursday, July 12, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Eugene Moye, cello, Emanuel Ax, piano.

Friday, July 13, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Paul Winter Consort.

Friday, July 13, Chautauqua Opera, Britten's "Rape of Lucretia," repeated Monday, July 16.

Friday, July 13, "Opera Under the Stars," Highland Park Bowl, Rogers & Hammerstein's "Carousel," repeated Saturday, July 14.

Friday, July 13, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with pianist Malcolm Frager, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists in all-Mozart program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, July 14, Caramoor: Evening of Schubert, Mahler and Wagner, featuring songs by soprano Jessye Norman.

Saturday, July 14, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Winograd, conductor, Aldredge Piano Scholarship winner.

Saturday, July 14, Stratford: cellist Tsuyoshi Tsutsumi, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, July 14, Tanglewood: open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Riccardo Muti, conductor, Andre Watts, piano, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, July 15, Caramoor: Guarneri String Quartet.

Sunday, July 15, Saratoga: Virgil Fox show.

Sunday, July 15, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists.

Tuesday, July 17, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Walter Susskind, conductor, Millard Taylor, violin.

Wednesday, July 18, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Walter Susskind, conductor, Muriel Kilby, piano.

Thursday, July 19, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Roger Williams show.

Thursday, July 19, Lake George Opera: Puccini's "Tosca," repeated July 21, Aug. 4 (Matinee), 14 and 18.

Friday, July 20, Caramoor: Marco da Gagliano's early Baroque opera, "La Dafne," with New York Pro Musicia Antiqua; repeated Sat., July 21.

Continued

WE PAY THE MOST...

6.27%

First Federal pays a 6.27% effective annual yield on 6% Moneymaker Certificates and a 5.20% effective annual yield on 5% Day-To-Day and Regular Savings Accounts.

Every First Federal Certificate or Savings Account pays the highest rate permitted by regulations. So why take less? Stop at any First Federal office and see which type of Certificate or Savings Account is best for you.

You earn the most at First Federal—because we're doing more for you, and your money.

Your summer calendar save it

Upstate New York really is a summer festival, and we know you'll be joining in the fun.

That's why we've prepared this annual calendar of events including music (like Bette Midler at Saratoga); summer theater (like the Stratford and Town and Country Playhouse schedules); art (the Clothesline Show dates).

On Page 29, you'll find a special calendar for young people, with day camps, music events, trips and sports.

You'll want to save it all, for the whole family's summer fun.

Summer music scene

JUNE

Tanglewood

Saturday, June 16, Aston Magna Baroque Music Festival, Great Barrington, Mass., opening concert at 6 p.m.; additional Baroque programs at 2:30 p.m., June 17 and 24; 6 p.m., June 23.

Sunday, June 17, Saratoga: Pink Floyd Show.

Saturday, June 23, Caramoor: Evening of Mozart Music conducted by Julius Rudel, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, June 24, Caramoor: Renaissance [illegible] Chamber Players, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin Davis, conductor, soloists and chorus in all-Mozart program.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Howard Hanson, conductor.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, soloists, in all-Rachmaninoff program.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Stratford: duo-pianists Bouchard et Morisset, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin David, conductor, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Caramoor: pianist Rosalyn Tureck.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Saratoga: Liberace show.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Stratford: "Music for a Summer Day" Opus 2, featuring Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Lawrence Foster, conductor, 9:30 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin Davis, conductor, soloists and chorus, in Handel's "Messiah."

Monday, Aug. 13, Saratoga: America.

Tuesday, Aug. 14, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Robert Irving, conductor; Patricia McBride and Jean-Pierre Bonnefous, dancers.

Wednesday, Aug. 15, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, David Zinman, conductor, Bunyan Webb, guitar.

Wednesday, Aug. 15, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Andre Kostelanetz, conductor; Patricia McBride and Edward Villella, dancers.

Wednesday, Aug. 15, Stratford: "Exiles" opera for theater, opens at 7:30 p.m., re-

music: "Musica Reservata" conducted by Margherita Hastings.

Tuesday, June 26, Saratoga: '60s British Rock and Roll Revival.

Thursday, June 28, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Bill Cosby Show.

Friday, June 29, "Opera Under the Stars" at Highland Park Bowl: Vaughan Williams' "Poisoned Kiss," repeated Sat., June 30.

Saturday, June 30, Caramoor: Evening of Czech Music featuring cellist Zara Nelsova in Dvorak Concerto.

Saturday, June 30, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Chris Swansen and the Electronic Moog Trio.

Saturday, June 30, Saratoga: John Denver Show.

JULY

Sunday, July 1, Caramoor: pianist Gary Graffman.

Monday, July 2, Toronto's Ontario Place Forum: weekly Toronto Symphony concerts, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday through Aug. 10.

Tuesday, July 3, Chautauqua Amphitheater: U.S. Army Band and Chorus.

Tuesday, July 3, National Arts Center, Ottawa: Mozart's opera "Don Giovanni" in English; repeated July 6, 10, 12 and 14.

Wednesday, July 4, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Werner Torkanowsky, conductor.

Thursday, July 5, Chautauqua Amphitheater: pianist Jose Iturbi.

Friday, July 16, Chautauqua Opera: Bizet's "Carmen," repeated Monday, July 9.

Friday, July 6, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with Larry Smith, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists in all-Bach program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, July 7, Caramoor: Cherubini's opera "Medea," repeated Friday, July 13.

Saturday, July 7, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Werner Torkanowsky, conductor, Carolyne James, mezzo.

Monday, July 2, Hubbell Auditorium, UR River Campus: Eastman Summer School of Music Chamber Music Festival, 8:30 p.m.; other programs July 9, 16, 23 and 30.

Continued

Thursday, Aug. 16, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, in "Romeo and Juliet" program.

Friday, Aug. 17, Chautauqua Amphitheater: guitarist Bunyan Webb, soprano Julia Lovett.

Friday, Aug. 17, Chautauqua Opera: Wagner's "Die Walkuere," repeated Aug. 20.

Friday, Aug. 17, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Aldo Ceccato, conductor.

Friday, Aug. 17, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with pianist Earl Wild, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lawrence Foster, conductor, Joseph Silverstein, violin, 9 p.m.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, David Zinman, conductor, Keith Womer, organ.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, William Smith, conductor, Benny Goodman and his Sextet.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Stratford: Czech String Quartet, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, Earl Wild, piano, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 19, Caramoor: pianist Jorge Bolet.

Sunday, Aug. 19, Saratoga: duo-pianists Ferrante & Teicher.

Sunday, Aug. 19, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, Andre Watts, piano.

Monday, Aug. 20, Saratoga: Glen Campbell show.

Tuesday, Aug. 21, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, David Zinman, conductor.

Wednesday, Aug. 22, Chautauqua Amphi-

piano, in all-Tschaikovsky program.

Thursday, Aug. 23, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Benny Goodman and his Sextet.

Thursday, Aug. 23, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, William Masselos, piano, in all-Beethoven program.

Friday, Aug. 24, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Roberto Benzi, conductor, Frederica von Stade, mezzo.

Friday, Aug. 24, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with Boston Symphony Chamber Players, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, soloists and chorus in all-Berlioz program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Barbershop Quartets.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Stratford: guitarist Oscar Ghiglia, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, James De Preist, conductor, Byron Janis, piano, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 26, Caramoor: Spanish Medieval Music by the Waverly Consort.

Sunday, Aug. 26, Saratoga: Ed McMahon show.

Sunday, Aug. 26, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, soloists and chorus in Verdi's Requiem.

Monday, Aug. 27, Saratoga: Beach Boys.

Tuesday, Aug. 28, Saratoga: Sonny & Cher (2 shows).

Sunday, Sept. 9, Saratoga: Kris Kristofferson show.

Saturday, July 7, Stratford: Oxford String Quartet, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, July 7, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; all-Mozart program, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, conductor, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, July 8, Caramoor: Bach's music by New York Chamber soloists.

Sunday, July 8, Saratoga: Bette Midler show.

Sunday, July 8, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists in Haydn's "Creation."

Monday, July 9, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Paul Winter Consort.

Tuesday, July 10, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Werner Torkanowsky, conductor, Chaim Zemach, cello.

Wednesday, July 11, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Winograd, conductor, Mattiwilda Dobbs, soprano.

Thursday, July 12, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Eugene Moye, cello, Emanuel Ax, piano.

Friday, July 13, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Paul Winter Consort.

Friday, July 13, Chautauqua Opera, Britten's "Rape of Lucretia," repeated Monday, July 16.

Friday, July 13, "Opera Under the Stars," Highland Park Bowl, Rogers & Hammerstein's "Carousel," repeated Saturday, July 14.

Friday, July 13, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with pianist Malcolm Frager, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists in all-Mozart program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, July 14, Caramoor: Evening of Schubert, Mahler and Wagner, featuring songs by soprano Jessye Norman.

[illegible]aturday, July 14, Chautauqua Symphony [illegible]a, Arthur Winograd, conductor, Al[illegible] Scholarship winner.

[illegible] July 14, Stratford: cellist Tsu[illegible]mi, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

[illegible], July 14, Tanglewood: open re[illegible]:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orches[illegible]ardo Muti, conductor, Andre Watts, [illegible]:30 p.m.

[illegible]day, July 15, Caramoor: Guarneri [illegible] Quartet.

[illegible]nday, July 15, Saratoga: Virgil Fox [illegible]w.

Sunday, July 15, Tanglewood: Boston [illegible]ymphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists.

Tuesday, July 17, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Walter Susskind, conductor, Millard Taylor, violin.

Wednesday, July 18, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Walter Susskind, conductor, Muriel Kilby, piano.

Thursday, July 19, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Roger Williams show.

Thursday, July 19, Lake George Opera: Puccini's "Tosca," repeated July 21, Aug. 4 (Matinee), 14 and 18.

Friday, July 20, Caramoor: Marco da Gagliano's early Baroque opera, "La Dafne," with New York Pro Musicia Antiqua; repeated Sat., July 21.

Continued

Up Country
Pittsfield, Mass.

AUG 1973

New England Newsclip

WE PAY THE MOST...

6.27%

First Federal pays a 6.27% effective annual yield on 6% Moneymaker Certificates and a 5.20% effective annual yield on 5% Day-To-Day and Regular Savings Accounts.

Every First Federal Certificate or Savings Account pays the highest rate permitted by regulations. So why take less? Stop at any First Federal office and see which type of Certificate or Savings Account is best for you.

You earn the most at First Federal—because we're doing more for you, and your money.

Your summer calendar — save it

Upstate New York really is a summer festival, and we know you'll be joining in the fun.

That's why we've prepared this annual calendar of events including music (like Bette Midler at Saratoga); summer theater (like the Stratford and Town and Country Playhouse schedules); art (the Clothesline Show dates).

On Page 29, you'll find a special calendar for young people, with day camps, music events, trips and sports.

You'll want to save it all, for the whole family's summer fun.

Summer music scene

JUNE

Tanglewood

Saturday, June 16, Aston Magna Baroque Music Festival, Great Barrington, Mass., opening concert at 6 p.m.; additional Baroque programs at 2:30 p.m., June 17 and 24; 6 p.m., June 23.

Sunday, June 17, Saratoga: Pink Floyd Show.

Saturday, June 23, Caramoor: [illegible]

music: "Musica Reservata" conducted by Margherita Hastings.

Tuesday, June 26, Saratoga: '60s British Rock and Roll Revival.

Thursday, June 28, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Bill Cosby Show.

Friday, June 29, "Opera Under the Stars" at Highland Park Bowl: Vaughan Williams' "Poisoned Kiss," repeated Sat., June 30.

Saturday, June 30, Caramoor: Evening of Czech Music featuring cellist Zara Nelsova in Dvorak Concerto.

Saturday, June 30, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Chris Swansen and the Electronic Moog Trio.

Saturday, June 30, Saratoga: John Denver Show.

JULY

Sunday, July 1, Caramoor: pianist Gary Graffman.

Monday, July 2, Toronto's [illegible]

Tuesday, July 3, Chautauqua Amphitheater: U.S. Army Band and Chorus.

Tuesday, July 3, National Arts Center, Ottawa: Mozart's opera "Don Giovanni" in English; repeated July 6, 10, 12 and 14.

Wednesday, July 4, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Werner Torkanowsky, conductor.

Thursday, July 5, Chautauqua Amphitheater: pianist Jose Iturbi.

Friday, July 16, Chautauqua Opera: Bizet's "Carmen," repeated Monday, July 9.

Friday, July 6, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with Larry Smith, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists in all-Bach program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, July 7, Caramoor: Cherubini's opera "Medea," repeated Friday, July 13.

Saturday, July 7, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Werner Tor[illegible]

Saturday, July 7, Stratford: Oxford String Quartet, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, July 7, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; all-Mozart program, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, conductor, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, July 8, Caramoor: Bach's music by New York Chamber soloists.

Sunday, July 8, Saratoga: Bette Midler show.

Sunday, July 8, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists in Haydn's "Creation."

Monday, July 9, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Paul Winter Consort.

Tuesday, July 10, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Werner Torkanowsky, conductor, Chaim Zemach, cello.

Wednesday, July 11, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Winograd, conductor, Mattiwilda Dobbs, soprano.

Thursday, July 12, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Eugene Moye, cello, Emanuel Ax, piano.

Friday, July 13, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Paul Winter Consort.

Friday, July 13, Chautauqua Opera, Britten's "Rape of Lucretia," repeated Monday, July 16.

Friday, July 13, "Opera Under the Stars," Highland Park Bowl, Rogers & Hammerstein's "Carousel," repeated Saturday, July 14.

Friday, July 13, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with pianist Malcolm Frager, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists in all-Mozart program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, July 14, Caramoor: Evening of Schubert, Mahler and Wagner, featuring songs by soprano Jessye Norman.

Saturday, July 14, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Winograd, conductor, Aldredge Piano Scholarship winner.

Saturday, July 14, Stratford: cellist Tsuyoshi Tsutsumi, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, July 14, Tanglewood: open re[illegible]rsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orches[illegible]a, Riccardo Muti, conductor, Andre Watts, [illegible]iano, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, July 15, Caramoor: Guarneri [illegible]tring Quartet.

Sunday, July 15, Saratoga: Virgil Fox [illegible]how.

Sunday, July 15, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, and soloists.

Tuesday, July 17, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Walter Susskind, conductor, Millard Taylor, violin.

Wednesday, July 18, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Walter Susskind, conductor, Muriel Kilby, piano.

Thursday, July 19, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Roger Williams show.

Thursday, July 19, Lake George Opera: Puccini's "Tosca," repeated July 21, Aug. 4 (Matinee), 14 and 18.

Friday, July 20, Caramoor: Marco da Gagliano's early Baroque opera, "La Dafne," with New York Pro Musicia Antiqua; repeated Sat., July 21.

Continued

Up Country
Pittsfield, Mass.

AUG 1973

New England Newscip

Prelude" with soprano Phyllis Curtin, baritone Ryan Edwards, and Boston Symphony Chamber Players, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin Davis, conductor, soloists and chorus in all-Mozart program.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Howard Hanson, conductor.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, soloists, in all-Rachmaninoff program.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Stratford: duo-pianists Bouchard et Morisset, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, Aug. 11, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin David, conductor, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Caramoor: pianist Rosalyn Tureck.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Saratoga: Liberace show.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Stratford: "Music for a Summer Day" Opus 2, featuring Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Lawrence Foster, conductor, 9:30 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 12, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin Davis, conductor, soloists and chorus, in Handel's "Messiah."

Monday, Aug. 13, Saratoga: America.

Tuesday, Aug. 14, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Robert Irving, conductor; Patricia McBride and Jean-Pierre Bonnefous, dancers.

Wednesday, Aug. 15, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, David Zinman, conductor, Bunyan Webb, guitar.

Wednesday, Aug. 15, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Andre Kostelanetz, conductor; Patricia McBride and Edward Villella, dancers.

Wednesday, Aug. 15, Stratford: "Exiles" opera for theater, opens at 7:30 p.m., repeated at 9 p.m. Aug. 16-18, 21-25, with 2:30 p.m. matinees on Aug. 19 and 26.

Thursday, Aug. 16, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, in "Romeo and Juliet" program.

Friday, Aug. 17, Chautauqua Amphitheater: guitarist Bunyan Webb, soprano Julia Lovett.

Friday, Aug. 17, Chautauqua Opera: Wagner's "Die Walkuere," repeated Aug. 20.

Friday, Aug. 17, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Aldo Ceccato, conductor.

Friday, Aug. 17, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with pianist Earl Wild, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lawrence Foster, conductor, Joseph Silverstein, violin, 9 p.m.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, David Zinman, conductor, Keith Womer, organ.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, William Smith, conductor, Benny Goodman and his Sextet.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Stratford: Czech String Quartet, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, Aug. 18, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, Earl Wild, piano, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 19, Caramoor: pianist Jorge Bolet.

Sunday, Aug. 19, Saratoga: duo-pianists Ferrante & Teicher.

Sunday, Aug. 19, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, Andre Watts, piano.

Monday, Aug. 20, Saratoga: Glen Campbell show.

Tuesday, Aug. 21, Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, David Zinman, conductor.

Wednesday, Aug. 22, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Organist Robert Baker.

Wednesday, Aug. 22, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Roberto Benzi, Van Cliburn, piano, in all-Tschaikovsky program.

Thursday, Aug. 23, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Benny Goodman and his Sextet.

Thursday, Aug. 23, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, William Masselos, piano, in all-Beethoven program.

Friday, Aug. 24, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Roberto Benzi, conductor, Frederica von Stade, mezzo.

Friday, Aug. 24, Tanglewood: "Weekend Prelude" with Boston Symphony Chamber Players, 7 p.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, soloists and chorus in all-Berlioz program, 9 p.m.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Chautauqua Amphitheater: Barbershop Quartets.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Saratoga: Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Stratford: guitarist Oscar Ghiglia, Festival Theater, 11 a.m.

Saturday, Aug. 25, Tanglewood: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, James De Preist, conductor, Byron Janis, piano, 8:30 p.m.

Sunday, Aug. 26, Caramoor: Spanish Medieval Music by the Waverly Consort.

Sunday, Aug. 26, Saratoga: Ed McMahon show.

Sunday, Aug. 26, Tanglewood: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, conductor, soloists and chorus in Verdi's Requiem.

Monday, Aug. 27, Saratoga: Beach Boys.

Tuesday, Aug. 28, Saratoga: Sonny & Cher (2 shows).

Sunday, Sept. 9, Saratoga: Kris Kristofferson show.

Dallas Times Herald
D. 232,064 SUN. 275,535

JUN 10 1973

OLIN CHISM

A summer of music

It hasn't been so many years ago that the end of May marked the beginning of the musical drought season in the United States—excepting a few of the old-line pioneering festivals on the East and West coasts. But no more. During the last couple of decades there has been a growing crop of summer musical festivals and they've multiplied so much during the last two or three years that it's hard to keep track of them any more.

Today's column is devoted to imparting information about a number of them to those who might be planning vacations in various parts of the country (or staying home even) this summer. I believe I've included all the big ones, and many of the smaller ones as well, but the list is not guaranteed to be complete, since some of the smaller ones have not sent out publicity and I couldn't get in touch with them.

Here goes with the list, though.

FIRST OF ALL, Dallas. Yes, since the Dallas Symphony has extended its season to include Summer Sound '73 our city has its own festival. It's already under way, of course, but will extend through July 14, with concerts each Thursday and Saturday night at 8:15 in the band shell (now Dallas Summer Stage) in Fair Park. As usual for festivals all over the country, the atmosphere is highly informal.

The summer's remaining programs: next Thursday, "The Great Melodies of Tchaikovsky" with pianist James Dick; next Saturday, "Lerner and Loewe's Best of Broadway"; June 21, "A Musical Potpourri," starring soprano (and movie star-) Mary Costa; June 23, "Tackling the Summer Sound," with pro football stars Rayfield Wright (narrator) and Mike Reid (pianist-vocalist); June 28, "Gershwin's Greatest Hits," with William Warfield and pianist Alfred Mouledous; June 30, "Dancing in the Dark," with the Dallas Civic Ballet; July 5, "A Viennese Evening," with Jeffry and Ronald Marlowe, duo pianists; July 7, "Top of the Pops," with soprano Anita Darian and pianist Jeffrey Swann; July 12, "Bethoven's Greatest Hits," with violinist Samuel Ashkenasi; and July 14, "An days and Sundays. Weeknight performances are at 8 p.m.; weekend performances at 8:30. "The Barber of Seville" will play June 30 through the matinee of July 7, "Falstaff" will begin on the evening of July 7, and the two operas will alternate through July 15, Various other musical and theatrical events are planned through Sept. 1. For information, write May DNF Box Office, 16th and Tremont, Denver, Colo. 80202 or phone (303) 222-8937.

ASPEN MUSIC FESTIVAL—One of the great mountain resort towns, Aspen will have its festival this year June 25 through Aug. 26. The list of musicians is far too large to run through here, but you might recognize such names as Itzhak Perlman, Pinchas Zukerman and Patricia Brooks. The schedule is also too large to list, but you may obtain one by writing Aspen Music Festival, 1860 Broadway, Suite 401, New York, N.Y. 10023 (that's what it says) or, maybe safer, writing or calling the festival directly in Aspen, Colo. (I don't have the address or phone number but it's a small town).

HOLLYWOOD BOWL — For those making a trip to the Los Angeles area this summer, this granddaddy of festivals—summer home of the Los Angeles Philharmonic—will have performances at 8:30 Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays July 10 through Sept. 15, with a few performances outside the regular schedule. Again, the artist lineup is too long to list (but there are names like Ormandy, Cliburn, Sills, Pavarotti and Graffman) and so is the schedule. Write The Hollywood

TANGLEWOOD — Another of the pioneering big ones, of course. The Tangelwood Festival is located at Lenox in the scenic Berkshire hills in western Massachusetts near the New York border. The summer weather there is gorgeous. Dates this year are July 6 through Aug. 26, with the Boston Symphony playing at 9 p.m. Fridays, 8:30 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays. There will be open rehearsals at 10:30 a.m. Saturdays, musical preludes at 7 p.m. Fridays and—on other days of the weeks—concerts and recitals by advanced music students.

Many big names are involved (the conductor list would knock you on your ear) and some of the special events include Haydn's "Creation" on July 8, an all-Mozart program on July 13 (with Seiji Ozawa), Handel's "Messiah" on Aug. 12 (with Colin Davis) and Verdi's "Requiem" on Aug. 26 (Ozawa). There's practically unlimited seating if you don't mind sitting on the grass (there's also shed seating), and a popular activity is to bring along a picnic supper or lunch before the program.

Write Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240; the phone is (413) 637-1600.

TANGLEWOOD — FAVORITE WITH MUSIC LOVERS

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377

JUN 10 1973

New England Newsclip

For music, dance, art head west

By Jean Caldwell
Globe Correspondent

Music, dance, theatre, art and as lovely an out doors to swim, golf or relax in as you can find anywhere — this is what the Berkshire Hills offer to the vacationer.

Biggest attraction is Tanglewood in Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony.

Lovers of the dance will find performances of ballet, ethnic and modern dance at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival from July 3 to Sept. 1. Mailing address for more information is Lee, Mass.

The Berkshire Theatre Festival in Stockbridge has nightly performances which will include a musical "the Gershwin Years," the play "Some Are Brave" and a new play as yet unnamed.

Monday evenings feature specials such as Sen. Eugene McCarthy reading his poetry, New York Times Drama Critic Clive Barnes leading a discussion and Peter Yarrow (of Peter, Paul & Mary) leading a rock group.

Thousands of art lovers visit the Clark Art Institute in Williamstown to see a collection which includes Italian, Renaissance masters and important collection of paintings by Winslow Homer, Renoirs, and prints and drawings from the 15th to the 20th Century.

The Hancock Shaker Village (at the junction of Rts. 20 and 41, five miles west of downtown Pittsfield) offers a glimpse at a way of life which is almost extinct and the craftmanship of a group of people who have been called some of the most ingenious who ever lived.

The Berkshire Hills Conference, 107 South St., Pittsfield 01201 (phone: 413-443-9186) is the information center for vacationers in the Berkshires.

John Geary and his staff can answer questions about things to see, send literature on special attractions and will make reservations for people who want to stay a minimum of two days. Accommodations cover the range from rooms in private homes through motels hotels and the resorts. The Berkshires have three full resorts: Eastover, Lenox; Jug End, South Egremont; the Oak N'Spruce, South Lee.

Just east of the Berkshires the Pioneer Valley has the Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield.

Old Deerfield offers a glimpse of the homes settlers lived in the days of the massacre of 1704. The town is celebrating its 300th anniversary this

Cont. on next page

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 132,687

JUN 10 1973

New England News

Music festivals: a rich program

By Harry Neville
Globe Correspondent

New England is incredibly rich in summer musical fare—so rich in fact that it's next to impossible to present a complete and detailed list of the events that will be taking place throughout the area from June through September. What follows then is a thumbnail guide to the festivals, their dates and locations as well as some sources from which additional information may be obtained.

The most famous of New England festivals is the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, which is near Lenox and which is the summer home of the Boston Symphony. Most, though not all, of the public musical activity at Tanglewood takes place on the weekends: a "Weekend Prelude" concert—generally a soloist or chamber ensemble—at 7 p.m. on Friday, followed by an orchestral concert at 9 p.m., an 8:30 p.m. orchestral concert on Saturday and another at 2:30 p.m. on Sunday.

Things get under way this year on the weekend of July 6, when Seiji Ozawa, who becomes music director in the fall, conducts the first and third orchestral concerts. The final weekend begins Aug. 24, when Ozawa again conducts the first and third concerts. Things to watch out for at Tanglewood are the audience-drawing "spectaculars"—Ormandy's all-Beethoven programs (July 20 and 21), for example. or the Verdi Requiem of Aug. 26. Too long a delay in making reservations may result in a poor seat or no seat at all, not to speak of a $40 or $50 motel tab. Program brochures may be obtained from Symphony Hall, Boston.

Also in Lenox is the Lenox Arts Center, which will produce a variety of concerts and music-theater productions from July 3 through Aug. 26, and not far away at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., is the Berkshire Quartet, which will give ten Saturday concerts (June 30 to Sept. 1) at 3 p.m. and two Sunday concerts (July 1 and 29) at 4 p.m. Brochures are available from Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. 06031.

Not far distant too from Tanglewood is the Marlboro Festival, which runs from July 7 through Aug. 12 in Marlboro, Vt. Chamber orchestra and chamber music concerts will be given on Saturdays at 8:30 p.m. and on Sundays at 3 p.m., with Friday concerts scheduled for July 20, Aug. 3 and 10, at 8:30 p.m. Pablo Casals will be in residence but neither his appearances nor the programs are announced in advance.

Returning to Massachusetts for a moment, the New Marlboro Chamber Players will present seven Saturday concerts (July 7 to Aug. 14 at 8:30 p.m.) in the Red Fox Music Barn, Rte. 57, New Marlboro, and Albert Fuller will direct six weekend concerts of baroque music at Aston Magna, which is described as "a spectacular hilltop estate" at Great Barrington. The latter takes place Saturdays at 6 p.m. and Sundays at 2:30 p.m., June 9, 10, 16, 17, 23 and 24. Also in Massachusetts are five Saturday concerts at 8:30 p.m. at Castle Hill, Ipswich.

Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H., will have as its resident ensemble this summer the New York Philomusica Chamber Ensemble, which will give a series of ten concerts as part of a program which also includes recitals by pianists Gabriel Chodos, Andor Foldes and Walter Klien, and a performance of Handel's "Acis and Galatea" by the New York Chamber Soloists. These events begin July 10 and further information may be obtained by writing to Dartmouth's Office of Information, Hanover, N. H. 03755.

Also in New Hampshire is Monadnock Music, which features concerts in Jaffrey and surrounding towns, July 16 to Aug. 19, and the Center for Chamber Music at Apple Hill Farm, which will present concerts in Nelson and the surrounding region from June 9 to Aug. 12.

THE BERKSHIRES

Outdoor music concerts, mountain drives, elm shaded college towns, and beautifully-preserved old-time villages are the summertime pleasures of a Berkshire Hills auto tour.

This AAA trip starts on the Mohawk Trail, once a footpath for Indians. It ends on the Berkshire Trail, a hilly drive which connects the sparkling farm communities west of the Connecticut River.

Old Deerfield Village, a mile-long street of 17th and 18th Century homes, some of them open to visitors, is south of the Mohawk Trail off US 5. The trail, Rte. 2 from Greenfield to North Adams, climbs into the Berkshire Hills where the highlight is the valley view from the look-out at the steep Hairpin Turn. Beyond North Adams a nine-mile auto road winds to the summit of Mt. Greylock.

In Williamstown plan to stretch your legs along the shaded streets near Williams College and in the treasure-filled corridors of the Clark Art Institute. See the buildings and old round barn of the Hancock Shaker community off US 7 west of Pittsfield.

The South Mountain Concerts in Pittsfield and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tanglewood Series in Lenox bring throngs of visitors to this part of the Berkshire Hills on summer week-ends, so advance reservations are needed in motels, inns or guest houses.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377

JUN 10 1973

New England Newsclip

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,377

JUN 10 1973

New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Eight weekend programs are planned for the ~~Boston Symphony Orchestra~~ 1973 Berkshire Festival Concerts Series at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

"Weekend Preludes" (7 p.m.) will precede each Friday's p.m. concert, at no extra charge to evening ticket holders.

Saturday concerts begin at 8:30, Sunday programs at 2:30 p.m.

Open rehearsals, in the Shed Saturday mornings (10:30), will benefit the orchestra's pension fund. Seats are unreserved (there is a nominal charge) and available in morning hours.

The programs (subject to change):

- July 6 — Seiji Ozawa conducting, works of Bach; July 7 — Stanislaw Skrowaczewski conducting, Mozart program; July 8 — Ozawa conducting, Haydn's "Creation." (Tanglewood Festival Chorus).
- July 13 — Ozawa conducting, Mozart works; July 14 — Riccardo Muti conducting, Vivaldi and Mozart works; July 15 — Ozawa conducting, Handel, Haydn and Mozart.
- July 20 — Eugene Ormandy conducting, Beethoven; July 21 — Ormandy conducting, Beethoven; July 22—Skrowasczewski conducting, Beethoven.
- July 27 — William Steinberg conducting, Brahms; July 28 — Steinberg conducting, Schubert, Mahler; July 29 — Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos conducting, Turina, Bartok, Brahms.
- Aug. 3 — Michael Tilson Thomas conducting, Beethoven, Copland; Aug. 4 — Thomas conducting, Stravinsky; Aug. 5 — Thomas, Mozart, Cage, Strauss and Brahms.
- Aug. 10 — Colin Davis conducting, Mozart; Aug. 11 — Davis conducting, Berlioz, Haydn, Brahms; Aug. 12 — Davis conducting, Handel's "Messiah."
- Aug. 17 — Lawrence Foster conducting, Berlioz, Bruch, Prokofieff; Aug. 18 — Arthur Fiedler conducting, Dvorak, Rachmaninoff, Wagner; Aug. 18 — Ozawa conducting, Franck, Liszt.
- Aug. 24 — Ozawa conducting, Berlioz; Aug. 25 — James de Priest, Rachmaninoff, Shostakovich; Aug. 26 Ozawa conducting, Verdi's "Requiem."

"Tanglewood-on-Parade" is planned for Aug. 14, concerts beginning at 2:30. A gala concert will be presented at 8:30 p.m.

Performing are the Boston Symphony, Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and pianist-narrator Andre Watts, works to include Copland, Liszt, Scott Joplin, Jelly Roll Morton, Duke Ellington, Strauss, and Tchaikovsky.

Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood, Fiedler conducting, will be presented Aug. 21 (8:30 p.m.)

The 1973 activity lists Ozawa as artistic director, Berkshire Festival; Gunther Schuller, Berkshire Music Center; and Leonard Bernstein, adviser.

Ticket information is available through Friday at 1-617-1492, after Friday, 1-413-637-1600.

Dallas Times Herald
D. 232,064 SUN. 275,535

JUN 10 1973

OLIN CHISM

A summer of music

It hasn't been so many years ago that the end of May marked the beginning of the musical drought season in the United States—excepting a few of the old-line pioneering festivals on the East and West coasts. But no more. During the last couple of decades there has been a growing crop of summer musical festivals and they've multiplied so much during the last two or three years that it's hard to keep track of them any more.

Today's column is devoted to imparting information about a number of them to those who might be planning vacations in various parts of the country (or staying home even) this summer. I believe I've included all the big ones, and many of the smaller ones as well, but the list is not guaranteed to be complete, since some of the smaller ones have not sent out publicity and I couldn't get in touch with them.

Here goes with the list, though.

FIRST OF ALL, Dallas. Yes, since the Dallas Symphony has extended its season to include Summer Sound '73 our city has its own festival. It's already under way, of course, but will extend through July 14, with concerts each Thursday and Saturday night at 8:15 in the band shell (now Dallas Summer Stage) in Fair Park. As usual for festivals all over the country, the atmosphere is highly informal.

The summer's remaining programs: next Thursday, "The Great Melodies of Tchaikovsky" with pianist James Dick; next Saturday, "Lerner and Loewe's Best of Broadway"; June 21, "A Musical Potpourri," starring soprano (and movie star-) Mary Costa; June 23, "Tackling the Summer Sound," with pro football stars Rayfield Wright (narrator) and Mike Reid (pianist-vocalist); June 28, "Gershwin's Greatest Hits," with William Warfield and pianist Alfred Mouledous; June 30, "Dancing in the Dark," with the Dallas Civic Ballet; July 5, "A Viennese Evening," with Jeffry and Ronald Marlowe, duo pianists; July 7, "Top of the Pops," with soprano Anita Darian and pianist Jeffrey Swann; July 12, "Bethoven's Greatest Hits," with violinist Shmuel Ashkenasi; and July 14, "An days and Sundays. Weeknight performances are at 8 p.m.; weekend performances at 8:30. "The Barber of Seville" will play June 30 through the matinee of July 7, "Falstaff" will begin on the evening of July 7, and the two operas will alternate through July 15, Various other musical and theatrical events are planned through Sept. 1. For information, write May DNF Box Office, 16th and Tremont, Denver, Colo. 80202 or phone (303) 222-8937.

ASPEN MUSIC FESTIVAL—One of the great mountain resort towns, Aspen will have its festival this year June 25 through Aug. 26. The list of musicians is far too large to run through here, but you might recognize such names as Itzhak Perlman, Pinchas Zukerman and Patricia Brooks. The schedule is also too large to list, but you may obtain one by writing Aspen Music Festival, 1860 Broadway, Suite 401, New York, N.Y. 10023 (that's what it says) or, maybe safer, writing or calling the festival directly in Aspen, Colo. (I don't have the address or phone number but it's a small town).

HOLLYWOOD BOWL — For those making a trip to the Los Angeles area this summer, this granddaddy of festivals—summer home of the Los Angeles Philharmonic—will have performances at 8:30 Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays July 10 through Sept. 15, with a few performances outside the regular schedule. Again, the artist lineup is too long to list (but there are names like Ormandy, Cliburn, Sills, Pavarotti and Graffman) and so is the schedule. Write The Hollywood

TANGLEWOOD — Another of the pioneering big ones, of course. The Tangelwood Festival is located at Lenox in the scenic Berkshire hills in western Massachusetts near the New York border. The summer weather there is gorgeous. Dates this year are July 6 through Aug. 26, with the Boston Symphony playing at 9 p.m. Fridays, 8:30 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays. There will be open rehearsals at 10:30 a.m. Saturdays, musical preludes at 7 p.m. Fridays and—on other days of the weeks—concerts and recitals by advanced music students.

Many big names are involved (the conductor list would knock you on your ear) and some of the special events include Haydn's "Creation" on July 8, an all-Mozart program on July 13 (with Seiji Ozawa), Handel's "Messiah" on Aug. 12 (with Colin Davis) and Verdi's "Requiem" on Aug. 26 (Ozawa). There's practically unlimited seating if you don't mind sitting on the grass (there's also shed seating), and a popular activity is to bring along a picnic supper or lunch before the program.

Write Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240; the phone is (413) 637-1600.

TANGLEWOOD — FAVORITE WITH MUSIC LOVERS

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,877

JUN 10 1973

New England Newspaper

For music, dance, art head west

By Jean Caldwell
Globe Correspondent

Music, dance, theatre, art and as lovely an out doors to swim, golf or relax in as you can find anywhere — this is what the Berkshire Hills offer to the vacationer.

Biggest attraction is Tanglewood in Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony.

Lovers of the dance will find performances of ballet, ethnic and modern dance at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival from July 3 to Sept. 1. Mailing address for more information is Lee, Mass.

The Berkshire Theatre Festival in Stockbridge has nightly performances which will include a musical "the Gershwin Years," the play "Some Are Brave" and a new play as yet unnamed.

Monday evenings feature specials such as Sen. Eugene McCarthy reading his poetry, New York Times Drama Critic Clive Barnes leading a discussion and Peter Yarrow (of Peter, Paul & Mary) leading a rock group.

Thousands of art lovers visit the Clark Art Institute in Williamstown to see a collection which includes Italian, Renaissance masters and important collection of paintings by Winslow Homer, Renoirs, and prints and drawings from the 15th to the 20th Century.

The Hancock Shaker Village (at the junction of Rts. 20 and 41, five miles west of downtown Pittsfield) offers a glimpse at a way of life which is almost extinct and the craftmanship of a group of people who have been called some of the most ingenious who ever lived.

The Berkshire Hills Conference, 107 South St., Pittsfield 01201 (phone: 413-443-9186) is the information center for vacationers in the Berkshires.

John Geary and his staff can answer questions about things to see, send literature on special attractions and will make reservations for people who want to stay a minimum of two days. Accommodations cover the range from rooms in private homes through motels hotels and the resorts. The Berkshires have three full resorts: Eastover, Lenox; Jug End, South Egremont; the Oak N'Spruce, South Lee.

Just east of the Berkshires the Pioneer Valley has the Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield.

Old Deerfield offers a glimpse of the homes settlers lived in the days of the massacre of 1704. The town is celebrating its 300th anniversary this

Cont. on next page 39—

Music festivals: a rich program

By Harry Neville
Globe Correspondent

New England is incredibly rich in summer musical fare—so rich in fact that it's next to impossible to present a complete and detailed list of the events that will be taking place throughout the area from June through September. What follows then is a thumbnail guide to the festivals, their dates and locations as well as some sources from which additional information may be obtained.

The most famous of New England festivals is the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, which is near Lenox and which is the summer home of the Boston Symphony. Most, though not all, of the public musical activity at Tanglewood takes place on the weekends: a "Weekend Prelude" concert—generally a soloist or chamber ensemble—at 7 p.m., on Friday, followed by an orchestral concert at 9 p.m., an 8:30 p.m. orchestral concert on Saturday and another at 2:30 p.m. on Sunday.

Things get under way this year on the weekend of July 6, when Seiji Ozawa, who becomes music director in the fall, conducts the first and third orchestral concerts. The final weekend begins Aug. 24, when Ozawa again conducts the first and third concerts. Things to watch out for at Tanglewood are the audience-drawing "spectaculars"—Ormandy's all-Beethoven programs (July 20 and 21), for example. or the Verdi Requiem of Aug. 26. Too long a delay in making reservations may result in a poor seat or no seat at all, not to speak of a $40 or $50 motel tab. Program brochures may be obtained from Symphony Hall, Boston.

Also in Lenox is the Lenox Arts Center, which will produce a variety of concerts and music-theater productions from July 3 through Aug. 26, and not far away at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., is the Berkshire Quartet, which will give ten Saturday concerts (June 30 to Sept. 1) at 3 p.m. and two Sunday concerts (July 1 and 29) at 4 p.m. Brochures are available from. Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. 06031.

Not far distant too from Tanglewood is the Marlboro Festival, which runs from July 7 through Aug. 12 in Marlboro, Vt. Chamber orchestra and chamber music concerts will be given on Saturdays at 8:30 p.m. and on Sundays at 3 p.m., with Friday concerts scheduled for July 20, Aug. 3 and 10, at 8:30 p.m. Pablo Casals will be in residence but neither his appearances nor the programs are announced in advance.

Returning to Massachusetts for a moment, the New Marlboro Chamber Players will present seven Saturday concerts (July 7 to Aug. 14 at 8:30 p.m.) in the Red Fox Music Barn, Rte. 57, New Marlboro, and Albert Fuller will direct six weekend concerts of baroque music at Aston Magna, which is described as "a spectacular hilltop estate" at Great Barrington. The latter takes place Saturdays at 6 p.m. and Sundays at 2:30 p.m., June 9, 10, 16, 17, 23 and 24. Also in Massachusetts are five Saturday concerts at 8:30 p.m. at Castle Hill, Ipswich.

Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H., will have as its resident ensemble this summer the New York Philomusica Chamber Ensemble, which will give a series of ten concerts as part of a program which also includes recitals by pianists Gabriel Chodos, Andor Foldes and Walter Klien, and a performance of Handel's "Acis and Galatea" by the New York Chamber Soloists. These events begin July 10 and further information may be obtained by writing to Dartmouth's Office of Information, Hanover, N. H. 03755.

Also in New Hampshire is Monadnock Music, which features concerts in Jaffrey and surrounding towns, July 16 to Aug. 19, and the Center for Chamber Music at Apple Hill Farm, which will present concerts in Nelson and the surrounding region from June 9 to Aug. 12.

THE BERKSHIRES

Outdoor music concerts, mountain drives, elm shaded college towns, and beautifully-preserved old-time villages are the summertime pleasures of a Berkshire Hills auto tour.

This AAA trip starts on the Mohawk Trail, once a footpath for Indians. It ends on the Berkshire Trail, a hilly drive which connects the sparkling farm communities west of the Connecticut River.

Old Deerfield Village, a mile-long street of 17th and 18th Century homes, some of them open to visitors, is south of the Mohawk Trail off US 5. The trail, Rte. 2 from Greenfield to North Adams, climbs into the Berkshire Hills where the highlight is the valley view from the look-out at the steep Hairpin Turn. Beyond North Adams a nine-mile auto road winds to the summit of Mt. Greylock.

In Williamstown plan to stretch your legs along the shaded streets near Williams College and in the treasure-filled corridors of the Clark Art Institute. See the buildings and old round barn of the Hancock Shaker community off US 7 west of Pittsfield.

The South Mountain Concerts in Pittsfield and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tanglewood Series in Lenox bring thousands of visitors to this part of the Berkshire Hills on summer week-ends, so advance reservations are needed in motels, inns or guest houses.

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,877

JUN 10 1973

New England Newspaper

The Boston Globe
(MORNING)
D. 261,042 SUN. 566,877

JUN 10 1973

New England Newspaper

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 132,097

JUN 10 1973

New England News

At Tanglewood

Eight weekend programs are planned for the ~~Boston Symphony Orchestra~~ 1973 Berkshire Festival Concerts Series at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

"Weekend Preludes" (7 p.m.) will precede each Friday's p.m. concert, at no extra charge to evening ticket holders.

Saturday concerts begin at 8:30, Sunday programs at 2:30 p.m.

Open rehearsals, in the Shed Saturday mornings (10:30), will benefit the orchestra's pension fund. Seats are unreserved (there is a nominal charge) and available in morning hours.

The programs (subject to change):

- July 6 — Seiji Ozawa conducting, works of Bach; July 7 — Stanislaw Skrowaczewski conducting, Mozart program; July 8 — Ozawa conducting, Haydn's "Creation." (Tanglewood Festival Chorus).
- July 13 — Ozawa conducting, Mozart works; July 14 — Riccardo Muti conducting, Vivaldi and Mozart works; July 15 — Ozawa conducting, Handel, Haydn and Mozart.
- July 20 — Eugene Ormandy conducting, Beethoven; July 21 — Ormandy conducting, Beethoven; July 22 — Skrowaszewski conducting, Beethoven.
- July 27 — William Steinberg conducting, Brahms; July 28 — Steinberg conducting, Schubert, Mahler; July 29 — Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos conducting, Turina, Bartok, Brahms.
- Aug. 3 — Michael Tilson Thomas conducting, Beethoven, Copland; Aug. 4 — Thomas conducting, Stravinsky; Aug. 5 — Thomas, Mozart, Cage, Strauss and Brahms.
- Aug. 10 — Colin Davis conducting, Mozart; Aug. 11 — Davis conducting, Berlioz, Haydn, Brahms; Aug. 12 — Davis conducting, Handel's "Messiah."
- Aug. 17 — Lawrence Foster conducting, Berlioz, Bruch, Prokofieff; Aug. 18 — Arthur Fiedler conducting, Dvorak, Rachmaninoff, Wagner; Aug. 18 — Ozawa conducting, Franck, Liszt.
- Aug. 24 — Ozawa conducting, Berlioz; Aug. 25 — James de Priest, Rachmaninoff, Shostakovich; Aug. 26 — Ozawa conducting, Verdi's "Requiem."

"Tanglewood-on-Parade" is planned for Aug. 14, concerts beginning at 2:30. A gala concert will be presented at 8:30 p.m.

Performing are the Boston Symphony, Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and pianist-narrator Andre Watts, works to include Copland, Liszt, Scott Joplin, Jelly Roll Morton, Duke Ellington, Strauss, and Tchaikovsky.

Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood, Fiedler conducting, will be presented Aug. 21 (8:30 p.m.)

The 1973 activity lists Ozawa as artistic director, Berkshire Festival; Gunther Schuller, Berkshire Music Center; and Leonard Bernstein, adviser.

Ticket information is available through Friday at 1-617-1492, after Friday, 1-413-637-1600.

NEWS-TIMES (E)
DANBURY, CONN.
D. 35,000

JUN 26 1973 New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Berkshire Festival July 6 to Aug. 26. Performances Fridays at 7 and 9 p.m., Saturdays at 8:30, Sundays at 2:30. (Open rehearsal Saturday at 10:30 a.m.).

The following conductors are scheduled:

July 6, Seiji Ozawa	Aug. 4, Thomas
July 7, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski	Aug. 5, Thomas
July 8, Ozawa	Aug. 10, Colin Davis
July 13, Ozawa	Aug. 11, Davis
July 14, Riccardo Muti	Aug. 12, Davis
July 15, Ozawa	Aug. 17, Lawrence Foster
July 20, Eugene Ormandy	Aug. 18, Arthur Fiedler
July 21, Ormandy	Aug. 19, Ozawa
July 22, Skrowaczewski	Aug. 21 (Special), Fiedler and Boston Pops
July 27, William Steinberg	Aug. 24, Ozawa
July 28, Steinberg	Aug. 25, James DePreist
July 29, Rafael Fruhbeck De Burgos	Aug. 26, Ozawa
Aug. 3, Michael Tilson Thomas

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
S. 106,767

JUN 10 1973 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Center Opens

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Some 400 of the world's most talented musicians will assemble for the first time at 2:30 p.m., Sunday, July 1, in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood.

The event will be the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer academy for advanced study.

Most of the young scholars will be between the ages of 19 (or less) and 30. Many will be studying under fellowship grants, awarded after auditions and thorough investigations.

Speaker of the day will be Gunther Schullar, composer, head of the New England Conservatory, and artistic director of the Berkshire Center.

Also on the agenda are greetings from the executive branch of the Boston Symphony, a Tanglewood representative from the Berkshire area, and performance by the Boston Symphony Chamber Ensemble.

Traditionally, the formal session will close with the a cappella singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which he wrote for the opening of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940.

No tickets are required and the public is invited.

THOSE WHOSE memory goes back to the 15 years, beginning in 1925, will likely remember America's then most famous torch and blues singer, Libby Holman.

The Libby Holman Center for the Arts of Boston University will be formally inaugurated June 23 with a Gala at Treetops, the 40-acre estate in Stamford, Conn., bequeathed to the University by the late Miss Holman.

Rise Stevens, Cyril Ritchard and Myrna Loy are honorary chairmen of the gala committee.

The Center is the result of Miss Holman's wish to bring to the community in which she lived the artistic and intellectual resources of Boston University.

In its activities the Center will reflect the wide range of her interests, which extended through all the arts, civil rights movement and United Nations.

The June 23 Gala, beginning at 9 p.m., will feature Anita Ellis singing songs that made Miss Holman famous. She will be accompanied by Gerald Cooke, who was Miss Holman's accompanist in her night club and concert appearances.

Guests will dance to the music of the Meyer Davis orchestra.

Among those expected to attend are Hermione Gingold, Zero Mostel, Ned Rorem, Roddy McDowall and a number of social leaders from Connecticut, New York and Boston.

AMERICAN JAZZ will be honored at the 6th annual International Montreux (Switzerland) Jazz Festival, intermittently between June 29 and July 15.

Purpose is to "recognize the United States as the birthplace of this unique musical form."

It is interesting to see what the Swiss have selected to represent American jazz.

The opening weekend will include a production of "A Night in New Orelans," featuring Dr. John, Professor Longhair, Snooks Eaglin, The Meters and Allen Toussaint.

Among the special events will be a blues and gospel evening by The Consolers; Black Lion's Salute to Swing, featuring Dave Shephard, Kenny Baldok, Brian Lemon, Danny Moss and highlighted by a jam session with Earl Hines.

Miles Davis, Carlos Santana and John McLaughlin headline "Sounds of the 70s," while the Horace Silver Quintet will appear in "Cooking with Blue Note."

FIVE EVENTS have been scheduled for the 1973-1974 University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Council's Celebrity Series.

Ralph Kirkpatrick, harpsichordist, will present two different programs of Oct. 17 and 18; Winner of the Van Cliburn International Piano Competition (being held in Fort Worth, Texas in September) will give a recital on Feb. 13 and 14.

March 20 and 21, the New York Pro Musica will present fully staged productions of the 17th century opera, "La Dafne" by Peri; and concluding event will be a concert by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Robert Gutter, April 25. Piano soloist will be Andre Watts.

TODAY AT 3.30 p.m. is the 21st annual spring festival concert of the Brattleboro (Vt.) Music Center, held in the Marlboro College Auditorium where pianist Rudolf Serkin holds his world famed Marlboro summer festival.

The program is Schubert's Symphony No. 9, "The Great" and the Faure Requiem. Blanche Moyse will conduct.

CONNECTICUT
WESTERN NEWS
CANAAN, CONN.
W. 2,875

JUN 28 1973 New England Newsclip

Music...

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. (413) 637-1600. Tanglewood, one of the finest music festivals in the United States, is also the oldest major music festival in the country. Tanglewood opens this year on July 6 and runs until Aug. 26.

Highlights include a Beethoven Week with guest conductor Eugene Ormandy, Handel's "Messiah" conducted by Colin Davis and Haydn's "Creation" and Verdi's "Requiem" conducted by Seiji Ozawa and performed by Michael Tilson Thomas.

The grounds are open to the public two hours before each concert and picnicking is permitted. Tickets are $3 for the lawn and from $4.50 to $9 for the Music Shed.

BOSTON-PHOENIX
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 100,000

JUN 26 1973 New England Newsclip

Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for some of its performances at Tanglewood this summer.

Tanglewood, Nestled in Berkshire Hills, Is Summer Home of Boston Symphony

By D. K. PINSONNEAULT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has delighted thousands of audiences since its beginnings in 1881, will again be featured at the Berkshire Music Festival on the grounds of Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Although Tanglewood is a good two-hour drive from the Nashua area, the time spent in traveling would be well rewarded for those thirsty for a few hours of the magnificent music which is not so readily accessible here during the summer months.

The festival is eight weeks, usually beginning the first week of July and consists primarily of 24 Boston Symphony concerts on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon each weekend. Seiji Ozawa and Gunther Schuller are the artistic directors of Tanglewood, while Leonard Bernstein is the festival's adviser.

Tanglewood's idyllic setting provides an ideal atmosphere for avid symphony-goers and rock "freaks" alike. The beauty of the countryside and the area's literary history (Longfellow, Holmes and Melville) have continued to attract distinguished residents through the years.

In describing the view from Tanglewood, Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote: "There is a glen between this house and the lake through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls over the great roots of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all dense shadow of obscurity."

In the winter of 1936 the descendants of William Tappan, a Boston banker, who originally owned the land, offered Tanglewood as a gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It's 210 acres of lawn and meadow with the magnificent hemlocks, elms, pines, birches and view, little changed since Hawthorne described it, caused Dr. Koussevitzsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to say: "This is wonderful. We make beautiful music here. Festivals of music grow up for various purposes on a scale commensurate with their surroundings."

The festival committee was successful in raising funds which allowed the 6037-capacity Music Shed to be built and to be inaugurated with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the opening concert at the August, 1938 festival.

The Berkshire Festival now has an annual attendance of nearly a quarter-million visitors during its eight weeks. Each season at Tanglewood thtre are two weeks of chamber orchestra concerts and six weeks of concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra. Each Saturday morning the orchestra's rehearsal is opened to the public for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Pension Institution.

This summer, the festival will be highlighted by a Beethoven weekend with the orchestra being led by Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

While the Berkshire Festival, strictly speaking, is comprised primarily of the 24 Boston Symphony concerts and eight open rehearsals, the Tanglewood season as a whole embraces a vast array of music, including Boston Pops concerts and contemporary trends concerts.

Among those scheduled to appear wil be Roberta Flack, John Denver, Linda Ronstadt, Seals and Crofts, Livingston Taylor, America and jackson Browne.

The series was arranged in an effort to present popular contemporary artists at Tanglewood who will bring diversity to the Symphony's summer program and whose music is particularly appropriate in the beautiful Berkshire setting.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by William Steinberg, is shown at Symphony Hall in Boston, Mass. The orchestra which consists of 95 men and eight women will be giving 24 concerts this summer at the Berkshire Music Festival held at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass. Summer concerts have been offered at Tanglewood since 1938.

TELEGRAPH (E)
NASHUA, N. H.
D. 23,694

JUN 30 1973 New England Newsclip

TOWN CRIER
WAYLAND, MASS.
W. 4,751

JUN 21 1973 New England Newsclip

A Summer Season Of Music Festivals

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Wherever you vacation in the Northeast this summer, concerts are available within commuting distance.

During the past 35 years the summer music season has blossomed to such an extent that the only comparatively inactive months are now June and September.

During July and August, concert artists and conductors tour just as energetically as in the fall, winter and spring.

Many orchestral players and chamber groups are recruited coast-to-coast for summer employment.

Some such orchestral ensembles in this part of the country are operating at Marlboro (Vt.) Music Festival, Dartmouth College Festival, Monadnock Music, and New Hampshire Music Festival in the Lake Winnepesaukee area.

A few, nation-wide, are of the "supermarket" variety — prestigious festivals that draw large audiences, are costly to attend, and feature top-flight symphony orchestras in their "summer homes."

Musical Chairs

For example, the Chicago Symphony at Ravinia, Detroit Symphony at Meadowbrook, Los Angeles Philharmonic at Hollywood Bowl, Philadelphia Orchestra at Saratoga, Cleveland Orchestra at Blossom Center — and Boston Symphony at Tanglewood.

Only one of the dozen festivals we call to your attention is free to the public — Monadnock Music, supported in part by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts and New Hampshire Commission on the Arts.

This summer's new festival is "Baroque Music at Aston Magna," an estate in Great Barrington, Mass., that opened its season of public concerts on June 9.

Three concerts remain — today at 2:30 p.m.; Sat., June 23 at 6 p.m.; and Sunday, June 24 at 2:30 p.m. These are chamber music programs for small groups.

Two giant summer festivals are held in this part of the country — Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., and Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Let's take a look at these and others in Massachusetts and the neighboring states . . .

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL
Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Twenty-four regular concerts by the Boston Symphony will be given from July 6 through Aug. 26, on Fridays, 9 p.m.; Saturdays, 8:30 p.m.; and Sundays, 2:30 p.m.

Friday night concerts will be preceded by a Weekend Prelude (7 p.m.) featuring a soloist or small ensemble.

Ticket holders for the Boston Symphony Friday night concert at 9 p.m. may attend the Prelude without additional charge.

Seats are not reserved in the Music Shed for the Prelude. In the past, Prelude audiences have ranged in size from 2,500 to 6,000-plus.

The first two Boston Symphony weekends will be baroque and classic music by Bach, Vivaldi, Handel, Haydn and Mozart, played by a reduced orchestra.

In recent years, these concerts have drawn increasingly larger audiences. Before 1961 when they were moved to the Shed, opening week audiences ranged from 2,000 to 3,500 in the Theater-Concert Hall.

This summer's Tanglewood conductors are Seiji Ozawa, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Riccardo Muti, Eugene Ormandy, William Steinberg, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, July 29 (who will conduct the Detroit Symphony at the 114th Worcester Festival in October), Michael Tilson Thomas, Colin Davis, Lawrence Foster, Arthur Fiedler and James de Preist.

Highlights are Hayden's "Creation," July 8; all-Beethoven, July 20, 21 and 22; all-Stravinsky, Aug. 1; Handel's "Messiah," Aug. 12; and Verdi's Requiem, Aug. 26.

Other Tanglewood specials are a Festival of Contemporary Music, beginning Aug. 4; Tanglewood-on-Parade, Aug. 14; and the Boston Pops with Fiedler, Aug. 21.

Reserved seats in the Shed range from $4 to $8.50, and admission to the lawn is $3. The address is Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

SARATOGA PERFORMING ARTS CENTER
Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

The New York City Ballet will hold forth from July 3 through July 28.

Performances are daily, Tuesday through Saturday at 8 p.m., with a Saturday matinee at 2 p.m.

The Philadelphia Orchestra will open its Saratoga season Wednesday, Aug. 1, and close Saturday, Aug. 25.

Orchestral programs are Wednesday through Saturday nights at 8 p.m.

Conductors are Ormandy, de Burgos, Andre Kostelanetz, Alexander Gibson, Ozawa, Aldo Ceccato, Robert Benzi and William Smith.

Special orchestral features are all-Brahms, Aug. 1; all-Wagner, Aug. 2; all-Rachmaninoff, Aug. 11; Patricia McBride and Edward Villella, dance soloists, Aug. 15; Benny Goodman and Sextet, Aug. 18; all-Tchaikovsky (Van Cliburn, soloist) Aug. 22; and all-Beethoven, Aug. 23.

Tickets are from $5.25 to $7.75.

NEWPORT MUSIC FESTIVAL
Newport, R.I.

Choice chamber music and operatic programs are given in Newport mansions, such as The Breakers, The Elms, and Marble House.

The season extends from Wednesday, July 25 through Sunday, Aug. 5.

Opening event will be the American premiere of Francois Devienne's opera, "Les Visitandines" at The Breakers.

Performances are daily at 11 a.m., 5 p.m., and 8:30 or 9 p.m.

Although the participants were not selected from the celebrity roster, a high musical standard has been maintained and the atmosphere of great mansions is unmatched.

Character of each program is suggested by a picturesque title:

"A Pitched Camp, Military Miscellany," July 26; "The Sound of Summer," July 27; "England's Green & Pleasant Land," July 27; "Music for the Mind's Eye," July 28; "Grand Balloon Regatta" (accordion concert), July 29; "Keyboard for Two," July 31; American Ballet Theater, Aug. 1; "Apropos Chopin," Aug. 3; and "Viola la Harpe," Aug. 4.

A special "Cruise Concert" will be given, July 28, departing Goat Island Marina at 5 p.m.

A concert in the ballroom of Marble House in Newport, R.I.

MARLBORO MUSIC FESTIVAL
Marlboro, Vt.

As usual, Marlboro Music will not divulge when Pablo Casals will conduct the Saturday, 8:30 p.m. or Sunday, 3 p.m. concerts, between July 7 and Aug. 12.

If the great Casals follows his custom he will be "in residence" at Marlboro at the start of the season — between July 7 and July 15.

In addition to weekly Saturday and Sunday concerts, there will be three or Fridays, July 20, Aug. 3 and 10.

No programs are announced in advance for Marlboro. The summer scholars in residents from several countries rehearse constantly. Sometimes hardly in time for printing the program, they decide what is ready for public performance.

Marlboro Festival sells out months in advance. However, the management welcomes requests for ticket information in the event of cancellations.

The address is Marlboro Music Festival, Marlboro, Vt. 05344.

MONADNOCK MUSIC
Jaffrey, N.H.

James Boile conducts a chamber orchestra. Programs also feature soloists and small ensembles in standard and little-known music.

Advance information is unreliable because of abundant last-minute changes in the past from originally-announced programs.

This is Monadnock's eighth year of summer concerts. This year's will reflect an approach to a major presentation of American music, to climax in 1976 with the celebration of this country's Bi-Centennial.

Concerts are given Thursdays at 8:30 p.m. and Sundays at 4 p.m. in the Jaffrey Meeting House. On Wednesdays, the concerts take place in Nelson Congregational Church.

Other locations are Dublin, Francestown, Harrisville, Keene, Milford, Peterboro, Swanzey, Temple and Walpole.

Opening date is July 18 and concerts

Turn to CONCERTS Page 8E

Tanglewood: 1973

The 1973 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday, July 6, and continues through Sunday, Aug. 26. The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, under the direction of John Oliver, will perform during the Tanglewood season, as will the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

Eugene Ormandy will be at Tanglewood to conduct two all-Beethoven concerts. Principal guest conductors Colin Davis and Michael Tilson Thomas will also be conducting during the summer. Davis will conduct Mozart's Coronation Mass and Handel's Messiah, among other works. Thomas' program will include an all-Stravinsky concert.

Other conductors scheduled to appear include: Arthur Feidler, Lawrence Foster, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Riccardo Muti, James de Priest, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, and William Steinberg.

Brochures listing summer events will be available at Symphony Hall or by mail.

Concerts and Dance Festival

Continued From Page 1E

continue at the rate of four a week through Labor Day weekend.

CONGREGATION OF THE ARTS
Dartmouth College, Hanover, N.H.

Special feature at Dartmouth this summer is the New York Philomusica Chamber Ensemble which will give ten formal concerts in Spaulding Auditorium from July 10 through August 18.

A number of other concerts have been scheduled. The Viennnese pianist Walter Klein will give a recital July 13. Gabriel Chodos will be heard Aug. 11, and the Russian keyboard virtuoso Andor Foldes, Aug. 21.

The New York Chamber Soloists will be at Hanover for a three-day stay, August 3-5. Their Aug. 4 program will be Handel's serenade, "Acis and Galatea."

Dartmouth schedule and ticket information may be obtained from Hopkins Center Box Office, Hanover, N.H. 03755.

MUSIC MOUNTAIN FESTIVAL
Falls Village, Conn.

This is the summer home of the Berkshire Quartet — Ulricco Rossi and Vladimir Weisman, violins; Joseph Reilich, viola; Fritz Magg, cello.

Music Mountain is 33 miles south of Tanglewood, near the intersection of Routes 63 and 126. Chamber music concerts are given in a cathedral-ceilinged hall, 100 feet by 30 feet.

In its seclusion, there isn't a sound for miles to interfere with the music.

Opening date at Music Mountain is June 30 at 3 p.m. Saturday afternoon concerts will continue through Sept. 1, all at 3 p.m. — also Sundays, July 1 and July 29, at 4 p.m.

This summer's guest artists include David Glazor, clarinetist; Ward Davenny, Sidney Foster, Gyorgy Sebok and Walter Roberts, pianists.

FESTIVAL OF THE ARTS
Manchester, Vt.

Five concerts are scheduled for the Louise Ryals Arkell Pavillion in Manchester.

The Lake George Opera Festival Quartet will present arias and ensembles, Sunday, July 15.

Vermont Symphony Orchestra da Camera, conducted by Alan Carter, will present a program Friday, July 27.

Third event in the special series will be the Romeros — Caledonio, the father, and his sons Celin, Pepe and Angel, Friday, Aug. 24.

As an extra event, a concert of orchestral, choral and chamber music by the Kinhaven Music School will be Saturday, July 21.

All these concerts begin at 8:30 p.m., and pianist Chonghyo Shin will be heard Aug. 12 at 3:30 p.m.

YALE CONCERTS IN NORFOLK
Norfolk, Conn.

Associated with the Yale University Summer School of Music and Art, eight performances are scheduled beginning Friday, June 29.

Programs will be given on the next successive Friday evenings — and Sunday concerts, July 8 and a date to be announced.

Concerts are given in the Music Shed and will feature a number of distinguished soloists, Lenox String Quartet, and Litchfield County Choral Union. Concert time is 8:30 p.m.

Tickets range from $4 to $2, with seats in reserved sections.

JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL
Lee, Mass.

Opening performance at world-famous Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lee, Mass. is Tuesday, July 3 at 7:30 p.m.

Featured dancers for the first week are Margot Fonteyn, Rosario Galan and Ballet Espagnol.

Thereafter, through Sept. 1, performances will be Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays at 8:40 p.m.; Thursday and Saturday matinees at 3 p.m. There will be no performances on Thursday evenings.

Some of the highlights:

Hartford Ballet (July 10-14); Twyla Tharp (July 17-21); National Ballet of Washington, D.C. (July 24-28); Melissa Hayden (July 31-Aug. 4); Carmen De Lavallade (Aug. 7-11); Marcia Haydee and Richard Cragun (Aug. 14-18); American Ballet Theater dancers (Aug. 21-25); and the Harkness Ballet (Aug. 28-Sept. 1).

Ticket information can be obtained by writing to Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, Box 287, Lee, Mass. 01238.

Summer scene at Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
JUN 17 1973
New England Newsclip

MUSIC

You don't have to go far to find good concerts

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

HERALD ADVERTISER
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 521,285

JUN 24 1973 New England Newsclip

With fuel shortages and inflated prices of everything facing him this summer, the dedicated concert goer (or balletomane) may find himself less likely to hop in the car, drive several hours, and pay hotel and meal bills to enjoy a performance.

Instead, he may explore the local offerings a little more conscientiously, letting himself get interested in the sometimes off-beat attractions at the same time he is conserving money, gasoline and clean air.

The following, then, are the musical festivals and concert series which he can expect to find, listed according to their proximity to Boston. For those who choose to pooh-pooh the gasoline shortage or whose thick pocketbooks allow them to ignore it or who just want to make one special trip, the list contains those more distant attractions as well.

By Foot, Bike, or MBTA:

ESPLANADE CONCERTS—The traditional two weeks at the Hatch Shell with the Boston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra and conductors Arthur Fiedler and Harry Ellis Dickson. The season begins July 2 at 8:30 p. m. and continues nightly through July 7, with an additional concert July 10. As part of Summerthing, five Esplanade concerts will be given at various neighborhood locations: Bunker Hill, Charlestown, July 11 at 7:30 p. m.; City Hall Plaza, July 12 at noon; Hynes Field, West Roxbury, July 12 at 7:30 p. m.; Towne Field, Dorchester, July 13 at 7:30 p. m.; and Fenway, Boston, July 14 at 7:30 p. m. Two children's concerts at the Hatch Shell are scheduled July 4 and 11 at 10:15 a.m. (Free)

By Auto—2½ hours drive or longer:

TANGLEWOOD—The Boston Symphony's summer concert series in the Berkshires features weekend concerts Friday (7:30 and 9 p. m.), Saturday (8:30 p. m.) and Sunday afternoon (2 p.m.) Conductors include Seiji Ozawa, Eugene Ormandy, Colin Davis, Michael Tilson Thomas and others. Opening weekend, featuring works of Bach, Mozart, and Haydn, is July 7-9. Season extends through Aug. 19.

OBSERVER
GREENVILLE, R. I.
W. 7,800

JUN 21 1973 New England Newsclip

B Lynn

CHERYL ROOST, daughter of Mrs. Herbert Roost and the late Mr. Roost, received her Bachelor of Music degree in Music Education from Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts. A Dean's List student, Cheryl has been accepted at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this summer to further her vocal studies. At Tanglewood she has received grants from both Boston University and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 24,500

JUN 21 1973 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Opens Tanglewood July 6 with Bach, Mozart, Haydn

The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts on Friday, July 6, at 9 pm with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

The concert opens with Bach's 'Brandenburg concerto no. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists. The concert then continues with Cantata no. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy. Although the authority of Cantata no. 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt und preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent scholarship shows that it was in fact probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, and organist in Leipzig between 1705 and 1715. The concert closes with Bah's Cantata no. 52, 'Fasche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, as soloists.

This concert follows the Friday evening 7 pm. Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G, Four chorale preludes, and Passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

On Saturday morning, July 7, at 10:30 am in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning, during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On Saturday, July 7, at 8:30 pm, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tangle wood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program. The concert opens with Adagio and fugue in C minor and is followed by Sinfonia concertante for winds featuring Boston Symphony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Harold Wright, clarinet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon. The concert continues with Mozart's Concert aria for baritone 'Mentre ti lascio, o figlia' with soloist Thomas Stewart and closes with Symphony no. 35 "Haffner".

On Sunday afternoon, July 8 at 2:30 pm, Seiji Ozawa conducts the orchestra in Haydn's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

BOSTON-PHOENIX
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 100,000

JUN 26 1973 New England Newsclip

The Berkshires: Great Outdoor World

By Alec Dubro

Having grown up in the Berkshires, I can tell you right now that the people there don't like Boston. They don't really consider themselves part of Massachusetts, except by fluke, and resent the political control Boston has. They tend to think more in terms of New York when they consider themselves part of a state at all, which they usually don't. And, to tell you the truth, they don't like New Yorkers either.

But, don't be too put off by this. The Berkshires are a nice place to take a vacation. They are charming, varied and easily accessible. If you're driving, either the Turnpike or Rt. 2 will bring you there, with Rt. 2 being the more scenic and interesting road. Many people just think of the area in Berkshire County as the Berkshires, but the Berkshires extend from the Connecticut Valley west to the New York state line. Berkshire County is where all the famous and hot-shot cultural things are, but the area east of that is just as fine and a lot less crowded in the summer. For people fed up with city driving, the back roads are great for meandering around and nothing is that far from anything else.

Naturally, the following guide is limited and rather selective. Very complete listings can be obtained in UpCountry, the Berkshire Eagle's summer supplement. There are also tourist information stands in many of the towns and cities. A quick note to the Berkshire Hills Conference, 107 South St., Pittsfield, MA 01201 will bring you reams of gushingly descriptive prose about and numbers for the Berkshires. Most of the listings presuppose that you have a few bucks to spend. But, since the Berkshires are reasonably close to Boston — 3 hours drive — you can tool up for a weekend and not spend too much. You can even come just for the Great Outdoors and spend nearly nothing.

Let's assume that you want to do up the Berkshires in the Grand Manner, within reason. The facilities are more than adequate: until the Depression, the Berkshires were a summer playground for some of the wildly successful robber barons. The County abounds with palatial estates which were, in their day, egregious temples to plutocracy and monopoly capitalism run riot, but which are today, in our thirst for a non-shiny past, funky. J.P. Morgan and his ilk, had they lived, would have seen their respective Xanadus turned into museums, restaurants, resorts and summer camps. And you, a touring urbanite, with two weeks' wages to spend, can have the run of many of these.

Much of this, and of the commercial cultural summerthings, lie in the southern part of Berkshire County — what we called Down County. The hotels, etc. are profuse. If you can do without a Catskills-type atmosphere, though, and want to save some bread, try those locals who rent rooms on a daily or weekly basis.

I advise you not to confine yourself to these areas but rather to explore. The Berkshires have a lot to offer.

Music

Tanglewood. This is the Big One. The summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and, simultaneously, many lesser classical lights. Tanglewood occupies a huge piece of turf astride the Lenox-Stockbridge line. On weekend nights the departing crowds on Rt. 183 bring to mind the burning of Atlanta, such are their size.

Founded in 1934, the oldest classical festival, Nathaniel Hawthorne lived on these grounds in his day and remarked on their splendor. There is a formal garden, not quite Marienbad, but nice, a huge lawn and a view of Stockbridge Bowl.

This summer Seiji Ozawa is the Berkshire Festival Director and will conduct the B.S.O. frequently. Besides the B.S.O., there will be the Boston Pops, choral works, Gunther Schuller and more.

As kids, we used to climb the fence, but you are advised to send for tickets. Write the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, MA 01240. Or call (413) 637-1600.

The Lenox Arts Center. Jazz and rock. Big name rock and folk people will be featured this year each Saturday at 6 P.M. in the Twilight Concert series produced by Folklore Productions in Boston. Prices are down to $3 this year.

In the Cabaret, Vishnu Wood is running the Safari East Concert Workshop five or six nights a week. This will trace the history of jazz. There will also be an ongoing workshop and group lessons.

It isn't music, but the Orson Welles film school of Cambridge will be doing old and new films in the 350 seat theater.

Other. Rock music can be found at various bars. Mundy's in Stockbridge, Bousquet's (in winter a ski area) in Pittsfield, and Woody's in Washington are noted for crowds, thick smoke and loud, loud music. Others can be found.

PATRIOT LEDGER (E)
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 71,020

JUN 29 1973 New England Newsclip

Music, Music, Wherever You Go

By Sara Kane

Almost anywhere vacationers may go in the United States this summer, from the Berkshires to the Colorado Rockies, there will be a concert series nearby. Here's a survey of seasonal music in New England, with glances farther afield:

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer season at Tanglewood in Lenox begins July 6 through August 26. The 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills has been the summer home of the Symphony and the Berkshire Music Festival since the 1930s. Concerts will be Friday at 9 p.m., Saturday at 8:30 p.m. and Sundays at 2:30 p.m. in the Music Shed. Weekend preludes, held two hours before the Friday concert, present guest artists and BSO members in short recitals. Open rehearsals on Saturday at 10:30 a.m., with unreserved seats, offer a relaxed look at the conductor, orchestra, and guest artists in a practice session.

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston pops at Tanglewood on Tuesday Aug. 21. Tickets and program information available through the Berkshire Festival Ticket Offices at Symphony Hall, Boston, or at Tanglewood, Lenox.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, will be part of the Saratoga Festival performing Aug. 1-25. Included in the schedule are an all-Brahms program, an all-Wagner program, an all-Gershwin program, an all-Rachmaninoff program, an all-Tchaikovsky program and all-Beethoven program as well as varied programs of 19th and 20th century music. Performances are: every Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m.

The Marlboro Music Festival, which brings together musicians from all over the world under Rudolf Serkin's direction each summer in Marlboro, Vermont, opens its 23rd season on Saturday, July 7. Chamber orchestra and chamber music concerts will be given on Saturdays at 8:30 p.m. and Sundays at 3 p.m. through Aug. 12, with three Friday concerts scheduled for July 20, Aug. 3 and Aug. 10 at 8:30 p.m. The concert on July 20 will feature a program of Bach Cantatas conducted by Blanche Honegger-Moyse. The dates of concerts which Pablo Casals will conduct are not known in advance. Concerts are usually sold out well in advance, but a limited number of rush tickets are available before each concert.

The Newport Music Festival in Rhode Island presents a program of over 30 concert, ballet, opera, film and special events through Aug. 5. The American premiere of "Les Visitandines" a French opera by composer Francois Devianne will open the festival on Wednesday July 25 at 8:30 p.m. in the Great Hall of The Breakers, Newport's Vanderbilt mansion. Every morning at 9:30, a film series will be shown (in thirteen parts) at the O'Hare Center entitles: "America: A Personal History." The schedule of the music festival includes four programs a day with such featured artists as: The Bergson Trio, the Metropolitan Opera Studio, Berj Zamkochian, and the Ballet Repertory Company.

Two festivals in Ontario, Canada, begin at the start of July. Festival Canada '73 at the National Arts Center in Ottawa commences Monday with opera, ballet, theater, orchestral and chamber music concerts, through July 30. The Stratford Festival at Stratford, Ont., has Saturday morning and midnight concerts along with all day programs, beginning July 7 and continuing through Aug. 25. The New York Philharmonic, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas, will perform at the festival July 20, and the Chicago Symphony will play Aug. 12.

Southeastern Massachusetts University is presenting a summer Music Performance Festival on the campus in North Dartmouth through July 21. The programs include music by Haydn, Beethoven, Dvorak, Mozart, Handel, Chopin and Schubert. Featured artists will be members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, faculty from New England Conservatory, The Wheaton Trio and others. The schedule is: June 30 at 8 p.m.; July 1 at 5 p.m.; July 4 and 8; July 7 at 8; July 8 at 5 p.m.; July 10 at 8 p.m., July 12 at 8 p.m.; July 14 at 8 p.m.; July 15 at 5 p.m.; July 18 at 8 p.m. On Sat., July 21 at 4 p.m. a discussion session with the Dave Brubeck Trio and Darius Brubeck, who will be performing later on that evening will be held.

The White Mountains Art and Music Festival takes place at the Waumbek Tent, Jefferson, N.H., Aug. 10-19. The program is: Aug. 10 — Opening Night Gala Concert with the Franconia Summermusic Orchestra and soloists; Aug. 11 — The orchestra in a different program; Aug. 12 — a Bach, Beethoven and Brahms concert with the Berlin Chorus; Aug. 13 — The New Hampshire Festival Orchestra of Center Harbor, with vocal soloists; Aug. 14 — Phillip Setzer, violin; Gita Karasik, piano and the Franconia Orchestra; Aug. 15 — Monadnock Festival Orchestra featuring baroque instruments; Aug. 16 — composer George Crumb and pianist David Burge with the Franconia Orchestra; Aug. 17 Portland Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Paul Vermel, in an all-Gershwin Concert. Exhibitions of sculpture, prints, ceremics and weaving by students of Franconia College can be seen each day from 10 a.m. - 5 p.m. All concerts begin at 8:30 p.m.

Yale University's Norfolk summer school concerts begin Friday, June 29, in Norfolk, Conn., with a program of Debussy, Beethoven and Paganini. Performances by various artists will be every Friday at 8:30 p.m. through Aug. 3, at the Music Shed on the Ellen Battell Stoeckel estate. Amoung the artists are Syoko Aki, Elias Carmen, Keith Wilson, Yehudi Wyner, Otto Werner Mueller, the Lenox Quartet and the Litchfield County Choral Union, and they will present works of Ravel, Hindemith, Bartok, Telemann, Stravinsky, Britten, Haydn and Schubert. Two Sunday concerts will be held July 8 and Aug. 5 at 3:30 p.m.

The summer season of Monadnock Music, directed by James Golle will run from July 18 - Sept. 2 with concerts being given in 11 towns around the group's home base in Jaffrey, N.H. Among the musicians featured: Linda Cummisky, violin, from New York; John Gibbons, harpsichordist from the Boston Museum of Fine Arts; Nathan Schwartz, pianist, from Boston; Bonnie Hampton, cellist from Boston; and several guests from the Minnesota Symphony.

"The 1960's British Rock Invasion Revisited," takes place Sunday night at 8 p.m. at the Cape Cod Coliseum in South Yarmouth. A lineup of the original top pre-Beatle acts that spearheaded the British music invasion of the '60s includes: Herman's Hermits, Gerry and the Pacemakers, Wayne Fontana and the Mindbenders, Billy J. Kramer, and The Searchers. Tickets are available at the Cape Cod Coliseum, 225 White's Path South Yarmouth, Mass

The other Berkshires: A place to go for all reasons

By Richard Burgin
Globe Correspondent

GLOBE (E)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 195,032
JUN 27 1973
New England Newsclip

SO. SHORE MIRROR
SCITUATE, MASS.
W. 16,713
JUN 28 1973
New England Newsclip

The 39th year of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood opens next week, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra giving eight weekends of concerts in the spacious Music Shed. The Berkshire Music Center is the Boston Symphony's summer school for the advanced study of music, with gifted young musicians from all over the world gathering for an eight-week study and performing session. The Artistic Directors are Seiji Ozawa, Berkshire Festival, Gunther Schuller, Berkshire Music Center, and Leonard Bernstein, Advisor.

* * * *

A WEEKLY FEATURE BY KAY LEBEAU

NOTES FROM UNDERGROUND

You can understand it through the metaphor of your choice or without a metaphor at all, because there are many ways to understand it. For me, when I feel it acutely, it's as if the city becomes a giant winding parchesi board and I suddenly feel compelled to move towards a safety space. I've heard others speak of it as a need for water or hills, for rest or for motion. It is one of our habits to still make apologies for our migrations.

However you understand it, on July 6 when the Boston Symphony begins its summer music festival at Tanglewood another series of migrations will begin. If advance ticket sales offer an indication, more people than ever (many of them from the Greater Boston area) will find their way to the Berkshires, hoping to reap the benefits of instant nature and instant culture, hoping, as it were, for rest, motion, water, hills, and light.

I am certainly a music lover but I no longer think of the Boston Symphony Concerts as the most important thing about the Berkshires. To begin with the same works by the same composers are generally performed each summer (though next year's Ives-Schoenberg festival promises to be an exception), and the rather Wagerian spectacle of 5000 or 10,000 people eating overpriced lunches on the lawns, fondling post cards of Leonard Bernstein or Seiji Ozawa and washing it all away with a coke (all this accompanied by Das Lied Von der Erde) has vulgar moments in it as well as beautiful ones.

But there is another Berkshires which is always there but is often missed by the weekend visitor who comes to hear the Boston Symphony with perhaps a side trip included to Jacob's Pillow or the Clark Art Museum in Williamstown. This is the Berkshires which has attracted artists like Norman Mailer or Arthur Penn, or a thinker like Erik Erikson, and most importantly a community of people who live and work there every day.

As you might have guessed, in this other Berkshires you slow down, the rhythm of your mind and body alters, you may even begin to believe in Thoreau again. In the woods of this natural setting a real culture does exist and it is the blending, the interrelationship of this culture with the natural world which makes the Berkshires unique.

But what specifically can it really offer you? To answer this is difficult, for I wonder if it's possible any longer to adequately describe a positive experience? After all, is there any art now which is not the art of negation, indeed is there any communication which is not a reaction against a negative force? I'll take a cue from Borges who believes that he can't express anything (in the true sense of the word) but only make allusions.

The Berkshires offers you air, solitude, birds, horses, fish, music, trees, time, a glimpse of the original colors and harmony of our planet, and in that glimpse the possibility of a renewed sense of yourself.

Let me offer some suggestions and approaches to this "other Berkshires". Take a canoe ride on Lake Makeenac out to "The Island" (you can't miss it).

Attend some Fromm Music Festival concerts devoted to contemporary music. Many of the Boston Symphony concerts are superb but a meaningful balance of the contemporary with the classic is certainly desirable. Talk to some of the Berkshire Music Center students who come from all over the world to study at Tanglewood.

For the sports minded, go to Shadowbrook. It used to be a Jesuit Seminary and it's now absolutely vacant land featuring what may be the world's most beautiful outdoor basketball court overlooking Lake Makeenac and the surrounding hills.

For the bird watcher, go to Pleasant Valley Sanctuary.

For the artist, visit the Lavender Door Shop, which sells hand made weaving, macrame, pottery, and paintings. Many of the patients of the neighboring Riggs Institute (which Erikson is associated with) use its facilities and sell their work there. Limited to 41 patients, Riggs combines a highly innovative approach of maximum freedom with strict enforcement of rules and intensive psychotherapy. If they wish, patients can socialize freely with each other, members of the staff or residents in town. I think it's worth finding out about because it illustrates the way a private institution can be successfully integrated into the community around it.

The Observer-Dispatch
UTICA, N. Y.
D. 45,005 SUN. 58,143
JUN 24 1973

Other Summer Fun

Friday, June 29, Adirondack Championship Rodeo, Painted Pony Arena, Lake Luzerne, through July 1.

Saturday, July 14, Rodeo, Snowmobile Park, Old Forge, also on Sunday.

Sunday, July 22, Annual International Seaway Festival, Ogdensburg, through July 29.

Friday, Aug. 31, Annual Labor Day Ice Operetta, Olympic Arena, Lake Placid, through Sept. 1.

Far Away Places

Tanglewood 1973 will host the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Seiji Ozawa conducting and many guest artists making solo appearances starting July 6 through Aug. 26. For information contact, Tanglewood 1973, Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

Margot Fonteyn will be dancing up a summer storm in Jacob's Pillow along with other dancing greats such as Melissa Hayden and Marcia Haydee. The gala opening week with Fonteyn is July 3-7 with performances until Sept. 1. For information write, Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, Box 287, Lee, Mass. 01238.

The Chautauqua Amphitheater will be hosting many big name music people this summer including Bill Cosby, Paul Winter Consort, pianist Leon Bates and others. Write Chautauqua Festival Chautauqua, N.Y., 14722.

Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew," "Othello," and "Pericles," and Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer" are just some of the plays included in the 1973 Stratford Festival. Write Stratford Festival, Stratford, Ontario.

TIMES (E)
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514
JUN 20 1973
New England Newsclip

CRITIC'S CHOICE

A Look At The Concert Season

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

Every year about this time, in the newspaper dodge, we indulge in a harmless conceit known as Critics Choice.

The game is simple. The sybaritic feast that waits for the music lover in this area is considered and then some of the concerts are chosen as being particularly valuable to the concert-goer and are therefore recommended.

What makes the whole effort dubious is the nature of the concert-goer. I may, with clear conscience, choose say eight or 10 that appear to me noteworthy, but out there in newspaper land are thousands of music lovers who have never taken anybody's word for anything concerning music, especially music critics. It is, after all, a game of highly personal likes and dislikes, and someone else could (and no doubt, will) make up his own list, and if he believes in it, it will have more value to him than anything I might concoct.

BUT THAT fact, the independence of the music lover, will not stop me from making my list.

Among the sixteen concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra at Saratoga are three concerts, all including a big chorus, that will present works almost never heard outside the big cities, to wit: Aug. 8, Frubeck de Burgos conducting De Falla's complete opera in concert form, "La Vida Breve" with soloists and flamenco singers, guitarists and dancers; Aug. 17, Verdi's lovely "Four Sacred Pieces" conducted by Aldo Ceccato, (you'll love him ladies) and Brock McElheran and the Saratoga - Potsdam Chorus. And it is difficult not to include an All-Beethoven program on Aug. 23, that includes the Symphony No. 3 and the Concerto for Piano No. 5 (Emperor) with a fine pianist William Masselos in his first performance in these parts.

And from the point of view of the big hter, there is Van Cliburn on Aug. 22 playing (guess!) the Tchaikowsky Piano Concerto.

A WEEK from tomorrow, Stanley Hummel will open the Connoisseur Series in the Casino in the Park with one of his special piano recitals in the Romantic tradition.

To continue the choral accent, Tanglewood will also present some great choral works. July 8, Haydn's "Creation" with soloists and the fine Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director. Aug. 4, Stravinsky's "Canticum Sacrum" and the "Symphony of Psalms." Aug. 10, Mozart's "Coronation Mass" and on Aug. 12, Handel's "Messiah." For those who believe George Bernard Shaw, ("I think I will die before I ever hear this great work done properly") perhaps this will be the time because Colin Davis who directs is a top-flight conductor who, like few others, understands the choral idiom.

Lake George Opera Festival will present four operas, three of which are old friends, "Rigoletto", "Tosca" and "The Barber of Seville", but also "The Crucible by Robert Ward taken from the play by Arthur Miller which should be a new experience for some of us.

THERE IS not much to be said about Marlboro Music Festival in Marlboro, Vt. that has not already been said. All of the Festival Concerts are sold out as is generally the case, but there are limited number of seats outside the hall for $2.50 that offer only partial line of sight and limited hearing. Pablo Casals will be in residence but his appearances are never scheduled in advance. Blanche Honegger - Moyse will direct a special Bach Cantata program on July 20 for which, at this writing there are some tickets available.

A new series, called the Aston Magna Foundation for Music is starting this summer in Great Barrington Mass., and already it has had some trouble with local folks who envision a landscape littered with beer cans and androgynous youth flaked out on the village green. At any rate the zoning laws have been interpreted to the letter which left the Foundation without a home for a while but now for the nonce at any rate they are in residence at St. James Episcopal Church in Great Barrington.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUN 24 1973

REVIEW
DARIEN, CONN.
W. 4,300
JUN 21 1973
New England Newsclip

Ozawa Conducts Opening

The Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts on Friday, July 6 at 9:00 p.m. with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

On Saturday morning, July 7 at 10:30 a.m. in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On Saturday, July 7 at 8:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program.

On Sunday afternoon, July 8 at 2:30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa conducts the Orchestra in Haydn's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

TIMES
PEABODY, MASS.
W. 6,043
JUN 20 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood season opens July 6

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS—The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts on Friday, July 6 at 9 p.m. with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

The concert opens with Bach's Brandenburg concerto no. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists.

The concert then continues with Cantata no. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy. Although the authorship of Cantata no. 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt und preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent scholarship shows that it was in fact probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, an organist in Leipzig between 1705 and 1715.

The concert closes with Bach's Cantata no. 52 'Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, as soloists.

This concert follows the Friday evening 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G, four chorale preludes, and Passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

On Saturday morning, July 7 at 10:30 a.m. in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On Saturday, July 7 at 8:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Ganrud Arist-in-Residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with Adagio and fugue in C minor and is followed by Sinfonia concertante for winds featuring Boston Symphony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Harold Wright, clarinet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

The concert continues with Mozart's Concert aria for baritone 'Mentre ti lascio, o figlia' with soloist Thomas Steward, and closes with Symphony no. 35 "Haffner".

On Sunday afternoon, July 8 at 2:30 p.m.; Seiji Ozawa conducts the Orchestra in Hayden's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

Tanglewood season opens July 6

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS—The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts on Friday, July 6 at 9 p.m. with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

The concert opens with Bach's Brandenburg concerto no. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists.

The concert then continues with Cantata no. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy. Although the authorship of Cantata no. 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt und preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent scholarship shows that it was in fact probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, an organist in Leipzig between 1705 and 1715.

The concert closes with Bach's Cantata no. 52 'Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, as soloists.

This concert follows the Friday evening 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G, four chorale preludes, and Passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

On Saturday morning, July 7 at 10:30 a.m. in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On Saturday, July 7 at 8:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Ganrud Arist-in-Residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with Adagio and fugue in C minor and is followed by Sinfonia concertante for winds featuring Boston Symphony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Harold Wright, clarinet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

The concert continues with Mozart's Concert aria for baritone 'Mentre ti lascio, o figlia' with soloist Thomas Steward, and closes with Symphony no. 35 "Haffner".

On Sunday afternoon, July 8 at 2:30 p.m.; Seiji Ozawa conducts the Orchestra in Hayden's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The other Berkshires: A place to go for all reasons

By Richard Burgin
Globe Correspondent

GLOBE (E)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 195,032
JUN 27 1973
New England Newsclip

SO. SHORE MIRROR
SCITUATE, MASS.
W. 16,713
JUN 28 1973
New England Newsclip

The 39th year of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood opens next week, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra giving eight weekends of concerts in the spacious Music Shed. The Berkshire Music Center is the Boston Symphony's summer school for the advanced study of music, with gifted young musicians from all over the world gathering for an eight-week study and performing session. The Artistic Directors are Seiji Ozawa, Berkshire Festival, Gunther Schuller, Berkshire Music Center, and Leonard Bernstein, Advisor.

* * * *

A WEEKLY FEATURE BY KAY LEBEAU

NOTES FROM UNDERGROUND

You can understand it through the metaphor of your choice or without a metaphor at all, because there are many ways to understand it. For me, when I feel it acutely, it's as if the city becomes a giant winding parchesi board and I suddenly feel compelled to move towards a safety space. I've heard others speak of it as a need for water or hills, for rest or for motion. It is one of our habits to still make apologies for our migrations.

However you understand it, on July 6 when the Boston Symphony begins its summer music festival at Tanglewood another series of migrations will begin. If advance ticket sales offer an indication, more people than ever (many of them from the Greater Boston area) will find their way to the Berkshires, hoping to reap the benefits of instant nature and instant culture, hoping, as it were, for rest, motion, water, hills, and light.

I am certainly a music lover but I no longer think of the Boston Symphony Concerts as the most important thing about the Berkshires. To begin with the same works by the same composers are generally performed each summer (though next year's Ives-Schoenberg festival promises to be an exception), and the rather Wagerian spectacle of 5000 or 10,000 people eating overpriced lunches on the lawns, fondling post cards of Leonard Bernstein or Seiji Ozawa and washing it all away with a coke (all this accompanied by Das Lied Von der Erde) has vulgar moments in it as well as beautiful ones.

But there is another Berkshires which is always there but is often missed by the weekend visitor who comes to hear the Boston Symphony with perhaps a side trip included to Jacob's Pillow or the Clark Art Museum in Williamstown. This is the Berkshires which has attracted artists like Norman Mailer or Arthur Penn, or a thinker like Erik Erikson, and most importantly a community of people who live and work there every day.

As you might have guessed, in this other Berkshires you slow down, the rhythm of your mind and body alters, you may even begin to believe in Thoreau again. In the midst of this natural setting a real culture does exist and it is the blending, the interrelationship of this culture with the natural world which makes the Berkshires unique.

But what specifically can it really offer you? To answer this is difficult, for I wonder if it's possible any longer to adequately describe a positive experience? After all, is there any art now which is not the art of negation, indeed is there any communication which is not a reaction against a negative force? I'll take a cue from Borges who believes that he can't express anything (in the true sense of the word) but only make allusions.

The Berkshires offers you air, solitude, birds, horses, fish, music, trees, time, a glimpse of the original colors and harmony of our planet, and in that glimpse the possibility of a renewed sense of yourself.

Let me offer some suggestions and approaches to this "other Berkshires". Take a canoe ride on Lake Makeenac out to "The Island" (you can't miss it).

Attend some Fromm Music Festival concerts devoted to contemporary music. Many of the Boston Symphony concerts are superb but a meaningful balance of the contemporary with the classic is certainly desirable. Talk to some of the Berkshire Music Center students who come from all over the world to study at Tanglewood.

For the sports minded, go to Shadowbrook. It used to be a Jesuit Seminary and it's now absolutely vacant land featuring what may be the world's most beautiful outdoor basketball court overlooking Lake Makeenac and the surrounding hills.

For the bird watcher, go to Pleasant Valley Sanctuary.

For the artist, visit the Lavender Door Shop, which sells hand made weaving, macrame, pottery, and paintings. Many of the patients of the neighboring Riggs Institute (which Erikson is associated with) use its facilities and sell their work there. Limited to 41 patients, Riggs combines a highly innovative approach of maximum freedom with strict enforcement of rules and intensive psychotherapy. If they wish, patients can socialize freely with each other, members of the staff or residents in town. I think it's worth finding out about because it illustrates the way a private institution can be successfully integrated into the community around it.

The Observer-Dispatch
UTICA, N. Y.
D. 45,605 SUN. 58,143
JUN 24 1973

Other Summer Fun

Friday, June 29, Adirondack Championship Rodeo, Painted Pony Arena, Lake Luzerne, through July 1.

Saturday, July 14, Rodeo, Snowmobile Park, Old Forge, also on Sunday.

Sunday, July 22, Annual International Seaway Festival, Ogdensburg, through July 29.

Friday, Aug. 31, Annual Labor Day Ice Operetta, Olympic Arena, Lake Placid, through Sept. 1.

Far Away Places

Tanglewood 1973 will host the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Seiji Ozawa conducting and many guest artists making solo appearances starting July 6 through Aug. 26. For information contact, Tanglewood 1973, Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

Margot Fonteyn will be dancing up a summer storm in Jacob's Pillow along with other dancing greats such as Melissa Hayden and Marcia Haydee. The gala opening week with Fonteyn is July 3-7 with performances until Sept. 1. For information write, Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, Box 287, Lee, Mass. 01238.

The Chautauqua Amphitheater will be hosting many big name music people this summer including Bill Cosby, Paul Winter Consort, pianist Leon Bates and others. Write Chautauqua Festival Chautauqua, N.Y., 14722.

Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew," "Othello," and "Pericles," and Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer" are just some of the plays included in the 1973 Stratford Festival. Write Stratford Festival, Stratford, Ontario.

TIMES (E)
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514
JUN 20 1973

CRITIC'S CHOICE

A Look At The Concert Season

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

Every year about this time, in the newspaper dodge, we indulge in a harmless conceit known as Critics Choice.

The game is simple. The sybaritic feast that waits for the music lover in this area is considered and then some of the concerts are chosen as being particularly valuable to the concert-goer and are therefore recommended.

What makes the whole effort dubious is the nature of the concert-goer. I may, with clear conscience, choose say eight or 10 that appear to me noteworthy, but out there in newspaper land are thousands of music lovers who have never taken anybody's word for anything concerning music, especially music critics. It is, after all, a game of highly personal likes and dislikes, and someone else could (and no doubt, will) make up his own list, and if he believes in it, it will have more value to him than anything I might concoct.

BUT THAT fact, the independence of the music lover, will not stop me from making my list.

Among the sixteen concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra at Saratoga are three concerts, all including a big chorus, that will present works almost never heard outside the big cities, to wit: Aug. 8, Frubeck de Burgos conducting De Falla's complete opera in concert form, "La Vida Breve" with soloists and flamenco singers, guitarists and dancers; Aug. 17, Verdi's lovely "Four Sacred Pieces" conducted by Aldo Ceccato, (you'll love him ladies) and Brock McElheran and the Saratoga - Potsdam Chorus. And it is difficult not to include an All-Beethoven program on Aug. 23, that includes the Symphony No. 3 and the Concerto for Piano No. 5 (Emperor) with a fine pianist William Masselos in his first performance in these parts.

And from the point of view of the big hitter, there is Van Cliburn on Aug. 22 playing (guess!) the Tchaikowsky Piano Concerto.

A WEEK from tomorrow, Stanley Hummel will open the Connoisseur Series in the Casino in the Park with one of his special piano recitals in the Romantic tradition.

To continue the choral accent, Tanglewood will also present some great choral works. July 8, Haydn's "Creation" with soloists and the fine Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director. Aug. 4, Stravinsky's "Canticum Sacrum" and the "Symphony of Psalms." Aug. 10, Mozart's "Coronation Mass" and on Aug. 12, Handel's "Messiah." For those who believe George Bernard Shaw, ("I think I will die before I ever hear this great work done properly") perhaps this will be the time because Colin Davis who directs is a top-flight conductor who, like few others, understands the choral idiom.

Lake George Opera Festival will present four operas, three of which are old friends, "Rigoletto", "Tosca" and "The Barber of Seville". but also "The Crucible by Robert Ward taken from the play by Arthur Miller which should be a new experience for some of us.

THERE IS not much to be said about Marlboro Music Festival in Marlboro, Vt. that has not already been said. All of the Festival Concerts are sold out as is generally the case, but there are limited number of seats outside the hall for $2.50 that offer only partial line of sight and limited hearing. Pablo Casals will be in residence but his appearances are never scheduled in advance. Blanche Honegger - Moyse will direct a special Bach Cantata program on July 20 for which, at this writing there are some tickets available.

A new series, called the Aston Magna Foundation for Music is starting this summer in Great Barrington Mass., and already it has had some trouble with local folks who envision a landscape littered with beer cans and androgynous youth flaked out on the village green. At any rate the zoning laws have been interpreted to the letter which left the Foundation without a home for a while but now for the nonce at any rate they are in residence at St. James Episcopal Church in Great Barrington.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUN 24 1973

JUN 21 1973
New England Newsclip

Ozawa Conducts Opening

The Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts on Friday, July 6 at 9:00 p.m. with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

On Saturday morning, July 7 at 10:30 a.m. in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On Saturday, July 7 at 8:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program.

On Sunday afternoon, July 8 at 2:30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa conducts the Orchestra in Haydn's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

Tanglewood season opens July 6

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS—The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts on Friday, July 6 at 9 p.m. with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

The concert opens with Bach's Brandenburg concerto no. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists.

The concert then continues with Cantata no. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy. Although the authorship of Cantata no. 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt und preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent scholarship shows that it was in fact probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, an organist in Leipzig between 1705 and 1715.

The concert closes with Bach's Cantata no. 52 'Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, as soloists.

This concert follows the Friday evening 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G, four chorale preludes, and Passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

On Saturday morning, July 7 at 10:30 a.m. in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On Saturday, July 7 at 8:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Ganrud Arist-in-Residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with Adagio and fugue in C minor and is followed by Sinfonia concertante for winds featuring Boston Symphony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Harold Wright, clarinet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

The concert continues with Mozart's Concert aria for baritone 'Mentre ti lascio, o figlia' with soloist Thomas Steward, and closes with Symphony no. 35 "Haffner".

On Sunday afternoon, July 8 at 2:30 p.m.; Seiji Ozawa conducts the Orchestra in Hayden's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

JUN 20 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood season opens July 6

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS—The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts on Friday, July 6 at 9 p.m. with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

The concert opens with Bach's Brandenburg concerto no. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists.

The concert then continues with Cantata no. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy. Although the authorship of Cantata no. 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt und preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent scholarship shows that it was in fact probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, an organist in Leipzig between 1705 and 1715.

The concert closes with Bach's Cantata no. 52 'Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, as soloists.

This concert follows the Friday evening 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G, four chorale preludes, and Passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

On Saturday morning, July 7 at 10:30 a.m. in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On Saturday, July 7 at 8:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Ganrud Arist-in-Residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with Adagio and fugue in C minor and is followed by Sinfonia concertante for winds featuring Boston Symphony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Harold Wright, clarinet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

The concert continues with Mozart's Concert aria for baritone 'Mentre ti lascio, o figlia' with soloist Thomas Steward, and closes with Symphony no. 35 "Haffner".

On Sunday afternoon, July 8 at 2:30 p.m.; Seiji Ozawa conducts the Orchestra in Hayden's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

Short Drive To Tanglewood Worthwhile Summer Trip

One of the most worthwhile drives a music-lover might take during the summer months is the short trip over the beautiful Berkshire Mountains to Tanglewood.

Tanglewood, an estate of 210 acres in the Berkshires, was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the 1930's and is world famous as the summer home of this outstanding orchestra, the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, and advanced school for the study of music.

Nathaniel Hawthorne lived on the Tanglewood grounds and once wrote he could barely work in the presence of such scenic beauty. It is nearly unchanged today.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra performs in the famous Tanglewood Shed, but many listeners prefer to relax with blankets and folding chairs on the lawn.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, will open July 6 with Seiji Ozawa, artistic director, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, including the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, the Concerto for Two Violins and the Cantatas No. 189 and 52. Joseph Siverstein and Jerome Rosen will be the violin soloist while vocalists Seth McCoy and Benita Valente will be heard on the cantatas.

Tanglewood concerts by the Boston Symphony are presented Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons for eight straight summer weekends.

An abbreviated Boston Symphony Orchestra is heard for the first two weekends and these programs generally features the music of baroque and classic composers.

Nine of the 24 concerts will feature the music of a single composer. The music of Mozart will be heard July 7 and 13. Brahms will be featured on July 27, Stravinsky on Aug. 4, Berlioz on Aug. 24 and the entire weekend of July 20-22 will feature the music of Beethoven.

Guest conductors who will be heard at Tanglewood include Stanislaw Skrowaczewske, Riccardo Muti, Eugene Ormandy, William Steinberg, Raphael Frubeck DeBurgos, Lawrence Foster, Arthur Fiedler and James DePreist.

Two conductors will be featured for an entire weekend. These are Michael Tilson Thomas, who will conduct Aug. 3-5, and Colin Davis, who will conduct Aug. 10-12.

Six outstanding piano soloists will be heard in various programs throughout the season, including Andre Watts, Philippe Entremont, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Earl Wild and Byron Janis.

Visiting violin soloists include Sidney Harth, who wll be heard on the Beethoven Concerto July 22, and Miriam Fried who will play the Brahms Concerto July 22.

Vocal soloists to be heard will be Thomas Stewart, Benita Valente, Seth McCoy, Phillis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Pete Lagger, Kenneth Riegel, David Evitts, Helen Watts, Ryland Davies Mallory Walker, Victor Braun, Lou Ann Wyckoff anfd Maureen Forrester.

Open rehearsals by the Boston Symphony are held every Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Friday evening performances of the Boston Symphony begin at 9 p.m. and are preceeded by a weekend Prelude Concert which begins at 7 p.m. Weekend preludes present guest artists and members of the Boston Symphony in short recitals offered at no extra charge to ticket holders.

Weekend preludes scheduled this season include performances by Larry Smith on July 6; Malcolm Frager on July 13; Andre Watts on July 20; Peter Lagger on July 27; the Tanglewood Festival Chorus on Aug. 3; Phyllis Curtin and Ryan Edwards on Aug. 10; Earl Wild on Aug. 17, and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players on Aug. 24.

The beautiful Tanglewood grounds are open two hours before every major concert. The grounds are serviced by a cafeteria, and picnicking on the grounds is encouraged. Saturday evening performances begin at 8:30 p.m. while Sunday's concerts are at 2:30 p.m.

An important part of the summer musical scene at Tanglewood is the Festival of Contemporary Music, sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Foundation. Often called a "festival within a festival," the event turns Tanglewood into the contemporary music capital of the world, as new and challenging works, many receiving premiere performances, are presented.

The Festival of Contemporary Music will begin Aug. 4 at Tanglewood.

Another Tanglewood special event will be Tanglewood on Parade Aug. 14, featuring many concerts during the day by Berkshire Music Center members and a gala concert beginning at 8:30 p.m. with Seiji Ozawa and Gunther Schuller conducting.

Andre Watts will be piano soloist and narrator on a program to include Copland's Lincoln Portrait, the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1; Strauss' Also Sprach Zarathustra and Tchaikovsky's Cappricio Italien.

On Aug. 21 Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops Orchestra in an annual favorite to begin at 8:30 p.m.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
JUN 30 1973

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
JUN 25 1973
New England Newsclip

Ozawa, SF Group Liked in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — The San Francisco Symphony performed Tchaikovsky's first concerto for piano and orchestra Monday in the hall of the Moscow Conservatory, the Soviet news agency Tass reported.

It was the second concert in Moscow for conductor Seiji Ozawa and his 110 musicians. The piano soloist was Andre Watts. Ozawa will conduct the opening concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Other selections included Rush's Celestial Messenger and Bartok's Wonderful Mandarin.

Tass described the concert as "a success." At Sunday's opening performance, the orchestra was hailed with a barrage of applause and shouts of "Bravo." Ozawa was recalled to the podium three times for encores.

That concert began with Prokofieff's suite from Romeo and Juliet and included Bernstein's Serenade for Violin and Orchestra and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

The orchestra, which already has played in Leningrad and Vilnius, will give three more Moscow performances.

Tanglewood

Members Enjoy Many Benefits

The office of the Friends of Music at Tanglewood which opened today will remain open throughout the 1973 Berkshire Festival season during regular business hours, as well as from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. on Saturdays.

Membership in the Friends of Music at Tanglewood is available for individuals for $15.00 ($5.00 for students with proper school identification) and $25.00 for family memberships.

Members' privileges include admission to over 40 student concerts by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer academy for the advanced study of music, admission to the popular series of Talks and Walks, a free subscription to the Symphony-Tanglewood Newsletter, and advance Berkshire Festival program information and ticket ordering forms.

The highly successful series Tanglewood Talks and Walks begun last year by the Friends will again take place this summer.

Held at 12:15 on alternating Thursdays in the Tanglewood Tent, the series presents a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra or staff or Berkshire Music Center faculty member giving a behind-the-scenes look into various aspects of Tanglewood.

Guests bring a picnic lunch at 12:15, followed by the talk at 1:00. A guided tour of the Tanglewood grounds is given by a member of the Tanglewood staff.

Call 413-637-1600 for Talks and Walks reservations and information for joining the Friends of Music at Tanglewood.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 4,405
JUN 28 1973
New England Newsclip

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003
JUN 19 1973

Tanglewood To Open Season With Bach

LENOX, Mass. — The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts July 6 at 9 p.m. with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra through a program of works by Bach.

The concert opens with Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. One," followed by "Concerto for Two Violins" with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and assistant concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists.

The concert then continues with "Cantata No. 189" featuring tenor Seth McCoy. (Although this cantata has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent research shows that it was probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, an organist from Leipzig).

The concert closes with Bach's "Cantata No. 52" with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus directed by John Oliver.

This concert follows the Friday evening "Weekend Prelude" which begins 7 p.m. with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's "Concerto in G," four choral preludes, "Passacaglia" and "Fugue in C Minor."

On July 7 at 10:30 a.m. there will be, as there will be every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On July 7 at 8:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud artist-in-residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUN 23 1973
New England Newsclip

As I Hear It

Orchestral polyandry

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra will entertain 11 gentlemen during the eight-week Tanglewood festival starting July 6.

The orchestra will submit to its musical director seven times, three times each to two of its best-known friends, twice to each of three acquaintances of fairly long standing and once to each of five birds de passage.

* * * *

When the Boston Orchestra first came to the Berkshire Festival in 1936, there were three great conductors on the American musical scene—Serge Koussevitzky was in Boston, Arturo Toscanini in New York and Leopold Stokowski in Philadelphia. All were distinguished and distinctive conductors who mounted the podium in their respective cities during practically the entire season.

In its way it was a golden orchestral period much as the era of Caruso at the Metropolitan Opera had been a golden vocal period. They were days of great music-making, and in Boston and Philadelphia, milestone days of musically historical importance. Toscanini was less venturesome in choosing his program, but the other two searched the horizon for new music.

* * * *

The conductors Tanglewood will welcome this season are men of uncontested competence. But, within the restricted rehearsal opportunities afforded, it is a question how much the performances will reflect the individuality of the guest leaders.

The components of the BSO hardly need recommendation at this point in time. They can execute practically the entire repertory, acceptably, without rehearsal under any experienced baton-swinger, but for refinements or drama or diction and all the inconspicuous factors which raise a perusal to a brilliantly memorable performance, more is required than mere punctual unanimity.

Guest conductors are in a tough spot. If they use any of the big works the orchestra has performed ad infinitum, the chances are that they will be played much as they were under the last previous conductor, who had had adequate rehearsal time. If they put a new and unfamiliar work on the desks, they will have to devote most of their limited time to acquainting the musicians with the novelty, and take a chance that the old warhorse Tchaikovsky Fifth, or whatever, will go under its own steam.

* * * *

There is no simple solution to this situation. When Leinsdorf left the orchestra four years ago, the public was informed by the board of trustees that choosing, preparing and presenting 30-odd weeks of winter season programs without respite or relief was a task no one man could bear. On the other extreme, 30 conductors — each for a week — is patently not the remedy. Yet this is the system in effect in many of the orchestras in our largest cities right now, and the effects on esprit de corps, for one thing, are plainly to be seen.

The facility of transportation these days has raised havoc with the musical elite. I'll tell you the good news first: We, or let's say Tanglewood, can have a parade of conductors and soloists that would put bathing beauty contests in the shade. Now for the bad: Mr. Ozawa may possibly conduct the same symphony on eight successive weeks with eight different orchestras on two or more continents, or Phyllis Curtin may do an analogous trek in one of her operatic roles. Their personal performances could well be superlative in every instance and few will protest the bigamous or polyandrous aspects of their careers, but team play is pretty sure to suffer.

* * * *

The masthead of the orchestra carries several respected names with their titles. It isn't transparently clear what the responsibilities of each one are as no one of them is in consistent attendance. In government, municipal or federal departments, consultants or committees are nominated and the duties diffused.

Some of our finest orchestras—here and in Europe—are willing to share a conductor of renown. The Atlantic is continually being criss-crossed by such men, much as Alec Guinness crossed the Mediterranean in "The Captain's Paradise." In the latter case, it seemed that the ladies on both shores were content. It is not convincingly proven that the orchestras in the other situation are as well served.

JUL 5 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood advance sale sets record

By Milton R. Bass

"The advance ticket sale for Tanglewood this summer is the largest in the history of the Berkshire Festival," Boston Symphony Orchestra Manager Thomas Morris told a meeting of the Council of Tanglewood Friends last evening in the Glass House at the Tanglewood gate.

Making his first official appearance in the Berkshires since his appointment to the post, the 29-year-old manager said as far as could be ascertained, no other music festival is experiencing such a boom.

"We don't know exactly what is causing our good fortune," he said, "but we welcome it. However, there are still plenty of tickets left, so tell your friends."

More Friends

Mr. Morris would not go into details as to how many tickets had been sold, but he did mention that the first, second, seventh and eighth weeks were among the most popular.

Some 40 members of the council, whose purpose is to increase community understanding of BSO activities and provide supplemental financial support to the Berkshire Music Center, also heard good news from their committee chairmen.

There are now 700 area Friends on the roster as compared to 600 at this time last year. The season's goal is 2,000, 600 more than were signed up in 1972.

Mrs. Jane Fitzpatrick reported as chairman of the committee to solicit local businesses for funds that of 290 businesses solicited so far, 61 have given a total of $17,585 and 20 more have promised to give. The goal this year is $35,000, and Mrs. Fitzpatrick said she was heartened by the fact that 12 of these organizations were giving for the first time.

Stephen Solomon of the BSO, who acts as coordinator with the Friends, reported that the total BSO Friends goal of $300,000 was assured and that receipts were ahead of last year when $292,000 was raised.

A series of special events is planned to raise more funds, notably a benefit concert by Phyllis Curtin, the annual ball, and a repeat of the series of "Walks and Talks" at Tanglewood by members of the orchestra.

Tanglewood poster

A Tanglewood poster designed by Susan Pearl Meisel of New York was displayed. Funds from the sale of this poster will go to aid projects of the Friends.

Cochairmen William Selke and Mrs. Peter Van S. Rice conducted the meeting, which was followed by a reception at the home of Mrs. Olga Koussevitzky.

Mark Mitchell

NEW BSO MANAGER Thomas Morris had good news on advance summer reservations for the Council of Tanglewood Friends at a meeting held at the Music Center last evening. Mrs. Peter Van S. Rice, at table, is cochairman with William Selke.

NEWS (E)
MALDEN, MASS
E. Trade
JUL 9 1973
New England Newspap

INSIDE INFORMATION

It Must Be the Openness

By DAVID BRICKMAN

(Part III. Cont'd From Friday, July 6)

ONE CANNOT HELP but make comparisons with one's own environmental idiosyncracies when visiting another area. Thus it was as we began our sally into western Massachusetts on Thursday, June 28, at eight a.m. on an overcast morning, with little expectation of summer sun and dry air, that we became aware of the fact that gloomy weather and occasional rain in our metropolitan area create a greater pall on one's spirits than does a similar state of weather on the countryside.

* * * *

IT'S THE OPEN SPACES that make the difference. Always while bus riding on the fine highways that criss-cross the four western counties, there is the view and vision of expanse of farmland, of grassy acres, ever so green, and the ever-present hills and mountains of the area, perhaps shrouded at their peaks by heavy fog, but largely visible and impressive as part of a handsome landscape.

* * * *

AND IT'S ALSO the inevitable stacking up of a city's topography, through which you pass, against your own. For instance, busing through North Adams, at the northwest corner of our state, and then down to Pittsfield, metropolis of the Berkshires, one cannot help but be struck with a sense of pride about their brightness and busy-ness. We were particularly impressed by both these communities for many reasons, but one in particular: their urban renewal programs.

Both communities have received millions of dollars of federal money for downtown redevopment, and both are well into their projects. North Adams, by the way, has the distinction of being the first community in Massachusetts to be alloted urban renewal money, and that would bring the allotment back more than a dozen years in time.

Pittsfield is close behind, also with downtown renewal. And, of course, there's Springfield whose downtown renewal, now completed, has produced a breathtaking uplift that surely becomes the second largest city in the commonwealth.

* * * *

WHILE THE NAME "Mohawk Trail" conjures up visions of Indians padding along in their moccasins, with bows and arrows slung over their shoulders as they hunt game, it is a fact that the Mohawk Trail is no legend; rather it is an actual footpath known to the Indians of this region timeless ages ago. As in so much of western Massachusetts—part of it appropriately called "Pioneer Valley"—the trail was the pathway that beckoned the early America of 1776 into more mobile transportation, with the first toll-free interstate called a "shunpike." Not until September, 1914, when the new Mohawk Trail was opened to the public, were Americans, through this added convenience, able to discover the glorious Berkshires, hitherto inaccessible to the automobile tourist.

* * * *

NORTH ADAMS' REVITALIZATION is keyed to its 32-acre urban renewal project. This ten-year project is nearing completion with only a five-million-dollar enclosed shopping mall left to be launched. As one deeply interested in urban, renewal, watching it in Boston and in Malden, the progress in this area held my attention. Set to open this fall, is a 100-room Sheraton Inn, developed, if you please, by a Philadelphia businessman who formerly visited North Adams and found no place to stay. And beyond this site—and also reminiscent of Malden — is construction underway for a new million-dollar North Adams City Hall—smaller, of course, than the new municipal building in construction for around $8 million in Malden.

* * * *

AH, THE SHAKERS! Hancock's Village, a public museum since 1960, was originally settled in 1780, six years after the arrival in this country of the Shaker's English Founder, Mother Ann Lee. An outgrowth of the Quakers, the Shakers believed that religion should not be separated from the secular concerns which so often dominate human life but rather should permeate all thought and action. As an early and important community in the sect's development, the Village presents an unusually complete picture both of the Shakers distinct culture and of their remarkable contributions to our own society. Since 1960 a group inspired by the Shaker heritage has resolved to make the Village a permanent memorial to the sect. To date, 11 of the 19 buildings have been opened and furnished with distinguished collection of Shaker-made furniture and other artifacts which will be augmented as the restoration continues.

* * * *

AND THEN THERE'S TANGLEWOOD, where a vast acreage of the greenest grass we have ever seen and a series of formal gardens beckon for summer programs of music, principally by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A quarter of a million people will make their way there this summer, for the magnificent music in magnificent surroundings.

Tanglewood is an estate of 210 acres given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the 1930's and now a world famous summer home of this great musical organization, the Berkshire Music Center. Nathaniel Hawthorne lived on the Tanglewood grounds and wrote that he could barely work in the presence of such scenic beauty which is nearly unchanged today.

MASS EXPLORATION

Part I—

East Should Meet West: They Have Lot to Offer

HAIL TO THE SUNRISE — A dramatic tribute to the Mohawk Indians, the famous statue "Hail to the Sunrise," is one of the many photographic delights for thousands of visitors from all over the country who drive over the Mohawk Trail (Route 2) in Massachusetts. One of the most scenic highways in northeast United States, the Trail extends from Greenfield on the east to Williamstown, a distance of 42 miles.

Mohawk Indian

by Jim Haggerty, Jr.

WOBURN — Discover America...or more aptly put, "Rediscover West Massachusetts First."

Most overlooked by Woburn-area travelers is the western part of the Commonwealth, a verdant forest area replete with winding rivers and placid lakes, that has enough attractions to keep a go-go tourist busy for a week's time.

By "out west" is meant the City of Springfield, the Pioneer Valley along the Connecticut River area northward, and the Mohawk Trail area still further north.

Names such as Williamstown, Deerfield, Stockbridge and the like should be more than just other cities in a far-off section of Massachusetts. "What we're trying to do is to make Williamstown and other cities more than a stopping-over spot," notes Dick Scullin, Chairman of the Board of Trade in Williamstown. "We want people to come and to stay a while," urges Jack Treadway, Jr., the son of the founders of the Treadway Inns, who is building a new Williams Inn in this part of the northwest corner of Massachusetts.

In Springfield, a lady chortles: "Just take the Mass. Lottery. You know, we rarely win it out here. Seems like we're a bit forgotten."

Perhaps the best reason not to forget Springfield and the western counties is the burgeoning hotel business in Springfield that can boast of all the major names, such as Sheraton, Dunfeys, Holiday Inns, etc. and is a logical jumping-off spot for the Woburn area traveler in his exploration of western Massachusetts.

Spearheading a drive to have "Mass. residents become more aware of Western Mass." is Frederick Centanni, the Commissioner of the State's Department of Commerce and Development. "It's a short two hours to the Springfield area and the area has so much to offer," he told a group of eastern-part-of-the state writers this past week.

Western Massachusetts has already been discovered by such notables as Norman Rockwell and William Shirer in Stockbridge, Bill Cosby in Shelburne Falls, Archibald MacLeish in Deerfield, James McGregor Burns in Willimastown, and many summer-time visitors of national fame.

TANGLEWOO D

Take for one example, the Tanglewood complex outside Sstockbridge. The summer seaeasons summer tb.SikcgroThe son opened Friday with the Boston Symphony Orchestra performing.

For Woburn residents wishing to attend the concerts, there are some 6,000 seats "under-the-tent" and innumerable seats on the grass. Tickets are almost unlimited for the "Grass Pass" set that sprawls itself across the lush green lawn. Upwards of 23,000 persons have converged on this site, the summer home of the Boston Symphony, that mostly left Boston last week as the "Boston Pops" only tobe revitalized as the Boston Symphony for the next eight weeks.

"It's confusing," note officials at Tanglewood. In actuality they note, the head conductor changes and some of the "leads" of sections change, but the Boston Symphony is basically the same Boston Pops Orchestra that Bostonians enjoy during the winter and spring months and which is broken up even further to supply music for the Esplanade along the Charles River in Boston in the summer.

Some 250,000 attended the eight week sojourn in Tanglewood in '72. "We're up 40 per cent on season tickets alone," note officials at Tanglewood, a site once described by Nathan

MOHAWK INDIANS
(Page Nine)

TIMES (E)
AUBURN, MASS
E. Trade
JUL 12 1973
New England Newspap

Mohawk Indian —

(Continued from Page Seven)

iel Hawthorne as "so magnificent that I could barely work in the presence of such scenic beauty."

OTHER SITES

For the one-day visitor, or the casual weekender, such other western Mass. attractions include the Shaker Village in Pittsfield, Mt. Sugarloaf, the Mohawk Trail, the college complexes in Amherst, and a host of attractions in Springfield itself, such as the new Civic Center and its programs, the Basketball Hall of Fame, the Springfield Armory compound, and others.

"We don't like to brag," says Willie Williams, at the Basketball Hall, "but we've got the best 'Hall of Fame' of all of them." "With the interest in the Boston Celtics in the eastern part of the state, this alone should be a reason for a day's outing out here."

And at the Springfield Armory, boasting of the largest handgun collection in the world, the panorama of American history through weapons before the visitor's eye. "We have every weapon ever used in this country," notes an official at the Armory. "And, we are displaying about one gun in ten," he told a press group, as he led them through a labyrinth of gun racks in the cellar of the old Armory, closed in 1968, and which is now being used as a college and other groups. "If we don't get the National Historic recognition from Congress by January 1st," note officials, "there may be no museum at all."

Every rifle since the American Revolution through to Vietnam, including all the Civil War riflery, the famous "03" of World War I fame and the M-1 of World War II. The first and last issues of the "03" and "M-1" are housed here in the museum that fascinates many a visitor.

For the casual visitor, it is simply enough to fill-up-the-fist with brochures in any lobby of a Springfield hotel that features thirty to forty attractions to meet the eye of the culturally, historically, or just tourist-minded "easterner" who wants a respite from day-to-day haggles "back in the big cities of

(Tomorrow: Historian James McGregor Burns of Williams College recollects his days in Burlington and his "book learnin'" days in the Woburn Public Library.)

Let Yourself Go Takes In Some Of The Splendors Of Western Mass.

BY ANN SHANAHAN

People talk about busman's holidays, I took one.

For almost two years I have been exhorting readers of the "Let Yourself Go" column in the Gazette to go, see and do -- to take advantage of the great variety of attractions and activities offered in this area.

Sometime in late May we received an invitation from Gov. Francis Sargent and state Commissioner of Commerce and Development Frederick A. Centanni asking a Gazette representative to join an extended bus tour of western Massachusetts.

The trip, complete with two nights at the new Sheraton Motor Inn in West Springfield, meals at several country inns and sightseeing in Hampden, Hampshire, Franklin and Berkshire counties, was designed to promote tourism in the area.

Selected travel writers from newspapers and magazines (they hoped for 40 and ended with about 35) and their spouses had been invited to take part in the jaunt. The idea was that first-hand experience of the wonders of western Massachusetts would be translated into stories which would tantalize tourists, vacationers and conventioneers to these parts.

I had toured the view from Mt. Sugarloaf, Tanglewood concerts, and the beauty of the Mohawk Trail. I had suggested taking kids to the Basketball Hall of Fame, the Springfield Armory Museum and events at the Eastern States Exposition. I had mentioned the historic houses of Old Deerfield, the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute in Williamstown and the Hadley asparagus fields.

It seemed appropriate for me to go along and listen to someone else describe the many merits of western Massachusetts.

What First Class

It was obvious when we entered our rooms at the Sheraton that we were going first, rather than economy, class. The motel, which opened in early May and is still somewhat raw on the exterior, is built around a huge covered courtyard with kidney-shaped swimming pool, poolside cocktail area, meadow green carpeting and a flowing fountain. The courtyard has been landscaped to give the effect of the outdoors with real shrubs and peat moss banked liberally to set the scene.

All the travel writers had rooms on the courtyard. (Somewhere there must be equally as many rooms which overlook paved parking lots, but we didn't see them). And each room was stocked with an eclectic bounty which included two key rings from the Commonwealth, a small pottery ashtray made by the Great Barrington Pottery, a paperweight with an Indian head on it from the Mohawk Trail, a "fretting stone" cut from Pioneer Valley rock left by a glacier, some maple sugar and a package of clear plastic fish hooks (said to be effective because the fish can't see them) from a Pittsfield shop.

All the above items were plugola for area attractions. As a bonus, on each bureau was a gift box of liquor from the Sheraton and a split of champagne from the Taylor Vineyards.

As the trio continued so did the bootle: a tie pin from the Armory Museum, a felt tip marker and miniature mug from the Basketball Hall of Fame, a Norman Rockwell painting reproduction, perfume from an East Longmeadow company and about 20 pounds of maps, pamphlets and postcards.

The rooms were ample and luxurious -- each with a balcony overlooking the indoor-outdoors, many with vibrating beds, some with a steam room and one that turned out to be a duplex suite with living room quarters down and bedroom up. It would have been easy to forget about western Massachusetts and merely explore the many merits of a Sheraton Motor Inn for two days!

Official Party

The tour officially started at 6 p.m. on Wednesday with a poolside reception hosted by Commissioner Centanni. Mingling with the travel writers were representatives of the Greater Springfield Chamber of Commerce Convention and Visitors bureau, staff people from the State Commerce Department and various notables from the Springfield area including the chairman of the West Springfield Board of Selectmen (who sat at the head table at dinner and said of the Sheraton: "we love it, we're going to tax it.")

Richard Garvey, editor of the Springfield Daily News, was toastmaster for the dinner program which included a message from Rep. Silvio Conte, a mention by State Senator John Olver of "the golden west," and a speech by Commissioner Centanni.

Centanni (it was said that he is going to change his name to Bicentanni in 1976) made some brief, lighthearted remarks during which he stressed the importance of both tourism and commerce to the Massachusetts economy. Centanni has recently returned from Japan where he was wearing his "commerce hat" in meetings designed to lure Japanese business interests to Massachusetts.

Apparently, some of the folks who saw the opportunity to combine pleasure with business partied on after the official program was over. But tired or not everyone was expected to be on board one of two Peter Pan busses by 8 a.m. Thursday.

The buses had been donated by Peter Picknelly, president of Peter Pan and also president of the Pioneer Valley Association, which was responsible for much of the planning of the Hampshire County portion of the trip.

The question of whether taxpayers' money might be supporting this junket had been raised earlier in the week by a wire service story. The implication had upset the Department of Commerce people and throughout the two days of touring they hotly denied any such outlay and were quick to give credit to the donators of food, drink, lodging and other favors.

No State Funds

Those of us who are in fact, Massachusetts taxpayers were probably more concerned about this issue than the out-of-staters, but we were continually assured that all the tabs were being picked up by businesses and hotels: Thursday's noon buffet at the Williams Inn was paid in part by the New England power companies, the bill for Thursday night's cocktail party at the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge was paid by the Berkshire Life Insurance Company, Friday's lunch at the Deerfield Inn and lodging and breakfasts at the Sheraton were donated by the hotels themselves.

Whether, as a travel writer, it is better to be exploited by state funds or private businesses is a moot point, and one which I won't belabor here.

According to Al Longo of Publicity, Inc., the tour, titiled "Mass Exploration," is the first of its kind and may serve as a prototype for showing off other areas of Massachusetts.

I'm told that Longo, who served as a consultant to the Commerce Department in planning the trip, is also famous as, "the man who made Wednesday Prince Spaghetti day."

"We've been in the business (advertising and public relations) a long time. We've had a lot of experience which is useful in planning something like this," Longo said.

Whatever the reason, the tour was well conceived and well executed. Every possible need was met and every question answered. There was a nurse along in case anyone fell ill. (She was on her day off from her regular public health job of counseling pregnant adolescents.) There was a photographer on the Commerce Department payroll to take whatever photos the writers asked for along the way.

And so it began. Under overcast skies, which were not part of the Commerce Department plans, the buses sped north on Route 91 Thursday morning with a running commentary provided by Dorothy Potter and Nancy Whittemore of the Pioneer Valley Association.

Although there were no stops in Hampshire County, the two women described in detail such features of the area as Arcadia Wildlife Sanctuary, the several colleges, the lush farm land, the Ox-Bow, the city of Northampton and the Hadley Farm Museum.

We left Route 91 at South Deerfield where we were met by a phalanx of passenger cars driven by members of the Greenfield Chamber of Commerce who had been pressed into service to carry us to the top of Mt. Sugarloaf. Unfortunately, by this time the fog was so thick that we couldn't even see the mountain, much less the spectacular view from its summit. Tough luck for those who had to settle for a color photo of the vista brought along by Franklin County Commissioner Thomas Herlihy.

There was a short program on the top of the mountain which included a lot of jokes about the weather, the distribution of cigars with wrappers of Pioneer Valley tobacco leaves and some commentary about Mt. Sugarloaf (did you know that it and Mt. Tom are popular nesting places for hawks, eagles and falcons?)

As we proceeded west from Greenfield on the Mohawk Trail Patricia Fritz of the Mohawk Trail Association and Jerry McCarthy, chairman of the Leyden School Committee, took over as commentators.

I was on the McCarthy bus and can report that while various scenic and historic sights were mentioned, the thrust of the monologue was that rural Franklin County is the boondocks and the people who live there like it that way.

Once again the weather spoiled the striking views along the Mohawk Trail (At the Whitcomb summit, the highest point in Massachusetts or Connecticut, McCarthy said, "I hate to tell you, but you can see five states from here.")

Hampshire County came through with some better weather and as we went around the hairpin turn in North Adams, the brilliant landscape stretching away and below was bathed in sunlight.

Striking Spot

The next stop was the Natural Bridge in North Adams, the only place on the trip that I had never seen before. I found the natural marble bridge to be unique and dramatic, but one of the writers who came originally from California was unimpressed, almost disdainful, of the deep stone chasm. (She also expressed amazement that New Englanders call their "hills" mountains.)

Back in the buses, representatives of the Berkshire Hills Conference pointed out sights along the way and took credit for the improved weather conditions. Before leaving North Adams we saw two old mill buildings which are shortly to become an artists' colony. The project, funded by the Beinecke family which has also put huge amounts of money into the restoration of Nantucket, will turn the old buildings into housing and studio space for artists and carftsmen.

During a tour of the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute in Williamstown, I began to hear my fellow travelers sounding a theme which was to continue through the rest of the trip: "Gee, I live in Worcester and I never even knew this was here," or "I want to come back soon and spend more time seeing this."

The collection at the Clark Museum, surely one of the finest private ones in the world, is mind boggling in its beauty and extent. The museum itself with a recently completed addition, provides a serene and understated setting for the Monets, Renoirs (30 of them) Winslow Homers, Hoppers and others.

Faint from Hunger, damp from the muggy heat and grimy from the long hours in the bus, we arrived at the Williams Inn at 1 p.m. for a lavish buffet, some cabaret-type entertainment provided by young people from the Williamstown Theatre and a moving talk by James McGregor Burns, professor of history at Williams College, biographer of Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Pulitzer Prize winner.

Burns spoke with affection and concern for the beautiful landscape of western Massachusetts. He said, sadly, that "while we're all environmentalists today, we're all floundering in the effort to save the area from too much development and progress."

As disheartening as Watergate is, "it is not as great a failure as that of the government and political system to measure up to the rush of progress," he added.

Moving south on Route 7 in Berkshire County, I was struck as I had been in Hampshire and Franklin counties earlier in the day, by the greenness of the landscape this year and the lush vegetable gardens that virtually everyone is growing.

The next stop was at Hancock Shaker Village outside Pittsfield. This fine restoration of a Shaker community is a treat with its magnificent round barn and other buildings furnished with spare handsome Shaker furniture. Intelligent young guides tell the fascinating story of the communal, celibate Shaker way of life.

The sun came out brilliantly as we descended once again from the buses at Tanglewood. The incredibly green expanse of lawn which stretches toward the shed was breathtaking as usual. The lyric notes of a soprano practicing drifted across the grounds.

Flagging only slightly by late afternoon, we proceeded to the Corner House on the Main Street in Stockbridge. In this small museum hang many of the familiar works of artist Norman Rockwell whose home and studio are a block away.

The wife of a travel editor from Connecticut expressed what seemed to be the sentiments of many on the tour when she stepped into the house and saw the walls crammed with Rockwells: "For my money this is better than the Clark Art Institute any day."

The piece de resistence, in the person of Rockwell himself, arrived shortly. The artist stood patiently and chatted amiably as each member of the group shook his hand.

A period of "rest and relaxation" and dinner at the Red Lion Inn followed and then we were whisked, weary but happy, as they say, back to our urban motel.

A combination of hilarity and exhaustion produced the sing-along on the bus which ended with a rousing adaptation of an old favorite: "Natural Bridge is falling down, falling down ..."

The next day we again climbed aboard our buses, going like a herd of school children to the same seats we had the day before. Friday morning's itinerary was brought to us by the Convention and Visitors Bureau of the Greater Springfield Chamber of Commerce and featured, at least on our bus, an interminable number of bad jokes.

We rode through downtown Springfield with its huge new Civic Center, and through Forest Park which looked beautiful and unpeopled at 8:30 a.m. on a weekday morning. The first stop of the day was at the Basketball Hall of Fame. We continued the tour at the Springfield Armory Museum which should certainly be every gun lover's delight and was equally fascinating, actually, to someone who hates guns.

Back Roads Better

Going north for the grand finale, the bus left Route 91 at Holyoke, to take the lesser traveled Route 116 to Old Deerfield in what I considered an intelligent alteration of the writen itinerary. As interstates go Route 91 is efficent and scenic but you see more of Hampshire County from the back roads.

An unscheduled stop was made for a little ceremony at the huge Sycamore tree on the main street in Sunderland. Dorothy Potter, executive director of the Pioneer Valley Association, has been trying for years to get a plaque for the tree describing its ripe old age (350 to 550 years) and distinction (the largest sycamore east of the Mississippi), so Commissioner Centanni made a little speech and pinned a paper "plaque" to the tree.

Sherry and lunch were served at the attractively restored Deerfield Inn. David Pynchon, headmaster of Deerfield Academy, spoke briefly and a self-appointed spokesman for the writers called for a standing thank you to those who had arranged the tour.

The rain, which had plagued us for two days, continued as we returned to Springfield for goodbyes. "If they like western Massachusetts in this weather, they'll like it anytime," commented Paul Schultz of the Commerce Department with a shrug.

Despite the weather, the trip's planners were pleased with the venture, the travel-writers seemed impressed by what they had seen and I was satisfied that while western Massachusetts is a nice place to visit, it's a nicer place to live.

FRANKLIN COUNTY COMMISSIONER Thomas Herlihy shows a color photo of the view from Mt. Sugarloaf to a group of fog bound travel writers on the mountaintop.

THESE CONVOLUTED ROCK formations were made by the force of water rushing through the stone for millions of years. This natural marble bridge is in North Adams.

THE OUTDOOR CONCERTS at Tanglewood attract those who like to sit in real seats in the shed as well as those who prefer to take their music informally. Somehow Tanglewood's miraculous grass survives the hoards.

THIS MAGNIFICENT ROUND barn once housed the herd of cows at the Hancock Shaker Village near Pittsfield. It is now one of the sights at the village which features other buildings and much handsome Shaker furniture.

THE FIRST GATLING ever made appears in this picture taken at the Springfield Armory Museum. The museum's collection is so large that two large basement storerooms are needed to hold the overflow of weapons that can't be displayed.

PASTE OVER

UP COUNTRY
PITTSFIELD, MASS.

JUL 1973

Music

BY IRWIN SHAINMAN

The 39th season of the Berkshire Music Festival begins this coming Friday with eight weeks of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Adding "Tanglewood on Parade" to the three-a-week concert schedule gives us an impressive array of 25 programs, almost 50 soloists, and 12 different conductors. This is a far cry and a very long way from the beginnings of this festival in the horse show ring of the Hanna Farm. As a historic note, it might be interesting to point out that the original orchestra of the festival was not the Boston Symphony, but the New York Philharmonic under the direction of the formidable Henry Hadley. The rustic wooden bench atmosphere and the weather did not seem to appeal to the sophisticated New Yorkers, so they eventually withdrew. Their decision not to continue may go down in history as one of the biggest and most costly miscalculations ever made; and it couldn't have worked out better for Serge Koussevitzky and the BSO.

This season turns out to be something of a "conductor's showcase." Seiji Ozawa, the new musical director of the Boston Symphony, will appear seven times and Colin Davis, three. Two of the world's most respected and active Berlioz specialists appear under the same roof in more than a third of the concerts.

In addition, this summer's schedule features an unusual number of masterpieces of choral literature. This is as it should be because of the predictably fine singing by the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, an impressively trained musical organization. The Haydn "Creation," performed during the opening week, and the Verdi "Requiem" on the final Sunday will bracket other important works for chorus and orchestra which will include Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" and Handel's "Messiah," the latter certainly not a Tanglewood regular, in any sense of that word.

The first two weeks will, as usual, offer music on a small scale (Bach, Handel, Vivaldi, Mozart, Haydn) and then we move into the annual Beethoven week, presenting music that never seems to grow stale or die. Besides their tremendous popularity, the orchestral works of Beethoven remain a constant challenge to conductor, orchestra and audience. But Beethoven affords us the additional pleasure of being able to welcome Eugene Ormandy to the podium. He is not only a Berkshire County neighbor, but a Saratoga Performing Arts Center regular during most of the month of August. (More about that at a later date.)

It must be noted that a work by a 20th century composer does not appear on the program until the fifth week, when we hear a Mahler song-symphony and a Bartok concerto. In the entire summer, only one concert features contemporary music, an all-Stravinsky program in early August. Actually, only one composition in the whole schedule, "Canticum Sacrum," could be called mildly provocative from the stylistic point of view. Not a single composition by any of the American composers who won a Pulitzer Prize during the past five years.

One can be sympathetic with the economic and rehearsal problems of a fine orchestra required to play three different programs each week and having to dip into many repeat programs already played and telecast across the state during this past Boston season. And we can also understand the orchestra's need to attract as many paying customers as possible. After all, a good box-office summer at Tanglewood can have a very beneficial effect on the economic health of the entire operation. Orchestras like the BSO committed to a 52-week contract with their musicians come to regard summer and recording oncome as a blood transfusion. This is now a fact of life in the world of the major orchestra.

But it still cannot be denied that the nation's orchestra repertoire has been steadily shrinking. When was the last time you heard a live performance of the Grieg or a Chopin piano concerto? How about the Max Bruch violin concerto? A recent concert in New York by Georg Solti and the Chicago Symphony featuring a concert performance of an act of a Wagner opera was treated like an oddity. With the exception of the temporary shot-in-the-arm by the recent Bruckner and Mahler craze, already starting to fade away, we find ourselves returning to the same 20 or 30 compositions of the bread-and-butter repertoire, what Aaron Copland once called "the four B's in Music, Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, and Boredom." What is going to happen to the orchestral institution and concept if we do not reverse this trend while somehow trying to do everything in our power to attract young people to live concerts? This is not to imply that young people do not respond to Beethoven, but depending on Beethoven forever is not going to be enough. Expanding, not contracting, the repertoire will help, though we must all be sadly mindful of the fact that it is no guarantee. We simply must find some way to accomplish this without extracting too high a price in orchestral security and not driving away the audiences we already have. But how? Only America's major orchestras and foundations can take the lead in finding out.

The Rockefeller Foundation, through a four-year program, has helped 23 symphony orchestras extend their regular season and build new repertoire at the same time. Each orchestra, at the close of its regular season, takes up residence on a nearby campus where it reads and rehearses new works. So far, 286 American composers have had an opportunity to have their music performed under these much better than usual circumstances. Through this method, some of the works have gained their way onto subscription programs. Not the entire answer, but certainly an interesting and significant start. Tanglewood's non-series contemporary concerts made possible by the Fromm Foundation are another important late summer platform.

On the "surprise" side of the season we find a novelty work by America's recycled wunderkind, John Cage. I can't for the life of me figure out if we somehow haven't caught up with him, or he hasn't reached us, but it's nice to find a 60-year-old avant-garde celebrity finally making it at Tanglewood.

Another surprise I take great pleasure in noting is that Arthur Fiedler will temporarily desert the "Pops" and conduct at a regular BSO concert. One has only to read his recent autobiography to understand just how much this bit of recognition must mean to him. On the one hand, I'm very glad to see Fiedler, and his good friend, pianist Earl Wild, share one of the season's major concert spotlights, but also a little disappointed that the occasion will not also celebrate the fact that the great George Gershwin would have been 75 years old next September. The program will justly honor Fiedler and to a lesser degree Wild. Considering the many past associations they both have had with Gershwin, it would have been nice to honor all three.

But be that as it may, we all have a lot to look forward to from Tanglewood, 1973. It is not only one of the oldest, healthiest, most successful and beautifully situated summer music festivals in all the world, but its most significant influence, that of an educational institution, is strong, far-reaching, and continuing. Remember that Seiji Ozawa's first contact with the Boston Symphony was as a student conductor here, and he was only one of many. Music lovers of Western Massachusetts, as well as our summer visitors, have a lot to be thankful for. Tanglewood remains alive, well and vibrant. One can only wish this wonderful enterprise much luck, many eager paying customers, and clear skies.

Prof. Shainman is chairman of the music department at Williams College.

AIRPORT TIMES
FLUSHING, N.Y.
W. CIRC. N.AVAIL.

JUL 14 1973

The Day Tripper

by Emma Jane

Tanglewood is an estate of 210 acres in the Berkshire Hills that was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the 1930's and now world famous as the summer home of the Boston Symphony, its Berkshire Festival and its unique Berkshire Music Center.

This year's Berkshire Festival marks the 39th season for the oldest major festival of music in the entire country.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Tanglewood's spacious Music Shed for its eight week-end extravaganza. Heading the bill are the great artists Arthur Fiedler, Michael Tilson Thomas, William Steinberg, Colin Davis, Sewi Ozawa, Lawrence Foster, James de Priest, Eugene Ormandy, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Ricardo Muti and Rafael Fruhbeck De Burgos.

The Tanglewood grounds are opened two hours before each performance. The cafeteria is open to ticketholders who are cordially invited to picnic on the lawn. Picture taking is permitted except in the concert halls during the performance. Recording equipment is absolutely prohibited.

Tanglewood is also known for its comprehensive advanced study summer session provided by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Gifted young musicians from this country and abroad gather for a concentrated 8 week session during which both students and faculty give frequent public performances.

The "Festival of Contemporary Music" which begins performance on August 4 is sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Foundation and is often referred to as a "Festival-within-a-festival". It turns Tanglewood into the contemporary music capitol of the world during its intensive and exciting annual presentation of new and challenging works. Several are commissioned especially for the festival as many are heard in premiere performances.

The "Friends of Music" at Tanglewood, instrument an important role as audience and financial supporters for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. They are vitally concerned with the future of the many talented young men and women striving to meet their musical goals.

The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, chamber music choral and vocal concerts, music theatre productons and Composers Forums are announced weekly and are open to the members of the "Friends of Music" at Tanglewood or by contributions at the gate of one dollar and fifty cents for each program.

A season membership is $15 per individual and $25 per family for the more than 30 concerts that are sponsored by the "Friends".

NEWSWEEK
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 1,935,000

JUL 2 1973

MUSIC

Audrey Michaels

Caramoor: Music and a setting belonging to the past

Festivals—Aspen to Istanbul

When is a music festival not a festival? Probably never. But the character of festivals has changed under brute economic pressures. Classical used to take the high road and pop the low and never the twain did meet. With the advent of year-round musicians' contracts, the major orchestras were all forced into summer homes, but few of them could attract the crowds to support the enterprise. Enter rock, pop, folk and jazz, which pulled in the masses and paid for a classical weekend in the country.

Ultimately it's how it's done that determines the caliber of these hybrid music festivals. Some, like New Jersey's gaudy GARDEN STATE (June 3-Sept. 23), toss Don Ameche, Jerry Lewis and Liberace into the same pot with the National Symphony and the singing Little Angels of Korea, which (or who) makes you want to cry. The same is true for the so-called MISSISSIPPI RIVER FESTIVAL (July 14-Aug. 29), which is just a highfalutin name for the summer home of the St. Louis Symphony—and you can't even see the Mississippi. The orchestra gives only six serious concerts all festival long. A cut above is the TEMPLE UNIVERSITY MUSIC FESTIVAL (June 29-Aug. 11), home of the Pittsburgh Symphony, where the orchestra is center stage and the divertissements first-class.

At BLOSSOM (June 19-Sept. 8), the Cleveland Orchestra preserves its integrity on weekends. RAVINIA (June 27-Sept. 23), where the Chicago Symphony summers, and the HOLLYWOOD BOWL (July 4-Sept. 22), flamboyant summer home of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, are superb examples of the new kind of summer festival. Ravinia's season is highlighted by such pianists as Alfred Brendel, Misha Dichter and Alexis Weissenberg, and by the newest hot-shot conductor, Riccardo Muti. Even the pop artists are top drawer: the Original Benny Goodman Quartet, Judy Collins, José Feliciano. At the Bowl, Cecil B. DeMille might have staged this colossal extravaganza, featuring the biggest names, the largest works—but all expressing joyful musical seriousness.

It's a relief to return to TANGLEWOOD (July 6-Aug. 26), where the old-fashioned prevails. This year the accent is on choral music, from the Bach cantatas on opening night under Seiji Ozawa to Mozart's "Coronation Mass" and Handel's "Messiah," both led by Colin Davis. Tanglewood is at the center of satellite festivals, including the venerable celebration of dance at JACOB'S PILLOW (July 3-Sept. 1) in neighboring Lee, Mass., where Margot Fonteyn, queen of ballerinas, opens the festivities.

Upper New York, especially in the Adirondacks, is another festival center. SARATOGA (July 3-Aug. 25) stands on the two pillars of the New York City Ballet and the Philadelphia Orchestra. A few miles north in Glens Falls the LAKE GEORGE OPERA (July 19-Aug. 19) sings everything in English from "Rigoletto" to Robert Ward's "The Crucible," based on Arthur Miller's play about Puritan sex and sadism. CHAUTAUQUA (June 28-Aug. 26), south of Buffalo, started out training Sunday-school teachers 99 years ago. Now its school specializes in music, has 1,600 students, a resident professional orchestra, conductors such as Robert Irving and Milton Katims and nine chaplains standing by to save your soul in case the music doesn't.

As festivals go, CARAMOOR (June 23-Aug. 26) j is in a class mercialism ta like the settin belongs to th Julius Rudel v tion, staged b bini's "Medea.

At the SA Aug. 25) this is Benjamin B after Henry J Among other doing Franz ow," which wi sung in Germ the other way new playmate FE CHAMB (June 24-July cians who jo such romantic scenic wonde reservation. A is a western T as good and th For mountains the GRAND 24-Aug. 25) a year they have lower slope until now it w hang on at the

If you miss praised new opera, Death in Venice, at England's ALDEBURGH FESTIVAL, which ends on July 2, you can catch up with it at the EDINBURGH FESTIVAL (Aug. 19-Sept. 8). Britain really sings this summer, from GLYNDEBOURNE (May 30-Aug. 15), where the opera is stylish and the atmosphere stuffy, to SALISBURY (July 12-21), where Constable's cathedral will be the scene of Handel's "Alexander's Feast," to CHESTER (June 23-July 8), where Rachmaninoff's 100th

Martha Swope

Dancers at Saratoga: High road

The Opinion Page

Music Shed At Tanglewood Marks Its 35th Anniversary

The opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's eight-week concert series at nearby Tanglewood this weekend reminds us of our good fortune to be living in the Dalton area. Even many non-musical residents make a habit of at least one annual visit to hear the marvelous music from the vantage point of the huge shed or from the spacious lawns.

It was not until we did a bit of research on the matter that we realized 1973 is the 35th anniversary of the building of the 6,037-seat Music Shed. We learned that it was built with publicly-subscribed funds. The campaign was inspired after the opening tent concert in 1937 was disrupted and washed out by a torrential rainstorm.

Looking back further into Tanglewood's famed history one finds that it was in 1848 when Nathaniel Hawthorne moved into a cottage on the edge of this beautiful 210 acres of lawn and meadow with magnificent hemlocks, elms, pines and birches. The view has little changed since Hawthorne described it in his writings, as follows:

"There is a glen between this house and the lake, through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls over the great roots of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all a dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument Mountain, looking like a headless sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl, when clad in the rich and diversified autumnal foliage of its woods; and beyond Monument the dome of Taconic, whose round head is more distinct than ever in Winter, when its snow patches are visable but which generally is a dark blue unvaried mountain top."

Both from the Dalton area and from many of the nation's 50 states there are music devotees who make annual pilgrimages of a week or more to Tanglewood while others just drop in once or twice each Summer. The usual eight-weeks attendance now runs about a quarter of a million.

To newcomers or others who haven't experienced Tanglewood's beautifully staged concerts, the News-Record wishes to strongly endorse such an excursion on a Saturday night or Sunday afternoon. For most people we know it is an unforgetable entertainment treat.

BAROQUE IS BACK

Berkshire Music Festival's 39th Year at Tanglewood Begins in Great Shed Friday

By R. C. HAMMERICH

Republican Staff

LENOX — Suddenly Tanglewood is here again.

When we were in high school, and the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood was young, we always planned, in the budding springtime, to be there.

But youth being eagerly and easily diverted, we always discovered, equally suddenly, that Tanglewood was nearly finished almost as soon as it began; so each summer we had to hurry to get there for a couple of melodic picnics near the end of the season.

Now, once more suddenly, Tanglewood is here again. Today about 400 advanced musical students from all over the world will attend a ceremony beginning at 2:30 in the Theater - Concert Hall on Tanglewood's 210 acres that officially launches their summer of intensive study under the guidance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its augmented faculty.

Before they leave they will have participated in uncountable lectures, seminars, rehearsals, bull sessions and about 40 concerts for public audiences attended in large part by members of an organization (which anyone can join for $15) called the Council of Tanglewood Friends.

And next Friday the 39th year (minus two or three war years) of the Berkshire Music Festival will start with a prelude concert in the great Shed at 7 performed on the big, built-in organ by Larry Smith followed at 9 by a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Seiji Ozawa.

Of course, by now Tanglewood's regular fans know that the first two weekends of concerts present music of the 18th century as much because it calls for small orchestral groups as it does because the lightness and delicacy of the 18th-century musical style is appropriate to the early summer in 20th-century New England.

Half of the orchestra gives the first two weekends

See BAROQUE LT 3

DALTON NEWS RECORD
DALTON, MASS.
W. 2,700
JUL 5 1973
New England Newsclip

COMMERCIAL DIGEST
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 20,000
JUL 1973
New England Newsclip

DO YOU KNOW:

Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony, takes its name from Nathaniel Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales, after the estate Tanglewood owned by a friend of the writer.

INDEPENDENT
LITTLETON, MASS.
W. 1,200
JUL 12 1973
New England Newsclip

Baroque Is Back

Continued From LT 1

of programs, because the other half is still in Boston giving free concerts on the Esplanade.

It has been thus since Arthur Fiedler had the inspiration, many years ago; and the combination is a sublime stroke of genius: Pops in Bean Town and Baroque in the Berkshires, simultaneously by two halves of the same organization.

And then, in the middle of July, the full orchestra coalesces with the Tanglewood Chorus for large - scale productions like Beethoven's Ninth on July 21 and later Handel's "Messiah," Berlioz' "Lelio" and Verdi's "Requiem."

There will be 24 weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on eight consecutive weekends with 11 conductors, 18 instrumental soloists, 15 vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. But that's only the regular festival.

Lovers of the NOW sound, as distinguished from "new," will rejoice to learn that it is returning to the peaceful meadows of Tanglewood.

Four Tuesday evenings in the great Shed have been allotted once more to contemporary popular sound, some of it something like that which appeared there in 1969 when the Jefferson Airplane and the Joshua Light Show set Tanglewood's attendance record somewhere above 22,000.

The first of the regular eight weekends of performances by the orchestra (plus eight open rehearsals) starts Friday with a Bach program, which may not be peaceful to those who find Bach exciting.

But four evenings of contemporary folk, rock, folk-rock and a bit of soul are not much music compared to the whole of the Tanglewood fare . . . roughly 80 concerts for more than a quarter of a million listeners.

Pop Calendar

Anyway, here is the pop calendar: Roberta Flack and Blood Sweat and Tears on July 10, John Denver and Linda Ronstadt on July 17; Seals and Crofts and Livingston Taylor on July 24; America and Jackson Browne on July 31; all starting times are 7.30, tickets available at Ticketron outlets (in Springfield at Sears at Eastfield Mall).

There will be, also, a Tuesday evening of Boston Pops with Arthur Fiedler at the helm (Aug. 21 at 8:30), and the annual display of talents by the Berkshire Music Center students called Tanglewood - On - Parade, which offers vocal, chamber and orchestral programs from 2 to about 10:30 with a picnic break, on another Tuesday (Aug. 14.)

The main reason for existence, however, the nucleus of all this activity at Tanglewood is the Berkshire Music Festival, a series that began in 1934, was occupied permanently by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936 and moved to Tanglewood's magnificent 210 acres in 1937.

This year the 11 conductors include the artistic director, Seiji Ozawa; former artistic director, William Steinberg; associate conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas; pops conductor, Arthur Fiedler, and seven guest conductors: Eugene Ormandy, Colin Davis, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Rafael Fruhbeck DeBurgos, Lawrence Foster, James DePreist and Riccardo Muti.

The instrumental soloists, in mixed-up order, include Larry Smith, Malcolm Frager, Philippe Entremont, Andre Watts, Peter Lagger, Miriam Fried, Earl Wild, Byron Janis, Sidney Harth and Christoph Eschenbach plus several first-desk members of the orchestra.

Vocal soloists include Benita Valente, Seth McCoy, Phyllis Curtin, Ryan Edwards, Helen Watts, Lloyd Davies, Stafford Dean, Mallory Walker, Victor Braun, Colin Fox, Thomas Stewart, Joanna Simon, James King, Kenneth Riegel, David Evitts, Lou Ann Wyckoff and Maureen Forrester.

And there are a few provocative tidbits in the programs to entice aural curiosity; for instance, Stravinsky's "Vom Himmel Hoch Variations" scheduled for Aug. 4 and Cage's "Suite for Toy Piano" on the program for Aug. 5.

The Opinion Page

Music Shed At Tanglewood Marks Its 35th Anniversary

The opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's eight-week concert series at nearby Tanglewood this weekend reminds us of our good fortune to be living in the Dalton area. Even many non-musical residents make a habit of at least one annual visit to hear the marvelous music from the vantage point of the huge shed or from the spacious lawns.

It was not until we did a bit of research on the matter that we realized 1973 is the 35th anniversary of the building of the 6,037-seat Music Shed. We learned that it was built with publicly-subscribed funds. The campaign was inspired after the opening tent concert in 1937 was disrupted and washed out by a torrential rainstorm.

Looking back further into Tanglewood's famed history one finds that it was in 1848 when Nathaniel Hawthorne moved into a cottage on the edge of this beautiful 210 acres of lawn and meadow with magnificent hemlocks, elms, pines and birches. The view has little changed since Hawthorne described it in his writings, as follows:

"There is a glen between this house and the lake through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls over the great roots of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all a dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument Mountain, looking like a headless sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl, when clad in the rich and diversified autumnal foliage of its woods; and beyond Monument the dome of Taconic, whose round head is more distinct than ever in Winter, when its snow patches are visable but which generally is a dark blue unvaried mountain top."

Both from the Dalton area and from many of the nation's 50 states there are music devotees who make annual pilgrimages of a week or more to Tanglewood while others just drop in once or twice each Summer. The usual eight-weeks attendance now runs about a quarter of a million.

To newcomers or others who haven't experienced Tanglewood's beautifully staged concerts, the News-Record wishes to strongly endorse such an excursion on a Saturday night or Sunday afternoon. For most people we know it is an unforgetable entertainment treat.

DALTON NEWS RECORD
DALTON, MASS.
W 3,200
JUL 6 1973
New England Newsclip

BAROQUE IS BACK

Berkshire Music Festival's 39th Year at Tanglewood Begins in Great Shed Friday

By R. C. HAMMERICH

Republican Staff

LENOX — Suddenly Tanglewood is here again.

When we were in high school, and the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood was young, we always planned, in the budding springtime, to be there.

But youth being eagerly and easily diverted, we always discovered, equally suddenly, that Tanglewood was nearly finished almost as soon as it began; so each summer we had to hurry to get there for a couple of melodic picnics near the end of the season.

Now, once more suddenly, Tanglewood is here again. Today about 400 advanced musical students from all over the world will attend a ceremony beginning at 2:30 in the Theater - Concert Hall on Tanglewood's 210 acres that officially launches their summer of intensive study under the guidance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its augmented faculty.

Before they leave they will have participated in uncountable lectures, seminars, rehearsals, bull sessions and about 40 concerts for public audiences attended in large part by members of an organization (which anyone can join for $15) called the Council of Tanglewood Friends.

And next Friday the 39th year (minus two or three war years) of the Berkshire Music Festival will start with a prelude concert in the great Shed at 7 performed on the big, built-in organ by Larry Smith followed at 9 by a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Seiji Ozawa.

Of course, by now Tanglewood's regular fans know that the first two weekends of concerts present music of the 18th century as much because it calls for small orchestral groups as it does because the lightness and delicacy of the 18th-century musical style is appropriate to the early summer in 20th-century New England.

Half of the orchestra gives the first two weekends

See BAROQUE
LT 3

COMMERCIAL DIGEST
BOSTON, MASS.
W
JUL 1973
New England Newsclip

DO YOU KNOW:

Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony, takes its name from Nathaniel Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales, after the estate Tanglewood owned by a friend of the writer.

INDEPENDENT
LITTLETON, MASS.
W 1,200
JUL 2 1973
New England Newsclip

Baroque Is Back

Continued From LT 1

of programs because the other half is still in Boston giving free concerts on the Esplanade.

It has been thus since Arthur Fiedler had the inspiration, many years ago; and the combination is a sublime stroke of genius: Pops in Bean Town and Baroque in the Berkshires, simultaneously by two halves of the same organization.

And then, in the middle of July, the full orchestra coalesces with the Tanglewood Chorus for large - scale productions like Beethoven's Ninth on July 21 and later Handel's "Messiah," Berlioz' "Lelio" and Verdi's "Requiem."

There will be 24 weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on eight consecutive weekends with 11 conductors, 18 instrumental soloists, 15 vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. But that's only the regular festival.

Lovers of the NOW sound, as distinguished from "new," will rejoice to learn that it is returning to the peaceful meadows of Tanglewood.

Four Tuesday evenings in the great Shed have been allotted once more to contemporary popular sound, some of it something like that which appeared there in 1969 when the Jefferson Airplane and the Joshua Light Show set Tanglewood's attendance record somewhere above 22,000.

The first of the regular eight weekends of performances by the orchestra (plus eight open rehearsals) starts Friday with a Bach program, which may not be peaceful to those who find Bach exciting.

But four evenings of contemporary folk, rock, folk-rock and a bit of soul are not much music compared to the whole of the Tanglewood fare . . . roughly 80 concerts for more than a quarter of a million listeners.

Pop Calendar

Anyway, here is the pop calendar: Roberta Flack and Blood Sweat and Tears on July 10, John Denver and Linda Ronstadt on July 17; Seals and Crofts and Livingston Taylor on July 24, America and Jackson Browne on July 31; all starting times are 7.30, tickets available at Ticketron outlets (in Springfield at Sears at Eastfield Mall).

There will be, also, a Tuesday evening of Boston Pops with Arthur Fiedler at the helm (Aug. 21 at 8:30), and the annual display of talents by the Berkshire Music Center students called Tanglewood - On - Parade, which offers vocal, chamber and orchestral programs from 2 to about 10:30 with a picnic break, on another Tuesday (Aug. 14.)

The main reason for existence, however, the nucleus of all this activity at Tanglewood is the Berkshire Music Festival, a series that began in 1934, was occupied permanently by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936 and moved to Tanglewood's magnificent 210 acres in 1937.

This year the 11 conductors include the artistic director, Seiji Ozawa; former artistic director, William Steinberg; associate conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas; pops conductor, Arthur Fiedler, and seven guest conductors: Eugene Ormandy, Colin Davis, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Rafael Fruhbeck DeBurgos, Lawrence Foster, James DePreist and Riccardo Muti.

The instrumental soloists, in mixed-up order, include Larry Smith, Malcolm Frager, Philippe Entremont, Andre Watts, Peter Lagger, Miriam Fried, Earl Wild, Byron Janis, Sidney Harth and Christoph Eschenbach plus several first-desk members of the orchestra.

Vocal soloists include Benita Valente, Seth McCoy, Phyllis Curtin, Ryan Edwards, Helen Watts, Tudor Davies, Stafford Dean, Mallory Walker, Victor Braun, Colin Fox, Thomas Stewart, Joanna Simon, James King, Kenneth Riegel, David Evitts, Lou Ann Wyckoff and Maureen Forrester.

And there are a few provocative tidbits in the programs to entice aural curiosity; for instance, Stravinsky's "Vom Himmel Hoch Variations" scheduled for Aug. 4 and Cage's "Suite for Toy Piano" on the program for Aug. 5.

RECORD (M)
MERIDEN, CONN.
D. 22,600
JUL 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Just Down The Pike....

MUSIC MOUNTAIN

Ward Davenny, professor of music and chairman of the piano department of Yale School of Music, will be the guest artist with the Berkshire Quartet at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Saturday at 3 p.m. Major work will be Shostakovich's "Quintet for Piano and Strings, Opus 57."

The work has been called the finest modern Russian chamber music by critics. It was introduced in 1940. Other offerings will be Hayden's "Quartet in E-Flat Major, Opus 33, No. 2," and Dvorak's "Quartet in E-Flat Major, Opus 51."

Davenny has appeared with the New Haven Symphony and the Hartford Symphony, and was formerly director of the Hartford School of Music.

NATURALIST PROGRAMS

A series of eight naturalist programs dealing with environmental topics will be presented on Saturday evenings beginning at 8 p.m. during July and August at Hammonasset and Rocky Neck State Parks, by the Department of Environmental Protection. The public is invited to the programs which are free.

Prominent naturalist, conservationists and other authorities who will speak during the program series are: Gordon Loery, director of the Litchfield Nature Center and Museum Conservation in Connecticut; Eugene Keyarts of Madison, bee hunting; Peter H. Borgemeister of the Connecticut Conservation Association, the value of Connecticut's wetlands; Robert A. Rollinson and John M. Bissell, nature photographers, Connecticut Moths and Wildflowers; Robert Dewire, naturalist, Mid-Fairfield Country Youth Museum, Birds of the Connecticut Shore; Robert Moeller, director of the Sharon Audubon Society, Mammals of Connecticut-Signs and Clues; Susan Slate, Director of the Barnes Nature Center of Bristol Reptiles and Amphibians. of Connecticut and James Grandy, Director, Brooksvale Recreation Park, Rocks and Minerals in Connecticut

On July 14 the Hammonasset program will be on moths and wildflowers, and the Rocky Neck program on conservation in the state. The following week the Hammonasset topic will be "Value of Connecticut's Wetlands," and the Rocky Neck program, moths and wildflowers.

TANGLEWOOD

Following his return from his successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

The 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehersals.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when he will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20th, Watts will give his all-Beethoven recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, he will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

PASTE OVER

Tanglewood For Andre Watts Next 2 Months

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa., giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three-hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students' studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PITTSBURG MASS.
D. 31,000
JUL 9 1973
New England Newsclip

PRESS (E)
MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
D. 22,408
JUL 18 1973
New England Newsclip

Pianist Andre Watts [illegible] t Tanglewood

JOURNAL (M)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 67,117
JUL 14 1973
New England Newsclip

[illegible]om his [illegible] Soviet [illegible]th ap- [illegible] a Sym- [illegible] Ambler [illegible] Watts [illegible] with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

A. Watts artist-in-residence at Tanglewood

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist - in - Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world - renowned 27 - year - old American virtuoso will hold 12 four - hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972 - 73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four - hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three - hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the paino chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

JOURNAL (M)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 41,000
JUL 13 1973
New England Newsclip

Andre Watts In Residence At Tanglewood for 8 Weeks

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala", serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three-hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held 4 times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14 when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20, Mr. Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Maestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The pianist's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be on August 19, playing the Franck "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

On August 1, Mr. Watts will interrupt his Tanglewood stay briefly to open the nearby Saratoga Music Festival, playing the Brahms B-flat Piano Concerto with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Andre Watts performs with Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

[illegible] ductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the eight-week period, soloing [illegible] the Berkshire Music Center. The pianist's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be on August 19th, playing the Franck "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

[illegible] lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his

JUL 6 1973

Music: Watts in eight week Tanglewood residence

LENOX, Mass. — Following his return from his successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an all-Beethoven recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Watts for two four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Watts will also meet each week for one three-hour seminar session with the eight "fellowship piano students" studying at the center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held four times during the eight-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin July 14, when Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On july 20, Watts will give his all-Beethoven recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program.

Andre Watts will teach, appear at Tanglewood

LENOX — Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the eight week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an all-Beethoven recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

Hawthorne Cottage

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for two four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin July 14 when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20, Mr. Watts will give his all-Beethoven recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Maestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The pianist's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be August 19, playing the Franck "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

August 1, Mr. Watts will interrupt his Tanglewood stay briefly to open the nearby Saratoga Music Festival, playing the Brahms B-flat Piano Concerto with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

PASTE OVER

RECORD (M)
MERIDEN, CONN.
D. 22,600
JUL 10 1973 New England Newsclip

Just Down The Pike....

B Sym

MUSIC MOUNTAIN

Ward Davenny, professor of music and chairman of the piano department of Yale School of Music, will be the guest artist with the Berkshire Quartet at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Saturday at 3 p.m. Major work will be Shostakovich's "Quintet for Piano and Strings, Opus 57."

The work has been called the finest modern Russian chamber music by critics. It was introduced in 1940. Other offerings will be Hayden's "Quartet in E-Flat Major, Opus 33, No. 2," and Dvorak's "Quartet in E-Flat Major, Opus 51."

Davenny has appeared with the New Haven Symphony and the Hartford Symphony, and was formerly director of the Hartford School of Music.

NATURALIST PROGRAMS

A series of eight naturalist programs dealing with environmental topics will be presented on Saturday evenings beginning at 8 p.m. during July and August at Hammonasset and Rocky Neck State Parks, by the Department of Environmental Protection. The public is invited to the programs which are free.

Prominent naturalist, conservationists and other authorities who will speak during the program series are: Gordon Loery, director of the Litchfield Nature Center and Museum Conservation in Connecticut; Eugene Keyarts of Madison, bee hunting; Peter H. Borgemeister of the Connecticut Conservation Association, the value of Connecticut's wetlands; Robert A. Robinson and John M. Bissell, nature photographers, Connecticut Moths and Wildflowers; Robert Dewire, naturalist, Mid-Fairfield Country Youth Museum, Birds of the Connecticut Shore; Robert Moeller, director of the Sharon Audubon Society, Mammals of Connecticut-Signs and Clues; Susan Slate, Director of the Barnes Nature Center of Bristol Reptiles and Amphibians. of Connecticut and James Grandy, Director, Brooksvale Recreation Park, Rocks and Minerals in Connecticut

On July 14 the Hammonasset program will be on moths and wildflowers, and the Rocky Neck program on conservation in the state. The following week the Hammonasset topic will be "Value of Connecticut's Wetlands," and the Rocky Neck program, moths and wildflowers.

TANGLEWOOD

Following his return from his successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

The 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehersals.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when he will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20th, Watts will give his all-Beethoven recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, he will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

PRESS (E)
MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
D. 20,468
JUL 13 1973 New England Newsclip

Pianist Andre Watts Plays at Tanglewood

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for two four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Watts will also meet each week for one three-hour seminar session with the eight "fellowship piano students" studying at the center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held four times during the eight-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin July 14, when Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20, Watts will give his all-Beethoven recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program.

Tanglewood For Andre Watts Next 2 Months

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa., giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three-hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students' studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SENTINEL (E)
FITCHBURG, MASS.
D. 21,001
JUL 7 1973 New England Newsclip

REGISTER (E)
LEOMINSTER, MASS
D. 4,[illegible]
JUL 6 1973 New England Newsclip

A. Watts artist-in-residence at Tanglewood

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist - in - Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world - renowned 27 - year - old American virtuoso will hold 12 four - hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber mu- 1972 - 73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four - hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three - hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the paino chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well. the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20th, Mr. Watts will give his all - Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E - flat Piano Concert with Maestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orches- [illegible] of Aaron ductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

Andre Watts performs with Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

In addition, Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the eight-week period, soloing the Berkshire Music Center. The pianist's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be on August 19th, playing the Franck "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his

REGISTER (E)
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 13,000
JUL 6 1973 New England Newsclip

NASHOBA FREE PRESS
ACTON, MASS.
W. 1,955
JUL 13 1973 New England Newsclip

Andre Watts In Residence At Tanglewood for 8 Weeks

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala", serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three-hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held 4 times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14 when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20, Mr. Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Maestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The pianist's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be on August 19, playing the Franck "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

On August 1, Mr. Watts will interrupt his Tanglewood stay briefly to open the nearby Saratoga Music Festival, playing the Brahms B-flat Piano Concerto with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Music: Watts in eight week Tanglewood residence

LENOX, Mass. — Following his return from his successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an all-Beethoven recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Watts for two four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Watts will also meet each week for one three-hour seminar session with the eight "fellowship piano students" studying at the center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held four times during the eight-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin July 14, when Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On july 20, Watts will give his all-Beethoven recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program.

Andre Watts will teach, appear at Tanglewood

LENOX — Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all, parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the eight week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an all-Beethoven recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

Hawthorne Cottage

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for two four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin July 14 when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20, Mr. Watts will give his all-Beethoven recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Maestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The pianist's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be August 19, playing the Franck "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

August 1, Mr. Watts will interrupt his Tanglewood stay briefly to open the nearby Saratoga Music Festival, playing the Brahms B-flat Piano Concerto with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUN 23 1973

Watts Will Take Post At Berkshire

Pianist Andre Watts, who recently completed a concert tour of the Soviet Union, will become the artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center following a June 30 concert in Pittsburgh.

Watts, also scheduled to perform with the Philadelphia Orchestra at Saratoga this summer, will be in residence at Tanglewood for eight weeks.

The 27-year-old pianist will hold 12 - four hour seminars for hand picked piano students from across the country, coach the music center's fellowship instrumentalists in chamber music repertoire and work with student conductors and the Berkshire Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in public concerts.

Included in these dates, Watts will solo with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Juti and Seiji Ozawa, give an all-Beethoven recital and serve as soloist and narrator at a special gala.

NEWS-RECORDER
WORCESTER, MASS.
W. 2,973

JUL 5 1973

New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD

Following his return from his successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

The 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehersals.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when he will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20th, Watts will give his all-Beethoven recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, he will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

OLD COLONY MEMORIAL
PLYMOUTH, MASS.

JUL 13 1973

New England Newsclip

Berkshire Music Center will feature pianist Andre Watts

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditons for seminar participants were held personally by Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour.

The 17 students chosen will meet with Watts for two four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for one three-hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held four times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20, Mr. Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade"

SUN-CHRONICLE (E)
ATTLEBORO, MASS.
D. 18,000

JUL 10 1973

New England Newsclip

World-Renowned Pianist to Appear

TANGLEWOOD — Following his return from his successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the eight-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditons for seminar participants were held personally by Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour.

The 17 students chosen will meet with Watts for two four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Watts will also meet each week for one three-hour seminar session with the eight "fellowhsip piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Bershire Music Center student orchestra will be held four times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14, when Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti.

On July 20, Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge.

On August 14, Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

PRESS (E)
BRISTOL, CONN.
D. 18,000

JUL 7 1973

New England Newsclip

Watts Is Tanglewood Artist In Residence

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire, and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three-hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held 4 times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20th, Mr. Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Maestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The pianist's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be on August 19th, playing the Franck "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

On August 1st, Mr. Watts will interrupt his Tanglewood stay briefly to open the nearby Saratoga Music Festival, playing the Brahms B-flat Piano Concerto with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Andre Watts to perform at Tanglewood

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "TTanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar particiants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. TOUR. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three-hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held 4 times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20th, Mr. Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concerr for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Maestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A" Lincoln Portrait."

SUN (E)
WESTERLY, R. I.
D. 10,000

JUN 25 1973

New England Newsclip

Andre Watts, the 27-year-old world-famous American piano virtuoso, will take up residence this summer as Tanglewood Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

EXPRESS and NEWS
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
SAT. 109,188 SUN. 117,132

JUN 10 1973

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003

JUN 24 1973

Watts To Run Seminars At Berkshire

LENOX, Mass.—Pianist Andre Watts will be artist-in-residence for an eight-week period this summer at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood.

The 27-year-old American virtuoso will conduct 12 four hour seminars for a select group of piano students from throughout the country.

He will also coach the music center's fellowship instrumentalists in chamber music repertoire and will work with student conductors in a series of rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in public concerts, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa; giving an all-Beethoven recital and serving as narrator and soloist for a special benefit "gala."

The seminars for piano students will be conducted in the "Hawthorne Cottage," a model of the house in which Nathanial Hawthorne planned his "Tanglewood Tales."

Auditions for seminar participation were conducted by Watts in 11 major cities during his 1972-73 tour of the United States.

Public performances by Watts begin July 14, when the pianist will perform Mozart's "Piano Concerto" with the Boston Symphony under Muti.

On July 20 Watts will present his all-Beethoven recital as one of the "prelude" concerts which precede regularly scheduled orchestra programs. These recitals are open to all Tanglewood concert-goers at no extra charge.

On Aug. 14 Watts will be featured soloist at the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of Berkshire Music Center.

On that occasion he will perform Liszt's "Piano Concerto in E Flat" under Ozawa and will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait."

On Aug. 19 he will play Franck's "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz."

On Aug. 1 Watts will interrupt his Tanglewood stay to open the Saratoga Music Festival, playing Brahms' "Piano Concerto in B Flat" under Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUN 23 1973

Watts Will Take Post At Berkshire

Pianist Andre Watts, who recently completed a concert tour of the Soviet Union, will become the artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center following a June 30 concert in Pittsburgh.

Watts, also scheduled to perform with the Philadelphia Orchestra at Saratoga this summer, will be in residence at Tanglewood for eight weeks.

The 27-year-old pianist will hold 12 - four hour seminars for hand picked piano students from across the country, coach the music center's fellowship instrumentalists in chamber music repertoire and work with student conductors and the Berkshire Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in public concerts.

Included in these dates, Watts will solo with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Juti and Seiji Ozawa, give an all-Beethoven recital and serve as soloist and narrator at a special gala.

NEWS RECORDER
WORCESTER, MASS.
W. 2,973

JUL 5 1973

New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD

Following his return from his successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

The 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehersals.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when he will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20th, Watts will give his all-Beethoven recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, he will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

JUN 13 1973

Berkshire Music Center will feature pianist Andre Watts

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held four times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20, Mr. Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade"

SUN-CHRONICLE (E)
ATTLEBORO, MASS.
D. 18,000

JUN 10 1973

World-Renowned Pianist to Appear

TANGLEWOOD — Following his return from his successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the eight-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditons for seminar participants were held personally by Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour.

The 17 students chosen will meet with Watts for two four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Watts will also meet each week for one three-hour seminar session with the eight "fellowhsip piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Bershire Music Center student orchestra will be held four times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14, when Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti.

On July 20, Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge.

On August 14, Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

PRESS (E)
BRISTOL, CONN.
D. 18,000

JUL 9 1973

Watts Is Tanglewood Artist In Residence

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire, and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three-hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held 4 times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20th, Mr. Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Maestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The pianist's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be on August 19th, playing the Franck "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

On August 1st, Mr. Watts will interrupt his Tanglewood stay briefly to open the nearby Saratoga Music Festival, playing the Brahms B-flat Piano Concerto with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Andre Watts to perform at Tanglewood

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "TTanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar particiants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. TOUR. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three-hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held 4 times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20th, Mr. Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Maestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A" Lincoln Portrait."

SUN (E)
WESTERLY, R. I.
D. 10,000

JUN 25 1973

New England Newsclip

Andre Watts, the 27-year-old world-famous American piano virtuoso, will take up residence this summer as Tanglewood Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

EXPRESS and NEWS
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
SAT. 109,188 SUN. 117,132

JUN 10 1973

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003

JUN 24 1973

Watts To Run Seminars At Berkshire

LENOX, Mass.—Pianist Andre Watts will be artist-in-residence for an eight-week period this summer at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood.

The 27-year-old American virtuoso will conduct 12 four hour seminars for a select group of piano students from throughout the country.

He will also coach the music center's fellowship instrumentalists in chamber music repertoire and will work with student conductors in a series of rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in public concerts, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa; giving an all-Beethoven recital and serving as narrator and soloist for a special benefit "gala."

The seminars for piano students will be conducted in the "Hawthorne Cottage," a model of the house in which Nathanial Hawthorne planned his "Tanglewood Tales."

Auditions for seminar participation were conducted by Watts in 11 major cities during his 1972-73 tour of the United States.

Public performances by Watts begin July 14, when the pianist will perform Mozart's "Piano Concerto" with the Boston Symphony under Muti.

On July 20 Watts will present his all-Beethoven recital as one of the "prelude" concerts which precede regularly scheduled orchestra programs. These recitals are open to all Tanglewood concert-goers at no extra charge.

On Aug. 14 Watts will be featured soloist at the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of Berkshire Music Center.

On that occasion he will perform Liszt's "Piano Concerto in E Flat" under Ozawa and will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait."

On Aug. 19 he will play Franck's "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz."

On Aug. 1 Watts will interrupt his Tanglewood stay to open the Saratoga Music Festival, playing Brahms' "Piano Concerto in B Flat" under Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Pianist Andre Watts In Residence At Tanglewood

Pianist Andre Watts has taken up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country, will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals. In addition, Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables." Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Watts for 2-four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Watts will also meet each week for 1 three-hour seminar session with the eight "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held four times during the eight-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14th, when Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Muti. On July 20th, Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14th, Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Maestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait."

TIMES (E)
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514
JUN 27 1973
New England Newsclip

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD
BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

GALVESTON, TEXAS NEWS
D. 18,000
FEB 5 1973

Andre Watts joins Berkshire Center

BOSTON — Following his return from his successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables."

Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 ma[illegible] cities across the country during his 1972-73 tran[illegible] students chosen will meet with [illegible] hour sessions each week, during [illegible] will be on musical rather than tec[illegible] piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each [illegible] seminar session with the 8 [illegible] students" studying at the Cen[illegible] program subsidized by the [illegible] Orchestra. The students will als[illegible] for special coaching with Watt[illegible] works of the piano chamber m[illegible] volving student players of st[illegible] struments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsal[illegible] ductors and the Berkshire Musi[illegible] chestra will be held 4 times during [illegible] the pianist's Tanglewood residen[illegible] standard works of the concerto re[illegible] problems of soloist and conduct[illegible]

McALESTER, OKLA.
NEWS-CAPITAL
D. 9,000
FEB 23 1973

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
APR 21 1973

AMERICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
D. 40,675
New England Newsclip

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD
BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD
BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

NEWS
ATHOL, MASS.
D. 5,281
APR 16 1973
New England Newsclip

Watts to teach at Tanglewood

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,805
JUN 29 1973
New England Newsclip

Watts Seminar Auditions Set

Auditions will be held March 21 for pianists who wish to enter the three-week seminars at Tanglewood taught by Andre Watts.

Watts will teach the seminars, July 8-28 and July 29-Aug. 18. Twenty pianists will be admitted to each. Applications go to the Berkshire Music Center, Box FW, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 463,503 SUN. 867,510
MAR 11 1973

Watts Will Teach At Tanglewood

MINUTE MAN
BEDFORD, MASS.
W. 2,993
JUN 28 1973
New England Newsclip

PATRIOT & MINUTEMAN
BILLERICA, MASS.
W. 2,500
JUN 28 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Star

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist André Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

Tanglewood Star

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist André Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

CITIZEN
BELMONT, MASS.
W. 4,000
JUN 28 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Star

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist André Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

Daily Defender
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
D. [illegible]
JAN 25 1973

A 'First'

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 136,857
FEB 8 1973
New England Newsclip

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUN 26 1973
New England Newsclip

TIMES
PEABODY, MASS.
W. 6,043
JUN 27 1973
New England Newsclip

GREENFIELD, OHIO
TIMES
D. 5,500
MAR 6 1973

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD
BOSTON — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
S. 106,767
MAR 18 1973
New England Newsclip

HELENA, MONT.
INDEPENDENT RECORD
D. 9,500
JAN 31 1973

Andre Watts to audition pianist for his seminar

For the first time this summer the celebrated young American pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood.

In a dramatic departure from a concert schedule that has made him one of the busiest and most highly-travelled concert artists of his generation, the 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as Artist-in-Residence near the famed Berkshire estate (Tanglewood) in Lenox, Massachusetts.

Watts will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28, and July 29 through August 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to twenty pianists, selected by Mr. Watts in a series of auditions during the pianist's forthcoming coast-to-coast recital-concert tour.

Audition cities are to include New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, San Antonio, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Ames, Iowa and Toronto, Canada.

Tuition for each seminar will be $250, and a limited number of scholarships will be provided through the Berkshire Music Center, an activity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For additional information, contact the Berkshire Music center, Symphony Hall, Boston, Massachusetts 02115, (617) 266-1492.

ANDRE WATTS

Watts to teach

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

HERALD (E)
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
D. 33,583
JUN 28 1973
New England Newsclip

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD
BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18.

BANNER (E)
BENNINGTON, VT.
D. 6,500
JUL 7 1973
New England Newsclip

Music

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts, who has performed with the New Britain Symphony, will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

The Watts public performances in the Tanglewood Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14, when Mr. Watts will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony under Riccardo Muti. On July 20, Mr. Watts will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge. On August 14, Mr. Watts will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he will not only perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Maestro Seiji Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The pianist's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be on August 19, playing the Franck Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

Pianist Watts to teach, perform at Tanglewood

Pianist Andre Watts, summer artist-in-residence at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center, will hold seminars in piano, coach chamber music, do reading rehearsals with student conductors and perform both as soloist and narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

17 students

Watts will hold 12 four-hour piano seminars in Hawthorne Cottage for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country.

He will coach the Center's eight fellowship instrumentalists in chamber music repertoire. These students are under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Watts will also work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

Watts will play Mozart's Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony conducted by Riccardo Muti on July 14. On July 20, he will give an all-Beethoven recital in the Shed as one of the prelude concerts.

On Aug. 14, he will be featured soloist for the Tanglewood on Parade concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. He will perform Liszt's E Flat Piano Concerto with the symphony conducted by Seiji Ozawa, and will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait."

His final appearance will be on Aug. 19, when he will play Franck's "Symphonic Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with the symphony under Ozawa.

On Aug. 1, Watts will open the Saratoga Music Festival with the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy. He will play Brahm's B Flat Piano Concerto.

Andre Watts joins Berkshire Center

BOSTON — Following his return from his successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30th appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world-renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 12 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Mr. Watts will appear 4 times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the 8-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven Recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables."

Auditions for seminar participants were held personally by Mr. Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U.S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with Mr. Watts for 2 four-hour sessions each week, during which the emphasis will be on musical rather than technical aspects of solo piano performance.

Mr. Watts will also meet each week for 1 three-hour seminar session with the 8 "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The students will also have opportunities for special coaching with Watts on several major works of the piano chamber music repertoire, involving student players of string and wind instruments as well.

Mr. Watts' reading rehearsals with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center student orchestra will be held 4 times during the 8-week period of the pianist's Tanglewood residence and will deal with standard works of the concerto repertoire, relating the problems of soloist and conductor.

BRILLIANT YOUNG American pianist, Andre Watts, will conduct six weeks of a piano seminar at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, from July 8 through Aug. 18.

The 26-year-old pianist recently accepted the presidency of American Music Scholarship Association which has thus far awarded more than 400 scholarships to piano students throughout the nation. The non-profit organization is based in Cincinnati. Watts pledged a $5,000 contribution of his own towards the awards.

Watts gave an outstanding piano recital on Clark University Fine Arts Series in March of last year.

Tanglewood Signs Andre Watts

LENOX — Following his return from his Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

Student Seminars

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world - renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 2 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the eight-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables."

Auditions for seminar partcipants were held personally by Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U. S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with him for two four - hour sessions each week, during which the of solo - piano performance.

Watts will also meet each week for one three - hour seminar session with the eight "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Public Performances

The Watts public per- Shed on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14 when he will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Muti.

On July 20th, he will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge.

On August 14, he will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he not only will perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Masestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but also will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be on August 19, playing the Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

On August 1, Watts will interrupt his Tanglewood stay briefly to open the nearby Saratoga Music Festival, playing the Brahsm B-flat Piano Concerto with Euguene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

PRESS-HERALD
PORTLAND, MAINE
D. 54,974

MAY 17 1973

New England Newsclip

UNION (M)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 84,000

JUN 27 1973

New England Newsclip

Pianist Andre Watts Will Hold Tanglewood Seminars

BOSTON (AP) – For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

NEWS-TIMES
DANBURY, CONN.
D. 31,285

JAN 31 1973

New England Newsclip

Watts to teach at Tanglewood

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

Buffalo Evening News
D. 281,982 SAT. 297,247

APR 21 1973

Pianist Watts Will Teach At Tanglewood

Associated Press

BOSTON — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-yer-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18.

Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his current recital tour.

Andre Watts to Give Seminars

FOR THE first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 303,041 SUN. 353,214

MAR 11 1973

WACO, TEXAS
TRIBUNE-HERALD
D. 48,000

MAR 4 1973

Andre Watts, Pianist, Seeks Out Perfection

By ANDREA CHAMBERS
Monitor News Service

NEW YORK — With a blink of recognition, the cab driver swiveled around and peered at his passenger. "You look a heck of a lot like Andre Watts," he said, gazing at the young man fumbling for the address. "Uh, why, yes. That's because I am," replied the embarrassed passenger. Quickly, he reeled off his destination.

Although pianist Watts has been on the national and international concert scene for over 10 years, he is still not accustomed to fame. After all, at age 26, what musician can really feel that he has achieved that ultimate in status: recognition by the notoriously uncultured New York cabbies? In fact, who could even take it in stride when a long-distance operator, hearing the name of the collect caller, once gasped: "The Andre Watts?"

Yes, the Andre Watts, whose storybook debut before the New York Philharmonic at age 16 is already legend. Yes, the Andre Watts, protege of Leonard Bernstein, who has gone on to become a celebrated pianist, often booked as far as three years in advance.

Appearing older than his years in an elegantly tailored cream-colored suit, Watts discussed his whirlwind musical career while simultaneously indulging one of his favorite leisure-time activities: manipulating a pair of chopsticks through the many courses of a Japanese dinner. A culinary as well as musical gourmet, Watts enjoys the good life his successful career has allowed and dines as often as possible at New York's Far Eastern restaurants.

IN FACT, fine cuisine and a varied spectrum of reading material appear to be the only two nonmusical interests of the young pianist. Totally absorbed in his work ("All good musicians must be") he often practices six or eight hours a day emerging only for a stroll around his thickwalled Manhattan apartment.

Young as he is, pianist Watts can already look back on a career as broad and varied as his romantic and classical repetoire. At 16, he performed on a nationally televised Young People's Concert with Leonard Bernstein. Twenty days later, the same conductor called on him as a lastminute replacement in a concert with the New York Philharmonic.

Glen Gould, scheduled as soloist for the Philharmonic's regular subscription series at Lincoln Center, was unable to make it. When the coltish young replacement shyly took his place at the piano, the audience groaned audibly. But when Watts sounded the last cadenza of the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto has performance was met with a solid 15 minutes of applause.

Shortly after, Columbia Records packaged an elaborate recording entitled "The Exciting Debut of Andre Watts."

ALTHOUGH OFFERS poured in after the well publicized debut, stern clamps were placed on the young musician's career by his mother and teachers, who wanted Watts to finish his studies at the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore and to mature both musically and emotionally. In 1966, the pianist made a European debut with the London Symphony and in 1967 a world tour for the U.S. State Department. Today, Watts averages 100 performances a year.

Having summersaulted into a position of fame at an early age, Watts might well be an egomaniac supervirtuoso. Virtuoso, yes, but he has managed to remain shy and unpretentious with a bent for philosophical discussions about music and the role of the artist.

"I feel that I am suited to work," he mused over his favorite appetizer of raw fish. "I don't get carried away with the externals, with the idea of being famous. After all, one is only special when fulfilling a specific function. If I walk down Fifth Avenue, why should I get on a bus ahead of anyone? But if I'm on stage, then, yes, I deserve special treatment."

Unlike many musicians, he scoffs at the notion that a pianist can be unaware of the audience while playing. "Of course you know that they are there. Otherwise you'd scratch your nose or something."

He explains that he uses his audience to become "intelligently arbitrary." When he feels that the audience is responding warmly and enthusiastically to his work, then he allows it to inspire and heighten his performance. If the response seems bored or hostile, he blocks it out lest it upset his playing.

AS ANDRE WATTS discusses his career, there is an air of solemnity in his dark, well-chiseled features. "Intense" and "brooding" are two words often applied to him, and it is easy to understand how he could travel around the world and miss most of the sights: Athens was the city where middle C stuck on the piano; Madrid was where he was given a Bechstein instead of a Baldwin. Totally absorbed in his music, the pianist judges European cities by the quality of their practice rooms.

When teased about his single-mindedness, Watts replied that he is really very easy going. "Why I'm known for that among conductors," he boasted.

He explained that the relationship between a pianist and a conductor can easily evolve into a contest of wills. "The conductor can want a piece done one way, and the pianist wants it done another. However, I've learned to look at it like a bargaining table. I'll agree to do some of what he wants, if he'll let me play a section as I want. I just don't have that much of an ego about it."

There are several points upon which Watts appears adamant, even defensive, however. "Of course I like contemporary music," he protested, "even though I don't play it much. I just feel that people grasp romantic music better." That's why he prefers Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, Liszt, and Haydn for recital repertoire. Ravel and Brahms, too, are favorites.

AS A DEVOTEE of the musical masters, Watts has had to formulate clear ideas on stylistic imitation. If Rudolph Serkin plays a sonata one way, should that automatically be the right way? "Only if you understand why he did it and can feel it yourself," answers Watts. "You don't have to be different for the sake of being different."

A very real sore spot for the young artist is the emphasis in the press upon his relationship with his mother. Herself a pianist, Hungarian-born Maria Alexandra Watts has been a continual confidante and companion to her son. She has been termed a typical, domineering stage mama. (Mrs. Watts is divorced from Andre's father, a black American who met his white, very blond wife during the war.)

"Of course she is domineering and I find that good," protested Watts. "She had helped me a great deal with my career. And, you know, she is not always hanging round as people have written. When we go to Europe on tours, she is often in one city visiting old friends when I am playing in another."

Aside from his mother, Watts has few close friends. He finds that most of his day is devoted to music, allowing little time for friends or entertaiment. Nor does this bother him.

Rarely satisfied with a concert, he is relentless in his demands upon himself. "I've never mastered a piece," he insisted, despite the wide-eyed disbelief of his listener. Then, he smiled and a strange little-boy look crossed his features. "But I've played pieces better than a lot of other people."

As the musical gourmet polished off the last of his bean curd, beef and cabbage entree, he talked enthusiastically of his summer vacation — the first, in fact, in three years. By this point in the dinner and conversation, there was little doubt of what that forthcoming summer relaxation might be for the li of Andre Watts. What else eight weeks teaching at the nowned Tanglewood, Mas summer music festival.

Pianist Andre Watts

NEWS
GARDNER, MASS.
D. 8,061

FEB 1 1973

New England Newsclip

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
D. 17,000

FEB 5 1973

PASCAGOULA, MISS.
MISSISSIPPI PRESS
DAILY 13,000

FEB 7 1973

EL DORADO, ARK.
NEWS
D. 10,500 S. 11,500

FEB 2 1973

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

The Boston Globe
(EVENING)
D. 195,032

FEB 14 1973

New England Newsclip

NEW ORLEANS STATES-ITEM
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
D. 127,887 SAT. 112,226

MAR 3 1973

Seminars Planned By Andre Watts

BOSTON (AP)—For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

BAYTOWN, TEXAS
SUN
D. 13,000

FEB 1973

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
D. 4,000

MAR 15 1973

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

Watts To Give Piano Seminars

Boston (AP)—For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18.

The Indianapolis Star
D. 231,064 SUN. 379,299

MAR 11 1973

Tanglewood toils for Watts pupils

ist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

TIMES-UNION
BURLINGTON, MASS
W. 4,950

JUN 28 1973

MIDLAND, MICH.
NEWS
D. 15,500

FEB 5 1973

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

Watts To Teach At Tanglewood

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26 year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

SWEETWATER, TEXAS
REPORTER
D. 6,000

FEB 21 1973

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 189,871

MAR 9 1973

Watts To Teach At Tanglewood

Boston (AP)—For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire 8-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach 2 three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through August 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

Tanglewood Signs Andre Watts

LENOX — Following his return from his Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist Andre Watts will take up residence for eight weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

Student Seminars

In what will be his first teaching experience, the world - renowned 27-year-old American virtuoso will hold 2 four-hour seminars for a hand-picked group of 17 piano students from all parts of the country; will coach the Music Center's "fellowship instrumentalists" in chamber music repertoire; and will work with student conductors and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a series of reading rehearsals.

In addition, Watts will appear four times in the public concerts of the Berkshire Festival during the eight-week period, soloing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Riccardo Muti and Seiji Ozawa, giving an All-Beethoven recital, and, for a special benefit "gala," serving both as narrator and as piano soloist.

The Andre Watts Piano Seminars will be held in the picturesque Hawthorne Cottage, an exact on-the-site replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and planned his "Tanglewood Tales" and began work on "The House of the Seven Gables."

Auditions for seminar partcipants were held personally by Watts in 11 major cities across the country during his 1972-73 trans-U. S. tour. The 17 students chosen will meet with him for two four - hour sessions each week, during which the of solo - piano performance.

Watts will also meet each week for one three - hour seminar session with the eight "fellowship piano students" studying at the Center under a special program subsidized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Public Performances

The Watts public performance on the regular Berkshire Music Festival program will begin on July 14 when he will play the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 491 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Muti.

On July 20th, he will give his All-Beethoven Recital in the Shed as one of the "Prelude" concerts preceding that night's regularly scheduled orchestral program and available to all ticket holders at no extra charge.

On August 14, he will be the featured soloist for the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. On this occasion he not only will perform the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto with Masestro Ozawa and the Boston Symphony, but also will appear as narrator with the orchestra for the performance of Aaron Copland's final appearance at the Berkshire Festival will be on August 19, playing the Variations" and Liszt's "Todtentanz" with Ozawa and the Boston Symphony.

On August 1, Watts will interrupt his Tanglewood stay briefly to open the nearby Saratoga Music Festival, playing the Brahsm B-flat Piano Concerto with Euguene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
D. 17,000

FEB 5 1973

Pianist Andre Watts Will Hold Tanglewood Seminars

BOSTON (AP) – For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

NEWS-TIMES
DANBURY, CONN.
D. 31,285

JAN 31 1973

New England Newsclip

Watts to teach at Tanglewood

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

Buffalo Evening News
D. 281,082 SAT. 257,247

APR 21 1973

Pianist Watts Will Teach At Tanglewood

Associated Press

BOSTON — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-yer-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18.

Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his current recital tour.

PRESS-HERALD
PORTLAND, MAINE
D. 4,974

UNION (M)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 84,000

JUN 27 1973

New England Newsclip

Andre Watts to Give Seminars

FOR THE first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 303,041 SUN. 553,214

MAR 11 1973

WACO, TEXAS
TRIBUNE-HERALD
D. 48,000

MAR 4 1973

Andre Watts, Pianist, Seeks Out Perfection

By ANDREA CHAMBERS
Monitor News Service

NEW YORK — With a blink of recognition, the cab driver swiveled around and peered at his passenger. "You look a heck of a lot like Andre Watts," he said, gazing at the young man fumbling for the address. "Uh, why, yes. That's because I am," replied the embarrassed passenger. Quickly, he reeled off his destination.

Although pianist Watts has been on the national and international concert scene for over 10 years, he is still not accustomed to fame. After all, at age 26, what musician can really feel that he has achieved that ultimate in status: recognition by the notoriously uncultured New York cabbies? In fact, who could even take it in stride when a long-distance operator, hearing the name of the collect caller, once gasped: "The Andre Watts?"

Yes, the Andre Watts, whose storybook debut before the New York Philharmonic at age 16 is already legend. Yes, the Andre Watts, protege of Leonard Bernstein, who has gone on to become a celebrated pianist, often booked as far as three years in advance.

Appearing older than his years in an elegantly tailored cream-colored suit, Watts discussed his whirlwind musical career while simultaneously indulging one of his favorite leisure-time activities: manipulating a pair of chopsticks through the many courses of a Japanese dinner. A culinary as well as musical gourmet, Watts enjoys the good life his successful career has allowed and dines as often as possible at New York's Far Eastern restaurants.

IN FACT, fine cuisine and a varied spectrum of reading material appear to be the only two nonmusical interests of the young pianist. Totally absorbed in his work ("All good musicians must be") he often practices six or eight hours a day emerging only for a stroll around his thickwalled Manhattan apartment.

Young as he is, pianist Watts can already look back on a career as broad and varied as his romantic and classical repertoire. At 16, he performed on a nationally televised Young People's Concert with Leonard Bernstein. Twenty days later, the same conductor called on him as a lastminute replacement in a concert with the New York Philharmonic.

Glen Gould, scheduled as soloist for the Philharmonic's regular subscription series at Lincoln Center, was unable to make it. When the coltish young replacement shyly took his place at the piano, the audience groaned audibly. But when Watts sounded the last cadenza of the Liszt E-flat Piano Concerto has performance was met with a solid 15 minutes of applause.

Shortly after, Columbia Records packaged an elaborate recording entitled "The Exciting Debut of Andre Watts."

ALTHOUGH OFFERS poured in after the well publicized debut, stern clamps were placed on the young musician's career by his mother and teachers, who wanted Watts to finish his studies at the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore and to mature both musically and emotionally. In 1966, the pianist made a European debut with the London Symphony and in 1967 a world tour for the U. S. State Department. Today, Watts averages 100 performances a year.

Having summersaulted into a position of fame at an early age, Watts might well be an egomaniac supervirtuoso. Virtuoso, yes, but he has managed to remain shy and unpretentious with a bent for philosophical discussions about music and the role of the artist.

"I feel that I am suited to work," he mused over his favorite appetizer of raw fish. "I don't get carried away with the externals, with the idea of being famous. After all, one is only special when fulfilling a specific function. If I walk down Fifth Avenue, why should I get on a bus ahead of anyone? But if I'm on stage, then, yes, I deserve special treatment."

Unlike many musicians, he scoffs at the notion that a pianist can be unaware of the audience while playing. "Of course you know that they are there. Otherwise you'd scratch your nose or something."

He explains that he uses his audience to become "intelligently arbitrary." When he feels that the audience is responding warmly and enthusiastically to his work, then he allows it to inspire and heighten his performance. If the response seems bored or hostile, he blocks it out lest it upset his playing.

AS ANDRE WATTS discusses his career, there is an air of solemnity in his dark, well-chiseled features. "Intense" and "brooding" are two words often applied to him, and it is easy to understand how he could travel around the world and miss most of the sights: Athens was the city where middle C stuck on the piano; Madrid was where he was given a Bechstein instead of a Baldwin. Totally absorbed in his music, the pianist judges European cities by the quality of their practice rooms.

When teased about his single-mindedness, Watts replied that he is really very easy going. "Why I'm known for that among conductors," he boasted.

He explained that the relationship between a pianist and a conductor can easily evolve into a contest of wills. "The conductor can want a piece done one way, and the pianist wants it done another. However, I've learned to look at it like a bargaining table. I'll agree to do some of what he wants, if he'll let me play a section as I want. I just don't have that much of an ego about it."

There are several points upon which Watts appears adamant, even defensive, however. "Of course I like contemporary music," he protested, "even though I don't play it much. I just feel that people grasp romantic music better." That's why he prefers Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, Liszt, and Haydn for recital repertoire. Ravel and Brahms, too, are favorites.

AS A DEVOTEE of the musical masters, Watts has had to formulate clear ideas on stylistic imitation. If Rudolph Serkin plays a sonata one way, should that automatically be the right way? "Only if you understand why he did it and can feel it yourself," answers Watts. "You don't have to be different for the sake of being different."

A very real sore spot for the young artist is the emphasis in the press upon his relationship with his mother. Herself a pianist, Hungarian-born Maria Alexandra Watts has been a continual confidante and companion to her son. She has been termed a typical, domineering stage mama. (Mrs. Watts is divorced from Andre's father, a black American who met his white, very blond wife during the war.)

"Of course she is domineering and I find that good," protested Watts. "She had helped me a great deal with my career. And, you know, she is not always hanging round as people have written. When we go to Europe on tours, she is often in one city visiting old friends when I am playing in another."

Aside from his mother, Watts has few close friends. He finds that most of his day is devoted to music, allowing little time for friends or entertaiment. Nor does this bother him.

Rarely satisfied with a concert, he is relentless in his demands upon himself. "I've never mastered a piece," he insisted, despite the wide-eyed disbelief of his listener. Then, he smiled and a strange little-boy look crossed his features. "But I've played pieces better than a lot of other people."

As the musical gourmet polished off the last of his bean curd, beef and cabbage entree, he talked enthusiastically of his summer vacation — the first, in fact, in three years. By this point in the dinner and conversation, there was little doubt of what that forthcoming summer relaxation might be for the little eight weeks teaching at the Andre Watts. What else owned Tanglewood, Mass summer music festival.

Pianist Andre Watts

NEWS
GARDNER, MASS.
D. 8,061

FEB 1 1973

New England Newsclip

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

FEB 7 1973

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

FEB 2 1973

The Boston Globe
(EVENING)
D. 195,032

FEB 14 1973

New England Newsclip

TIMES-UNION
BURLINGTON, MASS
W. 4,950

JUN 28 1973

Tanglewood toils for Watts pupils

ist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

NEW ORLEANS STATES-ITEM
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
D. 127,887 SAT. 112,226

MAR 3 1973

Seminars Planned By Andre Watts

BOSTON (AP)—For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

MIDLAND, MICH.
NEWS
D. 15,000

FEB 5 1973

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

BAYTOWN, TEXAS
SUN
D. 13,000

FEB 3 1973

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
D. 4,000

MAR 15 1973

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

Watts To Give Piano Seminars

Boston (AP)—For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18.

The Indianapolis Star
D. 231,064 SUN. 379,299

MAR 11 1973

Watts To Teach At Tanglewood

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

WATTS TO TEACH AT TANGLEWOOD

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

FEB 21 1973

SWEETWATER, TEXAS
REPORTER
D. 6,500

MAR 9 1973

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 139,871

Watts To Teach At Tanglewood

Boston (AP)—For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire 8-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach 2 three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through August 18. Enrollment in each seminar will be limited to 20, selected by Watts in a series of auditions during his coming recital tour.

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528

JUL 2 1973 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Holds Annual Opener for 461 Students

By RICHARD CONWAY

While it is the weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that most people think of when the name Tanglewood is mentioned, all the speakers at the annual opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center Sunday afternoon emphasized the even greater importance of that summer long school for aspiring professional musicians.

Some 461 students were greeted yesterday afternoon, assured of their importance to the center, and given some things to think about during the next eight weeks.

Thomas Perry Jr., executive director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, told the students that they enriched the orchestra by their being there. . .that they brought a freshness, a vitality. . .and that the orchestra probably got as much from them as it gave to them in professional know-how.

As did one or two of the other speakers Perry emphasized the cost of underwriting the school, but also emphasized that the orchestra association did so in the sure knowledge that what they were doing was of great importance.

Seiji Ozawa, who is the new music director of the Boston Symphony, spoke informally, and in his halting English, of his days as a student at the Berkshire Music Center some 14 years ago. Obviously popular with the young musicians, Ozawa said much the same thing he has for the past three years, emphasizing the need to pay attention to detail. Again he insisted on the importance of sight-singing and ear-training.

Following a performance of the Bach 'Sonata in G minor for unaccompanied violin" by Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chairman of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, the principal address of the day was given by Gunther Schuller, artistic director of the Center.

Schuller, who is president of the New England Conservatory, spoke of Serge Koussevitsky's original intent of the Center he worked to bring into being, a place where composers and performers could come together and, in effect, "turn each other on."

Schuller talked of the role played by composer and performer in regard to music, and said that each was necessary to the other — the creator and re-creator. He, of course, gave precedence to the composer, quite correctly saying that without the creator of music there would be nothing to sing or play.

Most interesting to me was something that came toward the end of his remarks. In talking of the necessity for composers to have their works heard regardless of how good, bad, or indifferent they may be, he said that it "was arrogant to think that every new piece should be a masterpiece." He pointed out that it took "100 Dittersdorfs to make one Mozart." It was countless Spohrs and Cherubinis that finally led to Beethoven. One needs to see new works as part of a continuum, a larger process in the ongoing creation of music.

As it has since 1940, the exercises closed with the singing of Randall Thompson's famous choral work "Alleluia," composed especially for the opening of the Berkshire Music Center.

Tanglewood Star

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist André Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

CITIZEN
WINSTED, CONN.
D. 4,600

JUN 30 1973 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Open House Set Sunday

LENOX, Mass. — Persons in northwestern Connecticut, interested in Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music center in the Berkshires and who are interested in becoming Friends of Tanglewood, are invited to a meeting at the center on Sunday, June 24 at 4 p.m.

Mrs. Duncan Ellsworth of Salisbury and Talcott Barks, a trustee of the symphony, will be there to talk about his summer's program at Tanglewood.

One of the primary activities at Tanglewood which benefits from the support of friends of the orchestra, is the Berkshire Music Center for advanced study. There, for eight weeks each summer, gifted young musicians from all over the world come to work intensively in their particular fields, playing, conducting or composing.

The center opened in 1940. Many of the players in major orchestras in this country have studied there.

Tanglewood Opens In Traditional Style

By R. C. HAMMERICH
Union Staff

LENOX — The Boston Symphony Orchestra started its season at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon in traditional fashion. . .by welcoming 461 young musicians for a summer of study.

The Berkshire Music Center, founded at Tanglewood by Serge Koussevitsky in 1940, conducted its opening session in a manner much like it has for several years.

There were welcoming words from Thomas Perry, executive director of the orchestra, and a couple of other dignitaries, a bit of chamber music, a major address and a performance, without accompaniment, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" by all 461 voices.

The "Alleluia" was composed for the first ceremony in 1940 and has been sung, with one quick rehearsal, by the arriving students at the start of each year.

The major address was given by Gunther Schuller, artistic director of the Berkshire Music Center and president of the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

He talked to the students, who have come from all over the world, about the philosophical values which went into the creation of the center and which, in turn, can be drawn from it.

And he discussed the interdependence of creating music (composing) and recreating music (performing), giving the best of it to the creative side (he is also a composer).

Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of the Berkshire Festival and the orchestra, told the students a bit about how he felt when he arrived at Tanglewood as a student from Japan 14 years ago, and reminded them that while the imagination necessary to professional performance may come from anywhere, the technical proficiency comes from hard work.

The chamber music on the program this year was provided by Joseph Silver- the center faculty. He played stein, concertmaster of the orchestra and chairman of the center faculty. He played one of Bach's great sonatas

UNION (M)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 84,000

JUL 2 1973 New England Newsclip

WATTS TO TEACH

For the first time, pianist Andre Watts will give piano seminars at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's advanced training center for young musicians at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The 26-year-old pianist will spend the entire eight-week session of the Music Center as artist-in-residence. He will teach two three-week seminars for advanced piano students July 8 through 28 and July 29 through Aug. 18.

TELEGRAM (M)
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 60,210

JUL 2 1973 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Greets Pupils

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Some 400 students from many states and continents received a cordial and impressive introduction to Tanglewood yesterday afternoon at the 34th annual opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center.

Main speaker was Gunther Schuller, artistic director of the Center.

The students' heart-warmer, however, was an impromptu talk by Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which operates Tanglewood's "ne plus ultra" summer academy of advanced study.

Ozawa reminisced about his similar situation, 14 years ago, when he first reached Tanglewood as a Center student.

"I sat where you are now sitting," he said. "My roommate talked a lot about Mahler's music. I had never herd Mahler sic. I had never heard a Mahler symphony. There was so much to learn — with the head, eyes, hands and heart. If I could do it, so can you."

Ozawa received thunderous applause.

Addressing his remarks to the "young musician artists," Schuller enumerated several reasons why they might be at Tanglewood — a summer place to hang the hat, make contacts, work with freedom from an academic routine.

He reviewed in detail the purposes for which the late Serge Koussevitsky fonuded the Berkshire Music Center in 1940, and opined that "creativity must come first."

Schuller is a composer.

He expressed the hope that students would avail themselves of the opportunity to establish close communication between composers and performers.

Among the large number of hand-picked fellowship students at the Center are a few composers.

Schuller justified his special affinity for composition with the belief that composers reflect the world around them and performers are the public's purveyors of these infinite messages.

Speakers and musicians were introduced by Thomas D. Perry Jr., former manager of the Boston Symphony and now the orchestra's executive director.

Perry assured the students of their significance to the Tanglewood scene.

"The Boston Symphony and Berkshire Center receive mutual benefit, and I'm not sure that the orchestra doesn't receive the greater," he said. "One of the greatest advantages is that during the eight weeks, professional members of the orchestra, faculty members and students share and live a professional life."

"This is what makes the Berkshire Center unique among schools all over the world," he added.

Bach's unaccompanied G r nor Violin Sonata was played by Joseph Silverstein, concert master of the Boston Symphony and chairman of the Berkshire Center faculty.

The opening adagio and siciliano were relaxed, pliant, expressive and gorgeously toned. Unsteady moments appeared in the fugue although it was structurally clear. The concluding presto was brilliant and received heavy applause.

Greetings were given by Vernon R. Alden, Boston Symphony trustee, and William Selke, representing the Council of Tanglewood Friends.

The event's historical footnote was the performance of Randall Thompson's Alleluia, written especially for the first session of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940 and performed annually ever since.

Conductor was John Oliver.

The one and only rehearsal was about a half hour before the opening exercises.

Most choral groups, even professional, work diligently for weeks, or even months, to give such a performance of the Alleluia as yesterday's.

Unaccompanied, pitch was absolutely steadfast, phrasing precise, and quality had to come from the heart — a true alleluia.

After all, the singers were some of the world's finest young musicians. The Alleluia was evidence enough that they were thrilled to be there.

The Theater-Concert Hall was filled to its 1,800 capacity.

Four new BMC programs add up to record class

The largest recorded student enrollment at the Berkshire Music Center is attributed to four new programs instituted there this summer, according to Daniel R. Gustin, administrator of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Up by 57

Enrollment is 461, up by 57 over last year, with every state in the continental United States and at least 35 foreign countries represented. A few years ago, in 1969, only 25 states and 11 countries were represented.

The four new programs, which include students from both the fellowship program and the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, are a listening and analysis seminar, an Andre Watts piano seminar, a dance and acting workshop and a painting course under artist Gabriel Laderman.

The students attend lectures, seminars, bull sessions and rehearsals and give about 40 concerts for the Friends of Tanglewood in the Shed. As usual, they will be housed at three area private schools: Windsor Mountain and Stockbridge schools, and Berkshire Christian College.

The breakdown of students is as follows: fellowship program, 131; Phyllis Curtin seminar, 38; music theatre project, 9; listening and analysis seminar, 23; and Watts seminar, 16.

For the Boston University Tanglewood Institute: Young Artists Program, 96; applied music, 39; piano seminar, 15; art program, 17; choral institute, 49; choral conductors seminar, 7; workshop in stage movement and acting, 21.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUL 8 1973

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Opens In Traditional Style

By R. C. HAMMERICH
Union Staff

LENOX — The Boston Symphony Orchestra started its season at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon in traditional fashion. . .by welcoming 461 young musicians for a summer of study.

The Berkshire Music Center, founded at Tanglewood by Serge Koussevitsky in 1940, conducted its opening session in a manner much like it has for several years.

There were welcoming words from Thomas Perry, executive director of the orchestra, and a couple of other dignitaries, a bit of chamber music, a major address and a performance, without accompaniment, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" by all 461 voices.

The "Alleluia" was composed for the first ceremony in 1940 and has been sung, with one quick rehearsal, by the arriving students at the start of each year.

The major address was given by Gunther Schuller, artistic director of the Berkshire Music Center and president of the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

He talked to the students, who have come from all over the world, about the philosophical values which went into the creation of the center and which, in turn, can be drawn from it.

And he discussed the interdependence of creating music (composing) and recreating music (performing), giving the best of it to the creative side (he is also a composer).

program this year was provided by Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the orchestra and chairman of the center faculty. He played one of Bach's great sonatas for unaccompanied violin.

Art Grants Awarded

BOSTON — Twenty - three Western Massachusetts organizations have been awarded grants of varying amounts for varying purposes by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

They are among 89 state organizations receiving a total of $296,801.

The list follows:

Berkshire Civic Ballet, Inc., Pittsfield, $1377 for a part-time choreographer-teacher.

Berkshire Hills Regional School District, Great Barrington, $2550 for a visiting artists series at the Monument Mountain High School.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra-Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, $5000 for Listening and Analysis Seminar scholarships.

Edward Bellamy Memorial Association, Chicopee, $2000 for staff assistance to expand membership and research.

Five Colleges, Inc., Amherst, $2000 for a Roman Baroque Festival of art, music and history, open to the public.

Five Colleges, Inc., Amherst, $10,000 for an art-in-public-places highway sculpture project along Interstate 91.

Historic Deerfield, Inc. $2000 for a program of elementary school visits to the museum.

Lenox Arts Center, $4000 for the production of a new musical, "Houdini," written

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION
AMUSEMENTS

14 Springfield, Mass., Tuesday, Oct. 9, 1973

by Muriel Rukeyser and composed by David Spangler.

Massachusetts Review, Amherst, $2500 for a special issue on the Third World: "Culture, Arts and Political Economy of the Western Hemisphere."

Mohawk Trail Concerts, Charlemont, $2000 for a summer weekend series of chamber music concerts.

Museum of Fine Arts-Springfield Library and Musecm Association, $647 to aid a special education program.

Northfield Mount Hermon Summer School, $3000 for a chamber music workshop for high school students.

Northampton Historical Society, $2000 for a part-time museum technician to train volunteers in techniques of conservation and exhibition.

The Northern Berkshire Council of the Arts, Inc., Williamstown, $675 for chamber concerts by the Williams Trio in the North Adams and Adams schools.

The Pioneer Valley Ballet Guild, Northampton, $1200 for an original ballet with music by an area composer and choreography based on the work of an Amherst poet.

Simon's Rock, Great Barrington, $1500 for the South Berkshire Concert Series of chamber music.

Springfield Orchestra Association, Inc., $6650 for increasing audiences through mailings, publicity, special speakers and performances.

Springfield Theatre Arts Association, W. Springfield, $10,000 for long range planning of potential income, building, touring, educational outreach, and community involvement.

University of Massachusetts, Department of Theatre, Amherst, $5000 for a children's theater project in public schools and teacher training program.

the lively world

by MILTON R. BASS

MY ONE CLAIM to fame has always been that I know a guy whose brother talks to horses, but now I also know another guy who plays music for plants. His name is Kenneth Ziegenfuess, which means goatfoot in German (the Ziegenfuess, not the Kenneth), and he was standing in his bare feet (but his face was covered with hair) when I met him at Tanglewood this week.

Besides a modicum of skepticism, I was carrying a baby cactus plant that my wife had recently rooted. "Ah," said Ziegenfuess, "that poor fellow doesn't look happy. I'll play him some dry music." It turned out he was talking about the plant and not me, and he took the little prickly out of my hand, placed it on the piano, and played a lovely little improvisation. I watched closely, but I could see no discernible change. Except in me. I felt thirsty.

* * *

Ken Ziegenfuess is not one of those people with aberrant stamens or pistils, but rather a serious, young (28) pianist-composer who has been coming to Tanglewood for the past four years, where he twice won the C.D. Jackson prize and also the I.B. Lavan award that is given to the outstanding pianist of the summer season. This year he is a teaching fellow in keyboard piano.

Something over a year ago, a friend of his, Janet Cox, signed a contract with Yerba Buena Press of San Francisco to do a book on "Plantcraft." She visited Mr. Ziegenfuess at his Palo Alto home, and discussed the use of music as an aid in the growing of plants, not so much the possible influence of sound waves on plant growth, which has been under investigation by various scientists and crackpots since the '20s and is still being actively pursued, but the use of music as part of the "total" approach to plant raising, as a pleasure principal for both the grower and the growee.

Whitestone

Kenneth Ziegenfuess and Cactus Bass

Mr. Ziegenfuess became fascinated with the idea and out of this fascination came a 7½-minute composition titled "Quartet in a Green Key," which is a musical biography of a plant through all its phases — seed, sprout, roots, etc. It was recorded by two violins, a viola and a cello, and the record is included with the book. One side of the record has Mr. Ziegenfuess explaining what each musical motif represents, and the other side has the music alone. It is quite pleasant listening, and although it doesn't make your thumbs turn green, it does put you in a reflective mood.

* * *

If you believe in music, and Mr. Ziegenfuess believes in music, you also believe as he does that listening to his record closely, "might make you friendlier with your plants and that will help in their growth." Miss Cox says that people who buy and grow plants are friendly toward them to begin with, and that plants will respond to a friendly environment just as they will to water or fertilizer or sun or shade. She doesn't talk to her plants because she is apprehensive that they might answer, but she knows that her plants know she likes them.

Anyway, if you are at all interested in a total approach to plant raising, the book is now about to go on the market at $4.95. Meanwhile, I will keep a close watch on our cactus plant. This morning it seemed to be smiling. Not a real smile, mind you. But kind of a smile. In a cac-tussy sort of a way.

Tanglewood Star

Following his return from his sensationally successful Soviet debut tour and a June 30 appearance with the Pittsburgh Symphony at Philadelphia's Ambler Festival, pianist André Watts will take up residence for 8 weeks at Tanglewood to serve for the first time as Artist-in-Residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

Adam Grossman (second from left), one of five string principals of the Young Artists Orchestra.

Bos. Symphony

Music Education Continues At Tanglewood

Adam Grossman, 14, son of Mrs. Meryl Cohen of 91 Pine Ridge Rd., Waban, is continuing his musical education this summer in the Young Artists Program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox.

As a Young Artist, Grossman studies with the institute faculty, including members of the Boston University faculty and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He also plays in a chamber music group and performs in the Young Artists Orchestra at Tanglewood.

The eight-week Young Artist Program enables selected high school instrumentalists to study with prominent artists in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Young Artists practice privately and in groups on the Tanglewood grounds, and participate in the many concerts held throughout the season. They receive four credits toward their bachelor of arts degrees.

Grossman, who plays first chair second violin in the Young Artists Orchestra, will be a sophomore this fall at Newton South High School. A violinist for seven years, Grossman studies music under Kenneth Sarch of Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, and under Roman Totenburg. He has participated in high school musicals, and he conducted the orchestra for his high school production of "Pajama Game."

This is the eighth year that young students have been given the opportunity to study music, art or theater at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute. They work in rehearsal halls, classrooms, old barns, wooden sheds, and even tree lined clearings scattered about the 210 acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac which attracted Emerson, Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne many years ago.

Of the 244 people enrolled in the 1973 season of the Tanglewood Institute, 96, who are instrumentalists between the ages of 14 and 18, comprise the Young Artists Program. Another 49 in the same age bracket belong to the Choral Institute. The remaining 99, mostly college students, are enrolled in the piano, theater, applied music, choral conducting or painting and drawing programs.

Before being accepted by the institute, the students go through stringent screening. But the stringency does not end after they are accepted. Everyone in the Young Artists Program begins work in full ensemble early in the morning and reassembles in a chamber music group after lunch, which breaks for individual instruction or practice. They perform periodically before the appreciative audiences attending the summer-long Tanglewood Festival.

GRAPHIC
NEWTON, MASS.
W. 10,65
AUG 8 1973
New England Newscip

DAY
NEW LONDON, CONN.
D. 21,779
AUG 16 1973
New England Newscip

MIRROR
HINGHAM, MASS.
W. 16,713
AUG 9 1973
New England Newscip

Pauline Rowe Is Young Artist

LENOX, Mass. — Pauline Rowe, granddaughter of Mrs. Elsie Wieczorek of New London, is continuing her musical education this summer in the young artists program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass.

As a young artist, Miss Rowe studies with institute faculty, including members of the Boston University faculty and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She also plays in a chamber music group and performs in the Young Artists Orchestra at Tanglewood.

The eight-week Young Artists Program enables selected high school instrumentalists to study with prominent artists in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The young artists practice privately and in groups on the Tanglewood grounds, and participate in the many concerts throughout the season. They receive four college credits toward their bachelor of arts degrees.

Miss Rowe, who plays first violin with the Young Artists Orchestra, studies music with Virginia Gotham of the South Shore Conservatory of Music. Also a student of piano, Miss Rowe has played chamber music with the South Shore Conservatory and has performed with the pit orchestra at district, state and regional festivals. She will be a junior this fall at Hingham High School.

PARKWAY TRANSCRIPT
BOSTON, MASS.
AUG 16 1973
New England Newscip

PAULINE ROWE AT TANGLEWOOD

Pauline Rowe, 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Rowe of 162 Main Street, is continuing her musical education this summer in the Young Artists Program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Massachusetts. As a Young Artist, Ms. Rowe studies with Institute faculty, including members of the Boston University faculty and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She also plays in a chamber music group and performs in the Young Artists Orchestra at Tanglewood.

Ms. Rowe, who plays first violin with the Young Artists Orchestra, studies music with Virginia Gothem of the South Shore Conservatory of Music. Also a student of piano, Ms. Rowe has played chamber music with the South Shore Conservatory and has performed with the pit orchestras at district, state, and regional festivals. She will be a junior this fall at Hingham High School.

Concert By Young Artists At Hatch Shell

Ninety-two high school instrumentalists from the Young Artists Program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute will give a concert at the Hatch Shell on the Esplanade Thursday, August 16 at 7:30 p.m.

Free to the public, the program is another ina series of events sponsored by Summerthing and has been arranged in cooperation with the Metropolitan District Commission.

The young artists, ranging in age from 14 to 18 years of age come from all over the country to participate in the Institute.

Included in the concert will be "The Academic Festival Overture" by Brahms, Stravinsky's "Divertimento," the "Hary Ganos Suite" by Zoltan Kodaly and Walter Piston's "The Incredible Flutist."

Walter Eisenberg will conduct.

Young musician's noteable summer at Tanglewood

Leo Collins, 16, son of Dr. and Mrs. Leo W. Collins of 19 Waverly Street, Brookline, is continuing his musical education this summer in the Young Artists Program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox. As a Young Artist, Collins studies with the Institute faculty, including members of the Boston University faculty and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He also plays in a chamber music group and performs in the Young Artists Orchestra at Tanglewood.

The eight-week Young Artists Program enables selected high school instrumentalists to study with prominent artists in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Young Artists practice privately and in groups on the Tanglewood grounds, and participate in the many concerts held throughout the season. They receive four credits toward their bachelor of arts degrees.

Collins, who plays bassoon with the Young Artists Orchestra, studies music with Marlene Mazzuca of the New England Conservatory of Music. He will be a senior at Brookline High School this fall.

This is the eighth year that young students have been given the opportunity to study music, art or theater at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute. They work in rehearsal halls, classrooms, old barns, wooden sheds, and even tree-lined clearings scattered about 2'0 acre estate overlooking L.ke Mahkeenac which attracted Emerson, Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne many years ago.

Of the 244 people enrolled in the 1973 season of the Tanglewood Institute, 96, who are instrumentalists between the ages of 14 and 18, comprise the Young Artists Program. Another 49 in the same age bracket belong to the Choral Institute. The remaining 99, mostly college students, are enrolled in the piano, theater, applied music, choral conducting or painting and drawing programs.

Before being accepted by the Institute, the students go through stringent screening. But the stringency does not end after they are accepted. Everyone in the Young Artists Program begins work in full ensemble early in the morning and reassembles in a chamber music group after lunch, which breaks for individual instruction of practice. They perform periodiaclly before audiences attending the summer-long Tanglewood Festival.

LEO COLLINS (left), in a Young Artists chamber music group, observes criticisms of coach during informal outdoor practice.

HEMPSTEAD, N. Y.
BEACON
EAST MEADOW EDITION
W. 4,500
AUG 23 1973

CHRONICLE-CITIZEN
BROOKLINE, MASS.
W. 7,000
AUG 16 1973
New England

PAGE ONE

Clarke Graduate Honored

Richard Brierly, 18, a June 1973 graduate of W. Tresper Clarke High School, has been selected by Boston University to play in the Young Artists Orchestra at Tanglewood.

While at Clarke H.S., Richard was President of the Jazz Ensemble, Secretary of the Wind Ensemble, and named to the Principal's list of merit. He plays both bass trombone and piano and has performed in many musicals, including "Bye Bye Birdie", "The King and I", the "Wizard of Oz", and "Fiddler on the Roof".

As a Young Artist, Richard studies with the Institute faculty, including members of the Boston University faculty and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This is the eighth year that young students have been given the opportunity to study music, art or theatre at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute. They work in rehearsal halls, classrooms, old barns, wooden sheds, and even tree-lined clearings scattered about the 210 acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac which attracted Emerson, Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne many years ago.

Of the 244 talented people enrolled in the 1973 season of the Tanglewood Institute, 96, who are instrumentalists between the ages of 14 and 18, comprise the Young Artists Program. Another 49 in the same age bracket belong to the Choral Institute. The remaining 99, mostly college students, are enrolled in the piano, theater, applied music, choral conducting or painting and drawing programs.

Before being accepted by the Institute, the student's go through stringent screening. But the stringency does not end after they are accepted. Everyone in the Young Artists Program begins work in full ensemble early in the morning and reassembles in a chamber music group after lunch, which breaks for individual instruction or practice. They perform periodically before the appreciative audiences attending the summer-long Tanglewood Festival.

This fall, Brierly plans to attend Nathaniel Hawthorne College in Antrim, New Hampshire to prepare for a career as a commercial pilot.

Robert Estrin of 9 Clotilde Court, Hicksville, has been the recipient of two scholarships for excellence in music. One award is for a complete summer's study at the Tanglewood Institute in the Berkshires where he will perform and study with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The other award has been granted by the Manhattan School of Music where he will enroll as a freshman in the fall.

A senior at Hicksville High School in the class of '73 Robert Estrin is a performer on two instruments-the piano and the French horn. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Morton Estrin, both well-known musicians.

HICKSVILLE, N. Y.
MID-ISLAND HICKSVILLE HERALD
W. 8,000
JUN 28 1973

PLAINVIEW, N. Y.
HERALD
(NEW YORK CITY MARKET AREA)
W. 2,000
JUN 28 1973

Robert Estrin of 9 Clotilde Court, Hicksville, has been the recipient of two scholarships for excellence in music. One award is for a complete summer's study at the Tanglewood Institute in the Berkshires where he will perform and study with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The other award has been granted by the Manhattan School of Music where he will enroll as a freshman in the fall.

A senior at Hicksville High School in the class of '73 Robert Estrin is a performer on two instruments-the piano and the French horn. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Morton Estrin, both well-known musicians.

Boston University Tanglewood Institute

Sue Carrai Continuing Music Course this Summer

Sue Carrai, 16 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Carrai of 50 Plymouth rd, is another talented young musician continuing musical education this summer in the Young Artists Program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox.

Sue, who is a member of the Class of 1974 at Wakefield High School, began playing violin at the age of nine years. She is studying with Kenneth Sarch, a teaching assoicate in violin at Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts.

As a "Young Artist," she is studying this summer with the Institute faculty, including members of the B.U. staff and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She also plays in a chamber music group and performs in the Young Artists Orchestra at Tanglewood.

The eight-week program enables selected high school instrumentalists to study with prominent artists in Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Young Artists practice privately and in groups on the Tanglewood grounds. They participate in numerous concerts throughout the season and receive four credits toward their bachelor of arts degrees.

LENDING AN EAR to evaluations from the coach is this quartet of a Young Artists' Chamber Music Group at informal outdoor practice at Tanglewood Institute, Lenox. Second from left is Wakefield's Sue Carrai.

REGISTER (E)
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
D. 108,945
AUG 6 1973
New England Newsclip

HERALD-AMERICAN (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
AUG 8 1973
New England Newsclip

TRANSCRIPT
WEST ROXBURY, MASS.
W. 6,190
AUG 15 1973
New England Newsclip

Concert By Young Artists At Hatch Shell

Ninety-two high school instrumentalists from the Young Artists Program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute will give a concert at the Hatch Shell on the Esplanada, Thursday, August 16 at 7:30 p.m.

Free to the public, the program is another ina series of events sponsored by Summerthing and has been arranged in cooperation with the Metropolitan District Commission.

The young artists, ranging in age from 14 to 18 years of age come from all over the country to participate in the Institute.

Included in the concert will be "The Academic Festival Overture" by Brahms, Stravinsky's "Divertimento," the "Hary Ganos Suite" by Zoltan Kodaly and Walter Piston's "The Incredible Flutist."

Walter Eisenberg will conduct.

Area Young Women Complete Program In Performing Arts

Nancy Plant of Murray Lane, Guilford, and Stephanie Van Dine of 68 Edwards St., New Haven, recently completed a five-week summer program in the performing arts at The Ethel Walker School in Simsbury.

The program, call Upstage, offers extensive training in acting, dance and vocal music, with more intensive training centered on each student's major.

Miss Plant, daughte of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Plant, was a dance major in the trip arts program. Miss Van Dine, daughter of Mrs. Eve Van Dine, was an acting major.

As students in Upstage, the young women had the opportunity to participate in workshops with guest artists who included Broadway star Margot Moser; tap dancer Paul Draper, mime Jewell Walker, opera singer Ida Faiella, and dance critic Selma Jeanne Cohen. They attended performances at the American Shakespeare Theatre in Stratford, the Connecticut College American Dance Festival in New London, and the Tanglewood Concert Series in Massachusetts.

At the conclusion of the summer session the Misses Van Dine and Plant participated in final student productions. Miss Van Dine portrayed several charcters in the Upstage presentation of scenes from Dylan Thomas' "Under Milk Wood." Miss Plant was a member of the chorus for the student presentation of the musical comedy "The Apple Tree."

Jet Pilot Receives Bachelor's Degree

Air Force Maj. Edward L. Becker Jr., 33, of 635 Carsonia Ave., Pennside, received his bachelor's degree from Troy State University, Troy, Ala. He is a jet pilot formerly stationed at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., and following graduation Thursday was sent to Panama City, Panama. He will be there six weeks and then be stationed at Rome, N.Y. He's been in the service 13 years.

★ ★ ★

Joseph J. Michalik, 398 Amy Court, Shillington, who was graduated with a bachelor of arts degree in history from Findlay (Ohio) College, has taken a teaching job at Liberty Benton High School, Benton Ridge, Ohio. He also will be an assistant football and basketball coach.

★ ★ ★

John P. Ehrig, Hamilton Square, N.J., and formerly of 246 Linden St., was graduated with a bachelor of architecture degree from the University of Florida, Gainesville, Fla. He is working with Mudano Associates, Clearwater, Fla., in the design department.

★ ★ ★

Charles A. Mohn III, Sinking Spring, received a diploma from the American Motel School, Roanoke, Va., after completing a course on hotel-motel management.

★ ★ ★

Carolyn L. Ehst, 903 Summit Chase Drive, is among 244 persons enrolled in the eight-week Young Artist Program of Boston University at the Tanglewood Institute, Lenox, Mass. She plays the cello in the Young Artists Orchestra. The performer is a graduate of Wilson High School an din September will enroll at Wittenberg University, Springfield, Ohio, for a career in art or music.

★ ★ ★

Bryan Loeper, 938 N. 5th St., was elected president of the student government at Philadelphia College of Textile and Science and will be a senior there in Spetember.

★ ★ ★

Ronald E. Tonnessen, Bethany Children's Home, Womelsdorf, attended the 29th annual conference of children's home executives at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N.C.

★ ★ ★

Sharon L. Hill, 625 Ritter St., has been elected to the board of directors of Peirce Junior College Alumni Assn., Philadelphia.

★ ★ ★

Three Berks County students at Widener College, Chester, will be among students and faculty from the college on a 12-day trip to England, starting Tuesday, Aug. 21. They are Diane Hawman, 18 Kings Blvd., Mifflin Park; Rebecca Hoopes, 23 Club Lane, Flying Hills; and Susan Lindemuth, 112 Juniper Drive, Douglassville.

★ ★ ★

Cathy Holcombe, Mohrsville R.D. 1, a sophomore biology major at the Indiana University of Pennsylvania, will be one of 52 residence hall counselors for the fall semester.

★ ★ ★

William W. Runyeon, 8 Hummingbird Road, Wyomissing, an English major at Emory University, Atlanta, Ga., is among 89 students from the school studying this summer in foreign countries. He is studying British literature at the University of North Wales, Bangor, Wales.

Rummy Upstages Bartok

LENOX (UPI)—A group of teenage musicians decided that five weeks in the Young Artists Program at Tanglewood was a little tiring. So, they decided to do something different—like play rummy.

The 12 musicians, all members of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, started playing rummy at 11:30 p.m. Friday, August 3. The game ended at 1:30 a.m. Monday playing in four men shifts, four hours on and eight hours off, according to David Hantke, a cellist from Berkeley, California, who acted as official scorer.

Less than eight hours later, they were back to business, rehearsing Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra" with the rest of the 96 teenagers of the Young Artists Program.

SUN (E)
LOWELL, MASS.
D. 79,520
AUG 9 1973
New England Newsclip

...and the band played on, and on

LENNOX — Playing the classics wasn't enough for a group of 12 musicians engaged in the young artists program at Tanglewood here.

The 12, including a Carlisle youth, decided rummy might fill the void.

So they played. And played. And played some more.

It all ended at 1:30 a.m. Monday after beginning late Friday night.

The musicians—one of whom was string bassist John Saunders of Carlisle—range in age from 14 to 18 and played the card game in four hour shifts with eight hours off.

Less than eight hours after the marathon game ended, the 12 joined their 96 fellows at the young artists' program sponsored by Boston University in rehearsing Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

HERALD (E)
FITCHBURG, MASS.
AUG 8 1973
New England Newsclip

Musicians Hold Rummy Marathon

LENOX, Mass. (UPI) — A group of teenage musicians decided that five weeks in the Young Artists Program at Tanglewood was a little tiring. So, they decided to do something different — like play rummy.

The twelve musicians, all members of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, started playing rummy at 11:30 p.m. Friday, August 3. The game ended at 1:30 a.m. Monday, playing in four men shifts, four hours on and eight hours off, according to David Hantke, a cellest from Berkeley, California, who acted as official scorer.

Less than eight hours later, they were back to business, rehearsing Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra" with the rest of the 96 teenagers of the Young Artists Program.

The 12, ranging from 14 - 18 years old, are: Richard Brierly, trombone, Massapequa, N. Y.; Leo Collins, bassoon, Brookline, Mass.; Tom Dinsmore, orchestra manager; Hao Howard Huang, piano, Bethany, Conn.; Craig Martin, string bass, Sayville, N. Y.; Brian Moon, trumpet, Livonia, Michigan; Steve Olsen, cello, Los Altos, California; Jojn Saunders, string bass, Carlisle, Mass.; Andrew Schaw, violin, Huntington Station, N. Y.; Franklin Soloman, viola, Haddonfield, N.Y.; Glen Walant, trombone, Framingham, Mass.; and Roger Zaks, trumpet, Livonia Michigan.

SOUTH MIDDLESEX NEWS (E)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
D. 37,500
AUG 7 1973
New England Newsclip

Framingham man

Musicians turn to marathon rummy

LENOX — If the notes on the sheetmusic before some members of Tanglewood's Young Artists orchestra were taking on the shape of clubs and spades yesterday, it should have been expected.

Framingham resident Glen Walant and all of the other members of the orchestra had just finished a weekend-long marathon rummy game.

The dozen enrollees of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, for lack of something else to do, broke open a deck of cards at 11:30 p.m. Friday, and did not put it away until 1:30 a.m. Monday.

Within eight hours, Walant, a trombonist, and the rest of the rummy players were back to business rehearsing Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra" with the full 96-member orchestra.

The musicians, ranging in age from 14 to 18, are taking part in the five-week Young Artists Program at Tanglewood.

Walant, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Walant of 4 Patricia Drive, Framingham, and the other 11 played rummy in four-man, four-hour shifts, occupying a seat at the card table for four straight hours and becoming an observer for the next eight.

The game was officiated by David Hantke, a cellist from Berkeley, Calif.

Most of the young musicians taking part in the Tanglewood study program are residents of Massachusetts and New York.

AUG 12 1973

Singer To Attend Choral Institute

Miss Linda Leth-Steensen will attend the Boston University Choral Institute to be held at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, this summer. Miss Leth-Steensen is one of 44 students in the entire United States selected by audition to participate in this program.

The Choral Institute is a unique program which stresses the building of musicianship for high school students through the choral medium. Each student will have the opportunity to sing in a solo group, a small madrigal ensemble and in the Institute Chorus.

Director of the program is Joseph Huszti, associate professor of music at Boston University. The visiting conductor is Iva Dee Hiatt.

Miss Leth-Steensen, who is a Junior at Tantasqua Regional High School, has participated in numerous activities this year. At Tantasqua she sings in both the Concert Choir and the Choraleers, serving as principal accompanist for both ensembles. Miss Leth-Steensen's portrayal of the Mother Abbess in the school's recent production of the "Sound of Music" drew rave notices from those who attended the performance.

Through the Massachusetts Music Educators' Association, she auditioned into the Western District Chorus, the MMEA–University of Massachusetts Honors Choir, and the All State Chorus. She is also a member of the National Honor Society at Tantasqua.

Linda is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Leth-Steensen of Prospect Hill Road, Brimfield.

JOURNAL REGISTER
PALMER, MASS.
W. 4,199
JUN 21 1973
New England Newsclip

Oracle

AUGUST COMES CALLING

August came calling with a smile,
He went to the shore for many reasons,
And summer is his favorite season
Cool nights and shorter days,
He seems to have changes so many ways.
August came calling with his boat
As we were on the ocean afloat
He smiled as leaves started to fall,
Said, "I'm sorry this is all
But next year I'll come again,
And hope you'll let me in."

—Sally T. Ashe, North Wilbraham

Who read the flag of the Transcript-Telegram on Monday and noticed the date? One observing lad, Michael Kingsley, age eight of Granby, did and called his mother's attention to it. It was slightly mislead. The date August 6 was correct but the year was 1933.

A new gimmick in marathon was staged last week-end in Lenox when four three-man teams of music students in the Young Artists Program at Tanglewood played a rummy game for 52 consecutive hours. They started it as a joke and then thought they might establish a record which would be recorded in the Guinness Book of Records.

A RUMMY TOURNEY

LENOX, Mass.—A group of teenage musicians decided that five weeks in the Young Artists Program at Tanglewood was a little tiring. So, they decided to do something different—like play rummy. The twelve musicians, all members of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, started playing rummy at 11:30 p.m. Friday, August 3. The game ended at 1:30 a.m. Monday, playing in four men shifts, four hours on and eight hours off, according to David Hantke, a cellest from Berkeley, California, who acted as official scorer.

Bay View girl plays in Young Artists Symphony

By PATRICIA CASEY

"Bring food and money" is a familiar request heard by parents of college students, but coming from their 14-year-old daughter at Tanglewood, it was a new experience for Jim and Leah Knowlton.

Patty Knowlton received a workship grant to Tanglewood this summer enabling the young violin student to participate in Tanglewood's Young Artists Symphony Orchestra. The workship grant covered music lessons and orchestral practice sessions, but the money for food and lodging was earned by Patty.

"Oh, those phone bills," laments Leah Knowlton. "Patty called us quite often and we went up eve other week for the Thursday concer It was just wonderful to stand outsi her dorm and just hear the mus coming from every window."

All was not so smooth for Patty at the beginning, for the work load of hours and hours of practice was both mentally and physically taxing. At the end of eight weeks of study, Patty received a mark of B plus and four college credits.

"I didn't like it at first. The Sunday my parents drove me to Tanglewood there was a long opening ceremony, and in the evening we had our first rehearsal. It took about a week before I started to like it."

Patty admits that it was the many new friends she met that made the difference; high school students from many different states.

"I want to go back next year," says the young musician with all the assurance her 14 years will allow. Patty is one of the youngest students ever to be accepted into the Boston University Tanglewood program.

According to Patty, it was a summer of catching buses, long orchestral practice sessions, hurried lunches and chamber music workouts. Evenings were spent attending concerts including both classical and rock music. Free passes were issued to all Tanglewood students and Patty took advantage of these musical opportunities. Shorts and bare feet proved to be the most popular student garb and hot dogs their mainstay. When in concert with the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra, informal wear gave way to white or pastel day length dresses for the girls.

Patty's experiences at Tanglewood proved to be an extension of her musical studies in Gloucester where her prowess comes to her from both sides of her family.

Leah Knowlton is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music and plays base viol with the Cape Ann Symphony Orchestra. Jim Knowlton plays a variety of string instruments. Both play with a local group, the Sea Farers. Wood carving is another of his hobbies, and an angel, one of Patty's favorites, carved from driftwood, rests on a table in the living room of their Bay View home built in 1702. It was previously the home of Patty's paternal grandparents.

Sisters Laura and Elizabeth, who live in California, have also followed their parents' interest in music, and another sister, Sally, is a senior at Salem State Teachers College. Patty's brother Jimmy plays the clarinet and has been librarian for the local symphony.

Patty began music lessons when she was six, taking guitar and mandolin from Myrtle Dykeman, symphony violinist. Concert mistress, Helen Gordon, next taught Patty violin technique for three and one half years and recognized her capacity for mastering the classical instrument.

An audition last spring won Patty a membership in the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra under the musical direction of Walter Eisenberg.

Presently the young musician is taking lessons from Prof. Roman Totenberg of the Boston University School of Music.

"When Roman Totenberg asked if I'd like to go to Tanglewood, I really wasn't sure what it was all about. Mom and dad talked to him and then explained it to me."

Boston University sends a limited number of students to Tanglewood each summer to participate in the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra. Selected through audition, the Young Artists spend eight weeks studying with members of the faculty of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, composed of concert artists who also teach at Boston University, and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in residence at the Berkshire Music Festival. The curriculum includes orchestral training, private lessons and an opportunity to perform in chamber music groups and in the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra. By the end of the summer program the 92 participating young artists, who come from 19 states and Canada, will have presented six orchestral concerts, 10 chamber music concerts, and numerous solo recitals, climaxed by their appearance in Boston at the Summerthing concert at Hatch Memorial Shell.

Patty Knowlton

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
AUG 7 1973

Bel Air Wins Grant

LATHAM—Mark Bel Air, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Bel Air of 21 Swayzee Drive, is one of several musicians from all over the world to receive a fellowship to play the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood.

Bel Air, who recently married Miss Patricia Sheehy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Sheehy of 16 Southern Drive, is a 1970 graduate of Shaker High School and attends the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. He recently cut a record with the New England Conservatory Rag Time Ensemble conducted by Guenther Schuller and entitled, "Scott Joplin Red Back Book." This selection is No. 1 on the Classical Charts.

Bel Air and his bride are residing in Pittsfield, Mass., for the summer.

TOWN CRIER
WAYLAND, MASS.
W. 4,761
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

UPPER DARBY, PA.
NEWS OF DELAWARE COUNTY
W. 30,760
JUL 19 1973

Swarthmore Prof Goes To Tanglewood Festival

Swarthmore College Music Professor and Department Chairman Peter Gram Swing has been invited to teach a seminar in "Listening and Analysis" at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood.

Swing, who taught a similar seminar there during the summers of 1962-1968, will be sharing the course this year with Leonard Altman, Professor of Music at Queens College in New York City. Swing's four week stint, July 30 through August 26, coincides with the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music at Tanglewood.

Directing at Tanglewood

Cynthia Carpenter of Wayland is assisting Director Joseph Huszti, associate professor of music, Boston University, at the Boston University's famed Tanglewood Institute, a summer program of concentrated study with distinguished musicians instructors.

The Boston University Choral Institute is a unique program which stresses the building of musicianship through the choral medium. Ms. Carpenter is assisting in the capacity of pianist, vocal coach, and choral conductor.

She has been organist and choir director at St. Zepherin's Church, Cochituate, Mass. for the past three years, and has also been an honor student at Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts. She is studying conducting on the graduate level and will finish her undergraduate work this coming school year. She is a member of the graduating class of June 1971 from Wayland High School.

PIONEER TIMES
HOULTON, MAINE
W. 4,969
JUN 20 1973
New England Newsclip

Another named scholarship, the Sarah L. Clapp Scholarship Fund, has been established with the University of Maine Pulp and Paper Foundation in the name of a woman who in her lifetime was prominent in many Greater Boston organizations including the Girl Scouts, Daughters of the American Revolution, Mayflower Society and the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The fund, for $10,000 or more, is the 32nd established with the Foundation at the University of Maine at Orono. Income will be used to aid students training to enter the pulp and paper or allied industries.

ITEM (E)
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
D. 7,000
AUG 6 1973

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 4,405
26 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Scholarships

A limited number of scholarships is available for participation in the Listening and Analysis Seminar at Tanglewood, July 29 through Aug. 26. Provided by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities for

CLASSICAL MUSIC AT HATCH SHELL

Ninety-two high school instrumentalists from the Young Artists Program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute will give a concert at the Hatch Shell on the Esplanade, Thursday, August 16 at 7:30 p.m.

The program is another in a series of free even sponsored by Summerthing and has been arranged in cooperation with the Metropolitan District Commission.

REVIEW
DARIEN, CONN.
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

Scholarships At Tanglewood

A limited number of scholarships are available for participation in the Listening & Analysis Seminar at Tanglewood, July 29 through August 26. Provided by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities for residents of the Commonwealth, the scholarships cover the complete tuition charge for the Seminar which is open to performers, teachers, student and musical amateurs.

Peter Gram Swing, Chairman of the Department of Music at Swarthmore College (Pennsylvania,) will lead the four-week seminar comprising daily classes in musical structures, theory, history and repertoire. The focus throughout will be on those works performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood as well as repertoire performed by the students of the Berkshire Music Center. Attendance at Orchestra rehearsals will complement the daily classes, and artists drawn from those appearing at Tanglewood this summer will be Guest Teachers during the Seminar.

Additional information on scholarship applications and membership in the Seminar may be obtained by calling Ken Miller at the Berkshire Music Center office, (413) 637-1600, ext. 222

CITIZEN (E)
MILFORD, CONN.
D 8,600
AUG 7 1973
New England Newsclip

Scholarships For Seminar At Tanglewood

LENOX — A limited number of scholarships are available for participation in the Listening & Analysis Seminar at Tanglewood, July 29 through August 26.

Provided by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities for residents of the Commonwealth, the scholarships cover the complete tuition charge for the Seminar which is open to performers, teachers, students and musical amateurs.

Peter Gram Swing, Chairman of the Department of Music at Swarthmore College (Pennsylvania), will lead the four-week seminar comprising daily classes in musical structures, theory, history and repertoire.

The focus will be on works performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood as well as repertoire performed by the students of the Berkshire Music Center.

Bay View girl plays in Young Artists Symphony

By PATRICIA CASEY

"Bring food and money" is a familiar request heard by parents of college students, but coming from their 14-year-old daughter at Tanglewood, it was a new experience for Jim and Leah Knowlton.

Patty Knowlton received a workship grant to Tanglewood this summer enabling the young violin student to participate in Tanglewood's Young Artists Symphony Orchestra. The workship grant covered music lessons and orchestral practice sessions, but the money for food and lodging was earned by Patty.

"Oh, those phone bills," laments Leah Knowlton. "Patty called us quite often and we went up eve other week for the Thursday concer It was just wonderful to stand outsi her dorm and just hear the mus coming from every window."

All was not so smooth for Patty at the beginning, for the work load of hours and hours of practice was both mentally and physically taxing. At the end of eight weeks of study, Patty received a mark of B plus and four college credits.

"I didn't like it at first. The Sunday my parents drove me to Tanglewood there was a long opening ceremony, and in the evening we had our first rehearsal. It took about a week before I started to like it."

Patty admits that it was the many new friends she met that made the difference; high school students from many different states.

"I want to go back next year," says the young musician with all the assurance her 14 years will allow. Patty is one of the youngest students ever to be accepted into the Boston University Tanglewood program.

According to Patty, it was a summer of catching buses, long orchestral practice sessions, hurried lunches and chamber music workouts. Evenings were spent attending concerts including both classical and rock music. Free passes were issued to all Tanglewood students and Patty took advantage of these musical opportunities. Shorts and bare feet proved to be the most popular student garb and hot dogs their mainstay. When in concert with the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra, informal wear gave way to white or pastel day length dresses for the girls.

Patty's experiences at Tanglewood proved to be an extension of her musical studies in Gloucester where her prowess comes to her from both sides of her family.

Leah Knowlton is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music and plays base viol with the Cape Ann Symphony Orchestra. Jim Knowlton plays a variety of string instruments. Both play with a local group, the Sea Farers. Wood carving is another of his hobbies, and an angel, one of Patty's favorites, carved from driftwood, rests on a table in the living room of their Bay View home built in 1702. It was previously the home of Patty's paternal grandparents.

Sisters Laura and Elizabeth, who live in California, have also followed their parents' interest in music, and another sister, Sally, is a senior at Salem State Teachers College. Patty's brother Jimmy plays the clarinet and has been librarian for the local symphony.

Patty began music lessons when she was six, taking guitar and mandolin from Myrtle Dykeman, symphony violinist. Concert mistress, Helen Gordon, next taught Patty violin technique for three and one half years and recognized her capacity for mastering the classical instrument.

An audition last spring won Patty a membership in the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra under the musical direction of Walter Eisenberg.

Presently the young musician is taking lessons from Prof. Roman Totenberg of the Boston University School of Music.

"When Roman Totenberg asked if I'd like to go to Tanglewood, I really wasn't sure what it was all about. Mom and dad talked to him and then explained it to me."

Boston University sends a limited number of students to Tanglewood each summer to participate in the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra. Selected through audition, the Young Artists spend eight weeks studying with members of the faculty of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, composed of concert artists who also teach at Boston University, and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in residence at the Berkshire Music Festival. The curriculum includes orchestral training, private lessons and an opportunity to perform in chamber music groups and in the Young Artists Symphony Orchestra. By the end of the summer program the 92 participating young artists, who come from 19 states and Canada, will have presented six orchestral concerts, 10 chamber music concerts, and numerous solo recitals, climaxed by their appearance in Boston at the Summerthing concert at Hatch Memorial Shell.

Patty Knowlton

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

AUG 7 1973

Bel Air Wins Grant

LATHAM—Mark Bel Air, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Bel Air of 21 Swayzee Drive, is one of several musicians from all over the world to receive a fellowship to play the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood.

Bel Air, who recently married Miss Patricia Sheehy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Sheehy of 16 Southern Drive, is a 1970 graduate of Shaker High School and attends the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. He recently cut a record with the New England Conservatory Rag Time Ensemble conducted by Guenther Schuller and entitled, "Scott Joplin Red Back Book." This selection is No. 1 on the Classical Charts.

Bel Air and his bride are residing in Pittsfield, Mass., for the summer.

TOWN CRIER
WAYLAND, MASS.
W. 4,761

JUL 26 1973

New England Newsclip

UPPER DARBY, PA.
NEWS OF DELAWARE COUNTY
W. 30,760

JUL 19 1973

Swarthmore Prof Goes To Tanglewood Festival

Swarthmore College Music Professor and Department Chairman Peter Gram Swing has been invited to teach a seminar in "Listening and Analysis" at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood.

Swing, who taught a similar seminar there during the summers of 1962-1968, will be sharing the course this year with Leonard Altman, Professor of Music at Queens College in New York City. Swing's four week stint, July 30 through August 26, coincides with the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music at Tanglewood.

Directing at Tanglewood

Cynthia Carpenter of Wayland is assisting Director Joseph Huszti, associate professor of music, Boston University, at the Boston University's famed Tanglewood Institute, a summer program of concentrated study with distinguished musicians instructors.

The Boston University Choral Institute is a unique program which stresses the building of musicianship through the choral medium. Ms. Carpenter is assisting in the capacity of pianist, vocal coach, and choral conductor.

She has been organist and choir director at St. Zepherin's Church, Cochituate, Mass. for the past three years, and has also been an honor student at Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts. She is studying conducting on the graduate level and will finish her undergraduate work this coming school year. She is a member of the graduating class of June 1971 from Wayland High School.

PIONEER TIMES
HOULTON, MAINE
W. 4,959

JUN 20 1973

New England Newsclip

Another named scholarship, the Sarah L. Clapp Scholarship Fund, has been established with the University of Maine Pulp and Paper Foundation in the name of a woman who in her lifetime was prominent in many Greater Boston organizations including the Girl Scouts, Daughters of the American Revolution, Mayflower Society and the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The fund, for $10,000 or more, is the 32nd established with the Foundation at the University of Maine at Orono. Income will be used to aid students training to enter the pulp and paper or allied industries.

CITIZEN (E)
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
D. 7,000

AUG 9 1973

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 1,405

2 6 1973

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Scholarships

A limited number of scholarships is available for participation in the Listening and Analysis Seminar at Tanglewood, July 29 through Aug. 26. Provided by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities for

CLASSICAL MUSIC AT HATCH SHELL

Ninety-two high school instrumentalists from the Young Artists Program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute will give a concert at the Hatch Shell on the Esplanade, Thursday, August 16 at 7:30 p.m.

The program is another in a series of free even sponsored by Summerthing and has been arrang ed in cooperation with the Metropolitan District Commission.

31

REVIEW
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

JUL 26 1973

New England Newsclip

Scholarships At Tanglewood

A limited number of scholarships are available for participation in the Listening & Analysis Seminar at Tanglewood, July 29 through August 26. Provided by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities for residents of the Commonwealth, the scholarships cover the complete tuition charge for the Seminar which is open to performers, teachers, student and musical amateurs.

Peter Gram Swing, Chairman of the Department of Music at Swarthmore College (Pennsylvania,) will lead the four-week seminar comprising daily classes in musical structures, theory, history and repertoire. The focus throughout will be on those works performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood as well as repertoire performed by the students of the Berkshire Music Center. Attendance at Orchestra rehearsals will complement the daily classes, and artists drawn from those appearing at Tanglewood this summer will be Guest Teachers during the Seminar.

Additional information on scholarship applications and membership in the Seminar may be obtained by calling Ken Miller at the Berkshire Music Center office, (413) 637-1600, ext. 222

CITIZEN (E)
MILFORD, CONN.
D. 8,500

AUG 7 1973

New England Newsclip

Scholarships For Seminar At Tanglewood

LENOX — A limited number of scholarships are available for participation in the Listening & Analysis Seminar at Tanglewood, July 29 through August 26.

Provided by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities for residents of the Commonwealth, the scholarships cover the complete tuition charge for the Seminar which is open to performers, teachers, students and musical amateurs.

Peter Gram Swing, Chairman of the Department of Music at Swarthmore College (Pennsylvania), will lead the four-week seminar comprising daily classes in musical structures, theory, history and repertoire.

The focus will be on works performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood as well as repertoire performed by the students of the Berkshire Music Center.

Women

Mrs. Daulton Attends Tanglewood Seminar

Mrs. Marion Daulton, well known organist and pianist in the Fitchburg area, was privileged to participate in the Listening and Analysis Seminar at Tanglewood during August. Mrs. Daulton as a student was the recipient of a tuition scholarship provided through a grant from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

The purpose of the seminar was to broaden the musical horizons of the participants. Mrs. Daulton was among 25 persons to attend the second four week seminar.

Under the leadership of Peter Gram Swing, chairman of the Music Department at Swarthmore College, daily classes were held at which the following topics were discussed: analysis and its relevance to the understanding and appreciation of music; music history; music theory, composition and performance.

Members of the Seminar attended rehearsals and concerts by the Orchestra, for which scores were available at the library along with records and other study materials. Dr. Swing conducted an additional daily class on individual student performance.

Several artists appearing in the Festival concerts and other eminent Music Center Faculty members took part as guest teachers in the Seminar, all of which afforded participants unique insights into the various elements which constitute musical performance. Among them were Joseph Silverstein, violin soloist and concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Gunther Schuller President of New England Conservatory of Music and Artistic Director of the Berkshire Music Center; Michael Tilson Thomas, Conductor; and Peter Maxwell Davies and Oliver Knussen, young English composers.

After studying the "Messiah" in depth from a London recording with Colin Davis conducting, Mrs. Daulton said "it was thrilling to see him conduct this oratorio in person. "His lively tempos were refreshing, and the soloists and Tanglewood Festival Chorus gave a thrilling performance," she said.

She noted that she was fortunate to have had 12 hours of piano seminars conducted by Andre Watts, concert pianist. "His charm and friendly personality match his great talent," Mrs. Daulton said.

In addition to the weekend performances by the Boston Symphony there were daily presentations by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra comprised of music majors from all over the world, the Boston University chamber and vocal groups and the youth orchestra.

Mrs. Daulton serves as organist at Rollstone Congregational Church. She directed the music for the Stratton Players, spring production of "Girl Crazy" followed by the musical "Annie Get Your Gun" sponsored by the Fitchburg School Department.

Last year she completed a course in piano teaching at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston along with studies in music at the Conversatory at Christ Church.

SENTINEL (E)
FITCHBURG, MASS.
D. 24,001
SEP 16 1973

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

Scholarships Available For Listening, Analysis

A limited number of scholarships are available for participation in the Listening and Analysis Seminar at Tanglewood, July 29 through Aug. 26.

Provided by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities for residents of the commonwealth, the scholarships cover the complete tuition charge for the Seminar which is open to performers, teachers, students and musical amateurs.

Peter Gram Swing, chairman of the department of music at Swarthmore College (Pennsylvania), will lead the four-week seminar comprising daily classes in musical structures, theory, history and repertoire.

The focus throughout will be on those works performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood as well as repertoire performed by the students of the Berkshire Music Center.

Attendance at orchestra rehearsals will complement the daily classes, and artists drawn from those appearing at Tanglewood this summer will be Guest Teachers during the Seminar.

Additional information on scholarship applications and membership in the Seminar may be obtained by calling Ken Miller at the Berkshire Music Center office.

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
AUG 5 1973
New Haven Newspapers

Area Residents Studying At Tanglewood Institute

Four West Haven residents are continuing their musical education this summer at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass.

They are Lynn Boettger and Gerald Walters, both students at West Haven High School, and Patricia Whitney and Robert H. Hunter 3d, both June graduates of the same high school.

As participants in the 49-voice Choral Institute, they are studying voice with artists-in-residence and sing in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble and the Institute Chorus.

Miss Boettger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolf Boettger, 69 Warner Ave., West Haven, has sung at the Connecticut Southwest Division Music Festival and has soloed at school and community concerts.

Mr. Walters, whose parents are Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Walters, 58 Thomas St., West Haven, has appeared in "The King and I," "Guys and Dolls," "Carnival" and "The Music Man."

Mr. Hunter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Hunter Jr., 2 Whitney Lane, West Haven, has sung, danced and acted in many theatrical productions. He has performed with Sothern Divisional and All-Connecticut choruses. He plans to attend Central Connecticut State College.

Miss Whitney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Whitney, 194 Homeside Ave., West Haven, has performed in several theatrical productions and has soloed in school and church choirs. She is a member of a madrigal chorus and a girls' ensemble and is a student of piano and flute. She plans to enroll at Western Connecticut State College in Danbury this fall.

The students studied voice during the year with Mr. Louis Negri.

The four-week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists and to spend part of the summer in the musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer program.

SYOSSET, N. Y.
ADVANCE
(NEW YORK CITY MARKET AREA)
W. 5,500
SEP 7 1973

FARMINGDALE, N. Y.
CENTER ISLAND
NEWS
D. 9,017
SEP 6 1973

DANIEL SMITH

Daniel Smith of 3 Gateway Drive in Syosset is seen here practicing at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts where he is studying with the Berkshire Music Center Fellowship Program. The program stresses both chamber and orchestral music. Contemporary music is also included in the total program.

Spending his first summer at Tanglewood, Daniel said, "I'm very happy to be here, this has been one of the most rewarding experiences of my life." He is studying under a Maurice Milliment Fellowship.

Daniel's music career has taken him all over Europe including two summers playing as a soloist with the Rome Festival Orchestra. He received a B. A. in music from the Manhatten School of Music, a Masters degree and Professional Diploma in Music Performance from Columbia University and has done post-graduate work at Mannes College.

This autumn Daniel will begin his sixth year as a music teacher in the Plainview school system. He has been working with instrumentalists and school bands.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
JUL 20 1973

Mark Belair, 21, Of Latham, In Tanglewood Orchestra

LATHAM — A former Latham man who learned to play music while a student at Shaker High School here is now playing with an orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass.

He is Mark Belair, 21, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Belair of 26 Swayze Dr. Latham.

He and his wife, the former Patricia Sheehy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Sheehy of 16 Southern Dr., Latham, now reside at 25 Taconic St., Pittsfield.

Mark is playing in the percussion section of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under a fellowship grant. He is a 1970 graduate of Shaker.

He will be attending the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston this fall while still on the faculty of the Berkshire Music School in Pittsfield.

Together with Gunther Schuller, noted philharmonic symphony asistant conductor, Mark recorded an album which is No. 1 on the classical chart. It is the Scott Joplin Red Back Book and is performed by the New England Conservatory Rag Time Ensemble conducted by Schuller.

While at Shaker Mark also appearel at Saratoga Springs studying music at a school sponsored by the Philadelphia Orchestra of which Eugene Ormandy is conductor.

THE CAPITAL TIMES
MADISON, WISC.
D. 42,029
AUG 28 1973

Primous Fountain Work Is Premiered at Tanglewood

Primous Fountain III, 24, of Madison, has been composing since he was 15. Born in St. Petersburg, Fla., and raised in Chicago, Primous is a self-taught composer.

This month he had one of his works premiered at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., during the tenth annual Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music. "Ritual Dances of the Amaks", dedicated to the composer's mother and father, was commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard and completed by Primous last January.

* * *

In 1968 Fountain received a BMI award and has had his compositions performed by both the Chicago Symphony and for the ABC network show "For Blacks Only."

Primous Fountain III

In 1970 Fountain came to Tanglewood as a compostion fellow of the Berkshire Music Center. There he met Gunther Schuller, artistic director of the Music Center. Since then Fountain and Schuller have been close friends, and it was Schuller who conducted the premiere of Fountain's piece at the Fromm Festival.

* * *

Fountain regards his music as something not necessarily academic, but rather an expression reflecting a "black man's experience of living." Although he spends a majority of his time writing, he feels that "You don't gain experience out of music, but a great deal of your experience and feelings are expressed in music, regardless of whether you're thinking of them or not."

Fountain now is occupied with ideas for a ballet which would incorporate a large orchestra, and is working on both a piano piece and a small orchestra work.

Women

Mrs. Daulton Attends Tanglewood Seminar

Mrs. Marion Daulton, well known organist and pianist in the Fitchburg area, was privileged to participate in the Listening and Analysis Seminar at Tanglewood during August. Mrs. Daulton as a student was the recipient of a tuition scholarship provided through a grant from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

The purpose of the seminar was to broaden the musical horizons of the participants. Mrs. Daulton was among 25 persons to attend the second four week seminar.

Under the leadership of Peter Gram Swing, chairman of the Music Department at Swarthmore College, daily classes were held at which the following topics were discussed: analysis and its relevance to the understanding and appreciation of music; music history; music theory, composition and performance.

Members of the Seminar attended rehearsals and concerts by the Orchestra, for which scores were available at the library along with records and other study materials. Dr. Swing conducted an additional daily class on individual student performance.

Several artists appearing in the Festival concerts and other eminent Music Center Faculty members took part as guest teachers in the Seminar, all of which afforded participants unique insights into the various elements which constitute musical performance. Among them were Joseph Silverstein, violin soloist and concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Gunther Schuller President of New England Conservatory of Music and Artistic Director of the Berkshire Music Center; Michael Tilson Thomas, Conductor; and Peter Maxwell Davies and Oliver Knussen, young English composers.

After studying the "Messiah" in depth from a London recording with Colin Davis conducting, Mrs. Daulton said "it was thrilling to see him conduct this oratorio in person. "His lively tempos were refreshing, and the soloists and Tanglewood Festival Chorus gave a thrilling performance," she said.

She noted that she was fortunate to have had 12 hours of piano seminars conducted by Andre Watts, concert pianist. "His charm and friendly personality match his great talent," Mrs. Daulton said.

In addition to the weekend performances by the Boston Symphony there were daily presentations by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra comprised of music majors from all over the world, the Boston University chamber and vocal groups and the youth orchestra.

Mrs. Daulton serves as organist at Rollstone Congregational Church. She directed the music for the Stratton Players, spring production of "Girl Crazy" followed by the musical "Annie Get Your Gun" sponsored by the Fitchburg School Department.

Last year she completed a course in piano teaching at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston along with studies in music at the Conservatory at Christ Church.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181

JUL 20 1973

Mark Belair, 21, Of Latham, In Tanglewood Orchestra

LATHAM — A former Latham man who learned to play music while a student at Shaker High School here is now playing with an orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass.

He is Mark Belair, 21, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Belair of 26 Swayze Dr. Latham.

He and his wife, the former Patricia Sheehy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Sheehy of 16 Southern Dr., Latham, now reside at 25 Taconic St., Pittsfield.

Mark is playing in the percussion section of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under a fellowship grant. He is a 1970 graduate of Shaker.

He will be attending the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston this fall while still on the faculty of the Berkshire Music School in Pittsfield.

Together with Gunther Schuller, noted philharmonic symphony asistant conductor, Mark recorded an album which is No. 1 on the classical chart. It is the Scott Joplin Red Back Book and is performed by the New England Conservatory Rag Time Ensemble conducted by Schuller.

While at Shaker Mark also appearel at Saratoga Springs studying music at a school sponsored by the Philadelphia Orchestra of which Eugene Ormandy is conductor.

NEWS (E)
FITCHBURG, MASS.

SEP 16 1973

New England Newsclip

Scholarships Available For Listening, Analysis

A limited number of scholarships are available for participation in the Listening and Analysis Seminar at Tanglewood, July 29 through Aug. 26.

Provided by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities for residents of the commonwealth, the scholarships cover the complete tuition charge for the Seminar which is open to performers, teachers, students and musical amateurs.

Peter Gram Swing, chairman of the department of music at Swarthmore College (Pennsylvania), will lead the four-week seminar comprising daily classes in musical structures, theory, history and repertoire.

The focus throughout will be on those works performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood as well as repertoire performed by the students of the Berkshire Music Center.

Attendance at orchestra rehearsals will complement the daily classes, and artists drawn from those appearing at Tanglewood this summer will be Guest Teachers during the Seminar.

Additional information on scholarship applications and membership in the Seminar may be obtained by calling Ken Miller at the Berkshire Music Center office.

SENTINEL (E)
FITCHBURG, MASS.

SEP 16 1973

Primous Fountain Work Is Premiered at Tanglewood

AUG 28 1973

Primous Fountain III, 24, of Madison, has been composing since he was 15. Born in St. Petersburg, Fla., and raised in Chicago, Primous is a self-taught composer.

This month he had one of his works premiered at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., during the tenth annual Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music. "Ritual Dances of the Amaks", dedicated to the composer's mother and father, was commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation at Harvard and completed by Primous last January.

* * *

In 1968 Fountain received a BMI award and has had his compositions performed by both the Chicago Symphony and for the ABC network show "For Blacks Only."

Primous Fountain III

In 1970 Fountain came to Tanglewood as a compostion fellow of the Berkshire Music Center. There he met Gunther Schuller, artistic director of the Music Center. Since then Fountain and Schuller have been close friends, and it was Schuller who conducted the premiere of Fountain's piece at the Fromm Festival.

* * *

Fountain regards his music as something not necessarily academic, but rather an expression reflecting a "black man's experience of living." Although he spends a majority of his time writing, he feels that "You don't gain experience out of music, but a great deal of your experience and feelings are expressed in music, regardless of whether you're thinking of them or not."

Fountain now, is occupied with ideas for a ballet which would incorporate a large orchestra, and is working on both a piano piece and a small orchestra work.

Area Residents Studying At Tanglewood Institute

Four West Haven residents are continuing their musical education this summer at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass.

They are Lynn Boettger and Gerald Walters, both students at West Haven High School, and Patricia Whitney and Robert H. Hunter 3d, both June graduates of the same high school.

As participants in the 49-voice Choral Institute, they are studying voice with artists-in-residence and sing in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble and the Institute Chorus.

Miss Boettger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolf Boettger, 69 Warner Ave., West Haven, has sung at the Connecticut Southwest Division Music Festival and has soloed at school and community concerts.

Mr. Walters, whose parents are Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Walters, 58 Thomas St., West Haven, has appeared in "The King and I," "Guys and Dolls," "Carnival" and "The Music Man."

Mr. Hunter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Hunter Jr., 2 Whitney Lane, West Haven, has sung, danced and acted in many theatrical productions. He has performed with Sothern Divisional and All-Connecticut choruses. He plans to attend Central Connecticut State College.

Miss Whitney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Whitney, 194 Homeside Ave., West Haven, has performed in several theatrical productions and has soloed in school and church choirs. She is a member of a madrigal chorus and a girls' ensemble and is a student of piano and flute. She plans to enroll at Western Connecticut State College in Danbury this fall.

The students studied voice during the year with Mr. Louis Negri.

The four-week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists and to spend part of the summer in the musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer program.

SYOSSET, N. Y.
ADVANCE
(NEW YORK CITY MARKET AREA)
W. 5,500

SEP 7 1973

FARMINGDALE, N. Y.
CENTER ISLAND
NEWS
D. 6,017

SEP 6 1973

DANIEL SMITH

Daniel Smith of 3 Gateway Drive in Syosset is seen here practicing at Tanglewood in Lenox, Massachusetts where he is studying with the Berkshire Music Center Fellowship Program. The program stresses both chamber and orchestral music. Contemporary music is also included in the total program.

Spending his first summer at Tanglewood, Daniel said, "I'm very happy to be here, this has been one of the most rewarding experiences of my life." He is studying under a Maurice Milliment Fellowship.

Daniel's music career has taken him all over Europe including two summers playing as a soloist with the Rome Festival Orchestra. He received a B. A. in music from the Manhatten School of Music, a Masters degree and Professional Diploma in Music Performance from Columbia University and has done post-graduate work at Mannes College.

This autumn Daniel will begin his sixth year as a music teacher in the Plainview school system. He has been working with instrumentalists and school bands.

Conducted by Boston University

Miss Nickerson Attends Tanglewood Institute

Cheryl Nickerson, 17, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald C. Nickerson of 69 Nahant st, is one of a select group of teenagers continuing her musical education at the prestigious Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox. A participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, Miss Nickerson studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

The four-week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the peaceful surroundings of the Berkshire Mountains, the students attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement, and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer program.

Miss Nickerson, who attends Wakefield High School, studies voice during the school year with Mrs. Grace Colemann and Miss Eleanor Babikian. She has sung at New England District Festivals, All State Concerts, an All Eastern Division concert and "American Youth Performs" in Symphony Hall, Boston. She has also been a soloist at the First and Broadway Methodist Church in Somerville.

JERICHO, N. Y.
NEWS JOURNAL
W. 1,518
SEP 7 1973

ITEM (E)
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
D. 7,000
AUG 3 1973 New England Newsclip

CONFERRING OVER EVALUATION made by Conductor Joe Huszti, left, is this Madrigal Ensemble at B.U.'s Tanglewood Institute, Lenox. Cheryl Nickerson of Wakefield is fourth from left in the group which includes fellow students Debbie Leary Cindy Swenton, Bob Hunter and Bob Barker.

June Ingram at Tanglewood

Mystic

June Sherry Ingram, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George William Ingram of 352 Packer Road, is continuing her musical education this summer in the Applied Music Instruction program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass.

As a member of the Applied Music Instruction program, Miss Ingram studies intensively with Institute faculty, including Boston University professors, some of whom are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The eight-week course enables selected instrumentalists to study with prominent artists in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood.

A 1973 cum laude graduate of Connecticut College, New London, Miss Ingram is a member of the Eastern Connecticut Symphony Orchestra, and a charter member of the Eastern Connecticut Symphony Youth Orchestra, with which she has been a violin and viola coach. She was concert mistress of the Connecticut College Orchestra and the Pfizer Players stage orchestra in Groton, and played first violin for the Connecticut College String Quartet. A participant in the Cappella Cantorum in Deep River, and the United States Coast Guard Musical is New London, she has been a member of the East Lyme Arts Council and her college's Music Department Advisory Committee.

NEWS
GROTON, CONN.
D. 4,556
AUG 16 1973 New England Newsclip

SUNNYVALE, CAL.
VALLEY JOURNAL
ZONE 11
W. 42,000
AUG 11 1973

Al fresco practice

Irene Liu, right, practices with other members of the Choral Institute in Tanglewood.

Sunnyvale teen at Tanglewood

Irene Liu, 18, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julian Liu of 1529 Klamath Drive, Sunnyvale, is one of a group of teenagers studying music at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass. She is a participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, and studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the institute chorus, directed by Associate Professor Joseph Huszti of Boston University.

The four-week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Liu, a 1973 graduate of Homestead High School in Cupertino, has been first chair viola in the International Youth Orchestra in Lausanne, Switzerland, and with the California Youth Symphony.

She has played dramatic roles in "Bye Bye Birdie," "The Crucible" and "You Can't Take it With You."

At Homestead High School, she earned the Bank of America Fine Arts Award, the Homestead Fine Arts Award, and recognition as Best Character Actress and Best Comedy Actress.

Miss Liu plans to enroll at San Jose State University in September.

MESSENGER (E)
ST. ALBANS, VT.
D. 3,135
AUG 7 1973 New England Newsclip

City Youth Continues Education

Robert Barker, 16, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Barker, Jr., of 10 Driscoll Drive, St. Albans, is one of a select group of teenagers continuing his musical education at the prestigious Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass. A participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, Barker studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

The four week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the peaceful surroundings of the Berkshire Mountains, the students attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement, and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer programs.

Barker, who attends Bellows Free Academy, studies voice during the school year with Mrs. Lauria Grandey and choral singing with Mrs. Donna Costes. He has participated in All State and All New England music festivals as well as several dramatic productions including "Camelot" as "Pellinore."

Local Student in Tanglewood Group

BOSTON — Paula Kenyon, 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Kenyon of 85 Hemlock Avenue, Attleboro, is one of a select group of teenagers continuing her musical education at the prestigious Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox.

A participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, she studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

The four week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In the peaceful surroundings of the Berkshire Mountains, the students attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement, and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer program.

PAULA KENYON in her Choral Institute madrigal ensemble, practices informally outdoors.

Miss Kenyon, who attends Attleboro High School, studies voice during the school year with Carolyn Smith of the Massachusetts Institue of Technology. She has sung solo in church and in the chorus of Jesus Christ Superstar", and has been involved in variety shows. Miss Kenyon is a student of violin and piano.

This is the eighth year that young students have been given the opportunity to study music, art or theatre at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute. They work in rehearsal halls, classrooms, old barns, wooden sheds, and even tree-lined clearings scattered about the 210 acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac which attracted Emerson, Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne many years ago.

Of the 244 talented people enrolled in the 1973 season of the Tanglewood Institue, 96, who are instrumentalists between the ages of 14 and 18, comprise the Young Artists Program. Another 49 in the same age bracket belong to the Choral Institute. The remaining 99, mostly college students, are enrolled in the piano, theater, applied music, choral conducting or painting and drawing programs.

Before being accepted by the Institute, the students go through stringent screening. But the stringency does not end after they are accepted. Everyone at the Choral Institute begins work in full ensemble early in the morning and reassembles in a madrigal group after lunch, with breaks for individual instruction or practice. They perform periodically before the appreciative audiences attending the summer-long Tanglewood Festival.

SUN-CHRONICLE (E)
ATTLEBORO, MASS.
D. 18,000
AUG 6 1973 New England Newsclip

DAY (E)
NEW LONDON, CONN.
D. 33,500
AUG 16 1973 New England Newsclip

SUBURBAN PRESS
NATICK, MASS.
W. 15,500
AUG 9 1973 New England Newsclip

Local students at Tanglewood

Bos Symphony

Natick High School students Pamela Joan Brown, Cynthia Cobb and Nancy Herlin are among a select group of teenagers continuing their musical education at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox.

Participants in the 49-voice Choral Institute, the local students study voice with artists-in-residence, and sing in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

Pamela Brown, 17, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard J. Brown of 10 Pitts Street. She has sung with the Massachusetts All State, Northeast District and Natick High School choruses. A student of piano, she ia a member of the school band and has played in many productions.

Cynthia, 16, daighter of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Wilson Cobb, Jr. of 47 Felch Road, has been involved for five years with Boston Children's Theatre. She had the leading role in "Carousel", and has sung with the Natick High School chorus and has been a soloist in church. A member of the National Honor Society, Miss Cobb earned her school's Latin and Business Awards.

Nancy Herlin, 17, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Herlin of 14 Halsey Way. She has sung with All State, Northeast District and Natick High School choruses. A student of piano and french horn and a member of the high school band, Miss Herlin has accompanied the high school chorus for two years.

June Ingram Is Applied Music Pupil

MYSTIC — June Sherry Ingram, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George William Ingram of 352 Packer Road, is continuing her musical education this summer in the Applied Music Instruction program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, Lenox, Mass.

As a member of the Applied Music Instruction program, Miss Ingram studies with institute faculty including Boston University professors, some of whom are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The eight-week course enables selected instrumentalists to study with prominent artists in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood. Applied music students practice amid the scenery of the Berkshire Mountains and have free access to all rehearsals and performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center. They receive three college credits for successful completion of the program.

Conducted by Boston University

Miss Nickerson Attends Tanglewood Institute

Cheryl Nickerson, 17, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald C. Nickerson of 69 Nahant st, is one of a select group of teenagers continuing her musical education at the prestigious Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox. A participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, Miss Nickerson studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

The four-week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the peaceful surroundings of the Berkshire Mountains, the students attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement, and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer program.

Miss Nickerson, who attends Wakefield High School, studies voice during the school year with Mrs. Grace Colemann and Miss Eleanor Babikian. She has sung at New England District Festivals, All State Concerts, an All Eastern Division concert and "American Youth Performs" in Symphony Hall, Boston. She has also been a soloist at the First and Broadway Methodist Church in Somerville.

CONFERRING OVER EVALUATION made by Conductor Joe Huszti, left, is this Madrigal Ensemble at B.U.'s Tanglewood Institute, Lenox. Cheryl Nickerson of Wakefield is fo rth from left in the group which includes fellow students Debbie Leary Cindy Swenton, Bob Hunter and Bob Barker.

JERICHO, N. Y.
NEWS JOURNAL
W. 1,515

SEP 7 1973

ITEM (E)
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
W. 7,000

AUG 3 1973

New England Newsclip

June Ingram at Tanglewood

Mystic

June Sherry Ingram, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George William Ingram of 352 Packer Road, is continuing her musical education this summer in the Applied Music Instruction program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass.

..As a member of the Applied Music Instruction program, Miss Ingram studies intensively with Institute faculty, including Boston University professors, some of whom are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The eight-week course enables selected instrumentalists to study with prominent artists in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood.

A 1973 cum laude graduate of Connecticut College, New London, Miss Ingram is a member of the Eastern Connecticut Symphony Orchestra, and a charter member of the Eastern Connecticut Symphony Youth Orchestra, with which she has been a violin and viola coach. She was concert mistress of the Connecticut College Orchestra and the Pfizer Players stage orchestra in Groton, and played first violin for the Connecticut College String Quartet. A participant in the Cappella Cantorum in Deep River, and the United States Coast Guard Musical is New London, she has been a member of the East Lyme Arts Council and her college's Music Department Advisory Committee.

NEWS
NEWTON, CONN.

AUG 15 1973

New England Newsclip

SUNNYVALE, CAL.
VALLEY JOURNAL
ZONE 11
W. 42,000

AUG 11 1973

Al fresco practice

Irene Liu, right, practices with other members of the Choral Institute in Tanglewood.

Sunnyvale teen at Tanglewood

Irene Liu, 18, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julian Liu of 1529 Klamath Drive, Sunnyvale, is one of a group of teenagers studying music at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass. She is a participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, and studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the institute chorus, directed by Associate Professor Joseph Huszti of Boston University.

The four-week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Liu, a 1973 graduate of Homestead High School in Cupertino, has been first chair viola in the International Youth Orchestra in Lausanne, Switzerland, and with the California Youth Symphony.

She has played dramatic roles in "Bye Bye Birdie," "The Crucible" and "You Can't Take it With You."

At Homestead High School, she earned the Bank of America Fine Arts Award, the Homestead Fine Arts Award, and recognition as Best Character Actress and Best Comedy Actress.

Miss Liu plans to enroll at San Jose State University in September.

MESSENGER (E)
ST. ALBANS, VT.

AUG 7 1973

City Youth Continues Education

Robert Barker, 16, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Barker, Jr., of 10 Driscoll Drive, St. Albans, is one of a select group of teenagers continuing his musical education at the prestigious Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass. A participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, Barker studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

The four week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the peaceful surroundings of the Berkshire Mountains, the students attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement, and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer programs.

Barker, who attends Bellows Free Academy, studies voice during the school year with Mrs. Lauria Grandey and choral singing with Mrs. Donna Costes. He has participated in All State and All New England music festivals as well as several dramatic productions including "Camelot" as "Pellinore."

Local Student in Tanglewood Group

BOSTON — Paula Kenyon, 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard W. Kenyon of 85 Hemlock Avenue, Attleboro, is one of a select group of teenagers continuing her musical education at the prestigious Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox.

A participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, she studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

The four week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In the peaceful surroundings of the Berkshire Mountains, the students attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement, and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer program.

PAULA KENYON in her Choral Institute madrigal ensemble, practices informally outdoors.

Miss Kenyon, who attends Attleboro High School, studies voice during the school year with Carolyn Smith of the Massachusetts Institue of Technology. She has sung solo in church and in the chorus of "Jesus Christ Superstar", and has been involved in variety shows. Miss Kenyon is a student of violin and piano.

This is the eighth year that young students have been given the opportunity to study music, art or theatre at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute. They work in rehearsal halls, classrooms, old barns, wooden sheds, and even tree-lined clearings scattered about the 210 acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac which attracted Emerson, Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne many years ago.

Of the 244 talented people enrolled in the 1973 season of the Tanglewood Institue, 96, who are instrumentalists between the ages of 14 and 18, comprise the Young Artists Program. Another 49 in the same age bracket belong to the Choral Institute. The remaining 99, mostly college students, are enrolled in the piano, theater, applied music, choral conducting or painting and drawing programs.

Before being accepted by the Institute, the students go through stringent screening. But the stringency does not end after they are accepted. Everyone at the Choral Institute begins work in full ensemble early in the morning and reassembles in a madrigal group after lunch, with breaks for individual instruction or practice. They perform periodically before the appreciative audiences attending the summer-long Tanglewood Festival.

SUN CHRONICLE (E)
ATTLEBORO, MASS.

AUG 6 1973

New England Newsclip

DAY (D)
NEW LONDON, CONN.

AUG 16 1973

New England Newsclip

AUG 9 1973

New England Newsclip

Local students at Tanglewood

Natick High School students Pamela Joan Brown, Cynthia Cobb and Nancy Herlin are among a select group of teenagers continuing their musical education at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox.

Participants in the 49-voice Choral Institute, the local students study voice with artists-in-residence, and sing in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

Pamela Brown, 17, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard J. Brown of 10 Pitts Street. She has sung with the Massachusetts All State, Northeast District and Natick High School choruses. A student of piano, she ia a member of the school band and has played in many productions.

Cynthia, 16, daighter of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Wilson Cobb, Jr. of 47 Felch Road, has been involved for five years with Boston Children's Theatre. She had the leading role in "Carousel", and has sung with the Natick High School chorus and has been a soloist in church. A member of the National Honor Society, Miss Cobb earned her school's Latin and Business Awards.

Nancy Herlin, 17, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Herlin of 14 Halsey Way. She has sung with All State, Northeast District and Natick High School choruses. A student of piano and french horn and a member of the high school band, Miss Herlin has accompanied the high school chorus for two years.

June Ingram Is Applied Music Pupil

MYSTIC — June Sherry Ingram, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George William Ingram of 352 Packer Road, is continuing her musical education this summer in the Applied Music Instruction program of the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, Lenox, Mass.

As a member of the Applied Music Instruction program, Miss Ingram studies with institute faculty including Boston University professors, some of whom are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The eight-week course enables selected instrumentalists to study with prominent artists in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood. Applied music students practice amid the scenery of the Berkshire Mountains and have free access to all rehearsals and performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center. They receive three college credits for successful completion of the program.

Peter Hopps (second from right), in his Choral Institute madrigal ensemble, prepares to start singing during an informal outdoor practice.

Peter Hopps studies music at BU's Tanglewood School

Peter Hopps, 18, son of Mr and Mrs Roland E. Hopps Jr of 10 East Highland Ave, is one of a select group of teenagers continuing his musical education at the prestigious Boston Univ Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass. A participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, Hopps studies voice with artists-in-residence, and signs with a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston Univ Assoc Professor Joseph Huszti.

The four week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the peaceful surroundings of the Berkshire Mountains, the students attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement, and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer program.

Hopps, a 1973 graduate of Barrington High School, studied voice during the school year with Denise Lusignan. He has sung with the All State Senior High School Choir and Chorus and Madrigal Singers, and has performed in several theater productions. He was a member of the All New England Music Festival of Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

Hopps plans to attend Dean Junior College in Franklin, Mass.

This is the eighth year that young students have been given the opportunity to study music, art or theater at the Boston Univ Tanglewood Institute. They work in rehearsal halls, classrooms, old barns, wooden sheds, and even tree-lined clearings scattered about the 210 acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac which attracted Emerson, Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne many years ago.

Of the 244 talented people enrolled in the 1973 season of the Tanglewood Institute, 96, who are instrumentalists between the ages of 14 and 18, comprise the Young Artists Program. Another 49 in the same age bracket belong to the Choral Institute. The remaining 99, mostly college students, are enrolled in the piano, theater, applied music, choral conducting or painting and drawing programs.

Before being accepted by the Institute, the students go through stringent screening. But the stringency does not end after they are accepted. Everyone at the Choral Institute begins work in full ensemble early in the morning and reassembles in a madrigal group after lunch, with breaks for individual instruction or practice. They perform periodically before the appreciative audiences attending the summer-long Tanglewood Festival.

TIMES
BARRINGTON, R. I.
W. 4,346

AUG 16 1973

REVIEW
DARIEN, CONN.
W. 4,500

AUG 16 1973

New England Newsclip

MUSIC STUDENT

Arthur W. Porter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur L. Porter of 31 Briar Brae Road, has participated this summer in a choral music program at Boston University's Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass. The four-week program enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists.

Judith Wyman Studies Music At Tanglewood

Judith Wyman, 16, daughter of Mrs. Sylvia L. Wyman of 493 Auburn Street, is one of a select group of teenagers continuing her musical education at the prestigious Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Massachusetts.

A participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, Ms. Wyman studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

The four week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the peaceful surroundings of the Berkshire Mountains, the students attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement, and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer program.

Ms. Wyman attends Newton High School and has been a member of the school chorus for three years. She has performed in "Cabaret", "Fiddler on the Roof", and other productions. Ms. Wyman is also a student of piano.

Before being accepted by the Institute, the students go through stringent screening. But the stringency does not end after they are accepted. Everyone at the Choral Institute begins work in full ensemble early in the morning reassembles in a madrigal group after lunch, with breaks for individual instruction or practice. They perform periodically before the appreciative audiences attending the summer-long Tanglewood Festival.

GRAPHIC
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 10,905

AUG 9 1973

New England Newsclip

Miss Snyder Attends B.U. Choral Institute At Tanglewood

STOW — Elizabeth Snyder, 15, daughter of Mrs. Evelyn M. Snyder of Thistle Farm, Stow, is one of a select group of teenagers continuing her musical education at the prestigious Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Massachusetts. A participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, Ms Snyder studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

The four-week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the peaceful surroundings of the Berkshire Mountains, the students attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement, and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer program.

Miss Snyder, who attends Nashoba Regional High School in Bolton, studies voice during the school year with Robert Lague, a music teacher at Lexington Junior High School in Lexington. She has performed in many Gilbert and Sullivan operettas and has accompanied a choir on piano. She has played the piano for eight years.

This is the eighth year that young students have been given the opportunity to study music, art or theater at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute. They work in rehearsal halls, classrooms, old barns, wooden sheds, and even tree-lined clearings scattered about the 210 acre estate overlooking Lake Mahkeenac which attracted Emerson, Holmes, Melville and Hawthorne many years ago.

ELIZABETH SNYDER (second from the right), in her Choral Institute madrigal ensemble practicing informally.

Of the 244 talented people enrolled in the 1973 season of the Tanglewood Institute, 96, who are instrumentalists between the ages of 14 and 18, comprise the Young Artists Program. Another 49 in the same age bracket belong to the Choral Institute. The remaining 99, mostly college students, are enrolled in the piano, theater, applied music, choral conducting or painting and drawing programs.

Before being accepted by the Institute, the students go through stringent screening. But the stringency does not end after they are accepted. Everyone at the Choral Institute begins work in full ensemble early in the morning and reassembles in a madrigal group after lunch, with breaks for individual instruction or practice. They perform periodically before the appreciative audiences attending the summer-long Tanglewood Festival.

ASSABET VALLEY
BEACON
ACTON, MASS.

AUG 9 1973

SPRINGFIELD NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
W. 8,750

AUG 16 1973

New England Newsclip

VILLAGER
BERKELEY, MASS.
W. 1,500

AUG 9 1973

New England Newsclip

JUDITH WYMAN (left), in her Choral Institute madrigal ensemble, practices informally outdoors.

Judith Wyman Attends BU Choral Institute At Tanglewood Inst.

Judith Wyman, 16, daughter of Mrs. Sylvia L. Wyman of 493 Auburn st., Auburndale, is one of a select group of teenagers continuing her musical education at the prestigious Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Massachusetts. A participant in the 49-voice Choral Institute, Miss Wyman studies voice with artists-in-residence, and sings in a solo group, a madrigal ensemble, and the Institute Chorus, directed by Boston University Associate Professor Joseph Huszti.

The four week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, and to spend part of the summer in the lively musical atmosphere of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the peaceful surroundings of the Berkshire Mountains, the students attend group sessions in solfege, conducting, diction, movement, and private master classes. They receive four college credits for the summer program.

Miss Wyman attends Newton High School and has been a member of the school chorus for three years. She has performed in "Cabaret", "Fiddler on the Roof", and other productions. Miss Wyman is also a student of piano.

LONGMEADOW NEWS
HARTFORD, CONN.

AUG 22 1973

New England Newsclip

Students Take Part In Tanglewood Rites

LONGMEADOW — Longmeadow High School had two students who took part in the four-week Boston University Choral Institute at Tanglewood this summer.

Gary A. Clay, 17, son of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Clay Jr. of 87 Crestview Circle, and Anna Fromer, 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Fromer of 28 Merriweather Dr., will both receive four college credits for the program.

Miss Fromer studies voice during the school year with Mrs. Hilda Haag and Alfredo Carbonell. She has sung with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, Kodimoh Synagog Chorus and the Springfield Area Honors Chorus.

Clay, who had parts in the play "Our Town" and the musical comedy "The Velveteen Rabbit" at LHS, is also a student of piano and baritone horn and a member of the National Honor Society.

They are among 49 teenagers selected to take part in the choral institute directed by Joseph Huszti of BU. Their program included work in full ensemble in the morning, a madrigal group after lunch, and individual instruction and practice as well as performances before audiences at Tanglewood.

BULLETIN
NATICK, MASS.
W. 7,600

AUG 16 1973

New England Newsclip

TOWN CHATTER

STUDYING AT Tanglewood this summer is Anna M. Fromer, 16, of Longmeadow. She is participating in Boston University's Tanglewood Institute in Lenox. Students will receive four college credits for the summer program, which includes studies with prominent concert artists and private lessons.

NATICK STUDENTS STUDY AT TANGLEWOOD

Pamela Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard J. Brown of 10 Pitts Street, Cynthia Cobb, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Wilson Cobb of 47 Felch Road, and Nancy Herlin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Herlin of 14 Halsey Way are participating in a Choral Institute at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute in Lenox, Mass. The four week Choral Institute enables selected high school singers to study with prominent concert artists, attend group sessions in sol fege, conducting, direction, movement, and private master classes. They will receive four college credits for the program.

Pamela Brown, 17, has sung with the Massachusetts All State, Northeast District and Natick High School choruses. A student of piano, she is a member of the school band and has played in many productions.

Cynthia Cobb, 16, has been involved for five years with Boston Children's Theatre. She had the leading role in "Carousel". She has sung with the Natick High School chorus and has been a soloist in church. A member of the National Honor Society, Cynthia earned her school's Latin and Business Awards.

Nancy Herlin, 17, has sung with All State, Northeast District and Natick High School choruses. She is a student of piano and French horn and a member of the high school band. Nancy has accompanied the high school chorus for two years.

Whitestone

Another opening, another show

BSO music director Seiji Ozawa, left, rehearses with violin soloists Joseph Silverstein, center, and Jerome Rosen on the Bach Concerto for Two Violins in preparation for tonight's opening concert at Tanglewood, featuring an all-Bach program.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 31,000
JUL 6 1973

Short Drive To Tanglewood Worthwhile Summer Trip

One of the most worthwhile drives a music-lover might take during the summer months is the short trip over the beautiful Berkshire Mountains to Tanglewood.

Tanglewood, an estate of 210 acres in the Berkshires, was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the 1930's and is world famous as the summer home of this outstanding orchestra, the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, and advanced school for the study of music.

Nathaniel Hawthorne lived on the Tanglewood grounds and once wrote he could barely work in the presence of such scenic beauty. It is nearly unchanged today.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra performs in the famous Tanglewood Shed, but many listeners prefer to relax with blankets and folding chairs on the lawn.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, will open July 6 with Seiji Ozawa, artistic director, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program, including the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, the Concerto for Two Violins and the Cantatas No. 189 and 52. Joseph Siverstein and Jerome Rosen will be the violin soloist while vocalists Seth McCoy and Benita Valente will be heard on the cantatas.

Tanglewood concerts by the Boston Symphony are presented Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons for eight straight summer weekends.

An abbreviated Boston Symphony Orchestra is heard for the first two weekends and these programs generally features the music of baroque and classic composers.

Nine of the 24 concerts will feature the music of a single composer. The music of Mozart will be heard July 7 and 13. Brahms will be featured on July 27, Stravinsky on Aug. 4, Berlioz on Aug. 24 and the entire weekend of July 20-22 will feature the music of Beethoven.

Guest conductors who will be heard at Tanglewood include Stanislaw Skrowaczewske, Riccardo Muti, Eugene Ormandy, William Steinberg, Raphael Frubeck DeBurgos, Lawrence Foster, Arthur Fiedler and James DePreist.

Two conductors will be featured for an entire weekend. These are Michael Tilson Thomas, who will conduct Aug. 3-5, and Colin Davis, who will conduct Aug. 10-12.

Six outstanding piano soloists will be heard in various programs throughout the season, including Andre Watts, Philippe Entremont, Christoph Eschenbach, Malcolm Frager, Earl Wild and Byron Janis.

Visiting violin soloists include Sidney Harth, who wll be heard on the Beethoven Concerto July 22, and Miriam Fried who will play the Brahms Concerto July 22.

Vocal soloists to be heard will be Thomas Stewart, Benita Valente, Seth McCoy, Phillis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Pete Lagger, Kenneth Riegel, David Evitts, Helen Watts, Ryland Davies Mallory Walker, Victor Braun, Lou Ann Wyckoff anfd Maureen Forrester.

Open rehearsals by the Boston Symphony are held every Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

Friday evening performances of the Boston Symphony begin at 9 p.m. and are preceeded by a weekend Prelude Concert which begins at 7 p.m. Weekend preludes present guest artists and members of the Boston Symphony in short recitals offered at no extra charge to ticket holders.

Weekend preludes scheduled this season include performances by Larry Smith on July 6; Malcolm Frager on July 13; Andre Watts on July 20; Peter Lagger on July 27; the Tanglewood Festival Chorus on Aug. 3; Phyllis Curtin and Ryan Edwards on Aug. 10; Earl Wild on Aug. 17, and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players on Aug. 24.

The beautiful Tanglewood grounds are open two hours before every major concert. The grounds are serviced by a cafeteria, and picnicking on the grounds is encouraged. Saturday evening performances begin at 8:30 p.m. while Sunday's concerts are at 2:30 p.m.

An important part of the summer musical scene at Tanglewood is the Festival of Contemporary Music, sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Foundation. Often called a "festival within a festival," the event turns Tanglewood into the contemporary music capital of the world, as new and challenging works, many receiving premiere performances, are presented.

The Festival of Contemporary Music will begin Aug. 4 at Tanglewood.

Another Tanglewood special event will be Tanglewood on Parade Aug. 14, featuring many concerts during the day by Berkshire Music Center members and a gala concert beginning at 8:30 p.m. with Seiji Ozawa and Gunther Schuller conducting.

Andre Watts will be piano soloist and narrator on a program to include Copland's Lincoln Portrait, the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1, Strauss' Also Sprach Zarathustra and Tchaikovsky's Cappricio Italien.

On Aug. 21 Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops Orchestra in an annual favorite to begin at 8:30 p.m.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
JUN 30 1973

Tanglewood Opens With Ozawa Conducting Bach

The 1973 Tanglewood weekend of concerts on season opens its first Friday, July 6 at 9 p.m. with music adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

The concert opens with Bach's Brandenburg concerto no. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchstra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists.

The concert then continues with Cantata no. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy. Although th authorship of Cantata no. 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt und preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent scholarship shows that it was in fact probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, and organist in Leipzig between 1705 and 1715.

The concert closes with Bach's Cantata no. 52 'Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, as soloists.

This concert follows the Friday 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G. Four chorale preludes, and Passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

On Saturday, July 7 at 10:30 a.m. in th Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On Saturday, July 7 at 8:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud arist-in-residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all - Mozart program.

The concert opens with Adagio and fugue in C minor and is followed by Sinfonia concertante for winds featuring Boston Symphony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Harold Wright, clarinet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon. The concert continues with Mozart's Concert aria for baritone 'Mentre ti lascio, o figlia' with soloist Thomas Steward, and closes with Symphony no. 35 "Haffner".

On Sunday July 8 at 2:30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa conducts Creation (in English) with the Orchestra in Haydn's Creation (in English with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 35,578
JUN 19 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Season Opener July 6: Bach

LENOX— The 1973 Tanglwood season opens its first weekend of concerts July 6 at 9 p.m. with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

The concert opens with Bach's Bradenburg concerto No. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists.

The concert then continues with Cantata No. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy. Although the authoriship of Cantata No. 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt und Preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent scholarship shows that it was in fact probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, an organist in Leipzig between 1705 and 1715. The concert closes with Bach's Cantata No 52 'Falsche Welt dir trau' ich nicht' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, as soloists. This concert follows the Friday evening 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G. Four chorale preludes, and Passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

On July 7 at 10:30 a.m. in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

At 8:30 p.m. July 7 Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud artist-in-residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart progran. The concert opens with Adagio and fugue in C minor and isfollowed by Sinfonia concertante for winds featuring Boston Sympohony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Harold Wright, clarinet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon. The concert continues with Mozart's Concert aria for baritone 'Mentre ti lascio, o figlia' with soloist Thomas Stewart, and closes with Symphony No. 35 "Haffner."

July 8 at 2:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa conducts the Orchestra in Haydn's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (E)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,895
JUN 19 1973
New England Newsclip

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUL 3 1973
New England Newsclip

Opening concerts

Tanglewood weekend program

The 1973 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will open Friday with a primarily Bach program conducted by artistic director Seiji Ozawa.

The Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. in the Tanglewood Shed will feature organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G. four chorale preludes, "Passacaglia" and Fugue in C Minor.

Bach works

Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Bach and Hoffmann program at 9 p.m. The "Brandenburg Concerto No. 1" will be followed by Concerto for Two Violins. for which Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen are soloists. The orchestra will also play Hofmann's Cantata No. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy.

The concert will close with Bach's Cantata No. 52 sung by soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, directed by John Oliver.

On Saturday at 8:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaszewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and artist-in-residence at Tanglewood, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program. The evening will begin with the Adagio and Fugue in C Minor. Senfonia certanta for Winds will feature BSO principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Harold Wright, clarinet; Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

The program will close with Mozart's Concert Aria for Baritone, with soloist Thomas Stewart, and the "Haffner Symphony."

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Ozawa will conduct the orchestra in Haydn's "Creation" (in English) with Miss Valente, McCoy, Stewart, the Tanglewood Choir and the Festival Chorus.

As usual, an open rehersal of Sunday's works will be held Saturday morning at 10:30 in the Shed.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 135,000
JUL 1 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Opening

Special to The Times

LENOX, Mass. — The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts Friday, July 6 (9 p.m.) with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

The concert opens with Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists.

The concert then continues with Cantata No. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy.

Although the authorship of Canata No. 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt und preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent study shows that it was, in fact, probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, an 18th century Leipzig organist.

The concert closes with Bach's Canata No. 52 'Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, as soloists. This concert follows the Friday (7 p.m.) Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G, Four chorale preludes, and Passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

On Saturday, July 7 (10:30 a.m.) in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On Saturday, July 7 (8:30 p.m.), Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud artist-in-residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with Adagio and fugue in C minor and is followed by Sinfonia concertante for winds featuring Boston Symphony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Harold Wright, clarinet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

The concert continues with Mozart's Concert aria for baritone 'Mentre ti lascio, o figlia' with soloist Thomas Stewart, and closes with Symphony No. 35 "Haffner".

On Sunday, July 8 (2:30 pm), Seiji Ozawa conducts the Orchestra in Haydn's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

Tanglewood to open new season with weekend concerts, July 6

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. — The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts July 6, at 9 p.m. with music adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

The concert opens with "Brandenburg Concerto No. 1" and is followed by "Concerto for Two Violins." Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and assistant concertmaster Jerome Rosen are the soloists.

The concert continues with Cantata No. 189. Seth McCoy is the featured tenor in the performance.

The concert closes with Bach's Cantata No. 52. Soprano Benita Valente and the Tangelwood Festival Chorus will be featured. John Oliver is the director of the chorus.

This concert follows the "Weekend Prelude" at 7 p.m. Friday. Organist Lary Smith performs Bach's Concerto in G, Four Chorale Preludes, and Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor in this offering.

LARRY SMITH
. . . Organist

On Saturday morning, July 7, at 10:30 a.m. in the "Shed," there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season an open rehearsal of the works to be performed Sunday.

On July 7 at 8:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skroaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Grand Artist-in Residence, will conduct the Boston orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with Adagio and Fugue in C Minor and is followed by Sinfonia Concertante for Winds. This piece features the Symphony's principal players: Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Harold Wright, clarinet; Charles Kavaloski, horn and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

The concert continues with Mozart's Concert Aria for Baritone and closes with Symphony No. 35. Baritone Thomas Stewart is the featured soloist in the aria.

On Sunday, July 8, Seiji Ozawa once again will conduct the orchestra in a program at 2:30 p.m. Haydn's "Creation," performed in English, will be featured.

Soprano Benita Valente appears as "Gabriel" and "Eve;" tenor Seth McCoy as "Uriel," baritone Thomas Stewart as "Raphael," and "Adam" and the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD RECORD
D. 45,349 SUN. 41,720

JUN 20 1973

Ozawa opens Tanglewood's concert series

LENOX, Massachusetts—The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts on Friday, July 6 at 9 with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach. The concert opens with Bach's Brandenburg concerto no. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joséph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists.

The concert then continues with Cantata no 189 with tenor Seth Mc Coy. Although the authorship of Cantata no 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt und preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent scholarship shows that it was in fact probably written by Melchior Hofmann, an organist in Leipzig between 1705 and 1715. The concert closes with Bach's Cantata no 52 'Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich night' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, as soloists.

On Saturday, July 7 at 8:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Arist-in-Residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program. The concert opens with Adagio and fugue in C minor and is followed by Sinfonia concertante for winds featuring Boston Symphony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Harold Wright, clarinet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon. The concert continues with Mozart's Concert aria for baritone 'Mentre ti lascio.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 129,656

JUN 25 1973

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934

JUL 4 1973

Tanglewood to Open With Bach Concert

The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts at Lenox, Mass., at 9 p.m. Friday with music adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

* * *

The concert will include Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, Concerto for Two Violins, with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and assistant concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists, and Cantata No. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy.

Closing the program will be Cantata No. 52 "Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht" with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

This concert follows the Friday evening weekend prelude at 7 with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G, Four Chorale Preludes, and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

On Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud artist-in-residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in n all-Mozart program.

* * *

The concert includes Adagio and Fugue in C minor, Sinfonia Concertante for Winds, featuring symphony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Harold Wright, clarinet; Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon; Mozart's Concert Aria for Baritone, "Mentre ti lascio, o figlia," with soloist Thomas Stewart, and Symphony No. 35 "Haffner."

Ozawa conducts the orchestra at 2:30 p.m. Sunday in Haydn's Creation (in English) with soprano Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor McCoy as Uriel, baritone Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

REGISTER (E)
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
D. 108,945

JUL 1 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Opens

LENOX, Mass. — The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts on Friday, July 6 at 9 p.m. with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach. The concert opens with Bach's Brandenburg concerto no. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists. The concert then continues with Cantata no. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy. Although the authorship of Cantata no. 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt und preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent scholarship shows that it was in fact probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, an organist in Leipzig between 1705 and 1715. The concert closes with Bach's Cantata no. 52 'Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. John Oliver, director, as soloists. This concert follows the Friday evening 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G, Four chorale preludes and Passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

On Saturday morning, July 7 at 10:30 a.m. in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

On Saturday, July 7 at 8:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program. The concert opens with Adagio and fugue in C minor and is followed by Sinfonia concertante for winds featuring Boston Symphony principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Harold Wright, clarinet, Charles Kavaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon. The concert continues with Mozart's Concert aria for baritone 'Mentre ti lascio, o figlia' with soloist Thomas Stewart, and closes with Symphony no. 35 "Haffner."

On Sunday afternoon, July 8 at 2:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa conducts the Orchestra in Haydn's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

BEE
NEWTOWN, CONN.
D. 11,768

JUN 29 1973
New England Newsclip

Season Opens At Tanglewood July 6

The 1973 Tanglewood season in Lenox, Mass., opens its first weekend of concerts on Friday, July 6, at 9 pm with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach. This concert follows the Friday evening 7 pm Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G, Four chorale preludes, and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

On Saturday morning, July 7 at 10:30 am in the Shed, there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday. On Saturday, July 7, at 8:30 pm, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Arist-in-Residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program.

On Sunday afternoon, July 8, at 2:30 pm, Seiji Ozawa conducts the orchestra in Haydn's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

For information phone 413-637-1600.

(M)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 83,000

JUL 6 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood: Bach

TANGLEWOOD — The 1973 Tanglewood season opens its first weekend of concerts tonight at 9 with Music Adviser Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Bach.

The concert opens with Bach's Brandenburg concerto No. 1 and is followed by Concerto for two violins with Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Assistant Concertmaster Jerome Rosen as soloists.

The concert then continues with Cantata No. 189 with tenor Seth McCoy. Although the authorship of Cantata No. 189 'Meine Seele ruhmt and preist' has been attributed to Bach for many years, recent scholarship shows that it was probably written by Melchoir Hofmann, an organist in Leipzig between 1705 and 1715.

The concert closes with Bach's Cantata No. 52 'Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht' with soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director, as soloists.

This concert follows the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude with organist Larry Smith performing Bach's Concerto in G, Four chorale preludes, and Passacaglia and fugue in C minor.

Tomorrow morning at 10.30 in the shed there will be, as every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

Tomorrow at 8.30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud artist-in-residence, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Mozart program.

On Sunday afternoon at 2.30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa conducts the orchestra in Haydn's Creation (in English) with soprano Benita Valente as Gabriel and Eve, tenor Seth McCoy as Uriel, baritone Thomas Stewart as Raphael and Adam, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 1 1973

Editor's Choice

DANCE

- Capitaland may easily claim the title as dance capital of the U.S. On Tuesday night, Martha Graham's Dance Company begins its residence at Lake Palcid, Dame Margot Fonteyn kicks off the season at Jacob's Pillow at Lee and the New York City Ballet opens its season at Saratoga with Melissa Hayden and John Clifford teamed for Balanchine's new "Cortege Hongrois."

MUSIC

- Seiji Ozawa opens the concert season at Tanglewood Friday with an all-Bach including the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 and Concerto for Two Violins featuring Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen of the BSO.

THEATER

- George Bernard Shaw's "St. Joan" inaugurates the summer season at the Williamstown Theater Thursday. Emery Battis and David Leary, both Williamstown veterans, are featured.

ART

- The Hudson-Mohawk Regional Art Exhibition currently at the Albany State University art galleries, has been called one of the best ever.

FILMS

- Some of the best films of the year have begun runs in area theater houses. Among the choice are Peter Bogdanovitich's "Paper Moon," Norman Jewison's "J. C. Superstar," and "Live and Let Die," starring the irrepressible "Saint," Roger Moore, as the new 007.

Ozawa's Bach lacks proper bite at Tanglewood

By George Gelles
Special to The Globe

LENOX — The inaugural concert by the Boston Symphony Friday night at Tanglewood was largely a dreary affair. Seiji Ozawa conducted, and Bach, by custom, was the featured composer.

There were some nice touches to Ozawa's program. Cantata No. 52, which closed the evening, starts with a sinfonia borrowed from the First Brandenburg, the work that opened the evening. And the Cantata No. 89, formerly ascribed to Bach, is now known to have been written [illegible] by Melchior Hoffman. Hindsight [illegible] marvelous teacher: in retrospect we can safely wonder if an authentic work by Bach would be rhythmically so square and cluttered with conventional doublings. So it's instructive to hear Hoffman, a-k-a Bach, to play with our expectations of the great, and question what qualitative standards one sets on the strength of a famous name alone.

CONDUCTOR Seiji Ozawa conducts inaugural concert at Tanglewood.

To conduct is to clarify, to reanimate a document that is essentially dead; Ozawa shows no special affinity for scores of Bach. He conducts them from the viewpoint of the 19th Century and smears on them a stylistic sauce that obscures their intentions. What he values, despite the total reduction of size of the orchestra, is the big sound and the big line. His interpretations are geared to the dynamics of music from a later date. There's a general inflexibility to his Baroque, an insensitivity to the weights and textures of phrases. The larger statement comes across clearly, but a wealth of detail is virtually ignored. Competent and straightforward, the performances stopped being interesting early.

Words help. Though the cantata texts are modest in their literary achievements, they nonetheless have a profile of their own. Some of their consistency is instinctively reflected in Ozawa's shaping of the instrumental line, which gives his work a measure more of idiomatic validity.

It's precisely this quality that one seeks in his readings of the scores that are purely orchestral. Take, for instance, the D Minor Concerto for two violins which, with the Brandenburg and the cantatas, completed the program. Look at another interpretation of the work, one [illegible] by Georges Balanchine [illegible] "Concerto Barocco."

The ballet illuminates the music with gestures of striking simplicity. Never mind the Grand Design; what in large part makes the piece work so well is the care and infallible discretion which finds the visual analogue for the musical affect.

In the Largo, for example, Balanchine emphasizes the few beats of staccato eighth-notes with his dancers hopping on point, a step saved for this spot in the score where it gives just the right articulation. Or in the development section, Balanchine finds the kinetic equivalent to the soloist's interplay with intricate interweavings of dancers, a sequence that resolves with effortless logic into the wedge shape of the recapitulation. In Ozawa's performance on Friday the staccato notes and the development section in no way emphasized the recap, marked merely by the slightest hiccup of a pause.

Balanchine, I think, understands the piece more profoundly. He is more fully aware of its ambiguities and of the emotive import of details. It's a comparable sensibility I like from a conductor. The gift to convey the opposite gesture. Ozawa, with Bach, is not yet there.

Interpretation aside, the playing he got from the BSO was adequate at best and too often sloppy. The instrumental works sounded under-rehearsed, the cantatas rather too careful. Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen were the violin soloists, Seth McCoy and Benita Valente sang cantatas Nos. 189 and 52, respectively. In its too-brief appearance the Tanglewood Festival Chorus was handsome indeed. It's a shame, though, that the Berkshire Festival views Bach as an antique. In adopting so regressive a stand the orchestra brings itself no glory.

Disappointment at Tanglewood

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

During the composition of his oratorio, "The Creation," Haydn related that "he had never been so religious," that he "daily fell on his knees and asked God for strength." This religious feeling, to judge from the work it inspired, must have been one of great joy in God and His created world, one of unbelievable wonder at the perfection of all beings.

That sense of joy and wonder, however, was precisely the thing that was missing in the performance of "The Creation," by Seiji Ozawa and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood.

OZAWA, who has made no bones of the fact that he is just beginning "to get into Haydn," has programmed a large number of the symphonies in the first of his seasons

• Concert Review

as music director with the orchestra and last summer (also on the first Sunday Berkshire concert), performed "The Seasons," in a badly-mutilated and unstylistic version.

Obviously his concentrated study of Haydn is beginning to pay off. This year's oratorio performance displayed much less serious problems than that of last year, because these are now problems stemming from not having lived long enough with a work rather than those created by miscalculation or bad judgment.

I AM STILL not at all convinced, however, that these Haydn oratorios belong in a setting such as Tanglewood, where one has to amplify the keyboard to make it audible and select singers with big voices so they can be heard, thereby sacrificing stylistic tone color and vocal flexibility that would be most appropriate in these works. That is one basic decision of Ozawa's I have difficulty living with.

The thing that was impossible to live with last year — the cuts in "The Seasons" — was not a difficulty in "The Creation," mainly because it is a substantially shorter work. Only a chorus and several measures near the end hit the cutting room floor, and they were not indispensable.

IT WAS the soloists and Ozawa's way with their music (curiously, this was not so with the choruses) that resulted in the pallid and unfocused quality of this performance. Neither Thomas Stewart nor Seth McCoy is particularly attuned to the style of this music, although Benita Valente has had considerable experience with Baroque and classic repertory (and this is a work that definitely looks backward to the former).

None, however, seemed particularly tuned in to the emotional content of this quite naively communicative work. That is very strange coming from Valente and Stewart, two singers who have always impressed me with their strong word sense.

OZAWA, too, who usually has such intense responses to music failed to bring out all the magic in the accompaniments with their descriptions of storms, tempests, and animals. The evocation of chaos, which opens "The Creation," was rough-edged and not a bit mysterious or bizarre (compared to the wonderful performance Gunther Schuller gave with the New England Conservatory orchestra this spring).

The very best thing about this performance was, beyond a doubt, the beautifully prepared Tanglewood Festival Chorus which sang with unfailingly attractive tone, precise articulation, and good diction (they couldn't help it if the words from the Novello English translation were put together with such god-awful syntax.)

The Berkshire Eagle

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Monday, July 9, 1973

Whitestone

RECORD-BREAKING OPENING weekend at Tanglewood drew 26,858 patrons, with Friday night's 7,811 also a record for an opening night. Saturday's open rehearsal had 3,312 in attendance, with 7,606 for Saturday night and 8,130 for Sunday afternoon. Last year's opening weekend attendance was 23,224. Music director Seiji Ozawa is shown leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Haydn's "The Creation" yesterday in the Shed.

1 FIRST WEEKEND

JULY 6
7 pm Weekend Prelude
LARRY SMITH
9 pm SEIJI OZAWA
Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 1
Bach: Concerto for Two Violins
Joseph Silverstein, Jerome Rosen
Cantata No. 189 Seth McCoy
Bach: Cantata No. 52 Benita Valente

JULY 7
10:30 am Open Rehearsal
8:30 pm STANISLAW SKROWACZEWSKI
MOZART PROGRAM
Adagio and Fugue
Sinfonia Concertante for Winds
Concert Aria for Baritone
Thomas Stewart
"Haffner" Symphony

JULY 8
2:30 pm SEIJI OZAWA
Haydn: Creation
Benita Valente
Seth McCoy
Thomas Stewart
Tanglewood Festival Chorus
John Oliver, Director

16 Springfield Union, Springfield, Mass., Saturday, July 7, 1973

7811 Enthusiasts Attend Tanglewood Season Opener

By R.C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its annual eight weeks at Tanglewood Friday night in traditional fashion with Bach, and with encouraging support, 7811 listeners.

Before intermission it was the secular Bach of the chamber orchestra, after it was the church - composer Bach of the vocal cantatas.

And there was a cantata (No. 189) by Melchior Hoffman which had been attributed to Bach for many years.

The secular Bach Friday sounded best (for me) with the slow, flowing, limpid melodies that are so often sandwiched between jolly, strongly propulsive movements.

There was a sweet and silky violin in the second movement in the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, and the wind trios in the final section were nicely blended and smoothly flowing.

The middle section of the Concerto for Two Violins, also, flowed easily and gracefully, while the surrounding, faster movements sometimes throbbed with life and sometimes chugged along a bit mechanically.

Stars of the violin concerto were Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen, and of the Brandenburg were the oboes of Ralph Gomberg, John Holmes and Wayne Rapier.

On stage for the Brandenburg were about 50 musicians, the other half of the orchestra being in Boston for the Esplanade concerts. About 25 played the Concerto for Two Violins, and after intermission a sextet of violin, flute, oboe, harpsichord, cello and bass appeared to accompany tenor Seth McCoy for the Hofmann cantata.

McCoy has a light and vibrant voice which is nimble enough for the florid decorations of the early 18th-century music and warm enough to put life into its dryness.

The orchestra was brought back up to about 35 to join the Tanglewood Chorus (about 40 voices) and soprano Benita Valente for Bach's No. 52, which, perhaps, delivered more emotional content than the earlier part of the program.

But then, Bach and his compatriots produced a kind of music that seems dry and cool to 20th-century ears, and Friday the general impression was quiet, pleasant, optimistic and relaxing.

The 7 p.m. prelude program (48 minutes) was offered by Larry Smith, recital organist and member of the faculty of Converse College, Spartenburg, N. C. His recent trend toward a relaxation of the austerity with which Bach's music was presented, say, 10-15 years ago.

The Concerto in G (after a concerto by Count Johann Ernst) was cool and straight; four chorale preludes, which followed, became gradually warmer and more expressive; and the Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor, which ended the program, showed an even greater range of rhythmic variance and expressivity.

The meters were rock steady, however, the start - stops clean and precise and the volumes level.

The Tanglewood organ tends to sound clean, anyway, because the great shed has no back or side walls to bounce the vibrations and extend the reverberance.

Tonight at 8.30 Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct an all - Mozart program including an adagio and fugue, the Sinfonia Concertante for Winds, a concert aria for baritone and orchestra and the "Haffner" Symphony.

The 2.30 program Sunday, conducted by Seiji Ozawa, will present Haydn's oratorio, "The Creation," in English with three soloists and the Tanglewood Chorus.

Ozawa's Bach lacks proper bite at Tanglewood

By George Gelles
Special to The Globe

LENOX — The inaugural concert by the Boston Symphony Friday night at Tanglewood was largely a dreary affair. Seiji Ozawa conducted, and Bach, by custom, was the featured composer.

There were some nice touches to Ozawa's program. Cantata No. 52, which closed the evening, starts with a sinfonia borrowed from the First Brandenburg, the work that opened the evening. And the Cantata No. 89, recently ascribed to Bach, is now known to have been written by Melchoir Hoffman. Hindsight is a marvelous teacher: in retrospect we can safely wonder if an authentic work by Bach would be rhythmically so square and cluttered with conventional doublings. So it's instructive to hear Hoffman, a-k-a Bach, to play with our expectations of the period, and question what qualitative standards one sets on the strength of a famous name alone.

To conduct is to clarify, to examinate a document that is essentially dead. Ozawa shows no special affinity for scores of Bach. He conducts them from the viewpoint of the 19th Century and suffers on them a stylistic solace that obscures their intentions. What he values, despite the total reduction of size of the orchestra, is the big sound and the big line. His interpretations are geared to the dynamics of music from a later date. There's a general inflexibility to his Baroque, an insensitivity to the weights and textures of phrases. The larger statement comes across clearly, but a wealth of detail is virtually ignored. Competent and straightforward, the performances stopped being interesting early.

Words help. Though the cantata texts are modest in their literary achievement, they nonetheless have a profile of their own. Some of their consistency is effectively reflected in Ozawa's shaping of the instrumental line, which gives his work a measure more of idiomatic validity.

It's precisely this quality that one seeks in his reading of the scores that are purely orchestral. Take, for instance, the D Minor Concerto for two violins, which, with the Brandenburg and the cantatas, completed the program. Look at another interpretation of the work, one done in movement by Georges Balanchine and called "Concerto Barocco."

The ballet illuminates the music with gestures of striking simplicity. Never mind the Grand Design; what in large part makes the piece work so well is the easy and infallible discretion which finds the visual analogue for the musical affect.

In the Largo, for example, Balanchine emphasizes the few beats of staccato eighth-notes with his dancers hooping on point, a step used for this spot in the score which [illegible] just the right [illegible]lation. Or [illegible] the development section. Balanchine finds the kinetic equivalent [illegible] interplay with intricate [illegible] of dancers, a sequence that [illegible] with effortless logic into the work's [illegible] recapitulation. In Ozawa's version we get only the staccato notes and the development section in the way [illegible] the score, tangled more than the slightest hiccup of a pause.

Balanchine, I think, understands the piece more profoundly. He is more fully aware of its ambiguities and of the emotive in port of details. It's a comparable sensibility I like from a conductor. The gift to convey the opposite gesture. Ozawa is with Bach, is not yet there.

Interpretation aside, the playing by the members of the BSO was adequate at best [illegible] often sloppy. The instrumental [illegible] seemed under-rehearsed, the cantata [illegible] too careful. Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen were the violin [illegible] Seth McCoy and Benita Valente [illegible] Cantatas Nos. 189 and 52, respectively. In its too-brief appearance the Tanglewood Festival Chorus was handsome indeed. It's a shame, though, that the Berkshire Festival views Bach as an antique. In adopting so regressive a stand the orchestra brings itself no glory.

CONDUCTOR Seiji Ozawa conducts inaugural concert at Tanglewood.

Disappointment at Tanglewood

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

During the composition of his oratorio, The Creation, Haydn related that "I never been so religious as [illegible] he would fall on his knees and address his Maker. This religious feeling [illegible] from the [illegible] must have been [illegible] in God and [illegible] world, one of [illegible] wonder at the [illegible] all beings."

That sense of [illegible] der, however, was [illegible] the thing that was missing in the performance of "The Creation" by Seiji Ozawa and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood.

OZAWA, who has made no secret of the fact that he is beginning to feel quite Haydn, has programmed a [illegible] of the symphony [illegible] of his season.

Concert Review

[illegible] director with the season and last summer [illegible] the first "Sunday Afternoon" concert, performed [illegible] The season [illegible]

Obviously, his concentrated study of Haydn is beginning to pay off. This year's oratorio performance displayed much less serious problems than that of last year, because these are not problems stemming from not having lived long enough with a work, rather than those created by miscalculation or bad judgment.

I AM STILL not at all convinced, however, that these Haydn oratorios belong in a setting such as Tanglewood, where one has to amplify the keyboard to make it audible and select singers with big voices so they can be heard, thereby sacrificing stylistic tone color and vocal flexibility that would be most appropriate in these works. That is one basic decision of Ozawa's I have difficulty living with.

The thing that was impossible to live with last year — the cuts in "The Seasons" — was not a difficulty in "The Creation," mainly because it is a substantially shorter work. Only a chorus and several measures near the end hit the cutting room floor, and they were not indispensable.

IT WAS the soloists and Ozawa's way with their music (curiously, this was not so with the choruses) that resulted in the pallid and unfocused quality of this performance. Neither Thomas Stewart nor Seth McCoy is particularly attuned to the style of this music, although Benita Valente has had considerable experience with Baroque and classic repertory (and this is a work that definitely looks backward to the former).

None, however, seemed particularly tuned in to the emotional content of this quite naively communicative work. That is very strange coming from Valente and Stewart, two singers who have always impressed me with their strong word sense.

OZAWA, too, who usually has such intense responses to music failed to bring out all the magic in the accompaniments with their descriptions of storms, tempests, and animals. The evocation of chaos, which opens "The Creation," was rough-edged and not a bit mysterious or bizarre compared to the wonderful performance Gunther Schuller gave with the New England Conservatory orchestra this spring.

The very best thing about this performance was, beyond a doubt, the beautifully prepared Tanglewood Festival Chorus which sang with unfailingly attractive tone, precise articulation, and good diction (they couldn't help it if the words from the Novello English translation were put together with such god-awful syntax).

The Berkshire Eagle

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Monday, July 9, 1973

Whitestone

RECORD-BREAKING OPENING weekend at Tanglewood drew 26,858 patrons, with Friday night's 7,811 also a record for an opening night. Saturday's open rehearsal had 3,312 in attendance, with 7,606 for Saturday night and 8,130 for Sunday afternoon. Last year's opening weekend attendance was 23,224. Music director Seiji Ozawa is shown leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Haydn's "The Creation" yesterday in the Shed.

7811 Enthusiasts Attend Tanglewood Season Opener

By R.C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its annual eight week at Tanglewood Friday night in traditional fashion with Bach, and with encouraging support. 7811 listeners.

Before intermission it was the secular Bach of the chamber orchestra, after it was the church composer Bach of the vocal cantatas.

And there was a cantata (No. 189) by Melchior Hoffman which had been attributed to Bach for many years.

The secular Bach Friday sounded best (for me) with the slow, flowing, limpid melodies that are so often sandwiched between jolly, strongly propulsive movements.

There was sweet and silky vioin in the second movement in the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, and the wind trios in the final section were nicely blended and smoothly flowing.

The middle section of the Concerto for Two Violins also, flowed easily and gracefully, while the surrounding Baroque movements sometimes dribbled with life and sometimes charged along a bit mechanically.

Stars of the violin concerto were Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen, and of the Brandenburg were the oboes of Ralph Gomberg, John Holmes and Wayne Rapier.

On stage for the "Brandenburg" were about 30 musicians, the other half of the orchestra being in Boston for the Esplanade concerts. About 25 played the Concerto for Two Violins, and after intermission a sextet of violin, flute, oboe, harpsichord, cello and bass appeared to accompany tenor Seth McCoy for the Hofmann cantata.

McCoy has a light and vibrant voice which is nimble enough for the floriid decorations of the early 18th-century music and warm enough to put life into its dryness.

The orchestra was brought back up to about 35 to join the Tanglewood Chorus (about 40 voices) and soprano Benita Valente for Bach's No. 52, which, perhaps, delivered more emotional content than the earlier part of the program.

But then, Bach and his compatriots produced a kind of music that seems dry and cool to 20th-century ears, and Friday the general impression was quiet, pleasant, optimistic and relaxing.

The 7 p.m. prelude program (48 minutes) was offered by Larry Smith, recital organist and member of the faculty of Converse College, Spartenburg, N. C. His recent trend toward a relaxation of the austerity with which Bach's music was presented, say, 10-15 years ago.

The Concerto in G (after a concerto by Count Johann Ernst) was cool and straight; four chorale preludes, which followed, became gradually warmer and more expressive; and the Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor, which ended the program, showed an even greater range of rhythmic variance and expressivity.

The masters were rock steady, however, the starts crisp and precise and the volumes level.

The Tanglewood organ tends to sound clean, anyway, because the great Shed has no back or side walls to bounce the vibrations and extend the reverberance.

Tonight at 8:30 Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct an all-Mozart program including an adagio and fugue, the Sinfonia Concertante for Winds, a concert aria for baritone and orchestra and the "Haffner" symphony.

The 2:30 program Sunday, conducted by Seiji Ozawa, will present Haydn's oratorio, "The Creation," in English with three soloists and the Tanglewood Chorus.

FIRST WEEKEND

Weekend Prelude
LARRY SMITH
SEIJI OZAWA
Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 1
Bach: Concerto for Two Violins
Joseph Silverstein, Jerome Rosen
Cantata No. 189 Seth McCoy
Bach: Cantata No. 52 Benita Valente

Open Rehearsal
STANISLAW SKROWACZEWSKI
MOZART PROGRAM
Adagio and Fugue
Sinfonia Concertante for Winds
Concert Aria for Baritone
Thomas Stewart
"Haffner" Symphony

SEIJI OZAWA
Haydn: Creation
Benita Valente
Seth McCoy
Thomas Stewart
Tanglewood Festival Chorus
John Oliver, Director

INFORMATION OBSCURED

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
MONITOR (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 187,307

JUL 14 1973

New England
Newslip

Tanglewood, Caramoor launch festival season

By Louis Snyder

It's classical musical festival time again throughout our land, and one can be either very specialized — as at Caramoor, Katonah, N.Y. — or more expansive — Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. — just for instance.

Caramoor, which has been giving chamber concerts on Saturdays and Sundays since late June, came forth with the first staged performance in the East of Luigi Cherubini's 1797 opera, "Medea." The next afternoon in the Berkshires, Haydn's oratorio, "The Creation" (1798), was played and sung on the BSO's summer home grounds for the first time.

Music

In both places, the weather allied itself graciously with the music. The stars and a generous slice of yellow moon hung over the dire doings of "Medea"; next afternoon, at Tanglewood, a misty sun and the suspicion of a breeze assisted at Haydn's wide-eyed musical version of the beginnings of our life.

Elegant occasions

Although this is the 28th season of summer music at Caramoor, the vast estate of the late Walter and Lucie B. Rosen, it is not among the best known festivals. It has maintained a reputation for esoteric programs, carefully executed, and for the past 10 seasons under the leadership of Julius Rudel has presented both new and old music of more interest to connoisseurs than milling crowds. It is available to everyone, but the seating capacity of the outdoor Venetian Theater (1,500) usually meets the demand for the larger attractions, and the 400-seated Spanish Courtyard at the main house, is just about right for the smaller chamber concerts.

While there are no rules about attire, the elegance of Caramoor has been continued to a degree to make the mindless dresser unduly conspicuous. And it is interesting to note that dressing for the music seems in no way to hamper enjoyment of it. The tradition of musical performance as an occasion still tacitly exists at Caramoor, and in these days of almost unthinking casualness, it is an enlightening experience to encounter the practice of such a time-honored concept.

'Medea' updated

Cherubini's "Medea" has been shrouded for years in yards of idiotic fol-de-rol. It was believed that any soprano who undertook the cruelly taxing title role would inevitably go mad, and that the vocal demands of the part of Medea, who is onstage for long periods of time, would be the ruination of any singer's technique. True, it certainly doesn't help it. But in our time, Maria Callas has sung it abroad with success, and in 1955 and 1956, Eileen Farrell was the thrilling Medea in concert versions in New York and at Caramoor, respectively, and onstage in San Francisco.

Seiji Ozawa, Boston Symphony music director

Last Saturday's "Medea," repeated on Tuesday at the Wolf Trap Festival in Virginia, and scheduled for another performance last night at Caramoor, had soprano Maralin Niska as the fabled enchantress, Mr. Rudel conducting, and a production staged by Frank Corsaro. It made use of single setting by Lloyd Evans, and had in its cast Richard Cassilly as Jason, Norma French as Glauce, Frances Bible as Neris, and Richard T. Gill as Creon. The Caramoor Festival Chorus and Orchestra also had large parts to paly.

High emotional pitch

Without Miss Niska, or someone equally capable (and how many are there?) of encompassing the difficulties of the title role, it would be foolhardy even to consider producing "Medea." Musically, it is purely a tour de force. Histrionically, it is pitched on one key — defiant anguish. Thus, the singer's only recouse during an evening of agonized frustration (Medea's beloved Jason is about to marry another) is to color the voice with infinte degrees of emotional shading to complement a constantly changing situation. It is, as traditionally supposed, almost impossible to do, and it is to Miss Niska's credit that she succeeded as well as she did with this outraged vixen. But while one could admire the use and staying power of her siren-like vocal equipment, it was extraordinary technique rather than penetrating characterization that one was left with, when all was done. And this despite her striking presence, and a stage-worthiness marked by those individualistic, startlingly abrupt turns, familiar from her Cassandra ("The Trojans") and Emilia Marty ("The Makropoulos Affair").

Except for Miss Bible as the nurse, who profited by the one bit of gracious vocalism Cherubini offered any of his singers, the others had negligible opportunities. Mr. Cassilly, big, stolid, and unfortunately costumed, used his clarion tenor voice to good advantage but created no illusion. Miss French's silvery lyric soprano was appropriate for the fated bride-to-be, and Mr. Gill, the impressive bass, did what he could with the role of a host in whose house major catastrophes become the order of the day.

The directorial hand of Mr. Corsaro, which can be magical ("Koanga") or heavy ("Don Giovanni"), lay lightly on this production. Except for a pair of bandaged sychophants who accompanied Medea on her rounds of revenge and destruction, there were few inventive attempts (and probably just as well) to enliven an innately static libretto.

Cherubini, of course, composed "Medea" as "Medee," to a French libretto and with spoken dialogue instead of recitatives. The Italian version came later, and is now in currency, no doubt, because of the Callas revival in 1953. However, anyone who has heard all or portions of the original French version, as presented by two American conservatories (Hartt College and Manhattan School of Music), knows that it has a style and elegance nowhere matched by its relentless Italian counterpart. Sorry — in this form it still doesn't seem viable.

Record-breaking opening

Tanglewood's first weekend closed with its largest initial total attendance on record—26,859—for three concerts and an open rehearsal. A warm, sunny afternoon brought out scores of picnickers on the vast lawns (where it is allowed), and by 2:30 p.m. the Shed was comfortably if not completely filled.

Surprisingly, Haydn's oratorio, "The Creation," has never been presented before at Tanglewood, and although part of the Boston Symphony is yet to arrive from its duties on Boston's Esplanade, there were enough instrumentalists to join with soloists and the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus to meet the requirements of the score. The work, performed under Seiji Ozawa's direction, allowed one intermission after the "Heavens are telling" chorus, and a short pause before Part 3.

Mr. Ozawa's way with large scale orchestral-choral works has, in the past, proved to be especially felicitous, and this was also true of "The Creation." While, in a sense, the open-hearted, uncomplicated beauty of the score asks for no "interpretation," it does require the kind of technical alignment of vocal and instrumental forces that the conductor has shown he can give.

With the orchestra in fine form, and such of its soloists as flutist Doriot Dwyer and clarinetist Harold Wright particularly notable; with the John Oliver-trained choruses continuing to amaze, and three knowledgeable vocalists — soprano Benita Valente, tenor Seth McCoy, and bass-baritone Thomas Stewart — dividing the parts, it would have been almost impossible not to achieve a thoroughgoing listening experience. Only carpers went away unmoved.

For once again the beauty of the day and the lush green of the surroundings conspired with what one heard to reinforce the statement of faith in Haydn's score. Even several colonies of young birds, nested in the rafters of the Shed and vocally evident at feeding time, helped put this masterwork in perspective far beyond matters of words and notes.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
VILLAGE VOICE
W. 116,500

AUG 2 1973

Daphne with spunk

Perhaps not a masterpiece to stand beside those of Monteverdi, but certainly a small, sparkling ray from the dawn of operatic history had its first American performances July 21 and 22 at the Caramoor Festival. The production of the one-act, 70-minutes-long "Dafne" of Marco da Gagliano was by the New York ca Antiqua and had arn the Spoleto Festival,
f Corfu. This musical nded just 20 years ago te Noah Greenberg, is cted by George Houle,
f Houle's enthusiasms
he little known music of hose surname we don't who is identified in his-e name of Gagliano, the Florence where he was 75. a churchman as well as c composer, set his in 1608 to the same hat Ottavio Rinuccini en for Jacopo Peri's now opera of that name. It iced in the palace of Vin-zaga, Duke of Mantua—palace where Mon-
"Orfeo" had its lavish
the year before. The e famous excerpt from Metamorphoses," and mor, and concision are principal qualities. It is self who sings the Pro-
the story of Apollo's
he gigantic Python,
the arrows of Cupid,
the target of one of e arrows, falling in love nwilling Daphne, find-
e has been transformed rel tree (Nature's pro-from Apollo's desire), ating the laurel as a reward all art and om that time onward.
with shrewd change of density among recita-
c and florid arietta,
d lively multiple-part
off-stage echo effects,
s, filled his hour on the much beguiling music, harm still works after
The Ovidian Prologue,
a simple melodic line,
tible to rich, haunting
as suggested by the
that is the only indicaccompaniment in the nted shortly after the iere. Houle's realization mber-orchestra support advantage, in his at of the Prologue and ese suggestions. Apollo, tessitura from tenor to or, gets quite a bit of sthenics, as do Cupid
, both of them sopranos
Musica's performing

Judy Hubbell sang hne and Cupid (they ear on stage at the ), Houle interpolated
c to allow time for cos-
ges. Before Daphne's first entrance, after an exit by Cupid, a Frescobaldi Toccata is played. And while Apollo is chasing Daphne off-stage, there is a set of variations for recorder by a 17th century Dutch composer, Jacob Van Eyck, on a popular English "Daphne" song. One of the shepherds, sung at Caramoor by the bass, Rodney Godshall, has been given a lament that fits the mood of general alarm over Python, the music being "Il Dannato" from Marco's "Musice" of 1615. This solo begins, appropriately, with the words "Valli profonde." And since the composer suggested in his preface to the score an overture but didn't provide one himself, Houle had his musicians play a Trio Sonata by Francesco Turini.

Hubbell sang and acted a spunky but frightened Daphne and a brash, bratty, but rather likeable Cupid. Daniel Collins sang Apollo most movingly and with a great deal of style. Ray De Voll, Christine Whittlesey, and David Britton were also particularly remarkable in a strong cast. The busy, costumed instrumentalists, besides Houle, were Shelley Gruskin, Wendy Gillespie, Catherine Liddell, Stan Charkey, and Frederick Renz. William Woodman's graceful but not precious staging; Wendy Hilton's gently hopping choreography, based on Cesare Negre; Santo Loquasto's deliquescent double-staircase setting and shimmering late-Renaissance costumes; and Martin Kapell's subtle lighting comprised a lovely production. The show will tour the college circuit in the fall and winter and will be back in New York next March 12 through 17 at the Hunter College Playhouse. It's most highly recommended.

THE NEW YORK Philharmonic's free concert July 24 in Central Park's Sheep Meadow introduced to New York William Kraft's nine-year-old Concerto for Four Percussionists and Orchestra. Kraft, chief percussionist and an assistant conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, has written a lively, virtuosic piece, and its usefulness is evident from the way it has been showing up in various cities recently. Its three connected movements set off vivid contrasts between fast and slow, loud and soft, spectacular and reticent. Sometimes a songful, frail glockenspiel will have center stage, and sometimes the tympani will make thunder and lightning out of a sizzling cadenza. Kraft's handling of the orchestra as a whole is expert and imaginative, but his use of an arsenal of percussion is even more impressive, set off as it is by an idiom based on, without quite ripping off, Bartok. Henry Lewis conducted the Concerto with apparent confidence, and the soloists—Roland Kohloff, Walter Rosenberger, Morris Lang, and Richard Fitz—performed like champions. Lewis and the Philharmonic also served up a warm, lyric reading of Dvorak's "New World" Symphony and accompanied violinist Berl Senofsky's rich-toned, easefully songful performance of Bruch's "Scottish Fantasy."

"PLEASE DON'T LET It Rain!" was the successful title of the July 13 midnight concert of Peter Link music at the Delacorte Theatre in Central Park. Link has written pop songs, mood pieces, and stage music for Broadway and for the various manifestations of the New York Shakespeare Festival, under whose auspices the concert was given. But it was almost as much a musical revue as a concert. A.J. Antoon, director of several Papp enterprises, distributed the singers and musicians with a canny eye for smooth effect all over Loquasto's "As You Like It" set, and Link—band leader and singer —seemed to have fine rapport with everyone else on stage. For two solid hours, the music, words, and easy talk, despite some downs among ups, flowed like a

The New York Pro Musica Antiqua in "Dafne" at Caramoor
The New York Philharmonic Orchestra in Central Park
"Please Don't Let It Rain!" at Delacorte Theatre
Julius Rudel conducting in two Caramoor concerts
Haydn's "The Creation" at Tanglewood (Kerner)

not very lazy river. Among the highlights: the evening's musical introduction, based on lots of different percussion; the gentle wit of Randy Wilson's singing "Run by the River"; Dennis Cooley's nice, smooth voice in "Lady in Waiting"; Marion Ramsey digging into "Sigh no more"; Marta Heflin singing soft magic into "Fire Engine" and "Charlie." However, I must say I gagged over a wretched item called "Sad but True." The lyricists included Euripides, Shakespeare, and several younger writers, including an obviously gifted Susan McGonagle, age nine.

WHILE STILL on the subject of outdoor music, I should say something about two other Caramoor concerts and one Tanglewood event. At Caramoor, in an all-Czech concert conducted by Julius Rudel a few weeks ago Zara Nelsova defied the tone-endangering urges of humidity and gave one of the most deeply beautiful accounts of the Dvorak Cello Concerto I had ever heard. The technical demands of the piece were met handsomely, but the seamless lines of melody throughout the concerto were what made the performance so marvellous.

On July 14, Rudel celebrated Bastille Day by conducting a concert of Schubert, Mahler, Richard Strauss, and Wagner, with soprano Jessye Norman as soloist in three of Wagner's Wesendonk songs ("Im Treibhaus," "Schmerzen," and "Traeume," in the standard Mottl-Wagner orchestrations), Strauss's "Meinem Kinde" and "Zueignung," and five Mahler songs. Miss Norman kept her big voice reined in to a soft, sensitive lyric sound for most of this. The only damage this did was to obliterate the fierce contrasts of love and death in the dialogue of Mahler's "Wo die Schoenen Trompeten blasen." Rudel gave Norman lustrous orchestral support and also provided a lively Schubert Second Symphony, a delicate Wagner "Siegfried Idyll," and a neat, pretty reading of the long-lost "Blumine" movement from Mahler's First Symphony.

AT TANGLEWOOD, Seiji Ozawa topped out the first weekend of this summer's Berkshire Festival with an exultant performance of Haydn's "The Creation," sung in English. Among the soloists, baritone Thomas Stewart was everywhere eloquent and musical. The words and moods came over clearly, and he seemed to have no trouble with the formidably low-lying stretches of his music. The soprano, Benita Valente, sang with sounds like luminous pearls, but I wish her words could have been half-way understandable and her interpretations of them less bland. Seth McCoy, the tenor, struck a midpoint between tonal smoothness and emotional commitment. The Boston Symphony Orchestra played with verve and beauty, with perhaps a special word of praise due to the flute soloist, Doriot Dwyer. The Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus sang sumptuously, as did a few birds in the rafters of the Music Shed. For the record, a large cut (leaving some of the text hanging in the air) and a small one (relieving the soprano and tenor of a bad coloratura deal) were made in Part Three.

—Leighton Kerner

New England
Newslip

Tanglewood opening draws record crowd

LENOX — Tanglewood's 1973 symphonic season got off to a record start last night as 7,811 Bach fans attended the first of this year's Berkshire Festival concerts.

A Tanglewood spokesman said the Friday crowd was the largest for an opening night since the BSO started keeping records of such things in 1963.

The shed, which seats 5,066, was close to sold out by the time conductor Seiji Ozawa lifted his baton to begin the all-Bach concert, with the rest of the audience spread out on the lawn under the first dry skies of the week.

The weekend weather forecast promised more of the same for today's and Sunday's concerts, indicating another possible record for opening weekends. However, the Tanglewood press office, said that tickets for shed seats for the rest of the weekend still are available. The only weekend for which the shed is completely sold out is the weekend of July 20-22, when the BSO has scheduled an all-Beethoven series.

TROY RECORD
CORD, JULY 8, 1973

A joyous evening opens Tanglewood

By MARK STUART
Staff Writer

LENOX, Mass. — Seiji Ozawa opened the 37th Tanglewood season here Friday before the biggest opening night crowd in the history of the festival. It was mainly a Bach program that opened, swept through the middle, and closed — all on the note of joy.

Ozawa didn't interpret Bach — he celebrated him.

There have been disappointing Ozawa programs here in the green Berkshire Hills, but not this weekend. Even the elements conspired to aid him. After weeks of rainy weekends, this one turned out to be a knockout — one of sunny days and cool, crisp nights.

Nothing, however, could take the play away from the eclectic and electric Ozawa. He was in his element, offering two first-time performances by the Boston Symphony — Bach's Cantata No. 52, "SalsheWelt, dir trau ich nicht," and a cantata by Melcior Hofmann, formerly attributed to Bach as No. 189.

The sounds of joy began with the opening number, the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1. It leaped, soared, skipped, cavorted, and sang all over the shed and out over the big crowd lounging on the lawn.

Another high

Then, when it seemed surely as if the high-point of the evening had been reached at the very start, Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen appeared to perform the concerto in "C" for Two Violins in "D" minor, and another high was reached.

The Hoffman Cantata was an interesting piece. It is easy to see how the experts for so long could have believed it was Bach's; it's a great copy of the master's style. Seth McCoy, a smooth tenor, was on time and on pitch as the soloist. The top drawer deskmen of the orchestra — Doriot Anthony Dwyer on flute, Ralph Gomberg on oboe, Jules Eskin on cello, Henry Portnoi on double bass, Larry Smith on the organ, and Silverstein on the violin was superb in rounding out the performance.

Then came Cantata No. 52. Benita Valente, a handsome dark-haired soprano, was simply marvelous, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus ended the evening on a note of exhilaration in the final chorale — as thrilling a finish as anything accomplished by Secretariat this year.

The rest of the weekend can hardly be expected to top opening night, but the Boston Symphony is giving it a hell of a try. Stanley Skrowaczewski has an all Mozart evening and then Ozawa returns tonight for Haydn's "Creation." It should be a knockout.

AMERICAN (E)
WATERBURY, CONN.
D. 40,675
JUL 6 1973
New England Newsclip

A Review

Bach Selections Stir Tanglewood

By SYLVIA MEYERS

LENOX, Mass. — Bright, sunny weather combined with the drawing power of Bach, Mozart, and Haydn to attract large crowds of music lovers to the first concerts of Tanglewood's 37th season in Lenox, Mass., this weekend.

As is normally the case at the beginning of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer series of concerts at Tanglewood, only about half of the complete orchestra was present to perform. (The rest of the orchestra remains in Boston for the Esplanade concerts there.) Thus the program this weekend was entirely music for small orchestra, augmented occasionally by a chorus—and delightful music it was!

Friday night's program, conducted by Seiji Ozawa, was devoted primarily to works of J. S. Bach. The concert began with the popular Brandenberg Concerto No. 1 in F. Particularly striking in this piece were the spirited trio passages for oboe, bassoon, and horns. The second piece in the program was the Concerto for Two Violins in D Minor, which featured bravura solo performances by violinists Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen. The concert concluded with two short cantatas. The first, "Meine Seele Ruhmt und preist," by M. Hofmann (though originally attributed to Bach), featured tenor Seth McCoy and an orchestral ensemble of only seven musicians. The second, Bach's Cantata No. 52, "Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht," called for a larger chamber orchestra, a soprano soloist, and, in the final chorale movement, a chorus. Very fine performances were given both by soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, which is directed by John Oliver.

Friday night's concert drew a crowd of 7,811 people, which is the largest opening night audience at Tanglewood since attendance records were first kept in 1963.

Saturday night's concert drew another large audience of 7,605 for a program devoted entirely to works by Mozart. For this concert, the symphony was led by guest conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra.

Next weekend's concerts at Tanglewood will feature works by Mozart, Vivaldi, Rossini, Handel, Haydn, and Shostakovich. The Prelude Concert Friday night at 7 will have Malcolm Frager performing piano works of Haydn and Mozart. Then at 9 p.m. the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Ozawa, will perform three Mozart works: Horn Concerto No. 3 in E Flat, Clarinet Concerto in A, and Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola.

Saturday evening, at 8:30 the orchestra will be conducted by Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra.

Festival Opening Sets Gate Record

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — One of the most popular large choral works brought 8130 listeners to Tanglewood Sunday afternoon and helped set an attendance record for the Berkshire Festival's opening weekend . . . 26,858.

Seiji Ozawa, artistic director for the festival who will become music director for the Boston Symphony Orchestra next fall, conducted the orchestra, three soloists and the combined Tanglewood Choir and Tanglewood Festival Chorus in a 100-minute performance of Haydn's "The Creation."

The story of the creation lends itself to drama ("Let There Be Light") as well as placid lyricism reflecting pastoral scenes, and Haydn spent a large measure of his wisdom at age 65 on the score, especially the orchestral score.

There are many short choral sections, much interplay among the participants (rather than long independent passages) and a few sublime duets and trios for the soloists.

They were Benita Valente, soprano; Seth McCoy, tenor; and Thomas Stewart, baritone.

Miss Valente sang with a smooth, silky, unforced manner and produced some soaring moments. McCoy has a bright vibrant voice, and Stewart displayed a baritone of strong virility with big tones, like a basso.

They combined for a nice balance, Miss Valente's voice being mellow enough to avoid domination and Stewart's baritone strong enough to keep from being buried.

The chorus was nimble and clean, full of sparkling life, although as usual nearly no words could be understood.

The soloists also seemed to have a somewhat casual attitude about diction, which was unfortunate. They sang in English, and an understanding of the words is important with this work.

Ozawa's attitude toward the music seemed to be free of distortion, and it came across neatly with a sprightly pace and a tasteful use of dynamics.

The Saturday-night program offered several varieties of Mozart's genius — his depth of feeling as well as his party moods.

It was conducted by a man who has, on several occasions, demonstrated at Tanglewood a special understanding of Mozart's style, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra.

He opened with a dark and brooding view of the Adagio and Fugue in c Minor (K.546) a piece which is uncharacteristically romantic in style even though inspired by Bach's strict fugues.

It is short but made an impression that was unbeaten during the rest of the program: The Sinfonia Concertante for Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon (K.297b), a concert aria for baritone (K.513) and the "Haffner" symphony (K.385).

The sinfonia gives the best of the solo work to the oboe (Ralph Gomberg) and clarinet (Harold Wright), although the horn (Charles Kavaloski) has some fancy passages.

The whole is intricately woven, something like a baroque concerto, and is a good example of Mozart's cheerful style. But easily the best part of it, in my opinion, are the sweetly flowing melodies of the middle section.

Something the same might be said of the "Haffner" symphony that ended the program.

Skrowaczewski set a comfortable pace for it and he helped it show its gutsiness as well as its joy.

The concert aria ("Mentre ti lascio") was composed frankly as a vocal display piece and Thomas Stewart's firmly - edged baritone seemed more at ease in the upper register than down low. But the piece was rather dull.

UNION (M)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 84,000
JUL 8 1973
New England Newsclip

Music review

Magnificent Haydn at Tanglewood

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

"MAGNIFICENT!" is as near as the language affords to describe the performance of Haydn's "The Creation" at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. Heroically pulling all the many and various strands into a beautiful fabric stood Seiji Ozawa, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and three outstanding vocal soloists.

Haydn's glorious oratorio has several sublime moments, but there are no weak nor dull ones throughout its short two-hour recital. Every component responded to the conductor's galvanic summons with alacrity, vitality and an infectious spirit that invoked triumphal enthusiasm at the end of the afternoon.

* * *

Even in the grandeur of the total performance no detail was skimped nor overlooked, and all the minute felicities with which the score is replete were observed as scrupulously as the familiar majestic orchestral episodes, choruses and the remarkably rewarding vocal solos. Ozawa called the chorus conductor, John Oliver, to the stage at the finale to share the acclaim with Benita Valente, who sang the role of Gabriel and then of Eva; Thomas Stewart, who sang Raphael and, subsequently, Adam; and of Seth McCoy, whose assignment was Uriel.

The three archangels are from Milton's "Paradise Lost." Milton posts Gabriel at "the eastern gate of paradise." He allots Uriel the role of "regent of the sun" and represents Raphael "as sent by God to instruct Adam."

The oratorio was sung in English, necessitating several inconsequential adjustments of syllables, but the impact never lagged and the never-failing vigor of the afternoon in every respect was exciting and impassioned.

* * *

For the opening weekend of the 1973 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood enjoyed and profited by every possible favor the gods could confer. Unsurpassed Berkshire weather (the Friday evening sunset was spectacular), record-breaking crowds (Friday, traditionally the lowest in attendance of the weekend trio, welcomed 7,811), and, of prime importance, some stunning performers in programs of Bach, Mozart and Haydn.

It takes years of experience and an accumulation of maturity to conduct the Bach Brandenburg concertos. They flow onward with the power of the elements and require the serenity that befits the musical scriptures which they really are. Conductors who were much older than Ozawa, and who played them many times on this same stage in previous years, were content to allow the orchestra to proceed on its own momentum instead of guiding every step forward. The lovely oboe quasi-cadenza six bars from the end of the adagio hardly needs to be dissected from the podium, and it is debatable that the forte in the accompanying strings of the second section of the pollaca needs to be observed to the obfuscation of the four bars of the sprightly dactylic idiom which temporarily illuminates that short movement.

* * *

The Brandenburg concerto makes paradoxical demands on a conductor. A superficial unwritten law informs and restricts them to more mature performers and leaders and, in a sense, this applied Friday night. Ozawa tried to inject more significance in certain spots than the music warrants. It may have appeared futile to him to let gravity and nature take some of the responsibility. All that the music of that period requires is an ingredient of sangfroid to be given shape and phrase to display its essential character. It often proves to be one of the most difficult assignments in the art.

The Bach Concerto for Two Violins received brilliant articulation in the hands of concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and the new assistant concertmaster, Jerome Rosen.

The second half of the evening presented two beautiful voices in cantatas. Tenor McCoy sang a cantata previously imputed to Bach but now evidently properly attributed to Melchior Hoffman, a composer who probably flourished at about Bach's period. McCoy used his powerful but easily produced voice with a spirit to denote the character of the message: "My soul glorifies and praises the grace of God." Miss Valente in the Bach Cantata No. 52, "False World, I trust you not," made an immediate impact with the demanding entrance Bach wrote in the opening recitative, and her ensuing arias were deeply effective vocally as well as conveying the mood with probity.

Stanislaw Skrowaczewski

The Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Oliver conducting, had one too meager opportunity in the final "O Lord, my hope has been in you," but it was impressively sung.

* * *

An audience of unprecedented size came for the early weekend prelude, which was an organ recital by Larry Smith, solely of Bach. Smith, an expert performer, played the concerto in G (S.592), four chorale preludes and the mighty Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor (S. 582). His comprehension of fantasy in the Passacaglia and his construction in the fugue were monumental.

Saturday evening Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, who will conduct another program later in the season, was the guest conductor. He began with the Mozart Adagio and Fugue, which originally was for string quartet but which, like the Beethoven Grosse Fugue, really needs the body and solidity of a string section tone to properly express itself.

The Sinfonia Concertante presented four more virtuosos, all principals of the orchestra's wind sections: Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Harold Wright, clarinet; Charles Kovaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon. They gave a superlative execution of a work rarely found on orchestral programs.

* * *

Mozart's Concert Aria for Baritone, sung by Stewart, easily maintained the lofty vocal standards established on the previous evening by the colleagues who would join him in "The Creation" yesterday afternoon. Stewart sang the aria "As I leave you, my daughter" with massive power and yet great sensitivity. He is a huge man and scarcely needs the proper costume to be an instant Wotan.

Skrowaczewski has a distinctive and personal conducting manner. He extracts a brisk reply to his sharply etched but unextravagant indications. The "Haffner" symphony (K. 385) was consistently stimulating and was marked by musical validity and emphatic justification.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,
JUL 9 1973
New England Newsclip

TROY RECORD
CORD, JULY 8, 1973

A joyous evening opens Tanglewood

By MARK STUART
Staff Writer

LENOX, Mass. — Seiji Ozawa opened the 37th Tanglewood season here Friday before the biggest opening night crowd in the history of the festival. It was mainly a Bach program that opened, swept through the middle, and closed — all on the note of joy.

Ozawa didn't interpret Bach — he celebrated him.

There have been disappointing Ozawa programs here in the green Berkshire Hills, but not this weekend. Even the elements conspired to aid him. After weeks of rainy weekends, this one turned out to be a knockout — one of sunny days and cool, crisp nights.

Nothing, however, could take the play away from the eclectic and electric Ozawa. He was in his element, offering two first-time performances by the Boston Symphony — Bach's Cantata No. 52, "SalsheWelt, dir trau ich nicht," and a cantata by Melcior Hofmann, formerly attributed to Bach as No. 189.

The sounds of joy began with the opening number, the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1. It leaped, soared, skipped, cavorted, and sang all over the shed and out over the big crowd lounging on the lawn.

Another high

Then, when it seemed surely as if the high-point of the evening had been reached at the very start, Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen appeared to perform the concerto in "C" for Two Violins in "D" minor, and another high was reached.

The Hoffman Cantata was an interesting piece. It is easy to see how the experts for so long could have believed it was Bach's; it's a great copy of the master's style. Seth McCoy, a smooth tenor, was on time and on pitch as the soloist. The top drawer deskmen of the orchestra — Doriot Anthony Dwyer on flute, Ralph Gomberg on oboe, Jules Eskin on cello, Henry Portnoi on double bass, Larry Smith on the organ, and Silverstein on the violin was superb in rounding out the performance.

Then came Cantata No. 52. Benita Valente, a handsome dark-haired soprano, was simply marvelous, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus ended the evening on a note of exhilaration in the final chorale — as thrilling a finish as anything accomplished by Secretariat this year.

The rest of the weekend can hardly be expected to top opening night, but the Boston Symphony is giving it a hell of a try. Stanley Skrowaczewski has an all Mozart evening and then Ozawa returns tonight for Haydn's "Creation." It should be a knockout.

AMERICAN (E)
WATERBURY, CONN.
D. 40,675
JUL 6 1973
New England Newsclip

A Review

Bach Selections Stir Tanglewood

By SYLVIA MEYERS

LENOX, Mass. — Bright, sunny weather combined with the drawing power of Bach, Mozart, and Haydn to attract large crowds of music lovers to the first concerts of Tanglewood's 37th season in Lenox, Mass., this weekend.

As is normally the case at the beginning of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer series of concerts at Tanglewood, only about half of the complete orchestra was present to perform. (The rest of the orchestra remains in Boston for the Esplanade concerts there.) Thus the program this weekend was entirely music for small orchestra, augmented occasionally by a chorus—and delightful music it was!

Friday night's program, conducted by Seiji Ozawa, was devoted primarily to works of J. S. Bach. The concert began with the popular Brandenberg Concerto No. 1 in F. Particularly striking in this piece were the spirited trio passages for oboe, bassoon, and horns. The second piece in the program was the Concerto for Two Violins in D Minor, which featured bravura solo performances by violinists Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen. The concert concluded with two short cantatas. The first, "Meine Seele Ruhmt und preist," by M. Hofmann (though originally attributed to Bach), featured tenor Seth McCoy and an orchestral ensemble of only seven musicians. The second, Bach's Cantata No. 52, "Falsche Welt, dir trau' ich nicht," called for a larger chamber orchestra, a soprano soloist, and, in the final chorale movement, a chorus. Very fine performances were given both by soprano Benita Valente and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, which is directed by John Oliver.

Friday night's concert drew a crowd of 7,811 people, which is the largest opening night audience at Tanglewood since attendance records were first kept in 1963.

Saturday night's concert drew another large audience of 7,605 for a program devoted entirely to works by Mozart. For this concert, the symphony was led by guest conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra.

Next weekend's concerts at Tanglewood will feature works by Mozart, Vivaldi, Rossini, Handel, Haydn, and Shostakovich. The Prelude Concert Friday night at 7 will have Malcolm Frager performing piano works of Haydn and Mozart. Then at 9 p.m. the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Ozawa, will perform three Mozart works: Horn Concerto No. 3 in E Flat, Clarinet Concerto in A, and Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola.

Saturday evening, at 8:30 the orchestra will be conducted by Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra.

AMERICAN (M)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
JUL 8 1973
New England Newsclip

Festival Opening Sets Gate Record

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — One of the most popular large choral works brought 8130 listeners to Tanglewood Sunday afternoon and helped set an attendance record for the Berkshire Festival's opening weekend . . . 26,858.

Seiji Ozawa, artistic director for the festival who will become music director for the Boston Symphony Orchestra next fall, conducted the orchestra, three soloists and the combined Tanglewood Choir and Tanglewood Festival Chorus in a 100-minute performance of Haydn's "The Creation."

The story of the creation lends itself to drama ("Let There Be Light") as well as placid lyricism reflecting pastoral scenes, and Haydn spent a large measure of his wisdom at age 65 on the score, especially the orchestral score.

There are many short choral sections, much interplay among the participants (rather than long independent passages) and a few sublime duets and trios for the soloists.

They were Benita Valente, soprano; Seth McCoy, tenor; and Thomas Stewart, baritone.

Miss Valente sang with a smooth, silky, unforced manner and produced some soaring moments. McCoy has a bright vibrant voice, and Stewart displayed a baritone of strong virility with big tones, like a basso.

They combined for a nice balance, Miss Valente's voice being mellow enough to avoid domination and Stewart's baritone strong enough to keep from being buried.

The chorus was nimble and clean, full of sparkling life, although as usual nearly no words could be understood.

The soloists also seemed to have a somewhat casual attitude about diction, which was unfortunate. They sang in English, and an understanding of the words is important with this work.

Ozawa's attitude toward the music seemed to be free of distortion, and it came across neatly with a sprightly pace and a tasteful use of dynamics.

The Saturday-night program offered several varieties of Mozart's genius — his depth of feeling as well as his party moods.

It was conducted by a man who has, on several occasions, demonstrated at Tanglewood a special understanding of Mozart's style, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra.

He opened with a dark and brooding view of the Adagio and Fugue in c Minor (K.546) a piece which is uncharacteristically romantic in style even though inspired by Bach's strict fugues.

It is short but made an impression that was unbeaten during the rest of the program: The Sinfonia Concertante for Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon (K.297b), a concert aria for baritone (K.513) and the "Haffner" symphony (K.385).

The sinfonia gives the best of the solo work to the oboe (Ralph Gomberg) and clarinet (Harold Wright), although the horn (Charles Kavaloski) has some fancy passages.

The whole is intricately woven, something like a baroque concerto, and is a good example of Mozart's cheerful style. But easily the best part of it, in my opinion, are the sweetly flowing melodies of the middle section.

Something the same might be said of the "Haffner" symphony that ended the program.

Skrowaczewski set a comfortable pace for it and he helped it show its gutsiness as well as its joy.

The concert aria ("Mentre ti lascio") was composed frankly as a vocal display piece and Thomas Stewart's firmly - edged baritone seemed more at ease in the upper register than down low. But the piece was rather dull.

Music review

Magnificent Haydn at Tanglewood

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

"MAGNIFICENT!" is as near as the language affords to describe the performance of Haydn's "The Creation" at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. Heroically pulling all the many and various strands into a beautiful fabric stood Seiji Ozawa, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and three outstanding vocal soloists.

Haydn's glorious oratorio has several sublime moments, but there are no weak nor dull ones throughout its short two-hour recital. Every component responded to the conductor's galvanic summons with alacrity, vitality and an infectious spirit that invoked triumphal enthusiasm at the end of the afternoon.

* * *

Even in the grandeur of the total performance no detail was skimped nor overlooked, and all the minute felicities with which the score is replete were observed as scrupulously as the familiar majestic orchestral episodes, choruses and the remarkably rewarding vocal solos. Ozawa called the chorus conductor, John Oliver, to the stage at the finale to share the acclaim with Benita Valente, who sang the role of Gabriel and then of Eva; Thomas Stewart, who sang Raphael and, subsequently, Adam; and of Seth McCoy, whose assignment was Uriel.

The three archangels are from Milton's "Paradise Lost." Milton posts Gabriel at "the eastern gate of paradise." He allots Uriel the role of "regent of the sun" and represents Raphael "as sent by God to instruct Adam."

The oratorio was sung in English, necessitating several inconsequential adjustments of syllables, but the impact never lagged and the never-failing vigor of the afternoon in every respect was exciting and impassioned.

* * *

For the opening weekend of the 1973 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood enjoyed and profited by every possible favor the gods could confer. Unsurpassed Berkshire weather (the Friday evening sunset was spectacular), record-breaking crowds (Friday, traditionally the lowest in attendance of the weekend trio, welcomed 7,811), and, of prime importance, some stunning performers in programs of Bach, Mozart and Haydn.

It takes years of experience and an accumulation of maturity to conduct the Bach Brandenburg concertos. They flow onward with the power of the elements and require the serenity that befits the musical scriptures which they really are. Conductors who were much older than Ozawa, and who played them many times on this same stage in previous years, were content to allow the orchestra to proceed on its own momentum instead of guiding every step forward. The lovely oboe quasi-cadenza six bars from the end of the adagio hardly needs to be dissected from the podium, and it is debatable that the forte in the accompanying strings of the second section of the pollaca needs to be observed to the obfuscation of the four bars of the sprightly dactylic idiom which temporarily illuminates that short movement.

* * *

The Brandenburg concerto makes paradoxical demands on a conductor. A superficial unwritten law informs and restricts them to more mature performers and leaders and, in a sense, this applied Friday night. Ozawa tried to inject more significance in certain spots than the music warrants. It may have appeared futile to him to let gravity and nature take some of the responsibility. All that the music of that period requires is an ingredient of sangfroid to be given shape and phrase to display its essential character It often proves to be one of the most difficult assignments in the art.

The Bach Concerto for Two Violins received brilliant articulation in the hands of concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and the new assistant concertmaster, Jerome Rosen.

The second half of the evening presented two beautiful voices in cantatas. Tenor McCoy sang a cantata previously imputed to Bach but now evidently properly attributed to Melchior Hoffman, a composer who probably flourished at about Bach's period. McCoy used his powerful but easily produced voice with a spirit to denote the character of the message: "My soul glorifies and praises the grace of God." Miss Valente in the Bach Cantata No. 52, "False World, I trust you not," made an immediate impact with the demanding entrance Bach wrote in the opening recitative, and her ensuing arias were deeply effective vocally as well as conveying the mood with probity.

Stanislaw Skrowaczewski

The Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Oliver conducting, had one too meager opportunity in the final "O Lord, my hope has been in you," but it was impressively sung.

* * *

An audience of unprecedented size came for the early weekend prelude, which was an organ recital by Larry Smith, solely of Bach. Smith, an expert performer, played the concerto in G (S.592), four chorale preludes and the mighty Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor (S. 582). His comprehension of fantasy in the Passacaglia and his construction in the fugue were monumental.

Saturday evening Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, who will conduct another program later in the season, was the guest conductor. He began with the Mozart Adagio and Fugue, which originally was for string quartet but which, like the Beethoven Grosse Fugue, really needs the body and solidity of a string section tone to properly express itself.

The Sinfonia Concertante presented four more virtuosos, all principals of the orchestra's wind sections: Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Harold Wright, clarinet; Charles Kovaloski, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon. They gave a superlative execution of a work rarely found on orchestral programs.

* * *

Mozart's Concert Aria for Baritone, sung by Stewart, easily maintained the lofty vocal standards established on the previous evening by the colleagues who would join him in "The Creation" yesterday afternoon. Stewart sang the aria "As I leave you, my daughter" with massive power and yet great sensitivity. He is a huge man and scarcely needs the proper costume to be an instant Wotan.

Skrowaczewski has a distinctive and personal conducting manner. He extracts a brisk reply to his sharply etched but unextravagant indications. The "Haffner" symphony (K. 385) was consistently stimulating and was marked by musical validity and emphatic justification.

REPUBLICAN EAGLE (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
JUL 8 1973
New England Newsclip

Concert Review

Tanglewood, Ozawa, Bach Draw Largest Opening Night Crowd Since 1963

By MARTHA deB. BEAVER

At Tanglewood in Lenox the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the Berkshire Festival Friday evening at 9 with an all-Bach program conducted by Seijii Ozawa, artistic director.

The customary bonus weekend prelude at 7 featured Larry Smith in a group of organ works, including a G major Concerto, four chorale preludes and the Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

An enthusiastic audience of 7,811 applauded Ozawa, although there were many who disagreed with his interpretation of this German giant of composition.

The attendance was the largest since 1963's record opening night. Saturday morning rehearsal, at which Sunday's program is always reviewed, drew 3,312.

Perfect weather embraced Saturday evening's all-Mozart concert, conducted with sensitive and searching musicianship by Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, direetor of the Minnesota Orchestra (formerly the Minneapolis Symphony) since 1960.

Born and educated in Poland, Skrowaczewski made his first public appearance and started composing at a very early age. He won several important prizes for his works during the 1950s, when he also made his conducting debut in the United States with the Cleveland Orchestra; he has conducted major symphony orchestras in North and South America, Israel and Europe. His Concerto for English Horn was premiered in New York in 1970.

Intense and direct, Skrowaczewski wasted no time in getting to the music at hand. The orchestra, immediately alert, responded with unusual vigor and their usual virtuosic excellence. There seemed little doubt that conductor and musicians were in complete accord.

From the opening low-pitched tones of the Adagio and fugue in C minor for strings, K.546, to the swiftly paced gaiety of the Haffner Symphony's Finale: presto, it was an evening of unparalleled musical excellence.

At intermission, it seemed that the works following the just-performed Sinfonia Concertante in E flat for oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon, would prove anti-climactic.

Flawlessly executed by the four principal wind players, oboist Ralph Gomberg, hornist (now in his second season) Charles Kavoloski, bassoonist Sherman Walt, clarinetist Harold Wright, balance between soloists and orchestra was superbly controlled by Skrowaczewski, color and nuance beautifully achieved, through minimum indications.

The third movement variations were especially appealing, given just enough gracious lift by soloists and orchestra. Throughout thesymphonic piece, Gomberg is given much of the work's intricate rhythmic and decorative detail, his breathtaking turns, trills, and swift passages, occasionally matched by those of horn, clarinet and bassoon, perfectly pitched and projected.

The second half of the concert proved to be as impeccably interpreted and performed. Baritone Thomas Stewart displayed rare rich and articulate vocal power, along with practised ease of presentation, in a first performance at the Festival of the concert aria "Mentre ti lascio, o figlia (As I leave you, my daughter)." Tenderly restrained at first, the aria builds through increased agitation to a fortissimo climax, the tense and anguished words "Ah mi si spezza il cor' (Alas, my heart is breaking)," repeated over and over.

Written by Mozart for his young pupil, Gottfried von Jacquin, close friend and a bass, who was to die a few months after the composer, the aria's text derives from a libretto by Mobilli, Duke of Sant'Angelo, set under the title "La Disfatta di Dario" (The Defeat of Darius). Mozart selected the aria where the father, presumably King Darius, bids his daughter an anguished farewell before leading his armies to defeat against Alexander the Great.

With every work Skrowaczewski compels your close attention, as he opens new vistas of interpretation, clarifying the composer's ingenious constructional devices. The Haffner Symphony was no exception.

Stresses and rhythmic changes were always tastefully marked and set, transitions smoothly determined. Final resolutions of each movement were distinctly outlined, attentive silence between sections compelled through the conductor's uplifted arms.

Always on top of the music, in complete control, Skrowaczewski leaves the musicians little speculation about his intentions. The strings' melodic lines were faster than usually heard, but always clear, detached and neatly integrated, with a wide dynamic range so often overlooked in Mozart performances.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (E)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,695
JUL 10 1973
New England Newsclip

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 4,405
JUL 12 1973
New England Newsclip

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
JUL 9 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

Friday, July 6

A huge and greatly enthusiastic audience welcomed the Boston Symphony Orchestra as it opened the summer season at Tanglewood. Over five thousand people arrived to hear a nearly all Bach program conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

The Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 in F by Bach got the program off to a sprightly start and one sensed by the confident and assured manner of Mr. Ozawa that everything was and would be under the complete control of his broad gesture. The last movement was particularly attractive with its two Trios. These are Trios in the real sense of the word using only three instruments: two oboes and one bassoon in Trio I and two horns and oboe in Trio II. The Trios fairly crackled with spontaneity following the Menuetto and the intervening Polacca.

The high point of the whole program followed: the Concerto for Two Violins in D minor, again by Bach. The two soloists, Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen, created a remarkably flowing line and their counterpoint was impeccable. We all know what to expect from Mr. Silverstein, so I will mention Mr. Rosen. New this last season to the BSO, he came from the Detroit Orchestra to share the first desk with Mr. Silverstein, the concert master. His tone matched Silverstein's perfectly and the audience responded by calling for five curtain calls for the performers. Both concerti were given warm readings; they were not presented in the dry Baroque style that we have often heard.

A Cantata by M. Hofmann followed intermission. This work, "Meine Seele Ruhmt Und Preist," was formerly attributed to J.S. Bach as Cantata 189 and it could surely pass for Bach. Seth McCoy sang the tenor solo with fine elegance and with solid accompaniment by Doriot Anthony Dwver, flute, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Joseph Silverstein, violin. Jules Eskin, cello, Henry Portnoi, bass, and Larry Smith, organ, furnished a beautifully supportive continuo.

To close the program, the Bach Cantata 52, "Falsche Welt, Dir Trau' Ich Nicht" was chosen. Benita Valente was the soprano soloist and she soared through the music with a marvelous clarity and ease.

For all the perfection of performance, I had the feeling that compositions appropriate to the size of the massive auditorium would have been more fitting for this opening program. The Hofmann solo cantata, a chamber piece, properly belongs in a small hall as actually does the Brandenburg and the Double Concerto.

Finally, it was gratifying to see many young people in the audience.

Robert Keys Clark

Disappointment at Tanglewood

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

During the composition of his oratorio, "The Creation," Haydn related that "he had never been so religious," that he "daily fell on his knees and asked God for strength." This religious feeling, to judge from the work it inspired, must have been one of great joy in God and His created world, one of unbelievable wonder at the perfection of all beings.

That sense of joy and wonder, however, was precisely the thing that was missing in the performance of "The Creation," by Seiji Ozawa and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood.

OZAWA, who has made no bones of the fact that he is just beginning "to get into Haydn," has programmed a large number of the symphonies in the first of his seasons

• Concert Review

as music director with the orchestra and last summer (also on the first Sunday Berkshire concert), performed "The Seasons," in a badly-mutilated and unstylistic version.

Obviously his concentrated study of Haydn is beginning to pay off. This year's oratorio performance displayed much less serious problems than that of last year, because these are now problems stemming from not having lived long enough with a work rather than those created by miscalculation or bad judgment.

I AM STILL not at all convinced, however, that these Haydn oratorios belong in a setting such as Tanglewood, where one has to amplify the keyboard to make it audible and select singers with big voices so they can be heard, thereby sacrificing stylistic tone color and vocal flexibility that would be most appropriate in these works. That is one basic decision of Ozawa's I have difficulty living with.

The thing that was impossible to live with last year — the cuts in "The Seasons" — was not a difficulty in "The Creation," mainly because it is a substantially shorter work. Only a chorus and several measures near the end hit the cutting room floor, and they were not indispensable.

IT WAS the soloists and Ozawa's way with their music (curiously, this was not so with the choruses) that resulted in the pallid and unfocused quality of this performance. Neither Thomas Stewart nor Seth McCoy is particularly attuned to the style of this music, although Benita Valente has had considerable experience with Baroque and classic repertory (and this is a work that definitely looks backward to the former).

None, however, seemed particularly tuned in to the emotional content of this quite naively communicative work. That is very strange coming from Valente and Stewart, two singers who have always impressed me with their strong word sense.

OZAWA, too, who usually has such intense responses to music failed to bring out all the magic in the accompaniments with their descriptions of storms, tempests, and animals. The evocation of chaos, which opens "The Creation," was rough-edged and not a bit mysterious or bizarre (compared to the wonderful performance Gunther Schuller gave with the New England Conservatory orchestra this spring).

The very best thing about this performance was, beyond a doubt, the beautifully prepared Tanglewood Festival Chorus which sang with unfailingly attractive tone, precise articulation, and good diction (they couldn't help it if the words from the Novello English translation were put together with such god-awful syntax.)

HERALD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 457,284
JUL 10 1973
New England Newsclip

TIMES (E)
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 135,009
JUL 9 1973
New England Newsclip

'Creation' at Tanglewood

By DOROTHY STOWE
Times Music Critic

LENOX, Mass. — Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of the Berkshire Festival and musical advisor to the Boston Symphony, felicitously chose Haydn's "Creation" for the first Sunday afternoon shed concert of the Tanglewood season.

"The Creation" is not the work of the genial Papa Haydn, but rather of Franz Joseph Haydn in all his mature dignity. In it he scaled heights of sublime perception which marked him a worthy precursor of Beethoven, while maintaining open the channels of communication which still endear him to the populace. In short, he touched both heaven and earth causing earthlings to humbly contemplate the glory of their Maker.

Ozawa's authority and comprehension deepen with each season as does a growing rapport with a knowledgeable audience which recognizes his unassuming dedication and the innate musicality and charm of his spirit.

In yesterday's performance, Ozawa's special affinity for the classicists was everywhere evident. The large forces were always within tasteful bounds of propriety, rising with majestic power to the climactic moments, yet never in thick textures of overbearing dynamics. The reduced orchestra was a joy, accompanying and supporting with delicate precision.

The combined Tanglewood Choir and Tanglewood Festival Chorus, expertly prepared by John Oliver, displayed plenty of reserve, pealing forth the exultant tidings with secure assurance.

It is a well balanced, cleanly articulated group, always an ornament to choral productions at Tanglewood. The familiar "The Heavens are Telling" was a model of exultant conviction.

Soloists were some of the finest of recent years. Soprano Benita Valente proved worthy to sing Gabriel-Eve, since hers is a voice of heavenly femininity. The tone is never too heavy, always sufficient, bright yet full, ideally rounded, smooth from top to bottom. Moreover, she is an artist of the first order; "With Verdure Clad" has never sounded more joyously pristine. Only her diction could bear improvement.

Seth McCoy took full honors in diction using his beautiful tenor with sensitive expressiveness as the Angel Uriel. And Thomas Stewart's rich baritone was equally well suited to stentorian pronouncements or flowing commentary arias. The perfectly blended solo trios were among the afternoon's greatest pleasures.

The week's total of 26,858 represented the largest opening weekend on record for the festival. Sunday's crowd of 8,000 was augmented by about 100 featured friends who have made the loft their own and constantly proclaim, "Anything you can sing I can sing louder."

At the risk of offending ecologists, I submit that those birds have got to go. They have miserable voices.

Matches Beauty of Day of 'Creation' Performance

By RICHARD CONWAY

It was a particularly appropriate day to be listening to Haydn's great oratorio, "The Creation." Written nine years before his death, and containing some of his happiest and most inspired music, "The Creation" ranks as one of the most popular of large choral works.

The performance at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus, and soloists Benita Valente, Seth McCoy, and Thomas Stewart, under the direction of Seiji Ozawa, matched the vibrancy, warmth, and beauty of the day.

Many of the 8,000 who came to hear Haydn's masterwork chose to bask in the rays of the golden sun. Others sought the cooling green of grass and trees. Even the birds caught the inspiration of the day and of the music, and, especially in the final section of the work, joined their voices in songs of praise.

Under Ozawa's vital direction, the music pulsed with the innocent joy and depth of wisdom that the aging Haydn brought to this re-telling of the act of creation. The music abounds with naive pictorial descriptions of chaos, storms, flowing waters, creeping beasts, and sinuous worms. Often, though, the music takes startling turns, as in the final chords of the orchestral introduction with its anticipation of the Tristan chords of Wagner. There are unexpected harmonic moves that foreshadow the works of Schubert. There are alwaye marvelous touches of orchestral coloring.

The choruses, which had been prepared by John Oliver, sang with the vitality and enthusiasm for which the work calls. Attention to detail was obvious. For example, the careful handling of the staccato notes in the first choral passage, or the beautiful long crescendos in "The Lord Is Great."

Of the three soloists, baritone Thomas Stewart was the most completely successful, I think. There is a certain roughness to his voice which can be disconcerting; but he sings with a great deal of skill and sensitive interpretation, and has enough of a basso quality in his voice to handle the low tones with clarity and projection.

Tenor Seth McCoy also sang with fine feeling for the text. His low tones were not being projected well Sunday, and, as a result, I think he was at his best in the recitative passages, rather than the arias.

Benita Valente has a light, smooth soprano voice that frequently came across with a cool indifference. As seems to be standard with the women, it was all but impossible to understand her words — and I sat with a score in front of me. Miss Valente was most effective in the Adam and Eve duets with the Adam and Eve duets with Stewart in the third section of the work.

There were two cuts made in Sunday's performance — the duet and chorus "Of stars the fairest" and about three pages of the "Graceful consort" duet between Adam and Eve, both in the final section of the work.

The close to 27,000 who came to Tanglewood for the opening weekend concerts set a record for the open week at the Berkshire Festival.

Concert Review

Tanglewood, Ozawa, Bach Draw Largest Opening Night Crowd Since 1963

By MARTHA deB. BEAVER

At Tanglewood in Lenox the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the Berkshire Festival Friday evening at 9 with an all-Bach program conducted by Seijii Ozawa, artistic director.

The customary bonus weekend prelude at 7 featured Larry Smith in a group of organ works, including a G major Concerto, four chorale preludes and the Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

An enthusiastic audience of 7,811 applauded Ozawa, although there were many who disagreed with his interpretation of this German giant of composition.

The attendance was the largest since 1963's record opening night. Saturday morning rehearsal, at which Sunday's program is always reviewed, drew 3,312.

Perfect weather embraced Saturday evening's all-Mozart concert, conducted with sensitive and searching musicianship by Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, director of the Minnesota Orchestra (formerly the Minneapolis Symphony) since 1960.

Born and educated in Poland, Skrowaczewski made his first public appearance and started composing at a very early age. He won several important prizes for his works during the 1950s, when he also made his conducting debut in the United States with the Cleveland Orchestra; he has conducted major symphony orchestras in North and South America, Israel and Europe. His Concerto for English Horn was premiered in New York in 1970.

Intense and direct, Skrowaczewski wasted no time in getting to the music at hand. The orchestra, immediately alert, responded with unusual vigor and their usual virtuosic excellence. There seemed little doubt that conductor and musicians were in complete accord.

From the opening low-pitched tones of the Adagio and fugue in C minor for strings, K.546, to the swiftly paced gaiety of the Haffner Symphony's Finale: presto, it was an evening of unparalleled musical excellence.

At intermission, it seemed that the works following the just-performed Sinfonia Concertante in E flat for oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon, would prove anti-climactic.

Flawlessly executed by the four principal wind players, oboist Ralph Gomberg, hornist (now in his second season) Charles Kavoloski, bassoonist Sherman Walt, clarinetist Harold Wright, balance between soloists and orchestra was superbly controlled by Skrowaczewski, color and nuance beautifully achieved, through minimum indications.

The third movement variations were especially appealing, given just enough gracious lift by soloists and orchestra. Throughout thesymphonic piece, Gomberg is given much of the work's intricate rhythmic and decorative detail, his breathtaking turns, trills, and swift passages, occasionally matched by those of horn, clarinet and bassoon, perfectly pitched and projected.

The second half of the concert proved to be as impeccably interpreted and performed. Baritone Thomas Stewart displayed rare rich and articulate vocal power, along with practised ease of presentation, in a first performance at the Festival of the concert aria "Mentre ti lascio, o figlia (As I leave you, my daughter)." Tenderly restrained at first, the aria builds through increased agitation to a fortissimo climax, the tense and anguished words "Ah mi si spezza il cor' (Alas, my heart is breaking)," repeated over and over.

Written by Mozart for his young pupil, Gottfried von Jacquin, close friend and a bass, who was to die a few months after the composer, the aria's text derives from a libretto by Metilli, Duke of Sant'Angelo, set under the title "La Disfatta di Dario" (The Defeat of Darius). Mozart selected the aria where the father, presumably King Darius, bids his daughter an anguished farewell before leading his armies to defeat against Alexander the Great.

With every work Skrowaczewski compels your close attention, as he opens new vistas of interpretation, clarifying the composer's ingenious constructional devices. The Haffner Symphony was no exception.

Stresses and rhythmic changes were always tastefully marked and set, transitions smoothly determined. Final resolutions of each movement were distinctly outlined, attentive silence between sections compelled through the conductor's uplifted arms.

Always on top of the music, in complete control, Skrowaczewski leaves the musicians little speculation about his intentions. The strings' melodic lines were faster than usually heard, but always clear, detached and neatly integrated, with a wide dynamic range so often overlooked in Mozart performances.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,805
JUL 10 1973

Tanglewood

Friday, July 6

A huge and greatly enthusiastic audience welcomed the Boston Symphony Orchestra as it opened the summer season at Tanglewood. Over five thousand people arrived to hear a nearly all Bach program conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

The Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 in F by Bach got the program off to a sprightly start and one sensed by the confident and assured manner of Mr. Ozawa that everything was and would be under the complete control of his broad gesture. The last movement was particularly attractive with its two Trios. These are Trios in the real sense of the word using only three instruments: two oboes and one bassoon in Trio I and two horns and oboe in Trio II. The Trios fairly crackled with spontaneity following the Menuetto and the intervening Polacca.

The high point of the whole program followed: the Concerto for Two Violins in D minor, again by Bach. The two soloists, Joseph Silverstein and Jerome Rosen, created a remarkably flowing line and their counterpoint was impeccable. We all know what to expect from Mr. Silverstein, so I will mention Mr. Rosen. New this last season to the BSO, he came from the Detroit Orchestra to share the first desk with Mr. Silverstein, the concert master. His tone matched Silverstein's perfectly and the audience responded by calling for five curtain calls for the performers. Both concerti were given warm readings; they were not presented in the dry Baroque style that we have often heard.

A Cantata by M. Hofmann followed intermission. This work, "Meine Seele Ruhmt Und Preist," was formerly attributed to J.S. Bach as Cantata 189 and it could surely pass for Bach. Seth McCoy sang the tenor solo with fine elegance and with solid accompaniment by Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Joseph Silverstein, violin. Jules Eskin, cello, Henry Portnoi, bass, and Larry Smith, organ, furnished a beautifully supportive continuo.

To close the program, the Bach Cantata 52, "Falsche Welt, Dir Trau' Ich Nicht" was chosen. Benita Valente was the soprano soloist and she soared through the music with a marvelous clarity and ease.

For all the perfection of performance, I had the feeling that compositions appropriate to the size of the massive auditorium would have been more fitting for this opening program. The Hofmann solo cantata, a chamber piece, properly belongs in a small hall as actually does the Brandenburg and the Double Concerto.

Finally, it was gratifying to see many young people in the audience.

Robert Keys Clark

JOURNAL
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
D. 125
JUL 12 1973

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,526
JUL 9 1973

Disappointment at Tanglewood

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

During the composition of his oratorio, "The Creation," Haydn related that "he had never been so religious," that he "daily fell on his knees and asked God for strength." This religious feeling, to judge from the work it inspired, must have been one of great joy in God and His created world, one of unbelievable wonder at the perfection of all beings.

That sense of joy and wonder, however, was precisely the thing that was missing in the performance of "The Creation," by Seiji Ozawa and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood.

OZAWA, who has made no bones of the fact that he is just beginning "to get into Haydn," has programmed a large number of the symphonies in the first of his seasons as music director with the orchestra and last summer (also on the first Sunday Berkshire concert), performed "The Seasons," in a badly mutilated and unstylistic version.

Concert Review

Obviously his concentrated study of Haydn is beginning to pay off. This year's oratorio performance displayed much less serious problems than that of last year, because these are now problems stemming from not having lived long enough with a work rather than those created by miscalculation or bad judgment.

I AM STILL not at all convinced, however, that these Haydn oratorios belong in a setting such as Tanglewood, where one has to amplify the keyboard to make it audible and where singers with big voices so they can be heard, thereby sacrificing stylistic tone color and vocal flexibility that would be most appropriate in these works. That is one basic decision of Ozawa's I have difficulty living with.

The thing that was impossible to live with last year — the cuts in "The Seasons" — was not a difficulty in "The Creation," mainly because it is a substantially shorter work. Only a chorus and several measures near the end hit the cutting room floor, and they were not indispensable.

IT WAS the soloists and Ozawa's way with their music (curiously, this was not so with the choruses) that resulted in the pallid and unfocused quality of this performance. Neither Thomas Stewart nor Seth McCoy is particularly attuned to the style of this music, although Benita Valente has had considerable experience with Baroque and classic repertory (and this is a work that definitely looks backward to the former).

None, however, seemed particularly tuned in to the emotional content of this quite naively communicative work. That is very strange coming from Valente and Stewart, two singers who have always impressed me with their strong word sense.

OZAWA, too, who usually has such intense responses to music failed to bring out all the magic in the accompaniments with their descriptions of storms, tempests, and animals. The evocation of chaos, which opens "The Creation," was rough-edged and not a bit mysterious or bizarre (compared to the wonderful performance Gunther Schuller gave with the New England Conservatory orchestra this spring).

The very best thing about this performance was, beyond a doubt, the beautifully prepared Tanglewood Festival Chorus which sang with unfailingly attractive tone, precise articulation, and good diction (they couldn't help it if the words from the Novello English translation were put together with such god-awful syntax.)

JUL 6 1973

'Creation' at Tanglewood

By DOROTHY STOWE
Times Music Critic

LENOX, Mass. — Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of the Berkshire Festival and musical advisor to the Boston Symphony, felicitously chose Haydn's "Creation" for the first Sunday afternoon shed concert of the Tanglewood season.

"The Creation" is not the work of the genial Papa Haydn, but rather of Franz Joseph Haydn in all his mature dignity. In it he scaled heights of sublime perception which marked him a worthy precursor of Beethoven, while maintaining open the channels of communication which still endear him to the populace. In short, he touched both heaven and earth causing earthlings to humbly contemplate the glory of their Maker.

Ozawa's authority and comprehension deepen with each season as does a growing rapport with a knowledgeable audience which recognizes his unassuming dedication and the innate musicality and charm of his spirit.

In yesterday's performance, Ozawa's special affinity for the classicists was everywhere evident. The large forces were always within tasteful bounds of propriety, rising with majestic power to the climactic moments, yet never in thick textures of overbearing dynamics. The reduced orchestra was a joy, accompanying and supporting with delicate precision.

The combined Tanglewood Choir and Tanglewood Festival Chorus, expertly prepared by John Oliver, displayed plenty of reserve, pealing forth the exultant tidings with secure assurance.

It is a well balanced, cleanly articulated group, always an ornament to choral productions at Tanglewood. The familiar "The Heavens are Telling" was a model of exultant conviction.

Soloists were some of the finest of recent years. Soprano Benita Valente proved worthy to sing Gabriel-Eve, since hers is a voice of heavenly femininity. The tone is never too heavy, always sufficient, bright yet full, ideally rounded, smooth from top to bottom. Moreover, she is an artist of the first order; "With Verdure Clad" has never sounded more joyously pristine. Only her diction could bear improvement.

Seth McCoy took full honors in diction using his beautiful tenor with sensitive expressiveness as the Angel Uriel. And Thomas Stewart's rich baritone was equally well suited to stentorian pronouncements or flowing commentary arias. The perfectly blended solo trios were among the afternoon's greatest pleasures.

The week's total of 26,858 represented the largest opening weekend on record for the festival. Sunday's crowd of 8,000 was augmented by about 100 featured friends who have made the loft their own and constantly proclaim, "Anything you can sing I can sing louder."

At the risk of offending ecologists, I submit that those birds have got to go. They have miserable voices.

Matches Beauty of Day of 'Creation' Performance

By RICHARD CONWAY

It was a particularly appropriate day to be listening to Haydn's great oratorio, "The Creation." Written nine years before his death, and containing some of his happiest and most inspired music, "The Creation" ranks as one of the most popular of large choral works.

The performance at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus, and soloists Benita Valente, Seth McCoy, and Thomas Stewart, under the direction of Seiji Ozawa, matched the vibrancy, warmth, and beauty of the day.

Many of the 8,000 who came to hear Haydn's masterwork chose to bask in the rays of the golden sun. Others sought the cooling green of grass and trees. Even the birds caught the inspiration of the day and of the music, and, especially in the final section of the work, joined their voices in songs of praise.

Under Ozawa's vital direction, the music pulsed with the innocent joy and depth of wisdom that the aging Haydn brought to this re-telling of the act of creation. The music abounds with naive pictorial descriptions of chaos, storms, flowing waters, creeping beasts, and sinuous worms. Often, though, the music takes startling turns, as in the final chords of the orchestral introduction with its anticipation of the Tristan chords of Wagner. There are unexpected harmonic moves that foreshadow the works of Schubert. There are alwaye marvelous touches of orchestral coloring.

The choruses, which had been prepared by John Oliver, sang with the vitality and enthusiasm for which the work calls. Attention to detail was obvious. For example, the careful handling of the staccato notes in the first choral passage, or the beautiful long crescendos in "The Lord Is Great."

Of the three soloists, baritone Thomas Stewart was the most completely successful, I think. There is a certain roughness to his voice which can be disconcerting; but he sings with a great deal of skill and sensitive interpretation, and has enough of a basso quality in his voice to handle the low tones with clarity and projection.

Tenor Seth McCoy also sang with fine feeling for the text. His low tones were not being projected well Sunday, and, as a result, I think he was at his best in the recitative passages, rather than the arias.

Benita Valente has a light, smooth soprano voice that frequently came across with a cool indifference. As seems to be standard with the women, it was all but impossible to understand her words — and I sat with a score in front of me. Miss Valente was most effective in the Adam and Eve duets with the Adam and Eve duets with Stewart in the third section of the work.

There were two cuts made in Sunday's performance — the duet and chorus "Of stars the fairest" and about three pages of the "Graceful consort" duet between Adam and Eve, both in the final section of the work.

The close to 27,000 who came to Tanglewood for the opening weekend concerts set a record for the open week at the Berkshire Festival.

Tanglewood concerts

Pianist featured

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins July 13 with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager performing sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

At 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

The Horn Concerto No. 3 in E Flat with Boston Symphony principal horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist will open the concert. The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony principal clarinet Harold Wright and closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony principal viola Burton Fine as soloists.

July 14 at 10:30 a.m., as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

At 8:30 p.m. Saturday, Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

MALCOLM FRAGER
. . . Pianist

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings, followed by Mozart's Piano Concerto in C minor with Andre Watts, 1973 Granrud Artist in Residence, as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony No. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to "La Scala di Seta," the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

July 15 at 2:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto Grosso in B minor, followed by Haydn's Sinfonia Concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Skin, cello. The concert closes with Mozart's Symphony No. 36 in C, the "Linz".

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 251,094
JUL 1 1973

CITIZEN
WINSTED, CONN.
D. 4,600
JUN 30 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 13, with the 7 p.m. weekend prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart. Then at 9 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m. as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra on London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

Andre Watts, brilliant young pianist who is Granrud Artist-in-Residence at Tanglewood this summer will be soloist Saturday evening, July 14, with the Boston Symphony — Photo by Kriegsmann

Tanglewood

BSO To Play First Weekend Concerts

Tanglewood opens its 1973 season this weekend with a series of concerts that feature several guest artists performing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Seiji Ozawa and the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus under the direction of John Oliver.

Organist Larry Smith initiates the concert series at the Weekend Prelude Friday, July 6 at 7 p.m., followed by an all-Bach program by the Boston Symphony, with Ozawa conducting. Soloists are Joseph Silverstein, Jerome Rosen, Seth McCoy and Benita Valente.

The traditional open rehearsal is scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Saturday. In the evening Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct the BSO in an all-Mozart program that includes the "Haffner Symphony." Thomas Stewart is soloist for the Concert Aria for Baritone."

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Mr. Stewart will be joined by Benita Valente and Seth McCoy when Ozawa and Oliver combine forces to present Haydn's "Creation."

Second Weekend

Pianist Malcolm Frager will be heard at the Weekend Prelude July 13. The full evening program will be another all-Mozart concert under Ozawa.

Riccardo Muti takes over on Saturday, July 14, and will direct the BSO in Mozart's "Piano Concerto K 491," with Andre Watts as soloist. Works by Vivaldi and Rossini will also be heard.

The Sunday afternoon concert will feature works by Handel and Haydn and conclude with Mozart's "Linz Symphony."

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 4,405
JUL 5 1973
New England Newsclip

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
S. 130,000
JUL 8 1973
New England Newsclip

AT TANGLEWOOD

Famed Pianists to Perform

LENOX — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins on Friday with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frazer who will perforrm sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

At 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tangelwood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with the Horn concerto No. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony principal horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist. The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony principal clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony principal viola Burton Fine as soloists.

ANDRE WATTS

MALCOLM FRAGER

On Saturday at 10:30, as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30, Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra on London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini. The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist - in -Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony No. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to "La scala di seta," the first performance of this wrok to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in the works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto grosso in B minor and is followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra Principal Players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Walt, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, cello. The concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony No. 36 in C, the "Linz."

Where To Go! What To Do!

Arena Civic Theater, Roundhouse, Franklin County Fairgrounds, Greenfield, 8:30 p.m., Butterflies Are Free, final performance.

Berkshire Garden Center, Thursday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., 13th annual Stockbridge Antique Show.

Berkshire Senior Arts and Crafts Assn., Pittsfield, opens for five weekends; exhibition of arts and crafts.

Williston Summer Theater, Eathampton, July 18 to Aug. 4, morning and matinee shows for children; contact Williston Summer Theater for brochure.

Tanglewood, Lenox, Saturday, 10:30 a.m., Boston Symphony Orchestra open rehearsal; 8:30 p.m., concert with Riccardo Muti, conductor; Sunday, 2:30 p.m., concert, Seiji Ozawa, conductor.

RECORDER (E)
GREENFIELD, MASS.
D. 14,723
JUL 14 1973
New England Newsclip

BEE
NEWTOWN, CONN.
W. 14,768
JUL 18 1973
New England Newsclip

Concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. info at 413-637-1600:

Weekend Prelude 7 pm Friday, Seiji Ozawa conducting at 9 pm; Boston Symphony open rehearsal 10:30 am Saturday, Riccardo Muti conducting at 8:30 pm; Seiji Ozawa conducting at 2:30 pm Sunday; July 13-15.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 4,405
JUL 12 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

Major Works Scheduled This Weekend

The second weekend of Tanglewood concerts begins Friday, July 13, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

Then at 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program. The concert opens with the Horn Concerto no. 3 in E flat with Charles Kavaloski as soloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet Concerto in A featuring Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and violist Burton Fine as soloists.

Saturday, July 14

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m., as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano Concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist.

Sunday, July 15

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa will conduct the BSO in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart.

The concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony no. 36 in C, the "Linz."

Tanglewood concerts

Pianist featured

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins July 13 with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager performing sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

At 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

The Horn Concerto No. 3 in E Flat with Boston Symphony principal horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist will open the concert. The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony principal clarinet Harold Wright and closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony principal viola Burton Fine as soloists.

July 14 at 10:30 a.m., as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

At 8:30 p.m. Saturday, Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

MALCOLM FRAGER
. . . Pianist

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings, followed by Mozart's Piano Concerto in C minor with Andre Watts, 1973 Granrud Artist in Residence, as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony No. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to "La Scala di Seta," the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

July 15 at 2:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto Grosso in B minor, followed by Haydn's Sinfonia Concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Skin, cello. The concert closes with Mozart's Symphony No. 36 in C, the "Linz".

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 251,094
JUL 1 1973

CITIZEN
WINSTED, CONN.
D. 4,600
JUN 30 1973 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 13, with the 7 p.m. weekend prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart. Then at 9 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m. as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra on London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
S. 130,000
JUL 8 1973 New England Newsclip

AT TANGLEWOOD

Famed Pianists to Perform

LENOX — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins on Friday with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frazer who will perforrm sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

At 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tangelwood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with the Horn concerto No. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony principal horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist. The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony principal clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony principal viola Burton Fine as soloists.

ANDRE WATTS

MALCOLM FRAGER

On Saturday at 10:30, as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30, Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra on London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini. The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist - in -Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony No. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to "La scala di seta," the first performance of this wrok to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in the works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto grosso in B minor and is followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra Principal Players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Walt, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, cello. The concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony No. 36 in C, the "Linz."

Andre Watts, brilliant young pianist who is Granrud Artist-in-Residence at Tanglewood this summer will be soloist Saturday evening, July 14, with the Boston Symphony — Photo by Kriegsmann

Tanglewood

BSO To Play First Weekend Concerts

Tanglewood opens its 1973 season this weekend with a series of concerts that feature several guest artists performing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Seiji Ozawa and the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus under the direction of John Oliver.

Organist Larry Smith initiates the concert series at the Weekend Prelude Friday, July 6 at 7 p.m., followed by an all-Bach program by the Boston Symphony, with Ozawa conducting. Soloists are Joseph Silverstein, Jerome Rosen, Seth McCoy and Benita Valente.

The traditional open rehearsal is scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Saturday. In the evening Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct the BSO in an all-Mozart program that includes the "Haffner Symphony." Thomas Stewart is soloist for the Concert Aria for Baritone."

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Mr. Stewart will be joined by Benita Valente and Seth McCoy when Ozawa and Oliver combine forces to present Haydn's "Creation."

Second Weekend

Pianist Malcolm Frager will be heard at the Weekend Prelude July 13. The full evening program will be another all-Mozart concert under Ozawa.

Riccardo Muti takes over on Saturday, July 14, and will direct the BSO in Mozart's "Piano Concerto K 491," with Andre Watts as soloist. Works by Vivaldi and Rossini will also be heard.

The Sunday afternoon concert will feature works by Handel and Haydn and conclude with Mozart's "Linz Symphony."

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
D. 1,405
JUL 5 1973 New England Newsclip

Where To Go! What To Do!

Arena Civic Theater, Roundhouse, Franklin County Fairgrounds, Greenfield, 8:30 p.m., Butterflies Are Free, final performance.

Berkshire Garden Center, Thursday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., 13th annual Stockbridge Antique Show.

Berkshire Senior Arts and Crafts Assn., Pittsfield, opens for five weekends; exhibition of arts and crafts.

Williston Summer Theater, Eathampton, July 18 to Aug. 4, morning and matinee shows for children; contact Williston Summer Theater for brochure.

Tanglewood, Lenox, Saturday, 10:30 a.m., Boston Symphony Orchestra open rehearsal; 8:30 p.m., concert with Riccardo Muti, conductor; Sunday, 2:30 p.m., concert, Seiji Ozawa, conductor.

RECORDER (E)
GREENFIELD, MASS.
D. 14,723
JUL 14 1973 New England Newsclip

BEE
NEWTOWN, CONN.
W. 14,758
JUL 18 1973 New England Newsclip

Concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. info at 413-637-1600:

Weekend Prelude 7 pm Friday, Seiji Ozawa conducting at 9 pm; Boston Symphony open rehearsal 10:30 am Saturday, Riccardo Muti conducting at 8:30 pm; Seiji Ozawa conducting at 2:30 pm Sunday; July 13-15.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 1,405
JUL 12 1973 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

Major Works Scheduled This Weekend

The second weekend of Tanglewood concerts begins Friday, July 13, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

Then at 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program. The concert opens with the Horn Concerto no. 3 in E flat with Charles Kavaloski as soloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet Concerto in A featuring Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and violist Burton Fine as soloists.

Saturday, July 14

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m., as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano Concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist.

Sunday, July 15

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa will conduct the BSO in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart.

The concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony no. 36 in C, the "Linz."

LATHAM, N. Y.
TOWNSMAN
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
W. - CIRC. N. AVAIL.

JUL 12 1973

AREA ARTS theatre

dance concert painting

CALENDAR OF EVENTS

Tomorrow — TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. 7 p.m. Weekend prelude. Mozart: Sonata in A; 9 p.m. Mozart: Horn concerto No. 3 in E flat, Clarinet concerto in A. Saturday at 10:30 a.m. Boston Symphony Orchestra Open Rehearsal. At 8:30 p.m. Vivaldi: Concerto in A for strings, Mozart: Piano concerto ni C minor, Mozart Symphony No. 34 in C, Rossini: Overture tXo "LaScala di Seta."

Saturday — LENOX ARTS FESTIVAL, Van Morrison. 6 p.m.

Tonight — NEW YORK CITY BALLET at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center. 2:30 p.m.: Student Matinee; 8 p.m. Scotch Symphony, Stravinsky Violin Concerto, and Stars and Stripes.

Through Saturday — JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL, Harford Ballet Company with Lisa Bradley and Michael Uthoff.

Tonight through Sunday — LAST OF THE RED HOT LOVERS at the Plattsburgh Summer Theater, 8 p.m.

Through Saturday — THE CHERRY ORCHARD in the Main Theater of Albany State University Summer Theater, 8:30 p.m.

Through Sunday — THE EDDY ARNOLD SHOW at the Colonie Summer Theater. Monday through Sunday at 8:30 p.m. Saturdays at 7 and 10 p.m.

Through Sunday — STUDENT PRINCE at the MacHaydn Theater. 8 p.m.

Tomorrow and Saturday — CATCH 22, dramatization of Joseph Heller's novel in Marylrose Academy Auditorium. 8:30 p.m.

Through July 16 — MEASURE FOR MEASURE, Skakespeare presented by the Cit[illegible] d by John Houseman, at the Sp[illegible] y matinee at 2 p.m.

CALENDAR OF ART[illegible]

ST. PETER'S HOSP[illegible] rtist Association now through [illegible] SCHENECTADY CO[illegible] of paintings by Ann Fever. One[illegible] to 9 p.m

BANNER (E)
BENNINGTON, VT.
D. 6,500

JUL 12 1973

New England Newscip

Tanglewood's second weekend opens tonight

LENOX, Mass. — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins tonight with the 7:00 p.m. weekend prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

Then at 9 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program. The concert opens with the Horn concerto no. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony principal horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet Concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony Principal Clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Principal Viola Burton Fine as soloists.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m. as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra on London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini. The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony no. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to 'La scala di seta', the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto grosso in B minor and is followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Walt, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, cello. The concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony no. 36 in C, the "Linz."

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 135,000

JUL 8 1973

New England Newscip

Tanglewood Weekend Of Mozart, Haydn

LENOX, Mass. — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 13, with the 7 p. m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

At 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with the Horn concerto no. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony Principal Horn Charles Kavaloski assoloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston symphony Principal Clarinet Harold Wright.

The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Principal Viola Burton Fine as soloists.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m.— as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season — there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Suday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p. m. Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in work of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artits-in-Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist.

The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony no. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to 'La scala di seta', the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart.

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 2[illegible]

JUL 12 1973

New England Newscip

Second Weekend At Tanglewood

The second week end of Tanglewood, Lenox, begins on Friday with the 7 p.m. weekend prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

Then at 9 [illegible] Seiji Ozawa, artistic [illegible]ector of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all - Mozart program. The concert opens with the Horn concerto No. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony Principal Horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony Principal Clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Principal Viola Burton Fine as soloists.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m., as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist - in - Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony no. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to 'La scala di seta', the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto grosso in B minor and is followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra Principal Players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Wat't, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, cello. The concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony no. 36 in C, the "Linz."

JEWISH
[illegible], CONN.
W. [illegible]

JUL 12 1973

New England Newscip

Tanglewood Second Week

The second weekend of Tanglewood begins this Friday, July 13, with the 7:00 pm Weekend Prelude concert concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart. Then at 9:00 pm, Seiji Ozawa, Artistic Director of Tanglewood and Music Adviser to the Boston Symphany, will conduct the Orchestra in an all-Mozart porgram.

The concert opens with the Horn concerto no. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony Principal Horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist. The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony Principal Clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E Flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Principal Viola Burton Fine as soloists.

On Saturday at 10:30 am, as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 pm, Riccardo Muti, Principal Conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra on London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony no. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to 'La scala di seta', the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 pm, Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto grosso in B minor and is followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra Principal Players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Walt, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin cello. The Concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony no 36 in C, the "Linz."

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
A. 2[illegible]

JUL 19 1973

New England Newscip

Weekend program

Tanglewood concerts will feature Mozart

The second weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will open Friday night with a primarily Mozart program and will feature pianist Malcom Frager in the prelude concert.

Frager will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart from 7 to 9 p.m.

Mozart program

At 9, Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Mozart program. The concert opens with the Horn Concerto No. 3 in E Flat with Charles Kavaloski, BSO principal horn, as soloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet Concerto in A featuring principal clarinet Harold Wright and closes with the Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and principal viola Burton Fine as soloists.

Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonic Orchestra in London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio musicale orchestra, will conduct the symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini on Saturday evening at 8:30.

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano Concerto in C Minor with the 1973 Granoud artist-in-residence André Watts as piano soloist. The orchestra will also perform Mozart's Symphony No. 34 in C and Rossini's Overture to "La Scala di Seta," the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

An open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday will be held Saturday morning at 10:30.

BSO players

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Ozawa will conduct the orchestra in works by Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto Grosso in B Minor and will be followed by Haydn's Sinfonia Concertante in B Flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring BSO principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Silverstein, violin; and Jules Eskin, cello. The concert will close with Mozart's Symphony No. 36 in C, the "Linza Symphony."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

LATHAM, N. Y.
TOWNSMAN
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
W. - CIRC. N. AVAIL.

JUL 12 1973

AREA ARTS

theatre
dance concert painting

1 #4

CALENDAR OF EVENTS

Tomorrow — TANGLEWOOD Lenox, Mass. 7 p.m. Weekend prelude. Mozart: Sonata in A; 9 p.m. Mozart: Horn concerto No. 3 in E flat, Clarinet concerto in A. Saturday at 10:30 a.m. Boston Symphony Orchestra Open Rehearsal. At 8:30 p.m. Vivaldi: Concerto in A for strings, Mozart: Piano concerto ni C minor, Mozart Symphony No. 34 in C, Rossini: Overture tXo "LaScala di Seta."
Saturday — LENOX ARTS FESTIVAL. Van Morrison. 6 p.m.
Tonight — NEW YORK CITY BALLET at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center. 2:30 p.m.: Student Matinee; 8 p.m. Scotch Symphony, Stravinsky Violin Concerto, and Stars and Stripes.
Through Saturday — JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL. Harford Ballet Company with Lisa Bradley and Michael Uthoff.
Tonight through Sunday — LAST OF THE RED HOT LOVERS at the Plattsburgh Summer Theater, 8 p.m.
Through Saturday — THE CHERRY ORCHARD in the Main Theater of Albany State University Summer Theater, 8:30 p.m.
Through Sunday — THE EDDY ARNOLD SHOW at the Colonie Summer Theater. Monday through Sunday at 8:30 p.m. Saturdays at 7 and 10 p.m.
Through Sunday — STUDENT PRINCE at the MacHaydn Theater. 8 p.m.
Tomorrow and Saturday — CATCH 22, dramatization of Joseph Heller's novel in Marylrose Academy Auditorium. 8:30 p.m.
Through July 16 — MEASURE FOR MEASURE, Skakespeare presented by the City Cente[illegible] d by John Houseman, at the Spa Sum[illegible] y matinee at 2 p.m.

BANNER (E)
BENNINGTON, VT.
D. 6,500

CALENDAR OF ARTS

ST. PETER'S HOSP[illegible] tist Association now through [illegible] of paintings SCHENECTADY COU[illegible] to 9 p.m by Ann Fever. Ope[illegible] CANAJOHARIE LIBRAR[illegible] ican artists of the 19[illegible] Ryder, Winslow Homer [illegible] Thon and others. Now [illegible] SCHENECTADY MU[illegible] Open: Tuesday thr[illegible] p.m. Exhibits: Or[illegible] The Bramhall, sculpto[illegible] of ANN LEONARD [illegible] works of the la[illegible] s tonight born sculptor, [illegible] n. weekend 13. The galler[illegible] t featuring SCHERTLE [illegible] n Frager wh[illegible] works by Le[illegible] sonatas by to 9 p.m. a[illegible] Mozart. brush 7 p[illegible] p.m. Seiji Ozawa, BRUSH [illegible] director of exhibit, [illegible] and music adMonde[illegible] the Boston Symphony, JUNI[illegible] conduct the orchestra in 8:30 [illegible] all-Mozart program. The pai concert opens with the Horn one concerto no. 3 in E flat with wai Boston Symphony principal one horn Charles Kavaloski as me soloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet Concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony Principal Clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Principal Viola Burton Fine as soloists.

JUL 13 1973
New England Newscip

[illegible]ood's second [illegible] opens tonight

[illegible] The [illegible] of [illegible] s tonight [illegible] n. weekend [illegible] t featuring [illegible] n Frager wh[illegible] sonatas by [illegible] Mozart.

[illegible] p.m. Seiji Ozawa, [illegible] director of [illegible] and music ad[illegible] the Boston Symphony, [illegible] conduct the orchestra in [illegible] all-Mozart program. The concert opens with the Horn concerto no. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony principal horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet Concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony Principal Clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Principal Viola Burton Fine as soloists.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m. as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra on London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini. The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony no. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to 'La scala di seta', the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto grosso in B minor and is followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Walt, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, cello. The concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony no. 36 in C, the "Linz."

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 135,000

JUL 8 1973
New England Newscip

Tanglewood Weekend Of Mozart, Haydn

LENOX, Mass. — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 13, with the 7 p. m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

At 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with the Horn concerto no. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony Principal Horn Charles Kavaloski assoloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston symphony Principal Clarinet Harold Wright.

The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Principal Viola Burton Fine as soloists.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m.— as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season — there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Suday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p. m. Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in work of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artits-in-Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist.

The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony no. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to 'La scala di seta', the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart.

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. [illegible]

JUL 12 1973
New England Newscip

Second Weekend At Tanglewood

The second week end of Tanglewood, Lenox, begins on Friday with the 7 p.m. weekend prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

Then at 9 [illegible] Seiji Ozawa, artistic [illegible]ector of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all - Mozart program. The concert opens with the Horn concerto No. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony Principal Horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony Principal Clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Principal Viola Burton Fine as soloists.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m., as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist - in - Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony no. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to 'La scala di seta', the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto grosso in B minor and is followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra Principal Players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Wat', bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, cello. The concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony no. 36 in C, the "Linz."

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
[illegible]

JUL 9 1973
New England Newscip

Weekend program

Tanglewood concerts will feature Mozart

The second weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will open Friday night with a primarily Mozart program and will feature pianist Malcom Frager in the prelude concert.

Frager will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart from 7 to 9 p.m.

Mozart program

At 9, Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Mozart program. The concert opens with the Horn Concerto No. 3 in E Flat with Charles Kavaloski, BSO principal horn, as soloist.

The program continues with the Clarinet Concerto in A featuring principal clarinet Harold Wright and closes with the Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and principal viola Burton Fine as soloists.

Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonic Orchestra in London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio musicale orchestra, will conduct the symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini on Saturday evening at 8:30.

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano Concerto in C Minor with the 1973 Granoud artist-in-residence André Watts as piano soloist. The orchestra will also perform Mozart's Symphony No. 34 in C and Rossini's Overture to "La Scala di Seta," the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

An open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday will be held Saturday morning at 10:30.

BSO players

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Ozawa will conduct the orchestra in works by Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto Grosso in B Minor and will be followed by Haydn's Sinfonia Concertante in B Flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring BSO principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Silverstein, violin; and Jules Eskin, cello. The concert will close with Mozart's Symphony No. 36 in C, the "Linza Symphony."

[illegible]
[illegible]
JUL 12 1973
New England Newscip

Tanglewood Second Week

The second weekend of Tanglewood begins this Friday, July 13, with the 7:00 pm Weekend Prelude concert concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart. Then at 9:00 pm, Seiji Ozawa, Artistic Director of Tanglewood and Music Adviser to the Boston Symphany, will conduct the Orchestra in an all-Mozart porgram.

The concert opens with the Horn concerto no. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony Principal Horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist. The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony Principal Clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E Flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony Principal Viola Burton Fine as soloists.

On Saturday at 10:30 am. as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 pm, Riccardo Muti, Principal Conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra on London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony no. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to 'La scala di seta', the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 pm. Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto grosso in B minor and is followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra Principal Players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Walt, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin cello. The Concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony no 36 in C, the "Linz."

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 24,000
JUL 12 1973
New England Newsclip

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 167,967
JUL 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Pianist Malcolm Frager

. . . is the solo performer in Tanglewood's second Weekend Prelude, Friday, July 13, at 7 p.m., and appears later with the Boston Symphony under Michael Tilson Thomas on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 5, in the Berkshire Festival series at Lenox, Mass.

REGISTER (E)
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 12,000
JUL 10 1973
New England Newsclip

Malcolm Frager begins Tanglewood weekend

LENOX, Mass. — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins July 13, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart. Then at 9 p.m. Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the Orchestra in an all-Mozart program. The concert opens with the Horn concerto No. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony principal horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist. The program continues with the clarinet concerto in A featuring Boston Symphony principal clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony principal viola Burton Fine as soloists.

Saturday at 10:30 a.m. as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday.

Saturday evening at 8:30, Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra on London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini. The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud artist-in-pesidence Andre Watts as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony No. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to 'La scala di seta', the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto grosso in B minor and is followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and ceelo featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra principal players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Walt, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin; Jules Eskin, cello. The concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony no. 36 in C, the "Linz."

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 24,000
JUL 12 1973
New England Newsclip

Second Weekend at Tanglewood Features BSO in Mozart Works

The second weekend of Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 13, with the 7 pm prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart. Then at 9 pm, Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with the Horn concerto no. 3 in E flat with Principal Horn Charles Kavaloski as soloist. The program continues with the Clarinet concerto in A featuring Principal Clarinetist Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E flat for violin and viola with Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Principal Viola Burton Fine as soloists.

On Saturday at 10:30 am, as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 pm, Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini. The concert opens with Vivaldi's Concerto in A for strings and is followed by Mozart's Piano concerto in C minor with 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence Andre Watts as piano soloist. The concert continues with Mozart's Symphony no. 34 in C and closes with Rossini's Overture to 'La scala di seta', the first performance of this work to be heard at the Berkshire Festival.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 pm, Seiji Ozawa will conduct the works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart. The concert opens with Handel's Concerto Grosso in B minor and is followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello featuring Boston Symphony Orchestra Principal Players Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Wait, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, celio. The concert then closes with Mozart's Symphony no. 36 in C, the "Linz".

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,000
JUL 14 1973
New England Newsclip

As I Hear It

The orchestra

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

AN ORCHESTRA is a composite instrument compounded of bowed-string, plucked-string, woodwind, brass-wind and percussion instruments with the important qualification that each string part is played on a number of instruments in distinction to a chamber music ensemble, in which each string part is played on but one kind of instrument.

* * * *

The impression may prevail in some circles that a composer buys a sheaf of score paper with blank staves for a prescribed set of instruments and then fills in the horizontal lines and intermediate spaces with the flower of his inspiration, much as a big league manager appoints players for the nine positions on a baseball team. ...

The fact is that there is a world of difference in the components required for orchestral literature. Very often at the completion of one work, and before the next one is started, there is a controlled commotion at the back of the concert stage as those players who were employed in the previous piece but will not be needed in the ensuing number leave the stage and those required for the coming number but who were not used in the preceding one enter.

* * * *

For instance, this weekend at Tanglewood, among other things, there will be two Mozart symphonies. By coincidence neither one calls for flutes or clarinets. This may be due to several reasons. The "Linz" symphony to be played tomorrow afternoon was written for Prince Thun of that city and first played at his castle by his domestic orchestra. The chances are that the string sections were pretty small by today's standards and, furthermore, since the performers all doubled in the kitchens, gardens or stables, they may have been of pretty weak competence as compared to today's musicians. And the omission of flutes and clarinets may have been dictated by the unavailability of performers on these instruments, so Mozart cut his pattern from the material at hand.

The "Linz" was written in 1783. The other Mozart symphony to be played tonight was written in Salzburg in 1780. The Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra in 1781 had six first and six second violins. To preserve authenticity, Mozart symphonies, as well as those of Haydn and the Brandenburgs of Bach, when played today are usually played with reduced string sections. At full strength, the Boston orchestra has 18 first and 14 second violins, 12 violas, 10 cellos and 9 basses.

The overture to "La Scala di Seta" will also be played tonight. Rossini wrote it in 1812. In 1813, when Carl Maria von Weber, the great operatic composer, contemporary of Rossini, became conductor of the Prague opera, he had an orchestra with four first and four second violins.

The choice of Mozart, Vivaldi, Handel, Haydn and Rossini for this weekend at Tanglewood is, of course, very welcome but it is influenced by the fact that half of the BSO is still in Boston completing the Esplanade concerts.

* * *

There have been instances where the normal orchestra has been expanded. Berlioz, at times wrote for a huge orchestra as did Mahler in a later era. And then the charlatan Antoine Jullien assembled mammoth forces but his purpose was to overwhelm his (outdoor) audiences as massed bands do at football intermissions.

There are humorous articles that show how an efficiency expert would work economies in an orchestra. He notices that there is great duplication among the strings and that some wind players, at times, are not included in the team effort but sit quietly, uninvolved in many passages.

The science of orchestration is a special study and composers, at least the great ones, are usually guided in their choice of instruments and the size of sections by an unerring instinct and a fastidious sense of tone color. They take advantage of the correspondence, or the contrast, between the character of dissimilar instruments.

For example, last week in "The Creation," Haydn often fortified the violins by assigning a unison line to a flute and a much-used device is to give the bassoon a similar purpose with the cellos. It is thus possible to achieve added brilliance or shadow as desired, much as Vermeer or Seurat in their respective metiers.

The results are not always distinctly audible but their purpose is the same as when a gourmet cook throws a pinch of garlic or [illegible] rb in a special concoction. This is al[illegible] art from harmonic wit and pungency and is a special province of sound.

* * *

Some compositions enlist added wind players, some calling for eight horns and six percussionists. Contemporary music often demands unusual instruments and untraditional combinations and inspires fear that the old-time orchestra has had its day. Few composers today write for the orchestra which Beethoven considered "a team." Already, as baseball has introduced the designated hitter, analogous situations are creeping in to music. As the keyboard, once a regular component of an orchestra, is now relegated to very rare participation, so possibly one day the constituents of our orchestras will change. Indeed, Percy Grainger once wrote a composition for 11 ukeleles and one mixed voice.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 185,000
JUL 15 1973
New England Newsclip

Music

LENOX ARTS CENTER, INC. AT WHEATLEIGH — Lenox, Mass. Four Musical Theater Premieres: Today —"H o u d i n i ' ' by Muriel Rukeyser. July 19-22 and 24-29 — A music-theater-dance work with film. Aug. 1-5 and 8-12 — "Mandrake the Magician." Aug. 15-19 and 21-26 — Stage Leers and Love Songs by Stanley Silverman. (413-637-2227).

UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT—Storrs, Jorgensen Auditorium. July 16 — Ari Karafian, violin. Thru July 19—New England String Quartet and guest artist. 8:15 p.m.

TANGLEWOOD — Lenox, Mass. Berkshire Festival Concerts Series. Boston Symphony Orchestra. July 20—Eugene Ormandy conducting. July 21—Normandy conducts. July 22—Skerowaczewski conducts. Tanglewood Festival Chorus. "Weekend Preludes," 7 p.m., will precede each Friday's 9 p.m. concert at no extra charge to evening ticket holders. Saturday concerts begin at 8:30 p.m. and Sunday programs at 2:30 p.m. Open rehearsals in the Shed on Saturday mornings at 10:30 a.m. at a nominal charge.

HU KE LAU RESTAURANT—Rocky Hill, Townline Road. The Tahitians, Polynesian Review. One show Sun. 6 p.m.; one show Tues., Wed. & Thurs. Two shows Fri. & Sat.

YALE LAW SCHOOL—New Haven, courtyard. July 17—Stephen Bell, classical guitar. 8:30 p.m.

LIBRARY PARK — Waterbury. Band Concert. July 17 — Municipal Band; Michael Trentalange, director. 7:30 p.m.

PATRIOT LEDGER (E)
QUINCY, MASS.
JUL 14 1973
New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD—
The Boston Symphony's summer season at the music ~~Shed on~~ the grounds of the Tanglewood estate in Lenox in the Berkshires. Tonight: at 9 Riccardo Muti conducts Vivaldi, Concerto in A for strings; Mozart, Piano Concerto in C minor No. 34; Rossini, Overture to La Scala di Seta. Andre Watts, is soloist. Tomorrow at 2:30 p.m.: Seiji Ozawa conducts Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Joseph Silverstein, violin; Jules Eskin, cello, performing Handel, Concerto Grosso in B minor; Haydn, Sinfonia Concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello; Mozart, Symphoy 36 in C "linz."
Tuesday: Popular Artists series, John Denver at 7:30 p.m. Fri. at 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude: Andre Watts performs all-Beethoven program: Bagatelle "fur Elise," Rondo a capriccio in G, 32 variations on origigal theme in C minor, Sonata in D No. 3.
At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy conducts all-Beethoven program:
Overture to Leonore, Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat, Symphony No. 5 in C minor, Philadelphia Orchestra.

MEMBI[illegible] a will perform a[illegible] ngress Park, Sara[illegible] p.m. • PAULA [illegible] Lake Wednesday, [illegible] Hope Ephremont, soloist.

THERE WILL BE A FOLK AND JAZZ concert beginning at 8 p.m. Saturday at the McGuire Auditorium, Emma Willard School, Troy. Featured will be Diane Monroe, folksinger.

THE CARPENTERS with Skiles and Henderson will be presented in concert at 8 p.m. Sunday, July 22 at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs.

THE MAHAVISHNU ORCHESTRA and The Section will be presented at 6 p.m. Saturday, July 21 at the Music Barn, Lenox, Mass.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will present an all-Mozart program under the direction of Seiji Ozawa at 9 p.m. today at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Tomorrow they will perform works by Mozart, Vivaldi, and Rossini at 8:30 p.m.

THE SARATOGA PERFORMING ARTS CENTER, Saratoga Springs, will present the "Virgil Fox Show," at 8 p.m. Sunday, July 15.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,638
JUL 13 1973

PRESS (E)
BRISTOL, CONN.
D. 18,000
JUN 30 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Will Have Ozawa, Muti Conduct

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS. — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 13, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager who will perform sonatas by Haydn andMozart. Then at 9 -p.m., Seiji Ozawa, Artistic Director of Taglewood and Music Adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the Orchestra in an all-Mozart program.

The concert opens with the Hornconcerto no. 3 in E flat with Boston Symphony Principal Horn Charles Kavaloski as solist. The program continues with theClarinet concerto in A featuring BostonSymphony Principal Clarinet Harold Wright. The concert closes with the Sinfonia concertante in E. flat for violin and viola with Boston Symohony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Boston Symphony P.rincipal Viola Burton Fine as solosist.

On Satuday at 10:30 a.m., as every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Opem Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday. On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra on London and permanent conductor of the Klorence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will cond[illegible] the Boston Symphony [illegible] works of Vivaldi Mozart and Rossini.

SOUTH MIDDLESEX NEWS (E)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
JUL 8 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood weekend

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — The second weekend of Tanglewood begins Friday, July 13, with the 7 p.m. weekend prelude concert featuring pianist Malcolm Frager, who will perform sonatas by Haydn and Mozart.

At 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood and music adviser to the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra in an all Mozart program.

Saturday at 10:30 a.m., as every Saturday throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

At 8:30 p.m. Saturday, Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, will conduct the BSO in works of Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Ozawa will conduct the BSO in works of Handel, Haydn and Mozart.

Two Concerts Given at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Music Review

LENOX — One of the worst traffic jams in Tanglewood's 36-year history plagued Saturday night's concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's second weekend.

The trouble wasn't with Tanglewood personnel, who easily could have handled the 9,730 who attended. Even audiences of 15,000 and more have reached Tanglewood and been admitted without undue delay.

Incidentally, the weekend's total attendance was 27,231.

Saturday night's Tanglewood's concert, beginning at 8:30 p.m., combined with a 6 p.m. program by Van Morrison at the neighboring Lenox Arts Festival, caused utter chaos.

As earlycomers to Tanglewood crept bumper-to-bumper to within a few yards of the box parking lot and Lion's Gate, they came to a complete bottleneck and impasse, with latecomers to the Lenox Arts Festival area. Police directed Tanglewood patrons away from totally congested entrances. They were forced to make a 15-mile detour through Stockbridge and reapproach Tanglewood by Route U.S. 7.

Cars Abandoned

Abandoned cars lined both sides of the two-lane roads for miles. Private driveways were jammed and irate residents called for tow cars. After the 15-mile detour, one ran into crawling traffic from the center of Lenox to the Tanglewood front gates — about a mile and a half.

The program was delayed for 20 minutes — unheard of at Tanglewood. Disgruntled patrons were still arriving after intermission.

Many of them will reconsider Saturday night concerts at Tanglewood, as six more events are sheduled for the same time at the Arts Festival.

A Tanglewood official told us that Stockbridge selectmen are holding an emergency meeting today to try to forestall repetitions of the debacle. The area in question is located in Stockbridge.

A Fine Concert

It was the lot of the Boston Symphony — reduced to 50 players; conductor Riccardo Muti, making his Boston Symphony debut, and pianist Andre Watts to soothe the nerve frayed audience.

The mainly baroque-classic program was a good start and its performance gave the finishing touch.

Muti of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London is young, energetic, not wasteful of motion and a knowledgeable musician. All of which was vividly reflected in Vivaldi's Concerto in A and Mozart's Symphony No. 34. The strings rewarded him with a vibrant singing tone. The conductor's musicality was most evident in the slow Vivaldi movement — pliant, personal and a model of reserved emotion.

Watts' approach to Mozart's C minor Concerto was a fine example of astute musicianship.

Passage work was immaculate. Muti and the orchestra gave Watts marvelous support, never invading his solo status, catering to his every need and style. Watts found brilliance in the two cadenzas and finale. Only here was some of the keyboard filigree concealed by the ensemble.

Sparkling Handel Concerto

Yesterday afternoon's program of Handel, Haydn and Mozart clearly revealed conductor Seiji Ozawa's interpretive discernment. All of it was conducted from memory.

The young Japanese conductor and the Boston Symphony have become increasingly cooperative.

The result was a sparkling Concerto Grosso in B minor by Handel — totally devoid of hack impression, to which it easily succumbs. Ensemble tone was luscious in the aria and two largos. The rest sparkled with bright sound and coordinated playing.

Haydn's Sinfonia Concertante in B flat had four of the orchestra's principals for soloists — Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Joseph Silverstein, violin; and Jules Eskin, cello.

The work offered the greatest opportunity to Silverstein, but just about everything materialized beautifully. It was organized, accurate performance in the accepted classic tradition.

After the solemn opening of Mozart's "Linz" Symphony, Ozawa's carefully planned objectives were clear, within and between movements.

Nothing less than a virtuoso orchestra could have fulfilled his tempos, balances and precise phrasings.

Half of the orchestra has been in Boston for the Esplanade concerts. Next weekend the full orchestra will be at Tanglewood for the six remaining weekends, beginning with three Beethoven concerts, for which no seats remain.

Conductors will be Eugene Ormandy Friday and Saturday nights, and Stanislaw Skrowaczewski Sunday afternoons.

SATURDAY NIGHT
Riccardo Muti, conductor
Concerto in A major for Strings — Vivaldi
Piano Concerto in C minor, K.491 — Mozart
Andre Watts, pianist
Symphony No. 34 in C major, K.338 — Mozart
Overture to "La Scala di Seta" — Rossini

SUNDAY AFTERNOON
Seiji Ozawa, conductor
Concerto Grosso in B minor, Opus 6, No. 12 — Handel
Sinfonia Concertante, Opus 84 — Haydn
Ralph Gomberg, oboe
Sherman Walt, bassoon
Joseph Silverstein, violin
Jules Eskin, cello
Symphony No. 36 in C major, K.425, "Linz" — Mozart

Tanglewood Begets Surprises

By R.C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Once again the Boston Symphony Orchestra's talent for infusing an orchestral work with a chamber-music flavor worked happily for the listeners Sunday afternoon in the rain at Tanglewood.

Seiji Ozawa led an ensemble of about 40 plus a quartet through a nicely blended and balanced performance of Hayden's Sinfonia Concertina in B flat for orchestra and oboe, bassoon, violin and cello.

The quartet has several opportunities for interesting combinations, i.e., the interplay of two duets, one high, one low; or one wind, one string.

The quartet was Ralph Gomberg, Sherman Walt, Joseph Silverstein and Jules Eskin. The orchestra's first-desk players have been working steadily at this sort of interdependent team-play since the BSO chamber players were organized in 1964.

The Handel Concerto Grosso (Opus 6, No. 12) which opened the program with about 35 players was offered with perhaps a bit more sonority than Handel anticipated when he composed it, but the essential small-group atmosphere was maintained, and the rum-te-rum rhythms available in baroque music were neatly avoided.

The Mozart "Linz" Symphony (that beautiful invention composed incredibly in a bit more than three days) was offered after intermission with a carefully phrased, but easy and relaxed manner, almost as if it had been composed by Haydn.

Saturday night, except for Andre Watts, of course, the hit of the program was a six-minute overture composed by Rossini when he was 20 for an otherwise long-forgotten opera, "La Scala Di Seta."

Riccardo Muti, an up and coming young (32) conductor from Italy, conducted it with a grin which was reflected in the whimsical music, the faces of the players and the joyful response of the audience.

Watts, who has become one of the music world's biggest box-office draws since his emergency performance with Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic in 1963, played the solo role in Mozart's C Minor Piano Concerto (K. 491) with a surprisingly soft, light touch.

It was almost as if he were riding the damper pedal slightly.

It turned out to be a sweetly gentle concerto, graceful enough, certainly, and with moments of thoughtful substance, but without the touches of lacy, crystalline elegance we have come to expect in the Mozart piano concertos.

The opening Vivaldi concerto was hard - edged, strongly - terraced, dynamically organized with sharply - defined phrasing and tonally lean, clean and sinewy.

Muti showed a tendency to see the Mozart symphony (K.338, which followed in termission, also in terms of terraced volumes (alternating passages of sustained loud and soft) which gave it a blocky feeling less appropriate to Mozart than to Vivaldi.

He has a list of impressive credentials for a young conductor, but Saturday he showed a head - high, jut-jawed musical assertiveness and set of mannerisms on the edge of excess.

Sunday Morning

About 300 reverent souls showed up in the rain at 10 a.m. Sunday for the first of the Sunday morning chamber-music programs by the Berkshire Music Center.

Attendance: Friday night, 7319; Saturday morning, 3470; Saturday night, 9730; Sunday afternoon, 6712; Total, 27,231.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,633

JUL 13 1973

Kavaloski Illustrates Mozart's Mastery

By EDWARD FRENCH

At the Concert

Friday evening's concert was a splendid illustration of Mozart's mastery of the concerto form, offering Horn Concerto No. 3 in E flat, K. 447 with Charles Kavaloski as the competent soloist, the Clarinet Concerto in A, soloist Harold Wright and the Sinfonia Concertante in E flat for Violin and Viola K. 363 with Joseph Silverstein and Burton Fine doing the honors.

Harold Wright was an ideal choice for the Clarinet Concerto as he has the happy combination of virtuoisty and musicianship so essential in Mozart. His performance of the solo part was marked beautifully molded phrasing, a fine tone at every dynamic level and exceptional technique.

THE SAME combination of virtuosity and musicianship distinguished Silverstein and Fine's performance of the Sinfonia Concertante. Perfect intonation as well as a flawless technique made this a quite special performance. Ozawa's accompaniments were on an equally high plane.

The Friday "Prelude" featured pianist Malcom Frager whose playing of sonatas by Haydn and Mozart was authoritative, technically fluent and tonally exceptionally lovely. It was about as fine playing as we expect to hear for many a day.

Saturday evening a very talented young conductor made his Tanglewood debut. Riccardo Muti's credentials were most impressive and he more than lived up to them.

His control of the orchestra was masterly in a Vivaldi Concerto and a Mozart Symphony. In both works he clearly brought out the architectonics and his choice of tempi was exmplary.

Rossini's Overture to "La Scala di Seta" was a virtuoso tour de force for conductor and orchestra.

ANDRE WATTS, currently "Artist in Residence" at the Berkshire Music Center was soloist in Mozart's C Minor Piano Concerto. It seemed to us he didn't really get involved until the last movement. In the opening Allegro much of the passage work while up to tempo lacked clarity and crispness and the Larghetto didn't sing enough.

In spite of the rain some sixty five hundred came Sunday afternoon to hear Seigi Ozawa conduct Handel, Haydn and Mozart. His reading of Handel's Concerto Grosso in B Minor was well proportioned and stressed the healthy out of doors vitality of this music.

Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Walt, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin and Jules Eskin, cello, collaborated in a performance of Haydn's Sinfonia Concertante that had the chamber music type of precise yet flexible ensemble. It was a stylistic delight.

Ozawa again evidenced his special feeling for Mozart in the "Linz" Symphony, K. 425. His interpretation was tastefully expressive in the Andante and had an infectious rhythmic verve in the outer movements. Again the orchestra was in top form.

Tanglewood Music a Bit Casual

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

Concert Review

That Seiji Ozawa is not altogether comfortable with music composed before the 19th Century, perhaps excluding the most familiar of the Mozart and Haydn symphonies, is an observation one has had to make on a number of occasions, the most recent being the first two Sunday concerts of this year's Tanglewood season.

Traditionally, the first two weeks at the Berkshire Festival are devoted to Baroque and classical works requiring smaller ensembles because a portion of the Boston Symphony is still playing Esplanade concerts in Boston. A rather unfortunate concommitant tradition is that this music often seems underrehearsed and casually performed.

Last Sunday, Ozawa gave us a rather lukewarm performance of Haydn's oratorio, "The Seasons." This week, the works were all instrumental and included Handel's Concerto Grosso in B-minor; Haydn, Sinfonia concertante; and Mozart's "Linz" Symphony.

The performances presented some of the same problems one has met with before — that is, a certain disregard for stylistic conventions and a general lack of affinity which manifests itself in rather bland interpretations.

The Handel, for example, opens with a Largo in dotted rhythms that Ozawa did not over-dot according to the stylistic practice of the time.

Further, he insisted on the kind of metronomic beat that has been one of the most persistent and unmusical features of twentieth century performances of Baroque music. The Aria, familiar to many as a theme song on a local classical music radio station, was particularly subject to this kind of beatiness and consequently sounded peculiarly square and unvocal.

Rough ensemble which had marred the Handel was also a difficulty in the Haydn which featured as soloists Joseph Silverstein, Jules Eskin, Ralph Gomberg and Sherman Walt. Further, due perhaps to the rain, string pitch of the soloists proved erratic until the third movement when both soloists and orchestra seemed finally to pull things together and the music became gay and brilliant.

The Mozart, being perhaps a more familiar work to Ozawa, was quite the best thing on the program — conducted with a 19th Century grandness, perhaps, but still very much more confident and spirited than anything which had preceded it.

2 SECOND WEEKEND

JULY 13
7 pm Weekend Prelude
MALCOLM FRAGER
9 pm SEIJI OZAWA
MOZART PROGRAM
Horn Concerto No. 3 in E — Charles Kavaloski
Clarinet Concerto — Harold Wright
Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat
Joseph Silverstein, Burton Fine

JULY 14
10:30 am Open Rehearsal
8:30 pm RICCARDO MUTI
Vivaldi: Concerto in A
Mozart: Piano Concerto K.491
Andre Watts
Mozart: Symphony No. 34
Rossini: Overture "La Scala di Seta"

JULY 15
2:30 pm SEIJI OZAWA
Handel: Concerto Grosso in B minor
Haydn: Sinfonia Concertante
Ralph Gomberg, Sherman Walt
Joseph Silverstein, Jules Eskin
Mozart: Linz Symphony

HERALD-AMERICAN (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 421,551
JUL 17 1973
New England Newscip

Two Concerts Given at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND WOLIN
Telegram Mu[illegible] Critic

Music Review

LENOX, [illegible] traffic jam of [illegible] year's history shaped [illegible] origins concert [illegible] Music Festival [illegible] end.

The trouble [illegible] Saturday night [illegible] could have [illegible] 15,000 [illegible] reached Tanglewood [illegible] confined within [illegible] incidentally, [illegible] attended [illegible]

Saturday [illegible] Tanglewood's concert [illegible] 8 p.m. conducted [illegible] program, [illegible] neighbor [illegible] 51, caused [illegible] Arrival [illegible] crept [illegible] in between [illegible] passing for [illegible] came to [illegible] bottleneck and [illegible] comes for [illegible] Tanglewood patrons [illegible] tally congested [illegible] were forced to make a [illegible] detour through [illegible] approach [illegible] Route U.S. 7.

Cars Abandoned

Abandoned [illegible] sides of the [illegible] sides. Private [illegible] manned and [illegible] called for tow [illegible] 5 mile detour, [illegible] crawling traffic [illegible] Lenox to [illegible] front gates, [illegible] a half.

The program [illegible] 20 minutes [illegible] Tanglewood. [illegible] cons were still [illegible] intermission.

Many of the [illegible] Saturday night [illegible] Tanglewood, as [illegible] shepherd to the [illegible] the Arts Festival.

A Tanglewood [illegible] that Stockbridge [illegible] holding an [illegible] today to try to [illegible] tions of the debacle. [illegible] question is to [illegible] bridge.

A Fine Concert

It was the [illegible] of the Symphony [illegible] Harvard [illegible] making [illegible] pleasant [illegible] "The [illegible] Mozart [illegible] Tanglewood [illegible] Allegro [illegible]

Tanglewood Begets Surprises

By [illegible] HAMMERICH

[illegible] passed [illegible] relived a [illegible] it had been composed by [illegible] Haydn.

[illegible] Arthur Weiss [illegible] of the program [illegible] made available [illegible] Rossini's [illegible] an otherwise [illegible] forgotten opera, "La Scala di Seta."

Riccardo Muti [illegible] and Eugene Young [illegible] conductor [illegible] Tanglewood [illegible] conducted [illegible] Sinfonia [illegible] Seven of the [illegible] paying respectful [illegible] audience.

With [illegible] Tanglewood [illegible] Mozart [illegible] greatness [illegible] Berlioz [illegible]

[illegible] Mozart's C Minor Piano Concerto, [illegible] surprisingly [illegible] It was [illegible] ruling the [illegible] clarity.

[illegible] concerto [illegible] general [illegible] and [illegible] beautiful [illegible] without the [illegible] revelation [illegible] expected in the [illegible] performance.

[illegible] Young [illegible] Mozart [illegible] mechanical [illegible] curiously [illegible]

[illegible] also in terms of [illegible] volumes, [illegible] passages of sustained [illegible] which gave [illegible] Mozart than to [illegible]

Sunday Morning

[illegible] people [illegible] the park at 10 [illegible] morning [illegible] portraits by [illegible] Berkshire Music Center. Attendance Friday night [illegible] Saturday morning [illegible] Sunday night [illegible]

Kavaloski Illustrates Mozart's Mastery

By EDWARD FRENCH

At the Concert

Friday evening's concert was a splendid illustration of Mozart's mastery of the concerto form, offering Horn Concerto No. 3 in E flat, K. 447 with Charles Kavaloski as the competent soloist, the Clarinet Concerto in A, soloist Harold Wright and the Sinfonia Concertante in E flat for Violin and Viola K. 363 with Joseph Silverstein and Burton Fine doing the honors.

Harold Wright was an ideal choice for the Clarinet Concerto as he has the happy combination of virtuosity and musicianship so essential in Mozart. His performance of the solo part was marked beautifully molded phrasing, a fine tone at every dynamic level and exceptional technique.

THE SAME combination of virtuosity and musicianship distinguished Silverstein and Fine's performance of the Sinfonia Concertante. Perfect intonation as well as a flawless technique made this a quite special performance. Ozawa's accompaniments were on an equally high plane.

The Friday "Prelude" featured pianist Malcom Frager whose playing of sonatas by Haydn and Mozart was authoritative, technically fluent and tonally exceptionally lovely. It was about as fine playing as we expect to hear for many a day.

[illegible] evening a very [illegible] young conductor made his Tanglewood debut. Riccardo Muti's credentials were most impressive and he more than lived up to them.

His control of the orchestra was masterly in a Vivaldi Concerto and a Mozart Symphony. In both works he clearly brought out the architectonic and his choice of tempo was exemplary.

Rossini's Overture to "La Scala di Seta" was a virtuoso tour de force for conductor and orchestra.

ANDRE WATTS, currently "Artist in Residence" at the Berkshire Music Center was soloist in Mozart's C Minor Piano Concerto. It seemed to us he didn't really get involved until the last movement. In the opening Allegro much of the passage work while up to tempo lacked clarity and crispness and the Larghetto didn't sing enough.

In spite of the rain some sixty five hundred came Sunday afternoon to hear Seiji Ozawa conduct Handel, Haydn and Mozart. His reading of Handel's Concerto Grosso in B Minor was very proportioned and showed the [illegible] of chamber [illegible] at its best.

Ralph [illegible] one Sherman Walt bassoon [illegible] Haydn's Sinfonia Concertante [illegible] that had the chamber music type of precise yet flexible ensemble. It was a sylvan delight.

Ozawa again evidenced his special feeling for Mozart in the Linz Symphony. K. 425. His interpretation was [illegible] the Allegro and had an excellent rhythm. [illegible] Mozart [illegible] was [illegible]

Tanglewood Music a Bit Casual

By FRED [illegible]

[illegible]

Tanglewood season.

Traditional [illegible] weeks of the [illegible] Festival [illegible] night and [illegible] young [illegible] feature a [illegible] Footer [illegible]

Concert Fare

[illegible]

Weekend Prelude
MALCOLM FRAGER
SEIJI OZAWA
MOZART PROGRAM
Horn Concerto No. 3 in D Charles Kavalcski
Clarinet Concerto Harold Wright
Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat
Joseph Silverstein, Burton Fine

SECOND WEEKEND

Open Rehearsal
RICCARDO MUTI
Vivaldi: Concerto in A
Mozart: Piano Concerto K.491
André Watts
Mozart: Symphony No. 34
Rossini: Overture "La Scala di Seta"

SEIJI OZAWA
Handel: Concerto Grosso in B minor
Haydn: Sinfonia Concertante
Ralph Gomberg, Sherman Walt
Joseph Silverstein, Jules Eskin
Mozart: Linz Symphony

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,100
JUL 16 1973
New England Newspapers

Music review

The mighty ramparts of Mozart

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

THE SECOND weekend at Tanglewood consisted of a trio of programs which, except for a few short forays, stayed within the mighty ramparts of Mozart. An anticipatory survey might have seemed to promise three more or less bland concerts, but they proved to be surprisingly exciting thanks to the virtuosity of the performers.

Yesterday afternoon Seiji Ozawa resumed the baton which he had ceded for one evening, Saturday, to a young newcomer, Riccardo Muti.

The "Linz" symphony of Mozart is one of the specialites de la maison. It has served Koussevitzky, Bernstein, Munch, Leinsdorf, Zinman and Ozawa himself in previous years, some in multiple repetitions, on the same stage. The Handel, for strings only, is a novelty to this festival and offers a grateful resonance.

* * *

The Haydn Sinfonia Concertante brought forward four of the orchestra's own sterling soloists—Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Sherman Walt, Bassoon, concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Jules Eskin, cello. The Andante served as an ideal exposition of instrumental tone characteristics and the way a genius such as Haydn sensed to contrast and blend them on occasion. The final movement, Allegro con Spirito, has an introductory recitative which the solo violin declaimed with outstanding eloquence.

Ozawa inspired the orchestra to brilliance in the "Linz," sparking zestful tempo and rhythm without recession, but giving less attention comparatively to balance. After the short Adagio introduction, the symphony moves into an Allegro Spiritoso. The theme, a sustained ascending progression in the first violins, was quite covered by the undulating accompanying figure in the seconds and only emerged distinctly on the repetition. In the Trio of the Menuetto the smooth-flowing theme given to the oboe was played by one violin only in unison, an octave lower, instead of utilizing the whole section.

* * *

Muti, whose dossier contains impressive honors as principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and also that of Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, was born in 1941. His program was the first and only one within memory at Tanglewood which ended with an overture, but it compensated for the opening work of the evening, which was the Vivaldi Concerto in A for strings. Not that Vivaldi at all needs an antidote, but the Rossini Overture to "La Scala di Seta" is a mercurial and galvanic short work in which Muti allowed no suspicion of routine to enter.

The Vivaldi Concerto lies in the most rewarding registers of the instruments, and Muti incited the Boston string sections to sound to their best advantage with vigorous freshness. The Mozart Symphony, No. 34 (K338), consists of two allegro vivaces with an andante between. It is rare Mozart in the sense that it has no minuet or fourth movement. When Sir Adrian Boult played it here in 1966, he transplanted another Mozart minuet, in C Major (K409), to complete the structural balance. The andante dispenses with the wind instruments of the surrounding movements and becomes a lovely graceful ballad which Muti welded with noticeable taste and symmetry. The finale is a whirlwind roller-coaster and Muti, as did Boult, let 'er rip, and the Bostonians seemed to be enjoying the frolic. There was no doubt that it pleased the audience.

Whitestone

Conductor Riccardo Muti, right, applauds piano soloist Andre Watts at conclusion of Saturday night concert.

* * *

The soloist of the evening was Andre Watts in the Mozart Piano Concerto in C Minor (K491). Watts immediately fortified the previous reputation he established here at Tanglewood as a deeply sensitive artist. But this concerto engulfs the solo more than some others and Watts would not compromise his artistic integrity by making unwarranted, powerful sallies when the dictates of his innate talent prompted him to a relative humility. In the Larghetto a tender mood and a bell-like tone raised his performance to a lofty level, but one could not repress the query whether this concerto was a wise choice to play for an audience of 9,730 people half of whom were on the lawns adjacent to the huge Shed.

The weekend prelude concert Friday night brought a program of unusual construction, played by the eminent young pianist, Malcolm Frager. Two sonatas of Haydn No. 6 in G and No. 37 in D followed by the beautiful and familiar A Major Mozart (K331) proved to be in a cumulatively progressive accession of keys in sharps.

Frager suited his manner of playing to the simple and unpretentious style of Haydn, and it might have become a question whether the soloist or the audience was enjoying the performance more. In the Menuetto Frager surely applied his toe to the pedal shod in a pointed ballet shoe. It would be gratuitous to speak of technical prowess of an artist such as Frager in Haydn, but his delicate deftness suited the character of the music.

* * *

In the later sonata the LARGO already has a depth below the essentially superficial style of the earlier one and it led directly into the gay Finale. It was interesting to note that the Turkish flavor injected in the first movement had its counterpart in the Mozart which followed. It was an exotic element which obviously intrigued composers of that era. Beethoven included, much as the French earlier this century threw in a dash of American jazz.

The Mozart gave Frager an opportunity to use a more significant tonal quality than might have been fitting in the Haydns, and it was the mark of the artist how he suited his grasp of the music by all the components in his copious quiver.

Friday night Ozawa confined his efforts solely to the role of accompanist, directing the orchestra to solos by some of the orchestra's principals in Mozart concertos, a task in which he proved himself both discreet and considerate.

The horn concerto, No. 3 in E Flat (K. 447), as played by Charles Kovaloski accentuated the tonal potential of the instrument. Such a roundness of sound and softness of edges have not been heard frequently on any stage, and the soloist's consummate mastery of his task was apparent at every note.

The clarinet concerto in A (K. 622) as played by Harold Wright was sensational. Such refinement and polished phrasing are rarely equaled. The soloist's command was astonishing and the graceful expertness, apparent at every turn, was an unalloyed and continuous joy. In the central Adagio the accompanying strings are muted and the complementary balance was exemplary.

The Sinfonia Concertante is a work of bravura for the violin and viola soloists. Concertmaster Silverstein and principal viola Burton Fine pulled out all the stops in their abundant capacity and gave it a refulgent reading. Silverstein's occasional addiction to preciosity, where his extremely cultivated tone appears at its finest, was answered at times by a more robust viola, but the over-all propulsion never failed.

JOHN DENVER will perform tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in the second Popular Artists Concert at Tanglewood.

Pianist Frager Impressive With Mozart Works at Tanglewood

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUL 16 1973

The second weekend at Tanglewood produced some outstanding performances, particularly by Malcolm Frager, pianist, who gave the Friday Prelude in the Shed.

Frager's recital was outstanding in every respect. He played two Haydn Sonatas, No. 6 in G and No. 37 in D, and the Mozart Sonata in A, K. 331. This is classical music in every sense of the word, and Frager's playing was impeccable both in terms of command of the instrument and in very special musical sensibilities. He was playing a very good piano indeed, and the tone his touch produced, together with extensive dynamics not often achieved on this percussive musical box, was exceptional, even in the Shed which is not the best place in the world for an intimate piano recital. Frager will play two more times at Tanglewood this summer.

SEIJI OZAWA followed with the regular concert conducting the Boston Symphony's small orchestra in three works by Mozart, the Horn Concerto No. 3, K. 447, the Clarinet Concerto In A, K. 622 and the Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat for violin and viola, K. 364.

Ozawa has much more affinity for Mozart for some reason than he does for Bach and it showed. He was well served by four first chair men in these works, Charles Kavaloski, horn, Harold Wright, clarinet, Joseph Silverstien, violin and Burton Fine, viola.

Wright did the Clarinet Concerto just about as well as one would hope for. For years Benny Goodman did this work, in fact recorded it with the BSO, but he never was as successful as Wright. Goodman is a fine player, but in terms of every aspect necessary for faultless execution Wright had everything quite in place. Intonation, breath, tone, technique and first class musicianship were present in abundance here.

THE ADAGIO FROM the Clarinet Concerto and the Andante from the Sinfonia are without question two of Mozart's greatest emotion achievements and that is really saying something. And to hear them both so well done on one evening, well, one's cup runneth over.

Saturday evening, Riccardo Muti made his only Tanglewood apprearance as conductor, in a program of works by Vivaldi, Mozart and Rossini.

The featured work was the Mozart Concerto for piano in C Minor, K 491 with Andre Watts as soloist.

IT WOULD BE unfair at this point to comment in any depth on Watts as a performer, because the work was marred during the performance by latecomers and a restless and noisy audience. (Was the moon full?) The ushers permitted scores of people to be seated, forty minutes after concert time and during the Larghetto 2nd movement of the Concerto. There is no way an artist can surmount these distractions.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUL 17 1973

Mozart Symphony Program Outstanding

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

Sunday afternoon's concert at Tanglewood under rare damp and dewy circumstances could be characterized simply as good, better and best.

Seji Ozawa led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in works by Handel, Haydn, and Mozart, three names that summer concert managements generally believe are prone to elicit as much box office enthusiasm as a grass growing contest. Not so at Tanglewood which drew over 27,000 more or less civilized folks with 3 days of same such and which included the wet Sunday.

HANDEL'S CONCERTO Gross in B minor, Op. 6 No. 7 opened the action, followed by Haydn's Sinfonia concertante in B flat for oboe, bassoon, violin and cello and orchestra Op. 84 and Mozart's Symphony No. 36 in C K 425 (Linz).

Solists in the Haydn work were all first chair men of the BSO, namely Ralph Gomberg, Sherman Walt, Joseph Silverstein and Jules Eskin, and as is generally the case they all performed up to our high expectations.

But for one set of ears and sensibilities at least, the outstanding performance of the afternoon was the Mozart Symphony.

IF YOU HAVE the time, and if you have the slightest idea of what is involved consider these musicological facts.

Mozart visited Linz (From whence the subtitle of the work) and was assured a welcome from Count Thun, the father of one his pupils in Vienna. In a letter to his father, Mozart wrote as follows:

"When we arrived at the gate of Linz, we were met by a servant to conduct us to the residence of the old Count Thun. I cannot say enough of the politeness with which we were overwhelmed. On Tuesday, Nov. 4 I. shall give a concert in the theater here and, as I have not a single symphony with me, I am writing for dear life to be ready in time."

WHITHIN FIVE days after his arrival, the new symphony was written, copied and rehearsed. Five days. Just the sheer physical act staggers the imagination, but when one further considers the breathtaking quality of the work it is beyond the scope and ken of us mere mortals.

It is a work of genuine imagination and beauty, and Ozawa and the orchestra played with a drive and enthusiasm, with a felicitous (and all too uncommon) synergy between ensemble and director that was a pleasure to hear.

The "Andante" was written in 6-8 time and is unusual for a slow movement, but which, in Mozart's light and silver hands, is a beautiful piece of writing.

New Friday at 7 p.m. Andre Watts, who is the new darling of the beautiful people (read New York Establishment) will play a solo recital for the Prelude in the Shed. One can hear a pianist play twenty concerts, but the real test is still the solo recital, and we will see what we will see.

TIMES (E)
HARTFORD, CONN.
C. 135,000
JUL 18 1973
New England Newspapers

Muti, Watts Play at Tanglewood

By DOROTHY STOWE
Times Music Critic

LENOX, Mass. — Andre Watts, pianist in residence at Berkshire Festival this summer, shared the spotlight at Tanglewood Saturday night with guest conductor Riccardo Muti, who made his debut appearance with Boston Symphony. The program, selected from the works of Mozart and other classicists, found Muti out of his element, Watts very much in his.

Watts, who has a busy teaching and performing schedule at Tanglewood this summer, led off his shed appearances as soloist with the orchestra in the Mozart Piano Concerto in C minor, K. 491.

He was as always his inimitable fluent self, exacting from each phrase its inherent aristocracy and refinement. The lyric slow movement in particular sang with serene acceptance. Watts is never less than the ideal artist, in whom one can rest secure to give everything the music demands, and reveal unexpected beauties to his audience.

Muti's accompaniments, played by a reduced orchestra, swept all before them on a tide of romanticized emotionalism which sometimes threatened to submerge the sensitive soloist, and were generally at odds with Watts' conception.

True, it is a concerto more dramatic than most of Mozart's; yet the drama is built into the ebbing and surging of the music, and is not to be poured over it in theatrical dynamics.

In the Mozart Symphony No. 34, Muti further stressed the Italianate side of Mozart, for which I suppose a case could be made, and some of it came off quite effectively, particularly the slow movement, which was nicely shaped in a highly romanticized fashion.

However, in the quicker movements, Muti seemed to be asking for exaggerated effects which taxed the credulity of the orchestra, although they followed him with devoted good will.

The galvanizing first chords of Vivaldi's Concerto in A for Strings let us know what to expect, as the jaunty, personable, young Italian applied himself to Vivaldi of coloristic charms and robust vigor.

This was not all bad, particularly from the standpoint of lawn listeners. One wonders sometimes just how much they get out of a program made up entirely of such light textured music.

Rossini's Overture to "La Scala di seta" proceeded with brio, bouncing with good humor. Yet, one found Muti giving minute grandstand attention to obvious first violin cues, while untidy matters of slurring and scattered attack went unattended in the shuffle.

Muti, the recipient of many awards and honors, is conductor of orchestras in London and Florence, and has filled prestigious guest podiums. One would like to hear what he does with the romantic and florid bel canto literature.

Mozart Effective, Treat for Fans At Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — It is unlikely Tanglewood will hear again this summer anything more effective in its simple, pure beauty than the middle movement of Mozart's Clarinet Concerto played Friday night by Harold Wright and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Seiji Ozawa.

The fragile, ethereal quality of the tones Wright was able to send floating were nearly unbelievable. They were like a butterfly which has given up its fluttering and is content to soar.

Wright is the first clarinetist of the orchestra and is, like the other soloists Friday, also first in their instrumental departments in the orchestra, among the best ensemble players, not only because of their position in the orchestra, but because of their extensive work in chamber music.

The other Friday - night soloists were Charles Kavaloski, who soloed in Mozart's E Flat Horn Concerto (K.447) and Joseph Silverstein, violinist, and Burton Fine, violist, soloists in Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola (K.364).

Wright's concerto also was notable for the total subtleties and warmth of color he was able to retain in the first and third movements while spinning out very rapid runs, trills and fancy decorations.

The opening horn concerto also was notable for Kavaloski's ability to make his French horn more expressive than is usually expected from that soft-toned instrument.

He produced shaded accents and a clarity of note separation worthy of a more nimble instrument. And he set up an atmosphere that seemed to float the horn tones above and among the orchestra members rather than projecting them out in front independently.

This blending of soloist with orchestra, in the best teamwork tradition, was heard also during the Sinfonia and is characteristic of Boston's orchestra when it uses its members as soloists.

They seem to be unafflicted by a need to be dominant, and the resulting chamber-music style is a distinct advantage when the subject at hand is the smaller-scale music of the 18th century.

The Sinfonia also offers several opportunities for the violin and viola to play closely interwoven duets with subdued orchestral accompaniment, and the dulcit tones Silverstein and Fine normally draw from their fiddles are ideal for the blend and balance required of this style.

musically complex, was the Mozart, which winds up with the movement more commonly known (and frequently played separately as well as serving as a source for other compositions) as "Turkish March."

Frager is one of my more favorite pianists, partly because of his versatility, but more because of his special feeling for the music of the classicists such as Haydn and Mozart.

Malcolm Frager, a pianist of first - class international credentials who happens to live in Lenox, played three sonatas (42 minutes) for the 7 p.m. prelude concert.

Two were by Haydn (No. 6 and No. 7 and No. 37 in D) and one by Mozart (K.331); all were played lightly, easily, prettily and with delicate subtleties of expression.

Not once did Frager find occasion, as he does often with the music of Prokofieff, to hit the keys so vigorously as to lift himself off the seat.

There were, nevertheless, many touches of intensity as well as frivolity, notably in the slow movements.

The most familiar of the sonatas as well as most

NEWS
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
W. 1,350
JUL 19 1973
New England Newsclip

Muti unimpressive

By Bill Merrill

Riccardo Muti, the 32-year-old conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra made his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in Lenox this past weekend.

Riccardo Muti was not particularly impressive. His was the Saturday night concert, and the reason for attending was the placing on the program Mozart's beautiful Concerto for piano in C minor, K. 491. Especially inviting was the fact that the brilliant Andre Watts was soloist.

The C minor concerto is a passionate piece, but it was not played that way. We sat on the lawn and did our best to blame the total lack of dynamics on the speaker system. But no; the finale ended abruptly with a loud, jarring cadence, so it wasn't the fault of the speakers. A natural phrasing is built into Mozart's music, and one would only assume that with each breath, the orchestra would asked to play louder and softer at times. This adds excitement to the performance. Not only was any excitement lacking, but the final movement, the Allegretto, got off to a very slow start. Apparently Watts had different ideas about the tempo, and he picked up the pace a bit in an early solo passage. Conductor Muti caught on, and the Alegretto, which began Andante, ended up a brisk allegro.

Also on the program was Mozart's Symphony No. 34 in C, K. 338, and it too was nothing to rave about, but hold on, your reviewer does have some kind words. The concert began with the Vivaldi String Concerto in A, and ah! the blend of Baroque and Berkshires was exhilarating. One cannot go wrong with Vivaldi, and indeed, the music carried an enchantment as it smoothly flowed over Tanglewood's splendid grounds. Mr. Muti ended the program with the Overture to "La scala di seta" by Rossini. The Italian means "The silken Ladder." It was the first performance of this youthful piece at the Berkshire Music Festival. Engaging, bright, it made an excellent conclusion to the concert.

Next weekend, July 20-22, heralds Tanglewoods enormously popular All-Beethoven weekend. They will be playing the Ninth on Saturday night, but be sure to get there early, as a considerable crowd is expected.

MILLERTON, N. Y.
NEWS
W. 1,500
JUL 19 1973

Tanglewood

Friday, July 13

Seiji Ozawa conducted an all-Mozart program this Friday evening and, contrary to the old joke, Mozart won! There was a record crowd again (I mentioned over 5000 in the audience last week and I heard later, on good authority, that the count was over 7000) and the evening was comfortably cool. The concert was a delightful experience in music-making.

The high point was the final work on the program, the Duo Concertante in E flat, K. 364 for violin, viola and orchestra. Joseph Silverstein, the Boston Orchestra's Concertmaster, was soloist with Burton Fine, who holds the Charles S. Dana chair (principal viola). The work is among the finest creations of the composer and is sheer imagination from the first chord to the last.

Made with the tightest construction, the thematic material soars and the contrasting sections and bridge passages melt into each other in a most natural way. Silverstein and Fine, each with impeccable technique, allowed the counterpoint and imitation throughout the work to sing and Ozawa kept the orchestra in proper perspective throughout.

The program opened with the Horn Concerto in E flat, K. 447. This later work is, of course, lovely, especially the slow movement, but it does not have the splendor of the Duo Concertante.

Charles Kavaloski, the orchestra's principal horn player, was the soloist and his line was always in complete control. When Mozart wrote this piece, the horn had no valves; it was simply a hunting horn and it is not difficult for us to understand the virtuosity involved in performing this work during Mozart's lifetime. He wrote four such concerti, all of a high level, but of the four I do not think this the best.

Another concerto, the one for Clarinet and Orchestra, followed. Harold Wright played it to perfection and again the Boston Symphony offered excellent support.

Some might quibble at the idea of an All-Anyone concert; I might be the first. It can be done, especially with a composer of the stature of Mozart, but I think it must be done with care. All these concerti are cast in the same form: three movements — fast, slow, fast. There was a similarity in the program, especially the first half. The Concertante added woodwinds and extra basses and this was a bit of change in color, but in adding the basses the orchestra, at least where I was sitting, seemed bottom heavy.

Again, as I mentioned last week, the hall seems designed for larger forces.

Robert Keys Clark

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
JUL 14 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Is Just 'Exquisite'

By RICHARD CONWAY

One of the most absolutely exquisitely played movements of music I have ever heard, or ever expect to hear, was the apex of an evening of music at Tanglewood that scaled many heights of impeccable musicianship.

The movement was the Adagio of Mozart's "Clarinet Concerto in A, K.622." Under the sensitive, certain baton of Seiji Ozawa, whose concept of the movement was immaculately right, soloist Harold Wright, principal clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and a chamber - sized orchestra of perhaps 40 players achieved some of the most stunning pianissimo playing I have ever heard.

The movement itself has to be one of the most beautiful Mozart ever wrote, and it is unlikely that he himself ever heard it played as it was played Friday night.

One example will have to suffice. Early in the movement, Ozawa brought the dynamic level of the orcestra down to a bare whisper. One is then aware of the clarinet tone growing out of this whisper to rise and make its own statement. Wright's attack of the tone was breathtaking. Incredible playing!

Also Marvelous

Marvelous, too, was Charles Kavaloski's performance of the Mozart "Horn Concerto No. 3, in E flat, K.447." Kavaloski, who holds a Ph.D. in Physics, became principal horn of the Boston Symphony last season. The masterful musicianship of clarinetist Wright was matched by Kavaloski's beautiful tone, impeccable articulation, and agility in scale passages. The rapid ascending scale passage toward the end of the third movement Allegro was brilliant, and the sforzandos in the second masterfully exccured.

Joseph Silverstein, violinist, and Burton Fine, violist, were the soloists for the final work of the evening, Mozart's "Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat for Violin and Viola, K.364." They, too, were excellent.

We have always admired Silverstein's beautiful tone quality. And Fine's brilliant playing makes one wonder why we do not hear more of this instrument in solo work.

If the concert itself was one that may well stand as the highlight of this summer's Tanglewood season, pianist Malcolm Frager's performance in the Weekend Prelude that preceded the regular concert may not be duplicated either.

Frager Shines

In a program that included two sonatas by Haydn and one by Mozart, Frager brought a highly sensitive intelligence to his playing of these works from the Classic Era. His varieites of touch brought now flute sounds from the piano and now a battery of horns.

His use of the pedal allowed for the utmost clarity of melodic, harmonic, and rhythmic delineation. Frager's use of his left hand, which is largely accompanimental, particularly in the Haydn works, was impeccable. It was, in brief, a superb display of musicianship.

One does not often have the opportunity to hear chamber works such as were on Friday night's concert. Conductor Ozawa had a brilliant concept of each piece, and the communication between and among himself, the orchestra, and the soloists, and thus, of course, to the audience, was one of those rare moments that one remembers for a lifetime.

Tanglewood Opening Weeks Hold Particular Delights

By RICHARD CONWAY

The opening couple of weeks of the summer season at Tanglewood hold particular delights. Because not all of the orchestra is yet in the Berkshires — some are playing the Esplanade Concerts, under Arthur Fiedler, in Boston — the programs are inevitably of music from the Baroque, Roccoco, or Classic Eras. Thus, the music performed is usually of chamber dimension, and the soloists or ensembles needed to play the concertante works are drawn from the orchestra itself.

This provides its own special delights, for these musicians are used to playing in ensemble. The first chair players are those who make up the symphony orchestra's string quartet, or woodwind quintet, or brass quartet, or whatever. They are sensitive to the needs of chamber music, the sense of dialogue, the wonderful interplays of melodies and rhythms. They understand when their particular line is important and when it is merely accompanimental. They play with a richness and fulness of tone that is yet sensitive to the spirit of ensemble intimacy. They are, in short, a joy to hear.

Sunday's concert was another case in point. Although, in my opinion, not quite reaching the heights of Friday night's brilliant program, the gratifying musicianship of the orchestra, which seems to take particular pleasure in this kind of music, was enormously rewarding.

The works performed were the Handel "Concerto Grosso in B minor, Op. 6, No. 12"; Haydn's "Sinfonia Concertante in B Flat for oboe, bassoon, violin, and cello, Op. 84"; and Mozart's "Symphony No. 36 in C, K.425, the 'Linz'."

Conductor Seiji Ozawa, who brings a unique spirit to the podium, has, for me, a particularly exciting concept of this style of music. The dance rhythms have a delightful vitality and verve to them, and the slow movements a special expressiveness in that Ozawa allows them to breathe and sing. The lovely third movement Aria in the Handel being a good example.

The marvelous ensemble playing noted above found its expression in the Haydn work, where soloists Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, cello, gave particular meaning to the contrast of high and low sonorities and various string and woodwind combinations. Their cadenza at the end of the first movement was especially rewarding, and the opening measures of the second movement for oboe and cello was lovely.

One particularly enjoys listening to these men play because they bring true musicianship, rather than blatant showmanship. They are sensitive to details of phrasing and articulation, they know how to listen to each other.

Mozart's "Linz" Symphony had a wonderfully expressive performance Sunday. Looking ahead as it does to the Romantic Era, the symphony is a more personal expression than either the Handel or the Haydn. Once again Ozawa brought off a beautiful andante movement, although the third movement Menuetto and Trio was, for me, the apex of Sunday's performance.

SPRINGFIELD UNION
JULY 14
SPRINGFIELD UNION
JULY 14
Springfield News - Jul. 16

Mozart Effective, Treat for Fans At Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — It is unlikely Tanglewood will hear again this summer anything more effective in its simple, pure beauty than the middle movement of Mozart's Clarinet Concerto played Friday night by Harold Wright and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Seiji Ozawa.

The fragile, ethereal quality of the tones Wright was able to send floating were nearly unbelievable. They were like a butterfly which has given up its fluttering and is content to soar.

Wright is the first clarinetist of the orchestra and is, like the other soloists Friday, also first in their instrumental departments in the orchestra, among the best ensemble players, not only because of their position in the orchestra, but because of their extensive work in chamber music.

The other Friday - night soloists were Charles Kavaloski, who soloed in Mozart's E Flat Horn Concerto (K.447) and Joseph Silverstein, violinist, and Burton Fine, violist, soloists in Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola (K.364).

Wright's concerto also was notable for the total subtleties and warmth of color he was able to retain in the first and third movements while spinning out very rapid runs, trills and fancy decorations.

The opening horn concerto also was notable for Kavaloski's ability to make his French horn more expressive than is usually expected from that soft-toned instrument.

He produced shaded accents and a clarity of note separation worthy of a more nimble instrument. And he set up an atmosphere that seemed to float the horn tones above and among the orchestra members rather than projecting them out in front independently.

This blending of soloist with orchestra, in the best teamwork tradition, was heard also during the Sinfonia and is characteristic of Boston's orchestra when it uses its members as soloists.

They seem to be unafflicted by a need to be dominant, and the resulting chamber-music style is a distinct advantage when the subject at hand is the smaller-scale music of the 18th century.

The Sinfonia also offers several opportunities for the violin and viola to play closely interwoven duets with subdued orchestral accompaniment, and the dulcit tones Silverstein and Fine normally draw from their fiddles are ideal for the blend and balance required of this style.

musically complex, was the Mozart, which winds up with the movement more commonly known (and frequently played separately as well as serving as a source for other compositions) as "Turkish March."

Frager is one of my more favorite pianists, partly because of his versatility, but more because of his special feeling for the music of the classicists such as Haydn and Mozart.

SPRINGFIELD UNION July 14

Malcolm Frager, a pianist of first - class international credentials who happens to live in Lenox, played three sonatas (42 minutes) for the 7 p.m. prelude concert.

Two were by Haydn (No. 6 and No. 7 and No. 37 in D) and one by Mozart (K.331); all were played lightly, easily, prettily and with delicate subtleties of expression.

Not once did Frager find occasion, as he does often with the music of Prokofieff, to hit the keys so vigorously as to lift himself off the seat.

There were, nevertheless, many touches of intensity as well as frivolity, notably in the slow movements.

The most familiar of the sonatas as well as most

New England Newsclip

Muti unimpressive

By Bill Merrill

Riccardo Muti, the 32-year-old conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra made his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in Lenox this past weekend.

Riccardo Muti was not particularly impressive. His was the Saturday night concert, and the reason for attending was the placing on the program Mozart's beautiful Concerto for piano in C minor, K. 491. Especially inviting was the fact that the brilliant Andre Watts was soloist.

The C minor concerto is a passionate piece, but it was not played that way. We sat on the lawn and did our best to blame the total lack of dynamics on the speaker system. But no; the finale ended abruptly with a loud, jarring cadence, so it wasn't the fault of the speakers. A natural phrasing is built into Mozart's music, and one would only assume that with each breath, the orchestra would asked to play louder and softer at times. This adds excitement to the performance. Not only was any excitement lacking, but the final movement, the Allegretto, got off to a very slow start. Apparently Watts had different ideas about the tempo, and he picked up the pace a bit in an early solo passage. Conductor Muti caught on, and the Alegretto, which began Andante, ended up a brisk allegro.

Also on the program was Mozart's Symphony No. 34 in C, K. 338, and it too was nothing to rave about, but hold on, your reviewer does have some kind words. The concert began with the Vivaldi String Concerto in A, and ah! the blend of Baroque and Berkshires was exhilarating. One cannot go wrong with Vivaldi, and indeed, the music carried an enchantment as it smoothly flowed over Tanglewood's splendid grounds. Mr. Muti ended the program with the Overture to "La scala di seta" by Rossini. The Italian means "The silken Ladder." It was the first performance of this youthful piece at the Berkshire Music Festival. Engaging, bright, it made an excellent conclusion to the concert.

Next weekend, July 20-22, heralds Tanglewoods enormously popular All-Beethoven weekend. They will be playing the Ninth on Saturday night, but be sure to get there early, as a considerable crowd is expected.

MILLERTON, N. Y.
NEWS
2,500

JUL 12 1973

Tanglewood

Friday, July 13

Seiji Ozawa conducted an all-Mozart program this Friday evening and, contrary to the old joke, Mozart won! There was a record crowd again (I mentioned over 5000 in the audience last week and I heard later, on good authority, that the count was over 7000) and the evening was comfortably cool. The concert was a delightful experience in music-making.

The high point was the final work on the program, the Duo Concertante in E flat, K. 364 for violin, viola and orchestra. Joseph Silverstein, the Boston Orchestra's Concertmaster, was soloist with Burton Fine, who holds the Charles S. Dana chair (principal viola). The work is among the finest creations of the composer and is sheer imagination from the first chord to the last.

Made with the tightest construction, the thematic material soars and the contrasting sections and bridge passages melt into each other in a most natural way. Silverstein and Fine, each with impeccable technique, allowed the counterpoint and imitation throughout the work to sing and Ozawa kept the orchestra in proper perspective throughout.

The program opened with the Horn Concerto in E flat, K. 447. This later work is, of course, lovely, especially the slow movement, but it does not have the splendor of the Duo Concertante.

Charles Kavaloski, the orchestra's principal horn player, was the soloist and his line was always in complete control. When Mozart wrote this piece, the horn had no valves; it was simply a hunting horn and it is not difficult for us to understand the virtuosity involved in performing this work during Mozart's lifetime. He wrote four such concerti, all of a high level, but of the four I do not think this the best.

Another concerto, the one for Clarinet and Orchestra, followed. Harold Wright played it to perfection and again the Boston Symphony offered excellent support.

Some might quibble at the idea of an All-Anyone concert; I might be the first. It can be done, especially with a composer of the stature of Mozart, but I think it must be done with care. All these concerti are cast in the same form: three movements — fast, slow, fast. There was a similarity in the program, especially the first half. The Concertante added woodwinds and extra basses and this was a bit of change in color, but in adding the basses the orchestra, at least where I was sitting, seemed bottom heavy.

Again, as I mentioned last week, the hall seems designed for larger forces.

Robert Keys Clark

Tanglewood Is Just 'Exquisite'

By RICHARD CONWAY

One of the most absolutely exquisitely played movements of music I have ever heard, or ever expect to hear, was the apex of an evening of music at Tanglewood that scaled many heights of impeccable musicianship.

The movement was the Adagio of Mozart's "Clarinet Concerto in A, K.622." Under the sensitive, certain baton of Seiji Ozawa, whose concept of the movement was immaculately right, soloist Harold Wright, principal clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and a chamber,- sized orchestra of perhaps 40 players achieved some of the most stunning pianissimo playing I have ever heard.

The movement itself has to be one of the most beautiful Mozart ever wrote, and it is unlikely that he himself ever heard it played as it was played Friday night.

One example will have to suffice. Early in the movement, Ozawa brought the dynamic level of the orcestra down to a bare whisper. One is then aware of the clarinet tone growing out of this whisper to rise and make its own statement. Wright's attack of the tone was breathtaking. Incredible playing!

Also Marvelous

Marvelous, too, was Charles Kavaloski's performance of the Mozart "Horn Concerto No. 3, in E flat, K.447." Kavaloski, who holds a Ph.D. in Physics, became principal horn of the Boston Symphony last season. The masterful musicianship of clarinetist Wright was matched by Kavaloski's beautiful tone, impeccable articulation, and agility in scale passages. The rapid ascending scale passage toward the end of the third movement Allegro was brilliant, and the sforzandos in the second masterfully executed.

Joseph Silverstein, violinist, and Burton Fine, violist, were the soloists for the final work of the evening, Mozart's "Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat for Violin and Viola, K.364." They, too, were excellent.

We have always admired Silverstein's beautiful tone quality. And Fine's brilliant playing makes one wonder why we do not hear more of this instrument in solo work.

If the concert itself was one that may well stand as the highlight of this summer's Tanglewood season, pianist Malcolm Frager's performance in the Weekend Prelude that preceded the regular concert may not be duplicated either.

Frager Shines

In a program that included two sonatas by Haydn and one by Mozart, Frager brought a highly sensitive intelligence to his playing of these works from the Classic Era. His varieites of touch brought now flute sounds from the piano and now a battery of horns.

His use of the pedal allowed for the utmost clarity of melodic, harmonic, and rhythmic delineation. Frager's use of his left hand, which is largely accompanimental, particularly in the Haydn works, was impeccable. It was, in brief, a superb display of musicianship.

One does not often have the opportunity to hear chamber works such as were on Friday night's concert. Conductor Ozawa had a brilliant concept of each piece, and the communication between and among himself, the orchestra, and the soloists, and thus, of course, to the audience, was one of those rare moments that one remembers for a lifetime.

Tanglewood Opening Weeks Hold Particular Delights

By RICHARD CONWAY

The opening couple of weeks of the summer season at Tanglewood hold particular delights. Because not all of the orchestra is yet in the Berkshires — some are playing the Esplanade Concerts, under Arthur Fiedler, in Boston — the programs are inevitably of music from the Baroque, Roccoco, or Classic Eras. Thus, the music performed is usually of chamber dimension, and the soloists or ensembles needed to play the concertante works are drawn from the orchestra itself.

This provides its own special delights, for these musicians are used to playing in ensemble. The first chair players are those who make up the symphony orchestra's string quartet, or woodwind quintet, or brass quartet, or whatever. They are sensitive to the needs of chamber music, the sense of dialogue, the wonderful interplays of melodies and rhythms. They understand when their particular line is important and when it is merely accompanimental. They play with a richness and fulness of tone that is yet sensitive to the spirit of ensemble intimacy. They are, in short, a joy to hear.

Sunday's concert was another case in point. Although, in my opinion, not quite reaching the heights of Friday night's brilliant program, the gratifying musicianship of the orchestra, which seems to take particular pleasure in this kind of music, was enormously rewarding.

The works performed were the Handel "Concerto Grosso in B minor, Op. 6, No. 12"; Haydn's "Sinfonia Concertante in B Flat for oboe, bassoon, violin, and cello, Op. 84": and Mozart's "Symphony No. 36 in C, K.425, the 'Linz' ".

Conductor Seiji Ozawa, who brings a unique spirit to the podium, has, for me, a particularly exciting concept of this style of music. The dance rhythms have a delightful vitality and verve to them, and the slow movements a special expressiveness in that Ozawa allows them to breathe and sing. The lovely third movement Aria in the Handel being a good example.

The marvelous ensemble playing noted above found its expression in the Haydn work, where soloists Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon, Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, cello, gave particular meaning to the contrast of high and low sonorities and various string and woodwind combinations. Their cadenza at the end of the first movement was especially rewarding, and the opening measures of the second movement for oboe and cello was lovely.

One particularly enjoys listening to these men play because they bring true musicianship, rather than blatant showmanship. They are sensitive to details of phrasing and articulation, they know how to listen to each other.

Mozart's "Linz" Symphony had a wonderfully expressive performance Sunday. Looking ahead as it does to the Romantic Era, the symphony is a more personal expression than either the Handel or the Haydn. Once again Ozawa brought off a beautiful andante movement, although the third movement Menuetto and Trio was, for me, the apex of Sunday's performance.

SR 17

AT TANGLEWOOD

All-Beethoven Weekend

LENOX — The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven Weekend, begins on Friday with the 7:00 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist in - Residence pianist Andre Watts.

Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle 'Fur Elise,' Rondo a capriccio in G ("Rage over the lost penny"), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata No. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his thirty-seventh year as Music Director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" No. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat the "Emperor," with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist.

Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance. Maestro Ormandy closes the concert with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor.

On Saturday, at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony No. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony No. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin soprano, Joanna Simon contralto, Seth McCoy tenor, Peter Lagger bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tangelwood Granrud Artist - in - Residence, will conduct the Orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Henrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy "Coriolan" followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski closes the concert and the Beethoven Weekend with Symphony No. 3 in E flat, the "Eroica."

PETER LAGGER

PHYLLIS CURTIN

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 550,000
JUL 15 1973
New England Newscip

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 139,799
JUL 15 1973
New England Newscip

Out-of-Town

The N.Y.C. Ballet presents "Swan Lake" tomorrow afternoon at 2 at Saratoga Performing Arts Center in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. and "Song of the Nightingale," "Pas de Deux," and others in the evening at 8. On Sunday The Carpenters will appear . . . Eugene Ormandy conducts an all-Beethoven program at the Tanglewood-Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass., tomorrow. On Sunday Stanislaw Skroaczewski conducts . . . Ella Fitzgerald will be the solo vocalist with The New Jersey Symphony tomorrow evening at 8 at Waterloo Village Music Festival near Stanhope, N.J. . . . Tonight and tomorrow at 8:30 p.m., "La Dafne," will be staged at Caramoor Festival near Katonah, N.Y. On Sunday, in the Spanish Courtyard at 5:30 p.m., violinist Jaime Laredo and pianist Ruth Laredo will present works by Ravel, Mozart, Franck, Stravinsky . . . Twyla Tharp Company and Ballet Brio are at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival near Lee, Mass., tomorrow.

* * *

Tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. the Marlboro Music Festival, near Marlboro, Vt., will present the Marlboro Festival Orchestra led by Pablo Casals in the Beethoven Symphony #4 in B Major. On Sunday at 3 p.m. Leon Kirchner will lead the orchestra . . . The Carpenters appear tomorrow night at the Garden State Arts Center in Holmdel, N.J. On Monday the Preservation Hall Jazz Band is on stage. The Bolshoi Ballet is there Tuesday through Thursday . . . Jackie Mason has the lead role in "Last of the Red Hot Lovers," when Grossinger Hotel Summer Theater opens tonight . . . "Twigs," starring Sada Thompson, opens for a week Monday night at the Tappan Zee Playhouse in Nyack, N.Y. . . . "The Barber of Seville" opens Thursday at the Lake George Opera Festival near Glens Falls, N.Y. . . . Stan Kenton appears at the Lakeside Theater of Eisenhower Park in East Meadow (L.I.), Sunday at 8:30 p.m.

* * *

The 1960s British Rock Invasion makes it final stand tomorrow at 8 and 11 p.m. at

New York Post
D. 623,245 SAT. 354,797
JUL 20 1973

Watts, Ormandy open Tanglewood weekend

The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven Weekend, begins on Friday, with the 7 P.M. weekend prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle 'Fur Elise', Rondo a capriccio in G ('Rage over the lost penny'), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata no. 3 in D. At 9 P.M. Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as Music Director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture 'Leonore' no. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 5 in E flat, the 'Emperor', with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance. Ormandy closes the concert with Beethoven's Symphony no. 5 in C minor.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30, as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30, Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony no. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin soprano, Joanna Simon contralto, Seth McCoy tenor, Peter Lagger bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 P.M., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the Orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy 'Coriolan' followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski closes the concert and the Beethoven Weekend with Symphony no. 3 in E flat, the 'Eroica'.

TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM (E)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
D. 30,000
JUL 13 1973
New England Newscip

Tanglewood

Beethoven Planned For Weekend

The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven weekend, begins on Friday, July 20, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts. Mr. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle "Fur Elise," Pondo a capriccio in G ("Rage Over the Lost Penny"), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata no. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" no. 3, followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor," with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist.

Mr. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance. Maestro Ormandy closes the concert with Beethoven's Symphony no. 5 in C minor.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony no. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Joanna Simon, contralto, Seth McCoy, tenor, Peter Lagger, bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus with John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the Orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy "Coriolan," followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski closes the concert and the Beethoven Weekend with Symphony no. 3 in E flat, the "Eroica."

MILLERTON, N. Y.
NEWS
W. 1,500
JUL 19 1973

Joanna Simon, who has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in recent seasons, will again perform with the orchestra in an all Beethoven program on Saturday evening, July 21. During the past year, Miss Simon has appeared at the Teatro Colon, Buenos Aires, in Bomarzo, at Tanglewood, at the Salzburg Festival, as well as with many orchestras and opera companies in the U.S. — Photo contributed

MERCURY (E)
MEDFORD, MASS.
D. 12,000
JUL 16 1973
New England Newscip

Beethoven Week July 20 at Lenox

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX — The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven Weekend, begins on Friday, July 20, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts. Mr. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle "Fur Elise," Rondo a capriccio in G ('Rage over the lost penny), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata no. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m. Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture 'Leonore' no. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 5 in E flat, the 'Emperor', with pianist Philippe Entermont as soloist.

Mr. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30 a.m. as on every Saturday morning during the Tangelwood session, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony no. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin soprano, Joanna Simon contralto, Seth McCoy tenor, Peter Lagger bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 p.m., Stanislwa Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrdu Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's trágedy 'Coriolan' followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist.

All Beethoven Weekend Slated For Tanglewood

"An all-Beethoven weekend" with the Boston Symphony Orchestr a at Tanglewood in Lenox will begin July 20 with the Weekend Prelude Concert featuring pianist Andre Watts. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagetelle "Fur Elise."

Later in the evening Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" No. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor" with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist. Entremont appears with the BSO for the first time in this performance.

July 21 Ormandy will conduct the BSO in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony no. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor.

On Sunday, July 22, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy "Corielan" followed by Beethoven's Violen Concerto in D.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
JUL 19 1973

Ormandy Will Conduct Twice At Tanglewood

Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be the guest conductor in two of three concerts in the third weekend of performances by the Boston Symphiny Orchestra in the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Ormandy will conduct both Friday and Saturday evening's concerts, while Polish conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct on Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

The entire weekend will be devoted to the music of Beethoven.

On Friday evening, the program will include the "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Symphony No. 5, and the "Emperor" Concerto, with Philippe Entremont the soloist.

The Friday evening concert will begin at 9 p.m. and be preceeded by a Weekend Prelude recital by Andre Watts at 7 p.m.

On Saturday, Ormandy will conduct the Boston Symphony in the last two symphonies of Beethoven, beginning at 8:30 p.m.

Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Seth McCoy and Peter Lagger will be the vocal soloists in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, along with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus conducted by John Oliver.

The Sunday afternoon concert will open with the "Coriolan" overture, and will feature soloist Sidney Harth playing the Beethoven Violin Concerto as well as Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica."

AT TANGLEWOOD

All-Beethoven Weekend

LENOX — The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven Weekend, begins on Friday with the 7:00 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist in - Residence pianist Andre Watts.

Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle 'Fur Elise,' Rondo a capriccio in G ("Rage over the lost penny"), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata No. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his thirty-seventh year as Music Director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" No. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat the "Emperor," with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist.

Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance. Maestro Ormandy closes the concert with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor.

On Saturday, at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony No. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony No. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin soprano, Joanna Simon contralto, Seth McCoy tenor, Peter Lagger bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tangelwood Granrud Artist - in - Residence, will conduct the Orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Henrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy "Coriolan" followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski closes the concert and the Beethoven Weekend with Symphony No. 3 in E flat, the "Eroica."

PETER LAGGER

PHYLLIS CURTIN

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 323,093

JUL 15 1973

New England Newspaper

Out-of-Town

The N.Y.C. Ballet presents "Swan Lake" tomorrow afternoon at 2 at Saratoga Performing Arts Center in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. and "Song of the Nightingale," "Pas de Deux," and others in the evening at 8. On Sunday The Carpenters will appear . . . Eugene Ormandy conducts an all-Beethoven program at the Tanglewood-Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass., tomorrow. On Sunday Stanislaw Skroaczewski conducts . . . Ella Fitzgerald will be the solo vocalist with The New Jersey Symphony tomorrow evening at 8 at Waterloo Village Music Festival near Stanhope, N.J. . . . Tonight and tomorrow at 8:30 p.m., "La Dafne," will be staged at Caramoor Festival near Katonah, N.Y. On Sunday, in the Spanish Courtyard at 5:30 p.m., violinist Jaime Laredo and pianist Ruth Laredo will present works by Ravel, Mozart, Franck, Stravinsky . . . Twyla Tharp Company and Ballet Brio are at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival near Lee, Mass., tomorrow.

* * *

Tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. the Marlboro Music Festival, near Marlboro, Vt., will present the Marlboro Festival Orchestra led by Pablo Casals in the Beethoven Symphony #4 in B Major. On Sunday at 3 p.m. Leon Kirchner will lead the orchestra . . . The Carpenters appear tomorrow night at the Garden State Arts Center in Holmdel, N.J. On Monday the Preservation Hall Jazz Band is on stage. The Bolshoi Ballet is there Tuesday through Thursday . . . Jackie Mason has the lead role in "Last of the Red Hot Lovers," when Grossinger Hotel Summer Theater opens tonight . . . "Twigs," starring Sada Thompson, opens for a week Monday night at the Tappan Zee Playhouse in Nyack, N.Y. . . . "The Barber of Seville" opens Thursday at the Lake George Opera Festival near Glens Falls, N.Y. . . . Stan Kenton appears at the Lakeside Theater of Eisenhower Park in East Meadow (L.I.), Sunday at 8:30 p.m.

* * *

The 1960s British Rock Invasion makes it final stand tomorrow at 8 and 11 p.m. at

New York Post
D. 823,245 SAT. 354,797

JUL 20 1973

Watts, Ormandy open Tanglewood weekend

The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven Weekend, begins on Friday, with the 7 P.M. weekend prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle 'Fur Elise', Rondo a capriccio in G ('Rage over the lost penny'), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata no. 3 in D. At 9 P.M. Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as Music Director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture 'Leonore' no. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 5 in E flat, the 'Emperor', with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance. Ormandy closes the concert with Beethoven's Symphony no. 5 in C minor.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30, as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30, Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony no. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin soprano, Joanna Simon contralto, Seth McCoy tenor, Peter Lagger bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 P.M., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the Orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy 'Coriolan' followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski closes the concert and the Beethoven Weekend with Symphony no. 3 in E flat, the 'Eroica'.

TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM (E)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
D. 32,000

JUL 12 1973

New England Newspaper

Tanglewood

Beethoven Planned For Weekend

The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven weekend, begins on Friday, July 20, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts. Mr. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle "Fur Elise," Pondo a capriccio in G ("Rage Over the Lost Penny"), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata no. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" no. 3, followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor," with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist.

Mr. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance. Maestro Ormandy closes the concert with Beethoven's Symphony no. 5 in C minor.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony no. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Joanna Simon, contralto, Seth McCoy, tenor, Peter Lagger, bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus with John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the Orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy "Coriolan," followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski closes the concert and the Beethoven Weekend with Symphony no. 3 in E flat, the "Eroica."

MILLERTON, N. Y.
NEWS
W. 1,500

JUL 19 1973

Joanna Simon, who has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in recent seasons, will again perform with the orchestra in an all Beethoven program on Saturday evening, July 21. During the past year, Miss Simon has appeared at the Teatro Colon, Buenos Aires, in Bomarzo, at Tanglewood, at the Salzburg Festival, as well as with many orchestras and opera companies in the U.S. — Photo contributed

Beethoven Week July 20 at Lenox

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX — The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven Weekend, begins on Friday, July 20, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts. Mr. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle "Fur Elise," Rondo a capriccio in G ('Rage over the lost penny), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata no. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m. Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture 'Leonore' no. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 5 in E flat, the 'Emperor', with pianist Philippe Entermont as soloist.

Mr. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30 a.m. as on every Saturday morning during the Tangelwood session, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony no. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin soprano, Joanna Simon contralto, Seth McCoy tenor, Peter Lagger bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 p.m., Stanislwa Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrdu Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's trágedy 'Coriolan' followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist.

All Beethoven Weekend Slated For Tanglewood

"An all-Beethoven weekend" with the Boston Symphony Orchestr a at Tanglewood in Lenox will begin July 20 with the Weekend Prelude Concert featuring pianist Andre Watts. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagetelle "Fur Elise."

Later in the evening Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" No. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor" with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist. Entremont appears with the BSO for the first time in this performance.

July 21 Ormandy will conduct the BSO in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony no. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor.

On Sunday, July 22, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy "Corielan" followed by Beethoven's Violen Concerto in D.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181

JUL 19 1973

Ormandy Will Conduct Twice At Tanglewood

Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be the guest conductor in two of three concerts in the third weekend of performances by the Boston Symphiny Orchestra in the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Ormandy will conduct both Friday and Saturday evening's concerts, while Polish conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct on Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

The entire weekend will be devoted to the music of Beethoven.

On Friday evening, the program will include the "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Symphony No. 5 and the "Emperor" Concerto, with Philippe Entremont the soloist.

The Friday evening concert will begin at 9 p.m. and be preceeded by a Weekend Prelude recital by Andre Watts at 7 p.m.

On Saturday, Ormandy will conduct the Boston Symphony in the last two symphonies of Beethoven, beginning at 8:30 p.m.

Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Seth McCoy and Peter Lagger will be the vocal soloists in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, along with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus conducted by John Oliver.

The Sunday afternoon concert will open with the "Coriolan" overture, and will feature soloist Sidney Harth playing the Beethoven Violin Concerto as well as Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica."

All Beethoven Weekend Planned For Tanglewood

LENOX — The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven weekend, begins tomorrow with the 7:00 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-In Residnece pianist Andre' Watts. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle 'Fur Elise', Rondo a capriccio in G ('Rage over the lost penny'), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata No. 3 in D. At 9:00 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his thirty-seventh year as Music Director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture 'Leonore' no. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano Concerto no. 5 in E flat, the 'Emperor', with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphohy for the first time at this performance. Maestro Ormandy closes the concert with Beethoven's Symphony no. 5 in C minor.

On Saturday, at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphoyn no. 8 in F and is followed by no 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin soprano, Joanna Simon contralto, Seth McCoy tenor, Peter Lagger, bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus John Oliver, director.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist -in-Residence, will conduct the Orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy 'Coriolan' followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski closes the concert and the Beethoven Weekend with Symphony no. 3 in E flat, the 'Eroica'.

Sidney Harth, who recently has been appointed associate conductor and concertmaster of the Los Angeles Philharmonic will perform with the Boston Symphony on Sunday afternoon, as a soloist in Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D, opus 61.
This is Mr. Harth's first performance with the Boston Symphony.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 15 1973

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181

JUL 19 1973

Ormandy Will Conduct Twice At Tanglewood

Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be the guest conductor in two of three concerts in the third weekend of performances by the Boston Symphiny Orchestra in the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Ormandy will conduct both Friday and Saturday evening's concerts, while Polish conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct on Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

The entire weekend will be devoted to the music of Beethoven.

On Friday evening, the program will include the "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Symphony No. 5 and the "Emperor" Concerto, with Philippe Entremont the soloist.

The Friday evening concert will begin at 9 p.m. and be preceeded by a Weekend Prelude recital by Andre Watts at 7 p.m.

On Saturday, Ormandy will conduct the Boston Symphony in the last two symphonies of Beethoven, beginning at 8:30 p.m.

Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Seth McCoy and Peter Lagger will be the vocal soloists in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, along with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus conducted by John Oliver.

The Sunday afternoon concert will open with the "Coriolan" overture, and will feature soloist Sidney Harth playing the Beethoven Violin Concerto as well as Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica."

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
D. 4,000

JUL 14 1973

All-Beethoven Weekend At Tanglewood

The third weekend at Tanglewood which begins Friday, July 20, will feature all Beethoven Programs with conductors Eugene Ormandy on Friday and Saturday and Stanislaw Skrowaczewski on Sunday. Soloists include Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Seth McCoy, Peter Lagger, the Tanlewood Choir, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus John Oliver, director, and Sidney Harth. The Weekend Prelude Concert features 1973 Granrud Artist-in-residence pianist Andre Watts, on July 20 at 7 p.m. Mr. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle 'Fur Elise'', Rondo a capriccio in G (''Rage over the lost penny''), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata No. 3 in D. At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as Music Director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, willconduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture 'Lenore' No. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto No. 5 in E flat, the 'Emperor', with pianist Phillippe Entremont as soloist. Mr. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance. Maestro Ormandy closes the concert with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening, July 21 at 8:30, Mr. Ormandy will conduct the Orchestra in two Beethoven symphony No. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin soprano, Joanna Simon, contralto, Seth McCoy tenor, Peter Lagger bass, the Tanglewood choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus John Oliver, Director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-residence, will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy 'Coriolan' followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski closes the concert and the Beethoven Weekend with Symphony No. 3 in E Flat, the "Eroica".

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 129,656

JUL 17 1973

TANGLEWOOD SOLOISTS. Contralto Joanna Simon and bass Peter Lagger will join The Boston Symphony Orchestra for an all-Beethoven program Saturday at 8:30 p.m. in the shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The other soloists with them will be soprano Phyllis Curtin and tenor Seth McCoy; Eugene Ormandy will be guest conductor. It will be Lagger's debut with the BSO.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PARK EAST
W. - CIRC. N. AVAIL.

JUL 12 1973

Massachusetts

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL (TANGLEWOOD), Lenox. (413) 637-1600. Boston Symphony Orchestra. July 13: Weekend Prelude, 7 pm. Seiji Ozawa, cond.; All-Mozart program, 9 pm. July 14: Open Rehearsal, 10:30 am. Riccardo Muti, cond., 8:30 pm. July 15: Seiji Ozawa, cond., 2:30 pm. July 20: Weekend Prelude, 7 pm. Eugene Ormandy, cond.; all-Beethoven program, 9 pm. July 21: Open Rehearsal, 10:30 am. Eugene Ormandy, cond.; all-Beethoven program, 8:30 pm. July 22: Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, cond.; all-Beethoven program, 2:30 pm.

CAPE COD MELODY TENT, Hyannis. 1776 (thru July 21).

CAPE PLAYHOUSE. Dennis. Twigs (thru July 14). Opens July 16: Prisoner of Second Avenue (thru July 21).

CYRUS PIERCE THEATRE, Nantucket. (617) 228-1427. Dracula (thru July 16). Opens July 17: The Saintliness of Margery Kempe (thru Aug. 6).

JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL Lee. Hartford Ballet Co. (thru Jul 14). Opens July 17: Twyla Tharp Co. Ballet Brio (thru July 21).

LENOX ARTS CENTER, Lenox. Houdini (thru July 15). Opens July 19: Inter-Castle (thru July 29).

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 15 1973

MUSIC

It's time for Ludwig Van at Tanglewood next weekend. Eugene Ormandy, music director and conductor of The Philadelphia Orchestra takes a turn before the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday and Saturday conducting the BSO in works that include Beethoven's "Leonore Overture No. 3," and "Symphony No. 9" respectively.

Music

MUSIC MOUNTAIN — Falls Village, Conn. Saturday at 3 p.m., two great artists, Sidney Foster, pianist, and Urico Rossi, violinist of the Berkshire Quartet, will be featured in Faure's "Sonata for Violin and Piano in A".

SIENA COLLEGE — Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., Stan Kenton and his orchestra in a benefit concert for Camp Thacher.

LAKE GEORGE OPERA FESTIVAL —Opens for the season onThursday with Giacome Puccini's TOSCA. The popular hit of the 1972 season will again be directed by Patrick Bakman, and conducted by Michael Charry and Monroe Kanouse.

LENOX ARTS FESTIVAL — At 6 p.m. Saturday, the Mahavishnu Orchestra will perform.

TANGLEWOOD — At 7 p.m. Friday, Weekend prelude. At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy program - Leonore Overture No. 3, Emperor Concerto, Symphony No. 5. Saturday at 10:30 a.m. Open rehearsal. At 8:30 p.m., Beethoven program - Symphony 8, Symphony No. 9 in D minor. At 2:30 p.m. Sunday, Beethoven Program - Overture "Coriolan," Symphony No. 3 "Eroica."

SARATOGA PERFORMING ARTS CENTER — At 8 p.m. today, Virgil Fox with Revelation Lights and Heavy Organ.

COLONIE SUMMER THEATER — Monday through Friday at 8:30 p.m. and Saturday at 7 & 10 p.m., Jerry Vale & The Goldiggers.

Tanglewood

Beethoven Planned For Weekend

The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven weekend, begins on Friday, July 20, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts. Mr. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle "Fur Elise," Pondo a capriccio in G ("Rage Over the Lost Penny"), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata no. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" no. 3, followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor," with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist.

Mr. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance. Maestro Ormandy closes the concert with Beethoven's Symphony no. 5 in C minor.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony no. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Joanna Simon, contralto, Seth McCoy, tenor, Peter Lagger, bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus with John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 p.m. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the Orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy "Coriolan," followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D with violinist Sidney Harth as soloist. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski closes the concert and the Beethoven Weekend with Symphony No. 3 in E flat, the "Eroica."

MILLERTON, N. Y.
NEWS
W. 1,500

JUL 19 1973

Joanna Simon, who has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in recent seasons, will again perform with the orchestra in an all Beethoven program on Saturday evening, July 21. During the past year, Miss Simon has appeared at the Teatro Colon, Buenos Aires, in Bomarzo, at Tanglewood, at the Salzburg Festival, as well as with many orchestras and opera companies in the U.S. — Photo contributed

WOMEN'S WEAR DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 60,848

AUG 2 1973

EYE® VIEW

The Tanglewood Touch

There was this bird that kept darting in and out of the Tanglewood Music Shed in Lenox, Mass. — flying to a nest high up in the steel girders near the roof, then out again while the Boston Symphony Orchestra thundered through Beethoven's Third Symphony.

Outside the trees sheltered people — sprawled on blankets amid the leftovers of picnic lunches, basking simultaneously in the sun and the music. Inside the Shed sat 13,000 others, totally silent, totally rapt, listening, watching conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, borrowed for the day from the Minneapolis Orchestra.

On the podium, Skrowaczewski looked like he needed oiling. He conducted in short, jerky, unpredictable movements, as if he were holding himself back from gyrating around the stage in his passion for the music.

It was an act of God that Serge Koussevitsky had to wait out during the very first concert at Tanglewood.

It was Aug. 12, 1937, and Koussevitsky was conducting the BSO in a giant canvas tent on the grounds of Tanglewood, the former Tappan estate. He was playing, of all things, Wagner's pounding "Ride of the Valkyries" and outside the lightning was flashing and the thunder was booming and, above it all, the rain was pelting the canvas so hard it sounded like an army of snare drums.

Three times Koussevitsky stopped the orchestra. Three times he resumed, each time to be drowned out by the storm.

At the end of the evening, Gertrude Robinson Smith bustled to the stage. "The storm has proved conclusively," she enunciated in her best Miss Porter's diction, "the need for a Shed. We must raise the $100,000 necessary to build." And, they say, the response was immediate. Money for the Shed, designed by Eliel Saarinen, was almost all raised, the story goes, that very night.

There's still a tent at Tanglewood, a big circus-striped affair, and it's still rather exclusive, reserved for donors to the Boston Symphony, the so-called "friends" of the BSO, who dine there before the concerts on elegant little picnic suppers complete with pewter candlesticks and crystal wineglasses carried in wicker picnic baskets.

Fran Fahnestock was holding court in the tent. The president of the "friends" had set up an informal one-woman receiving line to greet other "friends" such as William L. Shirer and Public Broadcasting Service president Hartford Gunn.

One of the BSO administrative staffers came up to shake her hand. Ms. Fahnestock found an opportunity to turn away at the crucial moment. Noblesse did not oblige to shake a hired hand, although, previously, Ms. Fahnestock had been seen around Boston with another administrative staffer who has now resigned. His name was David Rockefeller Jr.

Two middleaged women from the Bronx were outside looking in at the diners in the tent. "They told me it was for members only so I kept my mouth shut." The way she'd been going on, you figured it would take glue to keep that mouth shut. Still chattering, she wandered off with her friend into the patchwork quilt of blankets spread by picnickers in the $3 lawn spots.

A baby was crying. The Bronx woman looked down and saw a three-month-old in a Porta-crib. "I hope the little one likes Beethoven," the Bronx woman told the baby's mid-20ish mother. "She'd better," the mother replied. "They made us buy a ticket for her."

"They made you buy a ticket?!" The Bronx woman's mouth was now wide open with incredulity. "I guess it's fair," said the younger woman. "They want to discourage people from bringing infants . . . and with this kid crying like a banshee, I think I understand their point of view."

From the left: The casual concertgoer; the blouson sweater; William L. Shirer; Shirer's daughter, Suzanne Pelton; ready to sit it out; the concert couple.

From the left: Susan O'Brien; satin and fur under the tent; Eugene Ormandy; Joanna Simon.

Photos by Gwendolyn Stewart

Skrowaczewski built the music to a furious crescendo, the finale of the Eroica. And it was all over for another of Tanglewood's eight rite-of-summer weekends.

It was time for the 100-yard parking lot dash. The idea is to get your car out onto one of the tiny roads leading from Tanglewood as fast as possible. It is, in fact, a very good idea, because with 13,000 concertgoers and a proportionate number of cars carrying them, those little Berkshire roads see use which practically redefines the term 'traffic jam.'

Soon, the music Shed was empty. Only the stage manager remained, sidling among the music stands collecting the scores.

And up above, high in the girders, that little bird kept flying in and out, in and out.

—GERRY NADEL

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.

AUG 3 1973

New England Newspapers

Music review

Glorious weekend of Beethoven

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

BOSTON SYMPHONY officials and those in authority at Tanglewood have not been able to agree on what brought all-time record crowds to the three concerts of the season's third weekend. Not first in the order of importance but certainly not to be placed too far down the list was the weather, which permitted, nay, invited throngs of thousands to the lawns and beneath the idyllic pines in addition to the audiences that filled every seat in the great Shed at every performance.

Ludwig Beethoven, whose music was the sole source of all the concerts, was no negligible factor, nor were the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its guest conductors, Eugene Ormandy and Stanislas Skrowaczewski, to be placed far down the list.

* * *

No matter what the reason, it was a gala weekend from every viewpoint. Yesterday the orchestra played the Overture to Henrich Collin's tragedy, "Cariolan," and Beethoven's Third Symphony, and in the violin concerto Sidney Harth was the soloist.

Harth drew a big tone and used it where it was most essential with deep penetration. Occasional slight deviations of intonation could not detract from the sterling execution of the concerto, whose beauties were continually stressed without the artist's insisting on his superabundant technical prowess.

* * *

Skrowaczewski is a vehement conductor, but he got results from the orchestra. He was as forcible in the "Eroica" funeral march as he was certainly more justifiably in the Overture.

Throughout the rich fields of Beethoven's oeuvre are certain exquisite jewels, and Skrowaczewski saw to it that as they occurred they were exposed in their pristine glory. Such a one is the short phrase after the dirge-like introductory passage in which the strings utter a lament with profound supplication. Another such extremely felicitous instance comes in the larghetto of the violin concerto after the soloist has played the decorative ascending arpeggios. How Beethoven could cram such intense perception into so few almost adjoining tones is probably the quintessence of his genius.

* * *

Friday night Ormandy returned for what happily has now become a Tanglewood custom. He was in command on the two successive nights. Friday he played the "Leonore" Overture No. 3 and the Fifth Symphony. The soloist of the program was Phillippe Entremont in the "Emperor" piano concerto.

These were the first concerts in which the entire orchestra participated, the Esplanade concerts having retained a portion of the personnel in Boston through the previous weekend.

Entremont achieved a triumph in the piano concerto. It was an ideal welding of superlative technical equipment to expressive goals. No matter what the executional hurdles, every phrase was given graceful and meaningful contour, and his tone, notably in the slow movement, was consistently mellifluous.

* * *

It was gratifying to have Ormandy back at the helm again for his two evenings. The roster of conductors for this season at Tanglewood is impressive, but Ormandy is an old pro and the orchestra responds both to his total grasp of Beethoven and to the confidence his mature understanding inspires. There was electricity in the air for every bar in which he was in command.

The Fifth on Friday disclosed years of experience. Details were achieved as by telepathy rather than by extravagant gestures, and on Saturday night the Eighth and Ninth were monumental performances. In the Choral, the best quartet of soloists within Tanglewood memory consisted of Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Joanna Simon, contralto, Seth McCoy, tenor, and Peter Lagger, bass. To Lagger fell the ominous declamation in the finale, and he did it with stentorian power and remarkably controlled vocal excellence.

The Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus reflected the training given them by John Oliver, their conductor, and Ormandy held the reins of all his charges with consummate mastery.

* * *

There was scintillation in the air for the Ormandy programs. Contrasts and dynamic gradations were made to serve a visible plan and were achieved with a minimum of signals. The bond between the podium and desks was almost visible, and it was a joy to see an extremely experienced man show by paradoxical avoidance of infantile guidance a respect for the musicians which they, by their thorough and enthusiastic immersion in their tasks, patently reciprocated.

It is a matter of infinite speculation to conjecture what Beethoven might have accomplished had he lived on to the Scriptural three score and ten. On the other hand, one cannot but wonder what power inspired him to erect an eighth wonder of the world barely past middle age and, having done that, to apparently consider he had fulfilled his mission on earth.

* * *

For the weekend Prelude concert Friday, André Watts presented a program astutely chosen, solely of Beethoven as were all the other concerts of the weekend, to show some less common facets of the composer's works. He also made a few explanatory remarks which were of unusual interest and delivered with extremely amiable and informal grace.

Watts began with the Bagatelle "Fuer Elise," which he kept to its native simplicity, proceeding to "Rage over the lost penny," a delightfully descriptive sketch which the pianist made more a tantrum than a simple rage, and then came "32 variations on an original theme," in C minor.

He ended with the D Major Sonata, Op. 10, No. 3, which he conveyed with easy mastery. He gave the impressive agogic markably effective agogic stresses. It wasn't quite so apparent why the minuet which he had started so guilelessly should suddenly become so impetuous in the second strain, but technical dominion has a way at times of luring a man to his betrayal.

Whitestone

Pianist Entremont and conductor Ormandy

Record-Breaking Crowds Attend Berkshire Festival

Last weekend, the third Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, was taken over completely by Beethoven, who reigned supreme with the most popular of his works.

Friday evening began with the weekend Prelude and Andre Watts, in a full concert as piano solout. He played the "Fur Elise" Bagatelle and the Rondo a capriccio in G, both familiar pieces usually studied by young students of the piano. The 32 variations on an original theme in C minor followed, brilliantly and powerfully performed. The Sonata No. 3 in D completed this stimulating and inspiring early solo concert, beloved by beginning students as well as music lovers of any age.

A record attendance of 11,195 heard the Friday night concert, the largest Friday night audience since 1963.

Eugene Ormandy was guest conductor, one of the older of the celebrated and revered conductors of our age. He is the music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The program started with the Overture "Leonore" No. 3. The audience was then introduced to pianist Phillippe Entremont, his first appearance with the Boston Symphony. He gave a technically polished performance of the beloved "Emperor" concerto. The exuberant response from the audience was indicative of the concerto's popularity. The program ended with a rousing performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Ormandy exhorted the brass section to frenzied heights, much too blatant and bizarre for this reviewer's taste. However, the audience responded with thunderous applause and gave the conductor and orchestra a standing ovation.

Fourth Weekend

Saturday evening's program began with Beethoven's 8th Symphony. Due to traffic which jammed all roads leading to Tanglewood, this reviewer arrived too late to hear this delightful work, one of my favorites. The large number of music lovers generated by the traditionaly popular all-Beethoven weekend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood and the jazz concert at the Music Inn, combined to cause an impossible traffic mess, virtually blocking all through traffic, and parking on the Tanglewood grounds was impossible. Fortunately, traffic was finally unsnarled, allowing hundreds of concert-goers to arrive just in time to hear Beethoven's Ninth.

The attendance of 12,994 was also the largest on record for a Saturday concert. The star, of course, was once again Beethoven.

Again Ormandy drove the orchestra into high pitch. The soloists participating in the Finale of Schiller's "Ode to Joy" were accompanied by the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus, gave a rather disappointing rendition of this most monumental and moving work. The chorus and choir were outstanding, under the direction of John Oliver. Phyllis Curtin, soprano, was not at her best in this uplifting and glorious "Ode to Joy." She was joined by Joanna Simon, contralto, Seth McCoy, tenor and Peter Lagger, bass, who gave spirited support.

The enthusiastic audience cheered the conductor, soloists and choral groups and orchestra and bravoed again and again, attesting to the genius that was Beethoven.

harmonic. Mr. Harth gave a very sensitive, deeply moving and poetic rendition of this ever-popular concerto.

The last half of the concert concluded with Beethoven's magnificent "Eroica" Symphony No. 3, which is one of this composer's great creative works. The second movement, Marcia Funebre, was especially rooding and deeply moving, almost to heartbreak. To this reviewer's taste, Sunday's concert was the highpoint of the weekend. May I caution all Waterbury music lovers that Saturday evening concerts will be affected by the over-whelming visitors to the area, due to the jazz concerts. So start out an hour earlier if you want to secure a parking space.

14,307 Sunday

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins Friday with the 7 p.m. weekend Prelude, featuring Peter Lagger in a program of songs by Beethoven and accompanied on the piano by Malcolm Fragger. At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburg Symphony since 1952 will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahams program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in the Violin Concerto in D, with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C minor. On Saturday morning throughout the season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday. On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor (Unfinished) and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck, musical director of the National Orchestra of Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torer. The concert closes with Brahm's Symphony No. 4 in E minor. Before the Brahms, the orchestra will perform Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist. . . .

SYLVIA MEYERS

Traffic Jammed

The weekend's final concert on Sunday afternoon brought an attendance of 14,307, another record-breaking audience.

The program started with the Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collins tragedy "Coriolan," a most dramatic and gory piece put to music by Beethoven and is considered one of his noblest works. It is bold and emotional and the Shakespeare version of this tragedy is truly met and conquered by this composer.

Sunday's concert was conducted by the gifted Stanislaw Skrowaczewzewski, ably dedicated, who gave every evidence of his mastery and musicianship. He is conductor-in-residence at Tanglewood this summer at the Berkshire Music Center.

Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D, with Sidney Harth as soloist, marked his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was a winner of the Naumberg Award, gave a debut concert at Town Hall in New York, studied with Georges Enesco, among others. He was one of the gifted young violin soloists appearing with Mario DiCecco and the Waterbury Symphony Orchestra, soon after he received the award, and also once before at earlier engagement. He was concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Louisville Orchestra, then became concertmaster of the Chicago Symphony and a conductor with the Evanston Symphony. He has gained an international reputation and became the first American to place in the finals of the Wieniawski Competition in Poland. He has a prestigious background in both teaching and as a soloist. He was recently appointed associate conductor and concertmaster of the Los Angeles Phil-

AMERICAN (E)
WATERBURY, CONN.
D. 40,078
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD ATTENDANCE SETS RECORD

LENOX (AP) — Attendance at the Berkshire Music Center's Beethoven weekend estblished a record, the center said yesterday.

The center, known as Tanglewood, recorded a total of 42,604 people attending three concerts and an open rehearsal. The figure topped the previous weekend record of 41,337, estabished in 1972.

Tanglewood is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

1973 New Engl News
(M)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
1973 New England Newscli

In Brief . . .

Mayor Butler can be justifiably proud that after many tense moments over the past year he and George Nutman were able yesterday to sign the lease which activates urban renewal for North Street. His conviction that the $20 million project will be "the salvation of downtown Pittsfield" is solidly based. No other course appeared possible if the over-all renewal program were to be completed. Civic thanks should go to those whom the mayor praised for long hours of help, including GE and bank officials, Mr. Nutman, the city's two lawyers, and especially Attorney Robert T. Capeless, the former mayor, credited with salvaging the project when negotiations deadlocked.

*

Fortunately for Tanglewood, the 42,600 persons who made it to the weekend's concerts through unprecedented main-road traffic tieups were rewarded by what seem to have been unusually fine performances. Record-breaking audiences seem to be inseparable from increased highway snarls. That something can be done about it, however, is indicated by the way that special deputies improved the situation closer to Tanglewood and Music Inn. If added manpower can help elsewhere in the vulnerable areas, it would be worth the investment.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
JUL 30 1973 New England Newsclip

14,307 Beethoven Lovers Get an Earful of 'Eroica'

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — There were 14,307 Beethoven lovers at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon for the last of three weekend all Beethoven programs. They heard a really fine performance of a symphony many think is his best, The "Eroica."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was having a good day; the weather was favorable, the conductor (Stanislaw Skrowaczewski) was shaping Beethoven's phrases with a fine balance of strength and sensitivity, and the audience was especially responsibe.

The second movement, for instance, probably the most inspired funeral march in the books, was delivered with spine - tingling effect, and it is seldom that music so familiar can re-create the effect it had before it became too familiar.

The violin concerto before intermission (Opus 61), for which Sidney Harth was soloist, was not so successful. Harth is concert master and associate conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

The Beethoven concerto is openly a display piece used by violin virtuosos to dazzle their audiences, but Harth failed to be dazzling where dazzle was the only virtue available.

Certainly he got about the fingerboard with the required agility, but there was just enough trouble with precision of pitch to make the listener uneasy.

The middle movement, however, a beautiful interlude of flowing lyricism, was delivered with delicacy and feeling.

The opening piece was the overture for "Coriolan" (Opus 62), a short work with some dramatic gestures that Skrowaczewski exploited with skill.

Saturday was a day of cumulative joy at Tanglewood. It began in despair and ended in triumph.

At dawn — and all morning during the open rehearsal — there was a dismal rain making the grass, shoes, dispositions, woodwind reeds and fiddle strings soggy.

The management, counting on a big all Beethoven weekend to be a commercial bonanza, was gloomily predicting the loss of $15,000 to $18,000 in lawn customers.

But the rain gradually stopped, the picnikers filled the access roads, and the box office tallied 12,994 Beethoven fans of whom 7000 were on the lawn.

The program, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, began with a routine excellence with the eighth symphony which it continued to apply through the first movement of the giant (choral) symphony.

The second movement (when played Toscannini style) is a compelling experience charged with electric excitement. Ormandy slowed it a bit and subdued it.

The lyrical melodies of the slow third movement were entwined lovingly and gracefully. They prepared the audience soothingly for an unusually effective choral movement.

Over the years the choral movement has acquired an unfortunate veneer of bombast because its value rests almost wholly on its dramatic contrasts and power, and most choruses try to be nicely musical with it rather than theatrical.

The solo quartet didn't help it much, Saturday, but the combined Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus (about 140 voices) had been so thoroughly drilled by John Oliver for knife sharp entrances and cut offs and for heart stopping crescendoes that its sound lifted me right off my seat.

Ordinarily, the choral movement of the ninth is a disappointment for me. Saturday, as its words proclaim, it was a shout of joy.

The Sunday morning chamber music program by the Berkshire Music Center, was helped by a warm sun, and offered, as usual, an interesting variety. . .a Mendelssohn string quartet, a Mozart wind serenade (K.388) for pairs of oboes, clarinets, bassoons and French horns, and a Beethoven septet (Opus 20) for violin, viola, cello, clarinet, bassoon, and bass.

Most satisfying in performance as well as substance was the septet.

Attendande: Friday night, 11,195; Saturday morning, 4,128; Saturday night, 12,994; Sunday afternoon, 14,307; weekend, 42, 604.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
SARATOGIAN
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
D. 11,000
JUL 30 1973

Scribblings

by marie whitford

Saratoga Springs will be full of excitement this August as Secretariat vies for more honors, the Whitneys stage another big party and Swing Films begin filming a full length picture on two young and pretty gals, Claudia Hall-Watson Cole and Sherry Buchanan, coming to the Fasig-Tipton place to buy a yearling. They also attend the races, go party hopping and end up leaving for the Deauville sales in France. The name of the flick will be "The Favorite" and will be a love story based on international racing.

Virginia Guest a thoroughbred owner, will play herself in the movie. Julie Stine will be doing the music. Another star will be lovely Robin Carr of Leesburg, Va. Suzanne Heitmann is doing all the leg work for the film.

DICK AND DIANA STOKES

Diane and Dick Stokes, new to the racing game, will also appear in the movie. This reporter has been asked to work as technical advisor for the film.

The premiere will be shown in New York City in the fall followed by a ball with proceeds going to the choice of the Jockey Club.

Eugene Ormandy made the Boston Symphony sound like an orchestra again as he conducted the musicians at Tanglewood last week.

Record-Breaking Crowds Attend Berkshire Festival

Last weekend, the third Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, was taken over completely by Beethoven, who reigned supreme with the most popular of his works.

Friday evening began with the weekend Prelude and Andre Watts, in a full concert as piano solout. He played the "Fur Elise" Bagatelle and the Rondo a capriccio in G, both familiar pieces usually studied by young students of the piano. The 32 variations on an original theme in C minor followed, brilliantly and powerfully performed. The Sonata No. 3 in D completed this stimulating and inspiring early solo concert, beloved by beginning students as well as music lovers of any age.

A record attendance of 11,195 heard the Friday night concert, the largest Friday night audience since 1963.

Eugene Ormandy was guest conductor, one of the older of the celebrated and revered conductors of our age. He is the music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The program started with the Overture "Leonore" No. 3. The audience was then introduced to pianist Phillippe Entremont, his first appearance with the Boston Symphony. He gave a technically polished performance of the beloved "Emperor" concerto. The exuberant response from the audience was indicative of the concerto's popularity. The program ended with a rousing performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Ormandy exhorted the brass section to frenzied heights, much too blatant and bizarre for this reviewer's taste. However, the audience responded with thunderous applause and gave the conductor and orchestra a standing ovation.

Fourth Weekend

Saturday evening's program began with Beethoven's 8th Symphony. Due to traffic which jammed all roads leading to Tanglewood, this reviewer arrived too late to hear this delightful work, one of my favorites. The large number of music lovers generated by the traditionaly popular all-Beethoven weekend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood and the jazz concert at the Music Inn, combined to cause an impossible traffic mess, virtually blocking all through traffic, and parking on the Tanglewood grounds was impossible. Fortunately, traffic was finally unsnarled, allowing hundreds of concert-goers to arrive just in time to hear Beethoven's Ninth.

The attendance of 12,994 was also the largest on record for a Saturday concert. The star, of course, was once again Beethoven.

Again Ormandy drove the orchestra into high pitch. The soloists participating in the Finale of Schiller's "Ode to Joy" were accompanied by the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus, gave a rather disappointing rendition of this most monumental and moving work. The chorus and choir were outstanding, under the direction of John Oliver. Phyllis Curtin, soprano, was not at her best in this uplifting and glorious "Ode to Joy." She was joined by Joanna Simon, contralto, Seth McCoy, tenor and Peter Lagger, bass, who gave spirited support.

The enthusiastic audience cheered the conductor, soloists and choral groups and orchestra and bravoed again and again, attesting to the genius that was Beethoven.

harmonic. Mr. Harth gave a very sensitive, deeply moving and poetic rendition of this ever-popular concerto.

The last half of the concert concluded with Beethoven's magnificent "Eroica" Symphony No. 3, which is one of this composer's great creations. The second movement, Marcia Funebre, was especially rooding and deeply moving, almost to heartbreak. To this reviewer's taste, Sunday's concert was the highpoint of the weekend, May I caution all Waterbury music lovers that Saturday evening concerts will be affected by the over-whelming visitors to the area, due to the jazz concerts. So start out an hour earlier if you want to secure a parking space.

14,307 Sunday

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins Friday with the 7 p.m. weekend Prelude, featuring Peter Lagger in a program of songs by Beethoven and accompanied on the piano by Malcolm Fragger. At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburg Symphony since 1952 will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahams program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in the Violin Concerto in D, with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C minor. On Saturday morning throughout the season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday. On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor (Unfinished) and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck, musical director of the National Orchestra of Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torer. The concert closes with Brahm's Symphony No. 4 in E minor. Before the Brahms, the orchestra will perform Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist.

SYLVIA MEYERS

Traffic Jammed

The weekend's final concert on Sunday afternoon brought an attendance of 14,307, another record-breaking audience.

The program started with the Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collins tragedy "Coriolan," a most dramatic and gory piece put to music by Beethoven and is considered one of his noblest works. It is bold and emotional and the Shakespeare version of this tragedy is truly met and conquered by this composer.

Sunday's concert was conducted by the gifted Stanislaw Skrowaczewzewski, ably dedicated, who gave every evidence of his mastery and musicianship. He is conductor-in-residence at Tanglewood this summer at the Berkshire Music Center.

Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D, with Sidney Harth as soloist, marked his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was a winner of the Naumberg Award, gave a debut concert at Town Hall in New York, studied with Georges Enesco, among others. He was one of the gifted young violin soloists appearing with Mario DiCecco and the Waterbury Symphony Orchestra, soon after he received the award, and also once before at earlier engagement. He was concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Louisville Orchestra, then became concertmaster of the Chicago Symphony and a conductor with the Evanston Symphony. He has gained an international reputation and became the first American to place in the finals of the Wieniawski Competition in Poland. He has a prestigious background in both teaching and as a soloist. He was recently appointed associate conductor and concertmaster of the Los Angeles Phil-

AMERICAN (E)
WATERBURY CONN.
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD ATTENDANCE SETS RECORD

LENOX (AP) — Attendance at the Berkshire Music Center's Beethoven weekend esstblished a record, the center said yesterday.

The center, known as Tanglewood, recorded a total of 42,604 people attending three concerts and an open rehearsal. The figure topped the previous weekend record of 41,337, estabish-d in 1972.

Tanglewood is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New Engla News
New England Newsclip

In Brief . . .

Mayor Butler can be justifiably proud that after many tense moments over the past year he and George Nutman were able yesterday to sign the lease which activates urban renewal for North Street. His conviction that the $20 million project will be "the salvation of downtown Pittsfield" is solidly based. No other course appeared possible if the over-all renewal program were to be completed. Civic thanks should go to those whom the mayor praised for long hours of help, including GE and bank officials, Mr. Nutman, the city's two lawyers, and especially Attorney Robert T. Capeless, the former mayor, credited with salvaging the project when negotiations deadlocked.

*

Fortunately for Tanglewood, the 42,600 persons who made it to the weekend's concerts through unprecedented main-road traffic tieups were rewarded by what seem to have been unusually fine performances. Record-breaking audiences seem to be inseparable from increased highway snarls. That something can be done about it, however, is indicated by the way that special deputies improved the situation closer to Tanglewood and Music Inn. If added manpower can help eisewhere in the vulnerable areas, it would be worth the investment.

EAGLE (E)
JUL 1973
New England Newsclip

14,307 Beethoven Lovers Get an Earful of 'Eroica'

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — There were 14,307 Beethoven lovers at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon for the last of three weekend all Beethoven programs. They heard a really fine performance of a symphony many think is his best, The "Eroica."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was having a good day; the weather was favorable, the conductor (Stanislaw Skrowaczewski) was shaping Beethoven's phrases with a fine balance of strength and sensitivity, and the audience was especially responsibe.

The second movement, for instance, probably the most inspired funeral march in the books, was delivered with spine - tingling effect, and it is seldom that music so familiar can re-create the effect it had before it became too familiar.

The violin concerto before intermission (Opus 61), for which Sidney Harth was soloist, was not so successful. Harth is concert master and associate conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

The Beethoven concerto is openly a display piece used by violin virtuosos to dazzle their audiences, but Harth failed to be dazzling where dazzle was the only virtue available.

Certainly he got about the fingerboard with the required agility, but there was just enough trouble with precision of pitch to make the listener uneasy.

The middle movement, however, a beautiful interlude of flowing lyricism, was delivered with delicacy and feeling.

The opening piece was the overture for "Coriolan" (Opus 62), a short work with some dramatic gestures that Skrowaczewski exploited with skill.

Saturday was a day of cumulative joy at Tanglewood. It began in despair and ended in triumph.

At dawn — and all morning during the open rehearsal — there was a dismal rain making the grass, shoes, dispositions, woodwind reeds and fiddle strings soggy.

The management, counting on a big all Beethoven weekend to be a commercial bonanza, was gloomily predicting the loss of $15,000 to $18,000 in lawn customers.

But the rain gradually stopped, the picnikers filled the access roads, and the box office tallied 12,994 Beethoven fans of whom 7000 were on the lawn.

The program, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, began with a routine excellence with the eighth symphony which it continued to apply through the first movement of the giant (choral) symphony.

The second movement (when played Toscannini style) is a compelling experience charged with electric excitement. Ormandy slowed it a bit and subdued it.

The lyrical melodies of the slow third movement were entwined lovingly and gracefully. They prepared the audience soothingly for an unusually effective choral movement.

Over the years the choral movement has acquired an unfortunate veneer of bombast because its value rests almost wholly on its dramatic contrasts and power, and most choruses try to be nicely musical with it rather than theatrical.

The solo quartet didn't help it much, Saturday, but the combined Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus (about 140 voices) had been so thoroughly drilled by John Oliver for knife sharp entrances and cut offs and for heart stopping crescendoes that its sound lifted me right off my seat.

Ordinarily, the choral-movement of the ninth is a disappointment for me. Saturday, as its words proclaim, it was a shout of joy.

The Sunday morning chamber music program by the Berkshire Music Center, was helped by a warm sun, and offered, as usual, an interesting variety. . .a Mendelssohn string quartet, a Mozart wind serenade (K.388) for pairs of oboes, clarinets, bassoons and French horns, and a Beethoven septet (Opus 20) for violin, viola, cello, clarinet, bassoon, and bass.

Most satisfying in performance as well as substance was the septet.

Attendande: Friday night, 11,195; Saturday morning, 4,128; Saturday night, 12,994; Sunday afternoon, 14,307; weekend, 42, 604.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
SAR TUSIAN
(ALBANY MARKET ALL.)
D. 18,000
JUL 30 1973

Scribblings

by marie whitford

Saratoga Springs will be full of excitement this August as Secretariat vies for more honors, the Whitneys stage another big party and Swing Films begin filming a full length picture on two young and pretty gals, Claudia Hall-Watson Cole and Sherry Buchanan, coming to the Fasig-Tipton place to buy a yearling. They also attend the races, go party hopping and end up leaving for the Deauville sales in France. The name of the flick will be "The Favorite" and will be a love story based on international racing.

Virginia Guest a thoroughbred owner, will play herself in the movie. Julie Stine will be doing the music. Another star will be lovely Robin Carr of Leesburg, Va. Suzanne Heitmann is doing all the leg work for the film.

DICK AND DIANA STOKES

Diane and Dick Stokes, new to the racing game, will also appear in the movie. This reporter has been asked to work as technical advisor for the film.

The premiere will be shown in New York City in the fall followed by a ball with proceeds going to the choice of the Jockey Club.

Eugene Ormandy made the Boston Symphony sound like an orchestra again as he conducted the musicians at Tanglewood last week.

PASTORAL SCULPTURE — Just one of many modernistic sculptures to be seen throughout the grounds of Tanglewood. Created by area artists, the sculptures blend beautifully into the natural country setting a cultural plus for the thousands attending the famed outdoor Tanglewood concerts in seek of relaxation and the finest music in New England. (News Photo By Lindstrom)

TANGLEWOOD MUSIC SHED— Those music lovers who do not wish to spread blankets on the lawn of Tanglewood to enjoy both the sunshine and the good music may listen to the strains of the Boston Symphony from inside the music shed. The steel shed, which covers one and a half acres, seats 6,000. (News Photo by Lindstrom)

Idyllic Setting Lends Added Delight To Charm Of Tanglewood Concert

by Mary Lindstrom

HUNTINGTON — Strolling through the manicured acreages at Tanglewood is a most pleasant pastime. The 210 acres of lawn and meadow with the magnificent hemlocks, elms, pines and birches are a perfect background to the sounds of the beautiful music created by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at their summer home.

Scattered throughout the grounds are beautiful pieces of sculpture created by area artists that seem to blend into the natural country setting. It is not difficult to understand why author Nathaniel Hawthorne chose to live there in a red cottage in the 1800s and why William Aspinwall Tappan, a Boston banker, bought it as a gentleman's estate.

In the winter of 1936 the descendants of Tappan offered Tanglewood (the estate) to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for summer concert festivals. What surroundings could be more appropriate to beautiful music?

Saturday's Berkshire Festival Concert was no exception.

We were just two out of thousands, at least 6,000 in the music shed and several thousand more out on the grounds. The evening concert price range runs the gamut: $3 for entrance to the grounds two hours before the concert and $9 for the best seats in the shed. Dress and style also run the gamut. The majority of the people out on the grounds were very informal. In fact, some were eating picnic suppers (with candles in empty wine bottles on ice chests) in very casual clothes, making a day of it as in any park in the country, with the exception that live symphonic music enveloped the air.

Those in the shed having purchased higher priced tickets were dressed more formally but for the most part a casual summer style still prevailed. The formal, sometimes restrictive, atmosphere of a concert hall was not at all in evidence. Some people were smoking during the performance and many were sipping cool refreshments.

The 8:30 p.m. Saturday evening concert started 25 minutes late, perhaps because of traffic congestion, but any amount of lost time is easily compensated for once the performance begins.

Lost In Music

One minute into the Vivaldi in A for strings conducted by the 32-year-old dynamic Riccardo Muti, principal conductor of the New Philharmonia Orchestra of London and permanent conductor of the Florence Maggio Musicale Orchestra, and the surroundings are forgotten. There are three movements in this Concerto and the first, rather cheerful segment, outdid the second and third. The outstanding and well known concert pianist Andre Watts' Mozart performance of Piano Concerto in C minor was impeccable despite the rather rough coordination of full orchestra to piano at the start. The first andante in the number succeeded in creating the fine synchronization desired and the rather 'unhappy' minor concerto received several minutes of enthusiastic applause.

After at least a 30-minute intermission, with audience strolling out to purchase soda, beer or wine, the second and better half of the program began. The music is naturally more popular to the layman's ear because both numbers, The Mozart Symphony No. 34 in C and the Rossini Opera Overture to "La scala di seta", are bouyant and dynamic. Eyes are riveted on the conductor, who is literally out acting the direction and expression of the sound. The music seems to be flowing at some points and at others gushing out of Muti's very fingertips. The last two performances received the salute of the concert violinist and a lengthy standing ovation from the exuberant crowd.

MUSICAL MOPPET — This little tot is enthralled with the beautiful sounds and sights of Tanglewood. The weather was obliging at the Saturday concert, where music-lovers converged informally to picnic and listen—and just relax in the heavenly setting. (News Photo By Lindstrom)

Easy Exit

The performance was over at 11 p.m. and with the guidance of the Lenox Police Department, running a noteworthy operation, we were out of Lenox in 10 minutes into the smooth flowing double lines of one-way traffic.

The Berkshire Festival Concerts run for eight consecutive weekends in July and August. The Friday 9 p.m. performances include an extra 7 p.m. prelude offering guest artists and orchestra members in short recitals. The grounds are open two hours before each major concert. The Saturday 10:30 a.m. open rehearsal is perhaps one of the most popular concerts at $3 for unreserved seats or a spot on the ground. This is a favorite family time where many youngsters of every age including the bottle-carrying set gather on picnic blankets and spend all morning frolicking and snacking but mostly listening to the rehearsal. All children must have tickets. A full concert is presented at 8:30 Saturday eveniong and again on Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

Tickets can be obtained at the Festival Ticket Office at Tanglewood (413-637-1600) from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily and until intermission time on concert days or by writing to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240.

WESTFIELD EVENING NEWS
WESTFIELD, MASS.
D. 5,000

JUL 1.6 1973 New England

3 THIRD WEEKEND

JULY 20
7 pm Weekend Prelude
ANDRE WATTS
9 pm EUGENE ORMANDY
BEETHOVEN PROGRAM
Leonore Overture No. 3
"Emperor" Concerto
Philippe Entremont
Symphony No. 5

JULY 21
10:30 am Open Rehearsal
8:30 pm EUGENE ORMANDY
BEETHOVEN PROGRAM
Symphony No. 8
Symphony No. 9
Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Seth McCoy, Peter Lagger, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, Director

JULY 22
2:30 pm STANISLAW SKROWACZEWSKI
BEETHOVEN PROGRAM
Overture "Coriolan"
Violin Concerto
Sidney Harth
Symphony No. 3 "Eroica"

Kite July 18 1973

Tanglewood in Tune

Muti Leads Boston Symphony

By HARRY WEINTRAUB

With the laudable exception of last week's performance of Haydn's "Creation," the programs at Tanglewood so far have been confined to pleasant and familiar works from the Baroque and Classical repertoire. Saturday night's program was more of the same, Vivaldi, Mozart, and Rossini. But I am not complaining, for the combination of fine music, beautiful orchestral playing, and the introduction of an exciting conductor, Riccardo Muti, to Tanglewood audiences proved to be a most satisfying evening.

Leader in Europe

Riccardo Muti is well-known in the opera capitals of Europe. For a number of years he has been director and conductor of Florence's Maggio Musicale Orchestra and Opera and was recently named to succeed the late Otto Klemperer as principal conductor of London's New Philharmonia Orchestra.

At Florence he has conducted critically acclaimed productions of Meyerbeer's "L'Africain," Verdi's "Un Ballo in Maschera," Rossini's "Guillaume Tell," and Mussorgsky's "Khovanshcina." In Vienna, last season, his powerful conducting saved an otherwise unfortunate "Aida." He marked his American debut with the Philadelphia Orchestra this spring, and next year he will conduct the New York Philharmonic and the Cleveland and Chicago Orchestras.

Muti's Tanglewood program opened with a lush reading of Vivaldi's Concerto in A for Strings. Using a slightly reduced string orchestra, Muti produced a rich, lustrous sound from the Boston players who sometimes tend to be a bit scratchy in simple-scaled works. The harpsichord continuo was bright and audible in the rear of the shed.

Watts Not at His Best

The soloist in the Mozart 24th Piano Concerto (K.491) was Andre Watts, who this season is artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. I heard Muti and Sviatoslav Richter perform this work in Florence last year, and it was a totally different conception. While Richter and Muti underlined the power and drama of this work, Watts and Muti seemed to strive for poetry and grace in their performance. Watts was not playing at his best (I have never been particularly moved by his Mozart), and this became a sober, even somber reading and as such was ineffective, particularly in the first and last movements, and Watts' playing of the cadenzas was obtrusive in its mannered slowness. The orchestra played well, the horns having an exceptionally fine night.

Mozart's 34th Symphony (K. 338) received a much warmer, more affectionate performance. This symphony is not often played — there are good recordings of it available — and it was a pleasure to hear it played by Muti and the Boston. The first movement was taken at a bit more relaxed pace than the marked Allegro vivace. This was all to the good, though, for it underlined the rhythmic invention, especially in the winds. The second movement, a lovely Andante, scored for strings and bassoon only, was graceful and nicely balanced. The Finale was played briskly, and the dance-like concertante between the strings and winds again showed the Boston Symphony to be one of the finest orchestras for Mozart.

Gomberg on Oboe

The program ended with a wonderfully sharp-witted and animated performance of Rossini's Overture to "La scala di seta." The orchestra's principal oboe, Ralph Gomberg, was given a well-deserved bow, and the orchestra and the audience offered Muti a generous ovation.

Riccardo Muti will certainly be welcomed back to Tanglewood any time, and definitely will be a welcome addition to American orchestras' roaming band of conductors. And Muti's conducting would be a terrific boost to the disgracefully weak Italian wing at the Metropolitan Opera.

* * * *

Looking Ahead

For next week, try to get up to Saratoga for the New York City Ballet. I can most heartily recommend all the programs, but if you haven't seen them already, you should try for the new Balanchine and Robbins ballets, the exquisite "Pulcinella," and the delightful "Concert."

At Tanglewood next week, Eugene Ormandy and Beethoven will hold forth. Philippe Entremont makes his Boston debut with the "Emperor" on Friday night, and the 8th and 9th Symphonines occupy Saturday night's program. Ormandy, while neither an exciting nor a demanding conductor, can always be counted on for good, solid performances and great sound from whatever orchestra he conducts. Sidney Harth plays the Beethoven Violin Concerto Sunday afternoon.

Best bet: Saturday night.

* * * *

On Records

Starting this week, the Kite reviewers will offer their suggestions for recorded performances of pieces played at Tanglewood and Saratoga.

Odyssey, Columbia's low-priced label, has a marvelous Vivaldi series, running into 6 or 7 volumes. My Schwann catalogue does not use the same numbering system as the Tanglewood program book, but I can recommend all of the Vivaldi recordings in the Odyssey series without qualification.

Clifford Curzon's excellent performances of Mozart's 23rd (K.488) and 24th (K.491) Piano Concertos is on London 6580 with Istvan Kertesz's fine conducting of the London Symphony Orchestra.

Both George Szell's conducting of Mozart's 34th Symphony (K.338) on Philips 802769 and Colin Davis's on RCA VICS-1382 are very fine, but I would recommend Szell for the superiority of his orchestra (the Amsterdam Concertgebouw) and for the coupling with a truly exciting performance of Beethoven's 5th Symphony.

Good collections of Rossini's more popular overtures, including "La Scala di Seta" are conducted by Giulini on Seraphim S-60138 and by Gamba on London 6204. Avoid Bernstein's and Karajan's recordings.

NEWS (E)
MALDEN, MASS.
D. 12,620
JUL 16 1973
New England Newspapers

Beethoven Week July 20 at Lenox

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX — The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven Weekend, begins on Friday, July 20, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts. Mr. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle "Fur Elise," Rondo a capriccio in G ('Rage over the lost penny), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata no. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m. Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture 'Leonore' no. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano concerto no. 5 in E flat, the 'Emperor', with pianist Philippe Entermont as soloist.

Mr. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30 a.m. as on every Saturday morning during the Tangelwood session, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony no. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin soprano, Joanna Simon contralto, Seth McCoy tenor, Peter Lagger bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22 at 2:30 p.m., Stanislwa Skrowaczewski, Music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, Gill conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Hein-Beh Joseph von Collin's tragedy 'Coriolan' followed by 'Cethoven's Violin concerto in D Beth violinist Sidney Harth as soloist.

HERALD (E)
MANCHESTER, CONN.
D. 15,
JUL 15 1973
New England Newspapers

The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven weekend, begins next Friday with the 7 p.m. prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts.

At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" no. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano Concerto no. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor," with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist. The concert will close with Beethoven's Symphony no. 5 in C minor.

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 251,094
JUL 15 1973

Tanglewood

All-Beethoven weekend set

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. — The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven weekend, begins Friday, with the 7 p.m. weekend prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts.

Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle 'Fur Elise', Pondo a capriccio in G ("Rage over the Lost Penny"), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata No. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's "Overture 'Leonore' No. 3" followed by Bethoven's Piano concerto No. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor," with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance.

Maestro Ormandy closes the concert with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor.

Saturday at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony No. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony No. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Joanna Simon, contralto; Seth McCoy, tenor; Peter Lagger, bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Next Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy "Coriolan" followed by Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D with Sidney Harth as soloist. Skrowaczewski closes the concert and the Beethoven weekend with Symphony No. 3 in E flat, the "Eroica."

PHYLLIS CURTIN

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUL 15 1973

MUSIC

- It's time for Ludwig Van at Tanglewood next weekend. Eugene Ormandy, music director and conductor of The Philadelphia Orchestra takes a turn before the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday and Saturday conducting the BSO in works that include Beethoven's "Lenore Overture No. 3," and "Symphony No. 9" respectively.

THIRD WEEKEND

Weekend Prelude
ANDRÉ WATTS
EUGENE ORMANDY
BEETHOVEN PROGRAM
Leonore Overture No. 3
"Emperor" Concerto
Philippe Entremont
Symphony No. 5

Open Rehearsal
EUGENE ORMANDY
BEETHOVEN PROGRAM
Symphony No. 8
Symphony No. 9
Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Seth McCoy, Peter Lagger, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, Director

STANISLAW SKROWACZEWSKI
BEETHOVEN PROGRAM
Overture "Coriolan"
Violin Concerto
Sidney Harth
Symphony No. 3 "Eroica"

Kite July 18 1973

Tanglewood in Tune

Muti Leads Boston Symphony

By HARRY WEINTRAUB

With the laudable exception of last week's performance of Haydn's "Creation," the programs at Tanglewood so far have been confined to pleasant and familiar works from the Baroque and Classical repertoire. Saturday night's program was more of the same, Vivaldi, Mozart, and Rossini. But I am not complaining, for the combination of fine music, beautiful orchestral playing, and the introduction of an exciting conductor, Riccardo Muti, to Tanglewood audiences proved to be a most satisfying evening.

Leader in Europe

Riccardo Muti is well-known in the opera capitals of Europe. For a number of years he has been director and conductor of Florence's Maggio Musicale Orchestra and Opera and was recently named to succeed the late Otto Klemperer as principal conductor of London's New Philharmonia Orchestra.

At Florence he has conducted critically acclaimed productions of Meyerbeer's "L'Africain," Verdi's "Un Ballo in Maschera," Rossini's "Guillaume Tell," and Mussorgsky's "Khovanshcina." In Vienna, last season, his powerful conducting saved an otherwise unfortunate "Aida." He marked his American debut with the Philadelphia Orchestra this spring, and next year he will conduct the New York Philharmonic and the Cleveland and Chicago Orchestras.

Muti's Tanglewood program opened with a lush reading of Vivaldi's Concerto in A for Strings. Using a slightly reduced string orchestra, Muti produced a rich, lustrous sound from the Boston players who sometimes tend to be a bit scratchy in simple-scaled works. The harpsichord continuo was bright and audible in the rear of the shed.

Watts Not at His Best

The soloist in the Mozart 24th Piano Concerto (K.491) was Andre Watts, who this season is artist-in-residence at the Berkshire Music Center. I heard Muti and Sviatoslav Richter perform this work in Florence last year, and it was a totally different conception. While Richter and Muti underlined the power and drama of this work, Watts and Muti seemed to strive for poetry and grace in their performance. Watts was not playing at his best (I have never been particularly moved by his Mozart), and this became a sober, even somber reading and as such was ineffective, particularly in the first and last movements, and Watts' playing of the cadenzas was obtrusive in its mannered slowness. The orchestra played well, the horns having an exceptionally fine night.

Mozart's 34th Symphony (K. 338) received a much warmer, more affectionate performance. This symphony is not often played — there are good recordings of it available — and it was a pleasure to hear it played by Muti and the Boston. The first movement was taken at a bit more relaxed pace than the marked Allegro vivace. This was all to the good, though, for it underlined the rhythmic invention, especially in the winds. The second movement, a lovely Andante, scored for strings and bassoon only, was graceful and nicely balanced. The Finale was played briskly, and the dance-like concertante between the strings and winds again showed the Boston Symphony to be one of the finest orchestras for Mozart.

Gomberg on Oboe

The program ended with a wonderfully sharp-witted and animated performance of Rossini's Overture to "La scala di seta." The orchestra's principal oboe, Ralph Gomberg, was given a well-deserved bow, and the orchestra and the audience offered Muti a generous ovation.

Riccardo Muti will certainly be welcomed back to Tanglewood any time, and definitely will be a welcome addition to American orchestras' roaming band of conductors. And Muti's conducting would be a terrific boost to the disgracefully weak Italian wing at the Metropolitan Opera.

* * * *

Looking Ahead

For next week, try to get up to Saratoga for the New York City Ballet. I can most heartily recommend all the programs, but if you haven't seen them already, you should try for the new Balanchine and Robbins ballets, the exquisite "Pulcinella," and the delightful "Concert."

At Tanglewood next week, Eugene Ormandy and Beethoven will hold forth. Philippe Entremont makes his Boston debut with the "Emperor" on Friday night, and the 8th and 9th Symphonines occupy Saturday night's program. Ormandy, while neither an exciting nor a demanding conductor, can always be counted on for good, solid performances and great sound from whatever orchestra he conducts. Sidney Harth plays the Beethoven Violin Concerto Sunday afternoon.

Best bet: Saturday night.

* * * *

On Records

Starting this week, the Kite reviewers will offer their suggestions for recorded performances of pieces played at Tanglewood and Saratoga.

Odyssey, Columbia's low-priced label, has a marvelous Vivaldi series, running into 6 or 7 volumes. My Schwann catalogue does not use the same numbering system as the Tanglewood program book, but I can recommend all of the Vivaldi recordings in the Odyssey series without qualification.

Clifford Curzon's excellent performances of Mozart's 23rd (K.488) and 24th (K.491) Piano Concertos is on London 6580 with Istvan Kertesz's fine conducting of the London Symphony Orchestra.

Both George Szell's conducting of Mozart's 34th Symphony (K.338) on Philips 802769 and Colin Davis's on RCA VICS-1382 are very fine, but I would recommend Szell for the superiority of his orchestra (the Amsterdam Concertgebouw) and for the coupling with a truly exciting performance of Beethoven's 5th Symphony.

Good collections of Rossini's more popular overtures, including "La Scala di Seta" are conducted by Giulini on Seraphim S-60138 and by Gamba on London 6204. Avoid Bernstein's and Karajan's recordings.

Beethoven Week July 20 at Lenox

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. — The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven Weekend, begins on Friday, July 20, with the 7 p.m. "Weekend Prelude" concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts. Mr. Watts will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle "Fur Elise," Rondo a capriccio in G ("Rage over the lost penny"), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata no. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" no. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano Concerto no. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor", with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist.

Mr. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony No. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony no. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Joanna Simon, contralto, Seth McCoy, tenor, Peter Lagger, bass, the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

On Sunday, July 22, at 2:30, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music Director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy "Coriolan" followed by Beethoven's Violin concerto in D. Violinist Sidney Harth is soloist.

The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven weekend, begins next Friday with the 7 p.m. prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in Residence pianist Andre Watts.

At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" no. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano Concerto no. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor," with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist. The concert will close with Beethoven's Symphony no. 5 in C minor.

Tanglewood

All-Beethoven weekend set

LENOX, Mass. — The third weekend at Tanglewood, an all-Beethoven weekend, begins Friday, July 20, at 7 p.m. Weekend prelude concert featuring 1973 Granrud Artist-in-Residence pianist Andre Watts.

This will perform Beethoven's Bagatelle "Fur Elise," Rondo a capriccio in G ("Rage over the Lost Penny"), 32 variations on an original theme in C minor and Sonata No. 3 in D.

At 9 p.m., Eugene Ormandy, who is now in his 37th year as music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Overture "Leonore" no. 3 followed by Beethoven's Piano Concerto no. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor," with pianist Philippe Entremont as soloist.

Mr. Entremont appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time at this performance.

On Saturday, July 21 at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning during the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in two Beethoven symphonies. The concert begins with Symphony No. 8 in F and is followed by Symphony No. 9 in D minor with Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Joanna Simon, contralto; Seth McCoy, tenor; Peter Lagger, bass; the Tanglewood Choir and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Next Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minnesota Orchestra and 1973 Tanglewood Granrud Artist-in-Residence, will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collin's tragedy "Coriolan" followed by Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D with Sidney Harth as soloist. Skrowaczewski closes the series of the Beethoven weekend with Symphony No. 3 in E flat, the "Eroica."

PHYLLIS CURTIN

MUSIC

● It's time for Ludwig Van at Tanglewood next weekend. Eugene Ormandy, music director and conductor of The Philadelphia Orchestra takes a turn before the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday and Saturday, conducting the BSO in works that include Beethoven's "Leonore Overture No. 3," and "Symphony No. 9" respectively.

UNION (M)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
JUL 21 1973
New England Newsclip

Beethoven Owns Tanglewood for The Weekend

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — It's Beethoven weekend at Tanglewood. He owns it. He wrote everything being played, and he always draws a big crowd no matter how routine the program is . . . routine for Beethoven, that is.

The 11,195 listeners counted through the gates made it the biggest Friday night since 1963. The program was the "Leonore" Overture No. 3, the "Emperor" Piano Concerto with Philippe Entremont as soloist and the Fifth Symphony . . . with Eugene Ormandy as conductor, a routine Beethoven program.

The only aspect mildly unusual was the appearance of Entremont, a thoroughly French pianist who has been performing in America for 20 years, but who was making his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

But he offered no surprises. In truth, it seemed as if he were offering a view of the tried-and-true "Emperor" that he perfected 20 years ago and is still pulling out of the drawer for display whenever anyone comes up with the price.

There was an aura of polished formula about the performance, an exhibit of professional competence, a display of cool and experienced technique, an almost machine-like run-through of a thoroughly studied script.

It was Beethoven's music which carried the day, not the performance. The moments of beauty may be attributed to professionals who avoid errors (although orchestra and soloist were not always together) as a matter of efficiency so that Beethoven's music was exposed rather than illuminated.

Something the same may be said about the overture that started the program and the symphony that closed it. Although that routine may be laid to Ormandy rather than Entremont.

Ormandy has been on or near the top of America's list of conductors for so long that he has achieved a first-class commercial value, but somehow the music he has stood up for at Tanglewood in my hearing has been like plastic . . . smoothly turned out and without personality or depth of feeling.

(But then, of course, that's entirely a personal response.)

Andre Watts, the celebrated young pianist who is conducting seminars at the Berkshire Music Center as well as performing for the festival, gave a 48-minute recital of Beethoven's piano music for the 7 p. m. prelude concert.

He smiled at the early audience, picked up a microphone, said that because of the informality of the prelude program he would offer a couple of oral program notes and went on to say that the first two pieces, in spite of their first-year-student simplicity, "are very special."

They were a familiar bagatelle called "Fur Elise" and a rondo, Opus 29. He played the bagatelle with nice simplicity indeed and the runs of the rondo with such astonishing speed and clarity that it became an experience a first-year student can only aspire to.

Then he said the "32 variations on an original theme" in C Minor showed a "masterfully written variety of technique" even though Beethoven himself is on record as not thinking very highly of it.

The Sonata No. 3 in D, Opus 10, which followed the variations, however, is a superior work and it was "masterfully" performed. The slow movement was especially effective, perhaps because Watts said it is the "first of a long line of truly profound slow movements."

It has a melody that grows from a misty, ephemeral dream to a soaring flight with the pride of an eagle, and Watts played it with apparent total involvement.

Tonight Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's Eighth and Ninth Symphonies.

Standing Ovation for Ormandy

Kite Mag. July 25 1973

Boston Symphony Not Sound Proof

A grateful Tanglewood audience of over 12,000 gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Eugene Ormandy a 10-minute standing ovation Saturday night. The program was devoted to Beethoven's Eighth and Ninth Symphonies and attracted the largest crowd I've ever seen at Tanglewood.

Eugene Ormandy has been music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra since 1936 and is a popular conductor, on record and in the concert hall everywhere. He is not known as a Beethoven conductor in the way Toscanini, Szell, or Klemperer were, but his performance with the BSO exhibited some unusual virtues and also some of his shortcomings.

Produces 'Own Sound'

Ormandy has created with his own orchestra what some critics call the "Philadelphia Sound." This is a rich, lush, dark sound that is more luxurious than, say, the sound of the Cleveland under Szell or the Boston under Leinsdorf. It is a sound which finds itself more at home in the late Romantics, Tchaikovsky, Mahler or Bruckner, than with the Classical and early Romantic composers, Haydn, Mozart, and Schubert.

Ormandy, an expert conductor, is able to draw much of this sound from any orchestra he conducts, and he succeeded in doing so Saturday night. Unfortunately, this is calling forth a voice that is not the Boston's own and with which the members of that great orchestra did not, as an ensemble, feel entirely comfortable.

The Eighth Symphony opened the program and it received a robust performance. Of the nine Beethoven symphonies, I hold the Eighth in special affection because of its lively energy and profound humor. It is Beethoven at his most, to use his own highly descriptive expression, Aufgeknopft ("Unbuttoned"). Beethoven's humor was what we, in the Age of Nixon, would call low, but in its harmless practical joking and love of vulgar puns it recalls a happier and freer time.

Missed Comic Element

The Eighth Symphony was written in a terribly confusing time in Beethoven's life, and though it is hazardous to read life into musical notation, this symphony more than the eight others, reflects Beethoven's boisterous and very earthy humor. It is just this comic element that Ormandy missed. The BSO's performance was loud, even raucous at times, but it didn't dance and sing.

The Ninth Symphony is Beethoven's greatest work in conception and will. It is, more than any other of his works, a vigorous, maybe militant statement of his belief in the sacredness of life and of his love for all men. The Ninth is a large, sprawling symphony of four movements, the last a musical setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy" for chorus and four soloists. The Ninth is my least favorite of Beethoven's symphonies. It is long and diffuse and while never a failure, it lacks the unity of conception in its broad outlines and in its detail that mark the other symphonies. There seems to me to be, in the Ninth, a lack of humaneness in its vast and powerful attempt to reach and embrace all humanity. There have been performances, though, which in their pacing and attention to line have been at some moments exciting and fascinating in terms of revealing Beethoven's force and raw power. I think of the opening of the second movement and the great second entrance of the chorus.

Volumes of Sound

The Boston played beautifully, and mention should certainly be made of the special playing of the principal winds, Doriot Anthony Dwyer (flute), Ralph Gomberg (oboe), and Sherman Walt (bassoon) and the principal horn, Charles Kavaloski. There were rough moments of ensemble, particularly in the first movement, but it was otherwise a pleasure to hear the BSO playing so well. Ormandy drew great volumes of sound from the orchestra that were surprising but which marred the musical line and made the flow of music erratic. The symphony did not move along with either the power, in the first, second, and fourth movements, or the grace in the third that are so necessary. Ormandy seemed more intent on producing beautiful sounds as isolated sounds than he did a coherent reading of this great, fallen score.

The Tanglewood Choir and Tanglewood Festival Chorus were youthful and fresh-voiced, and it seems almost unkind to mention their lack of practice in German pronunciation, but the leadenness of read syllables was intrusive. The soloists were forceful but did not sing with much refinement or style. Phyllis Curtin, the soprano, had what I hope was an off night, but she has given us so many worthwhile memories over her long career that one such performance does not matter.

By HARRY WEINTRAUB

BOSTON PHOENIX
BOSTON, MASS.
JUL 31 1973
New England Newsclip

Ear Trumpet

Music: Festivals - Berkshire Beethoven

By David Moran

Students of Renaissance internal medicine will want to know, before reading further, that this part of the column comes from someone whose balance of humours has changed of late. To wit: my spleen has been excised, and I presumably have nothing more to vent. Indeed, if the task is bearable, BAD music fans and Elizabethan pathologists should assiduously compare ensuing judgments with what I have said before, to determine whether the malice (and other splenetic qualities) has diminished, the benignity increased. Some biliousness, phlegmaticity, sanguinity, melancholy and so on must remain, but for the rest, it's a whole new ball game.

When Beethoven has visited Tanglewood in the past, the BSO has sometimes given him a we-can-play-you-in-our-sleep greeting. So it was with a little apprehension that, scores in hand, I tuned in to the Ludwig weekend that began Friday the 20th. I should note immediately that this is a review of a radio broadcast. WGBH provided, as usual, the most pristine of signals (also as usual, they need money right away, in order to continue these broadcasts). The advantages of Tanglewood home listening may not be readily apparent: you can depending on your sound system, frequently hear more clearly than you can attending; you can turn pages and conduct along, without being stared at except by your spouse; you can be more comfortable; you have different visual distractions; if you tape the music, you can later verify initial perceptions, and so on (The drawbacks are obvious).

concert. Its rendition was just as full of zing and power as the Fifth had been; Ormandy's attacks were a marvel of precision. The Eighth unfolds with amazing invention and surprise, particularly in the enlarging significance of minor harmonic detail and in some of the driving, unresolved (until the last moment) chords. Ormandy's realization was so attentive to these matters that I recalled Charles Rosen's observation that for Beethoven the exploratory function of music took precedence over pleasure, instruction, sometimes even expression.

Stanislav Skrowaczewski, conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony, presented the third high point of the week-end, Beethoven's Third Symphony. His no-nonsense way with the "Eroica" 's opening chords presaged the vigor of the pitched battle the music contains in the first movement. He conducted with great sweep, punctuating it with those incredible offbeats in their nearly Rite-of-Spring voicings. (The movement's end was greeted with a loud yelp of pleasure from a member of the audience, incidentally.) The second movement takes one through more changes per unit of time than is even Beethoven's custom. There was some beautiful soloing, often a BSO problem; oddities of tempo and rubato, however, began to appear. The third movement was taken briskly, but Skrowaczewski set forth its stunning rhythms deftly, and the French horns adequately negotiated their tough passages. The last movement was similarly quick, but with large pauses and much slowness in the more developmental variations. Still, this performance as a whole was every bit as inspired as Colin Davis's winter one. Of this the BSO can be proud, for Tanglewood has occasionally discouraged such excitement in standard repertory playing. Berkshire humidity has something to do with it, noticeably in the strings, but not this week-end, even though I was told that Friday and Saturday were typically damp.

With all of this magnificent music being played zealously, it's almost a relief to report that there was crummy Beethoven, too. To have withstood a superb Ninth and Violin Concerto would have been difficult. (Indeed, the BSO should consider whether, every summer, so much Beethoven at one time is not excessive.)

iIn famous Beethoven's famous Ninth (Ringo Starr's phrase), which closed Saturday night, one didn't want to accuse Ormandy of getting lost. Yet in the first movement several choirs, notably woodwinds, appeared not to know what was going on; and the orchestra altogether seemed frequently to be mumbling incoherently or simply flailing away with no goal in sight. The interior movements were better in this regard, despite their sounding rushed and under-rehearsed; the last movement (a four-movement symphony by itself, Rosen notes) pointed up the contrast between charged orchestral and choral work (the latter by the Tanglewood Festival Chorus), and the strained output of the breathless vocal quartet. Peter Lagger's opening statement was robust and in tune, though his German was ridiculous; elsewhere he had to push too hard. Joanna Simon and Seth McCoy sounded good in their somewhat less important parts, but Phyliss Curtin appeared to be in no shape for the rigors at the top, and was strikingly short-winded. Granted, it's terribly difficult music, a kind of late quartet for voice, and I've heard worse maneuverings. But the Ninth was a let-down after the Eighth, in my opinion, and who would have thought that possible?

The Violin Concerto was Sunday's first big piece, following an expertly rendered "Coriolan" Overture. I have never heard the BSO play their part of this concerto badly, and Skrowaczewski kept the music flowing. Violin soloist Sidney Harth, however, fairly botched it: from his sour opening to his disastrous cadenza I heard little to enjoy. His pitch was all over the place, his tone was wiry, his technique unremarkable. The cutesy phrasing in the final movement I found particularly ill-conceived; but perhaps that was because of the unattractive, choking moments. In the slowly-played second movement, Harth improved, it is true. He had a good sense of where he was going, which is hard to project in this movement, and momentarily his tone and phrasing became almost elegant. Still, notes were dropped and other errors were audible. One had only to recall Isaac Stern's lush, true reading of three summers ago (the Beethoven bicentennial) to recognize the depth of Harth's ineptitude.

NEWS
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
W. 1,350
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

Mostly Music

Tanglewood and Ormandy

by Bill Merrill

Ludvig van Beethoven
Symphony No. 8 in F, Op.93
Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Op. 125

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra for nearly four decades, made an appearance at Tanglewood Saturday night to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's last two symphonies. A record-breaking throng of music-lovers, approaching 12 thousand in number, braved threatening skies, and was rewarded not only with decent weather, but with a splendid performance. I sometimes wonder if there is an invisible shield over Tanglewood to protect it from the rain. I've been going there for years and have gotten wet but once.

To get to the music, Mr. Ormandy was certainly up to the task. His approach to the Eighth made this usually light and easy-going symphony surge with a depth of emotion this reviewer has never heard in the work before. And yet, the Eighth is reputedly a light-hearted, and above all, spontaneous piece. (It was but four months after Beethoven completed the Seventh that the Eighth appeared.) Most interpretations range from flighty to boring, the former being especially the case in the second movement, which imitates a metronome, while the latter term often applies to the third movement, the minuet. The piece's own natural wit and melodiousness redeem Beethoven, and frequently the conductor. Ormandy's version, however, was profound and moving, and such a rendition of the work was indeed an experience.

And then came the Ninth, a work unheard since its electronic massacre in the recent motion picture "A Clockwork Orange." It is nice to know that no matter how much the movies (or tv or Broadway, etc.) attempts to corrupt great music, that the unpleasantness of its desecration is soon forgotten. Ormandy's tempos were spirited throughout. When he came to Tanglewood last summer to do Bartok's masterpiece, the Concerto for Orchestra, the product had several points to be desired, namely, dash, daring and individuality. But with Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony, the Maestro was on familiar ground, and the result was pure joy. Unfortunately, the soloists sounded as though pushed, as though they were accustomed to performing at a slower pace. Also the soprano, Phyllis Curtain, had a tendency to come across somewhat nervous and squeaky. But all in all, it was a dramatic end to an excellent concert.

Pianist Andre Watts Lacks Great Virtuoso Technique

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

The Friday Prelude in the Shed at Tanglewood had an unusually large audience due entirely to the curiosity of music lovers concerning pianist Andre Watts, who through heavy and prestigious bookings, the imprimatur of Lenny, and marvelous public relations has become, for the nonce, a big draw around the country.

At this stage, and after hearing him do a Mozart Concerto and now a solo recital, it would appear that Watts is first class of second class. This isn't bad, and, of course he is a young man, but it would appear that he has been thrown out into the cruel world too soon.

HIS PROGRAM WAS lesser Beethoven in some regards, and unusual for one who wishes to be considered a virtuoso. Bagatelle "Fur Elise" (a piece most of us have sweated over), Rondo capriccio in G Op 129, 32 variations on a theme in C Minor and the Sonata No. 3 in D Op. 10.

Watts played them all with some grace and a good sense of the musical sensibilities involved, but, overall he lacks that final most difficult step into full blown virtuosity and perhaps he should be at that stage now if we are to believe the glowing notices he brings with him.

But the great virtuoso technique, that sweeping and electrive drive that all great pianists have and have had, is not at his command at this stage.

EUGENE ORMANDY WAS directing on both Friday and Saturday nights and the two concerts (all-Beethoven) drew almost 25,000 people.

Saturday night was a happening, that is all there is to that, and for once, most of the excitement and approval was well-deserved. The program included the Symphonies No. 8 and 9, and the Ninth showed both Ormandy and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at their best.

All the Young Turks that are taking over the big orchestras here and abroad should pay attention to what Ormandy is capable of making an orchestra do with the traditional repertory. He is under considerable criticism of late for his conservatism in matters musical and there is a good deal of truth in that. But the difference between Ormandy conducting the Ninth and, say, Boulez, Mehta, or Ozawa, is that Ormandy really believes in this music. To him a Beethoven's Ninth is the culmination of all his musical experience, and while this is a rigid concept, it makes for a tremendous reading of the work.

THE BSO PLAYED as they have not played for some time, almost as if it were a new experience. From the first the players were up, paying strict attention and were therefore right on the money. The reading snapped and crackled with emotion and electricity; this was no occasion for the casual approach to the job. Ormandy's cold blue Hungarian eyes were on everyone and the ear was tuned for the slightest aberration in this work that he knows so well.

The soloists were all there to sing, even in as minor a part as they play. Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon (sister of Carla), Set McCoy and Peter Lagger were the quartet and they were swept along with the rest of them.

The Tanglewood Chorus made a major contribution, as well they should, singing with vigor and spirit.

The outburst from the 12,000-member audience was spontaneous, heartfelt and lasted forever. This work for whatever reason, seems to have taken on an extra musical life of its own. For once the generations seem to agree on one piece of music that moves them all.

But this would not surprise Beethoven. He always knew he was a great genius.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 23 1973

Beethoven Weekend Draws Record Throng

By EDWARD FRENCH

The third Tanglewood weekend was devoted entirely to music by Beethoven. It also was the first weekend for the full Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Friday and Saturday evenings Eugene Ormandy conducted. His Beethoven has the authority and understanding that comes from four decades of directing major orchestras in a repertory heavily weighted on the standard classic side.

The 42,640 who attended these concerts established a new Tanglewood record.

ORMANDY'S authority was immediately apparent in the Overture "Leonore" No. 3, with the famous off-stage trumpet passages and the accompaniment to Philippe Entremont in the Concerto for Piano and Orchestra No. 5 in E flat.

Entremont's performance was large scaled, rather percussive but technically secure. There was an abundance of exuberant rhythmic vitality, particularly in the Rondo.

Ormandy's reading of the Fifth Symphony was notable for cohesiveness, an infallible instinct for perfect tonal balance and a warmth that seems to be characteristic of musicians whose training and initital experiences were in central Europe. He brought renewed freshness and vitality to that old war horse, the Fifth Symphony.

Ormandy's ability to make an orchestra play over its head was gradually illustrated Saturday evening in a performance of the Symphony No. 8 in F major, and an absolutely magnificent realization of the Ninth Symphony, with its Choral Finale.

THERE WAS a perfection to the orchestra's playing in the Ninth we have heard surpassed in many years of concert going. This work can seem overlong and repetitive with the wrong conductor, but Saturday's performance was so well proportioned and has such tonal splendor that the end came all too soon.

On a par with the orchestral performance was the singing of the John Oliver-trained Tanglewood Festival Chorus. This was one time the soprano had the height and quality to cope with Beethoven's tortuous demands.

A fine blend was achieved by a capable solo quartet of Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Joanna Simon, mezzo, Seth McCoy, tenor, and Peter Lagger, bass. The latter's opening solo of the "Ode to Joy" was stunning.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,638

JUL 24 1973

EUGENE ORMANDY
. . . at Tanglewood

Ludwig packs them in

By MARK STUART
Staff Writer

Beethoven is still boss.

Ask the crowds at Tanglewood, Mass., last weekend. Even the miserable Saturday weather couldn't keep them away. There wasn't a room or a campsite available within 23 miles of Lenox.

At 6 p.m. the line for admission to the lawn at Tanglewood's festival grounds was 100-feet long, and the lawn is never sold out. It was the Master who drew the standees.

Just to add egg to the beer, Andre Watts, did the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude on Friday. We didn't make it, but those who did said Watts was in top form. He played the bagatele, "Fur Elise," then the Rondo Capriccio in G, Opus 129, and 32 Variations on an Original Theme in C Minor. The final piece was the Sonata No. 3 in D, Opus 10.

The 9 p.m. concert drew a full house. The lines leading into the grounds from Lenox made some motorists miss the entire opening, "Leonore No. 3" overture; some didn't arrive until the first movement of the "Emperor" concerto was over.

Eugene Ormandy makes Beethoven come alive at Tanglewood.

Philippe Entremont has a deservedly solid reputation as a Mozart master. Beethoven and he have never been too closely associated, at least not in these parts. What a shame!

Entremont, the romantic perfectionist, was in perfect rapport with the orchestra, with the conductor, and best of all, with the composer in the Piano Concerto No. 5. The weather was damp, and the folks in the back seats said they had a little trouble hearing the soloist. But the playing was beautiful.

Eugene Ormandy is a much disparaged conductor. They say he is too popular, by which they mean he plays too many of the old favorites extraordinarily well too often. So what? Anyone who watched that frail little old fellow acquire almost Olympian strength as he was caught up in the Fifth Symphony, who heard the sounds that emerged from the orchesra,

Adagio better served

The adagio movement received better treatment: sensitive, delicate, just the right touch of brooding to make way for the big, bang-up finale.

Let's dismiss the soloists. They're really patsies for the chorus in this movement. Phyllis Curtin, Joanna Simon, Seth McCoy, and Peter Lagger struggled, but they finally went under.

The combined Choir and Festival Chorus, however, was as magnificent as it had been on opening night.

Sunday Stanislaw Skrowaczewski gave us the Overture to Coriolan and Sidney Harth did the Violin Concerto. Harth has a sweet, sweet tone, but lacks the fire and drive that are so necessary to climb to the top. It was possibly the most disappointing part of the weekend.

If you see an all-Beethoven weekend announced for next year, get your reservations in early.

who heard the crowd's appreciation, needn't have worried about popularity or the indifference of the dilettantes.

Saturday it rained. It looked like the Lawn Set was to be done out of its treat. The Eighth and Ninth symphonies were scheduled, and it was a dismal prospect.

For Beethoven, however, even the skies stop crying. By 1 p.m. it was still wet, but it wasn't raining. By concert time the air was hazy but the grounds had dried so that a good thick newspaper, say Friday's Record or the Sunday Boston Globe, was enough insulation for the lawn people.

It's easy to see why Symphony No. 8 isn't performed too often. Coming as it does between the powerful No. 7 and the colossal No. 9, its froth, and treacle is a little much to take. Ormandy did the best he could with it, but nothing short of a heavenly choir could have helped.

The Ninth as Ormandy does it has its faults. The first movement was weak, a little too indecisive. The second was a little better, although memories of Steinberg's performance last year were too vivid to wash away the annoyance one felt that the magnificent Ninth deserved better.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Thousands Attend Tanglewood Festival

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Music Review

LENOX — Tanglewood audiences, totaling 42,604, experienced two widely contrasted approaches to Beethoven's music during the third weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival.

The full Boston Symphony Orchestra of 104 players was conducted by Eugene Ormandy Friday and Saturday nights and by Stanislaw Skrowaczewski yesterday afternoon.

Most roads to Tanglewood were far less congested Saturday night than the previous week when a record traffic jam was caused by Tanglewood annd nearby Lenox Arts Festival patrons merging en route to their destinations.

Traffic Measures

The area was heavily policed and there was no parking on the roadsways. The Lenox Arts Festival audience was limited to 5,000.

This is the first announcement that Rafael Frubeck de Burgos will not conduct at Tanglewood next Sunday. He has cancelled because of illness.

Frubeck will be replaced by the Dutch conductor Edo De Waart who is coming from the Netherlands to do so.

Frubeck de Burgos is scheduled to conduct the Detroit Symphony Orchestra at the Worcester Festival in October.

A number of factors distinguished the Betthoven weekend from Tanglewood's other seven.

Supreme Attraction

First, Beethoven remains music's supreme attraction and demands upon performance are unyielding.

Second, the potential is virtually unlimited with such an orchestra as the Boston Symphony.

Third, results depend on the conductor.

Comparisons may be odious, the fact is that Ormandy's [illegible] was the more ex[illegible] and satisfying. [illegible] in seconds and the entire finale) that could have reached greater heights.

Ormandy's Beethoven was great oratory; Skrowaczewski's was calculated, precise, mathematical.

Weekend highlight was Ormandy's conducting of the Ninth Symphony, featuring the Tanglewood Festival Chorus of 150 mixed voices.

Soloists were Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Joanna Simon, contralto; Seth McCoy, tenor; Peter Lagger, bass.

Poetic Adagio

Ormandy's broad view of the huge work was one of intense energy that remained unabated in the poetic adagio. The orchestra doled out sweeping phrases and sharp attacks with vigor and penetration.

John Oliver had prepared the chorus thoroughly for its culminating role in the finale's "Ode to Joy." Most choruses sound as if suffused in a gigantic task. This one pursued the symphony's course of drama as a powerful instrument, crystalizing the composer's goal.

The alto and tenor soloists were most felicitous. Miss Curtin's soprano was strident and a shade off. Lagger's bass had neither the strength nor endurance to emblazon Beethoven's elocution.

Eighth Symphony had prefaced the Ninth with bright tunes, jovial mood and marvelous control over the metronomic precision of the scherzo.

Ormandy's Control

Although some of the playing was tonally and rhythmically spotty, no detail escaped Ormandy's control.

Yesterday's concert would have been more favorable to Skrowaczewski without Sidney Harth as violin soloist. In another sense, it called attention to the conductor's metier in bringing the orchestra in line with the soloist's caprices.

Harth's intonaltion left something to be desired. Style was labored. The Beethoven Violin Concerto is a hard piece but doesn't have to look it.

Best of Harth's playing (rich tone and firm bowin) was in the slow movement — something of a paradox after the soloist's losing battle with the first movement cadenza and the third movement to follow.

Skrowaczewski's "Coriolan" Overture was assertive, with sharply divided dynamic and phrase boundaries. Melody sang richly, especially in strings and had solid backing from winds and brass.

Much legitimate drama emanated from Skrowaczewski's concept of the "Eroica" Symphony.

Perhaps the most arresting was the long-stretched Funeral March to which he brought momentum and few lapses of continuity.

The entire performance was securely imbedded in traditional ground; as such, there were glowing moments.

Most were gleaned in the Scherzo, directed at top speed and the bravura finale.

PROGRAMS
Saturday Night
Eugene Ormandy, conductor
(All-Beethoven)
Symphony No. 7 in F major, Opus 93
Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Opus 125
Phyllis Curtin, soprano
Joanna Simon, contralto
Seth McCoy, tenor
Peter Lagger, bass
Tanglewood Festival Chorus
Sunday Afternoon
Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, conductor
(All-Beethoven)
Coriolan Overture, Opus 62.
Violin Concerto in D major, Opus 61
Sidney Harth, violinist
Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, Opus 55, ("Eroica")

TELEGRAM (M)
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 60,219
JUL 23 1973
New England Newsclip

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (E)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 26,835
JUL 24 1973
New England Newsclip

Concert Review

Master Chef Ormandy Blends Beethoven's Ninth

BY MILTON COLE

Eugene Ormandy Saturday night reminded me of my mother.

She was from the old school of cooks who when asked her recipe for something particularly tasty would reply:

"I take some of this and then a little of that, and mix it together."

How much of each and for how long, would be the question and she'd reply:

"Oh, just enough so that it feels right."

Eugene Ormandy Saturday night seemed to take a little of this, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a little of that, the Tanglewood Choir and Tanglewood Festival Chorus, and mixed them together with a pinch of the four soloists, and came out with a production of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony that was breathtaking and spine tingling.

The production at Tanglewood on a cool but damp evening brought the 12,994 music lovers to their feet in wild applause.

That the reaction would be so positive is an even greater indication of the genius of Ormandy because the soloists left a little to be desired.

The soprano, Phyllis Curtin, seemed to shriek some of the words of the Ode to Joy of the last movement, and the tenor, Seth McCoy was hard to hear.

But Ormandy, the musical director of the Philadelphia Orchestra for 36 years, overcame these shortcomings as he manipulated the orchestra and the massed voices with infinite skill.

And the stirring finale with the voices reaching a crescendo of sound seemed to wrap the audience in an almost hypnotic trance.

The orchestra played with consummate skill, as one would expect from one of the world's great symphonic organizations, and responded to each demand from the broad-shouldered, diminitive Ormandy as if attached by wire.

He elicited from the violas, cellos and basses a magnificent performance, and blended all the instruments with mastery.

But then one expects that from Ormandy. It was his ability to meld the voices with the same skill as the instruments, to make the singers become an integral and inseparable part of the overall musical picture that made the tingle of excitement run up and down the spine.

And yet you knew it was going to happen because he evoked from the orchestra a truly moving Beethoven Eight Symphony as the first part of the program.

It was a highlight of this Beethoven weekend at Tanglewood.

Beethoven has a special meaning for the Boston Symphony's summer home, and this year was no exception. Early Friday the Berkshire Chamber of Commerce was asking anyone in the area who had rooms he would be willing to rent to contact the chamber since all accomodations in the area were full.

The crowds came early and enjoyed.

A total of 11,195 showed up Friday night for the Leonore Overture, the Piano Concerto No. 5 with Philippe Entremont and the Fifth Symphony with Ormandy conducting.

Another 4,108 attended the open rehearsal Saturday morning and another 14,073 were at the Sunday concert when Stanislaw Skrowaczewski conducted Beethoven's Coriolanus Overture, Violin Concerto in D with Sidney Harth and the Third or Eroica Symphony.

It was a total of 42,000 Beethoven fans for the weekend. I wish they had all been able to be there Saturday to see Eugene Ormandy take [illegible] add a little th[illegible] other to m[illegible]

Concerts Draw Record Crowds At Tanglewood

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood set an all-time record over the weekend for attendance when 42,604 people flooded the Shed and the lawns for 3 all-Beethoven concerts. It averages out to over 14,000 per concert, which for straight symphony concerts approaches the unbelievable.

Two of them were conducted by Eugene Ormandy, and the Sunday afternoon concert was conducted by Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, the permanent conductor of the Minnesota Symphony Orchestra.

THE QUALITY of the three concerts in the big Shed ranged from inadequate to great, the great applying to Ormandy's presentation of the Ninth Symphony on Saturday night.

Sunday afternoon's program included the Coriolanus Overture Op. 62, the Violin Concerto in D Op. 61, and the Symphony No. 3 in E Flat, the "Eroica."

Sydney Harth, concertmaster and associate conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, was the soloist in the Violin Concerto and as far as his work went there is very little good to report.

Friends that know him well have told me that he is, as a rule, an accomplished and exciting player, but this sunny afternoon there was little evidence of either.

IT HAPPENS, of course, an artist getting off to a bad start for one reason or another. It doesn't take much to disrupt the fine concentration all great performers must have. Perhaps one's wife has run off with a jazz sax player, or the baby sitter drank all one's best Scotch, or, simply, some obnoxious incompetent beat you at tennis. But, of course, the listener knows nothing of these traumas, he comes trusting in the quality that a Tanglewood concert generally provides.

Harth had troubles right on the go. He was out of tune and out of meter, and he could hear it too, and no doubt this psyched him severely and he never did recover.

It was one of the occupational rigors of the concert game, and it probably won't happen again, at least not so publicly, and one is inclined to feel sorry about it. My friends who had extolled his abilities know what they are talking about and they were as mystified as I was.

BUT THE REAL story is that incredible attendance figure, 42,604 for three concerts one of which was on a rainy Saturday.

They must be still sitting dumbstruck in their camp chairs over in the publicity office and, for whatever reason, they have good reason. There will be a lot of theories on how a festival can average 14,000 + for three concerts that do not include a Van Cliburn, a Lenny, or an Ozawa. Surely some of the credit goes to Papa Ormandy, who really stirred them up on Saturday night. And then, could it be the music? What a daring concept that is!

AUDIENCE AT TANGLEWOOD

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 146,189
JUL 24 1973

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
JUL 23 1973
New England Newsclip

Beethoven Reigns Supreme At Berkshire Festival

Waterbury Republican July 26

Last weekend, the third Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, was taken over completely by Beethoven, who reigned supreme with the most popular of his works.

Friday evening began with the weekend Prelude and Andre Watts, in a full concert as piano solout. He played the "Fur Elise" Bagatelle and the Rondo a capriccio in G, both familiar pieces usually studied by young students of the piano. The 32 variations on an original theme in C minor followed, brilliantly and powerfully performed. The Sonata No. 3 in D completed this stimulating and inspiring early solo concert, beloved by beginning students as well as music lovers of any age.

A record attendance of 11,195 heard the Friday night concert, the largest Friday night audience since 1963.

Eugene Ormandy was guest conductor, one of the older of the celebrated and revered conductors of our age. He is the music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The program started with the Overture "Leonore" No. 3. The audience was then introduced to pianist Phillippe Entremont, his first appearance with the Boston Symphony. He gave a technically polished performance of the beloved "Emperor" concerto. The exuberant response from the audience was indicative of the concerto's popularity. The program ended with a rousing performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Ormandy exhorted the brass section to frenzied heights, much too blatant and bizarre for this reviewer's taste. However, the audience responded with thunderous applause and gave the conductor and orchestra a standing ovation.

Saturday evening's program began with Beethoven's 8th Symphony. Due to traffic which jammed all roads leading to Tanglewood, this reviewer arrived too late to hear this delightful work, one of my favorites. The large number of music lovers generated by the traditionaly popular all-Beethoven weekend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood and the jazz concert at the Music Inn, combined to cause an impossible traffic mess, virtually blocking all through traffic, and parking on the Tanglewood grounds was impossible. Fortunately, traffic was finally unsnarled, allowing hundreds of concert-goers to arrive just in time to hear Beethoven's Ninth.

The attendance of 12,994 was also the largest on record for a Saturday concert. The star, of course, was once again Beethoven.

on Sunday afternoon brought an attendance of 14,307, another record-breaking audience.

The program started with the Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collins tragedy "Coriolan," a most dramatic and gory piece put to music by Beethoven and is considered one of his noblest works. It is bold and emotional and the Shakespeare version of this tragedy is truly met and conquered by this composer.

Sunday's concert was conducted by the gifted Stanislaw Skrowaczewzewski, ably dedicated, who gave every evidence of his mastery and musicianship. He is conductor-in-residence at Tanglewood this summer at the Berkshire Music Center.

Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D, with Sidney Harth as soloist, marked his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was a winner of the Naumberg Award, gave a debut concert at Town Hall in New York, studied with Georges Enescó, among others. He was one of the gifted young violin soloists appearing with Mario DiCecco and the Waterbury Symphony Orchestra, soon after he received the award, and also once before at earlier engagement. He was concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Louisville Orchestra, then became concertmaster of the Chicago Symphony and a conductor with the Evanston Symphony. He has gained an international reputation and became the first American to place in the finals of the Wieniawski Competition in Poland. He has a prestigious background in both teaching and as a soloist. He was recently appointed associate conductor and concertmaster of the Los Angeles Philharmonic. Mr. Harth gave a very sensitive, deeply moving and poetic rendition of this ever-popular concerto.

The last half of the concert concluded with Beethoven's magnificent "Eroica" Symphony No. 3, which is one of this composer's great creative works. The second movement, Marcia Funebre, was especially rooding and deeply moving, almost to heartbreak. To this reviewer's taste, Sunday's concert was the highpoint of the weekend. May I caution all Waterbury music lovers that Saturday evening concerts will be affected by the over-whelming visitors to the area, due to the jazz concerts. So start out an hour earlier if you want to secure a parking space.

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins Friday with the 7 p.m. weekend Prelude, featuring Peter Lagger in a program of songs by Beethoven and accompanied on the piano by Malcolm Fragger. At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburg Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahams program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in the Violin Concerto in D, with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C minor. On Saturday morning throughout the season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday. On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor (Unfinished) and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck, musical director of the National Orchestra of Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torer. The concert closes with Brahm's Symphony No. 4 in E minor. Before the Brahms, the orchestra will perform Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist.

SYLVIA MEYERS

BANGLADESH DWELLERS

More than 80 per cent of Bangladesh's population of 75 million live directly off the land.

Again Ormandy drove the orchestra into high pitch. The soloists participating in the Finale of Schiller's "Ode to Joy" were accompanied by the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus, gave a rather disappointing rendition of this most monumental and moving work. The chorus and choir were outstanding, under the direction of John Oliver. Phyllis Curtin, soprano, was not at her best in this uplifting and glorious "Ode to Joy." She was joined by Joanna Simon, contralto, Seth McCoy, tenor and Peter Lagger, bass, who gave spirited support.

The enthusiastic audience cheered the conductor, soloists and choral groups and orchestra and bravoed again and again, attesting to the genius that was Beethoven.

The weekend's final concert

Joel Librizzi

TANGLEWOOD PARKING lot during Sunday's concert gave way to traffic snarls when the record-setting crowd left the area afterward. Tanglewood traffic was called worst ever by police.

Record turnout at Tanglewood accompanied by traffic tieups

By Staff

LENOX — Tanglewood officials said today an all-time record of 42,604 people attended Tanglewood this weekend. Police said traffic congestion throughout the area probably set a record too.

The Beethoven weekend drew 1,267 more concertgoers than the same weekend last year. The weekend created the "worst traffic I've ever seen," said Stockbridge Police Chief William J. Obanhein.

Saturday afternoon, traffic headed north on Route 7 north of Stockbridge was backed up from the Lee Road back to the Red Lion Inn.

Sunday afternoon, traffic headed north on Route 20 south of Lenox was backed up to the Cranwell School area. The traffic was waiting to make the left turn from the Lenox Bypass onto Walker Street, where it ran into further backups.

Turnpike traffic

Later Sunday afternoon, traffic headed south on Route 20, apparently bound for the Turnpike Interchange in Lee, was backed up past Laurel Lake all the way to the Cranwell area. About 7 p.m., traffic was still backed up almost to the Laurel Lake area.

One improvement in the traffic situation is that congestion was reduced on Hawthorne Street in Stockbridge, where traffic connected with the concert at Music Inn Saturday becomes tangled with traffic from Tanglewood.

The previous Saturday, traffic congestion was so bad on Hawthorne Street that cars parked along the road were towed away and the owners each had to pay $25 in towing fees to get their vehicles back.

This week, deputy sheriffs hired by Music Inn started at 2 p.m. to regulate traffic. Deputy sheriffs in the employ of Tanglewood were also on the road earlier, according to officials. Equipped with two-way radios and motorcycles, the deputies considerably reduced the potential of congestion in the immediate areas of Tanglewood and Music Inn.

Left unresolved is the question of whether David Rothstein, manager of Music Inn, is supposed to limit his audience to 4,000.

At a meeting last Monday, the Selectmen ordered Rothstein to limit his attendance to 4,000. The minutes of an earlier Selectmen's meeting at which Rothstein received his permit, according to the town secretary, established a limit of 4,000.

Apparently there was a subsequent meeting last week at which this number was changed. The number now is indefinite. Rothstein today would not cite a specific number. Selectman George Emerson also declined to state what specific limit, if any, was being placed on Rothstein.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 4,405
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

Sunday, July 22

The shed and lawn of Tanglewood overflowed on a beautiful Sunday afternoon as guest conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski brought us some honest Beethoven.

The BSO responded to Mr. Skrowaczewski's musical direction with duly brilliant playing as he made it absolutely clear what he wanted from them. He achieved that rare coupling of technical control and dramatic thrust that Beethoven demands but seldom receives.

The Coriolan overture had tremendous energy but was shaped with impeccable taste. There were precipitous moments as Mr. Skrowaczewski took chances to convey programmatic suspense, but never a slip.

In the Eroica (Symphony no. 3), clarity was not sacrificed to drama, but worked with it resulting in a thrilling structure. The Marcia Funebre was especially moving. Its tricky cross-rhythms were handled with finesse and the fugue was properly ponderous but precisely articulated. The Finale was perfect. In it Mr. Skrowaczewski managed a remarkable degree of independence in contrasting voices.

Violinist Sidney Harth appeared in the Concerto in D. It is always sad when a conductor and soloist are poorly matched in the performance of a standard masterpiece. Mr. Harth's heavily-mannered, unsonorous, and even sloppy rendering of this work was not worthy of the accompaniment which Mr. Skrowaczewski and the Symphony players gave it.

When a performer tries to make a bouncy theme dramatic and lyrical, it is obvious that he is trying too hard. That most joyous of rondos was robbed of its sparkle and filled with conflict between the soloist's and the conductor's ideas of tempo and texture.

One final note: oh, that the Tanglewood audience would learn to refrain from gossiping between movements.

John Hinners

with The Misanthrope's director, Austin Pendleton. She appeared as Toinette in the National Repertory Theatre production of Moliere's The Imaginary Invalid, and portrayed Mme. Pernelles in the Williamstown Theatre's 1969 production of Tartuffe directed by Mr. Pendleton.

New England Newsclip

Beethoven Reigns Supreme At Berkshire Festival

Waterbury Republican July 26

Last weekend, the third Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, was taken over completely by Beethoven, who reigned supreme with the most popular of his works.

Friday evening began with the weekend Prelude and Andre Watts, in a full concert as piano solout. He played the "Fur Elise" Bagatelle and the Rondo a capriccio in G, both familiar pieces usually studied by young students of the piano. The 32 variations on an original theme in C minor followed, brilliantly and powerfully performed. The Sonata No. 3 in D completed this stimulating and inspiring early solo concert, beloved by beginning students as well as music lovers of any age.

A record attendance of 11,195 heard the Friday night concert, the largest Friday night audience since 1963.

Eugene Ormandy was guest conductor, one of the older of the celebrated and revered conductors of our age. He is the music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The program started with the Overture "Leonore" No. 3. The audience was then introduced to pianist Phillippe Entremont, his first appearance with the Boston Symphony. He gave a technically polished performance of the beloved "Emperor" concerto. The exuberant response from the audience was indicative of the concerto's popularity. The program ended with a rousing performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Ormandy exhorted the brass section to frenzied heights, much too blatant and bizarre for this reviewer's taste. However, the audience responded with thunderous applause and gave the conductor and orchestra a standing ovation.

Saturday evening's program began with Beethoven's 8th Symphony. Due to traffic which jammed all roads leading to Tanglewood, this reviewer arrived too late to hear this delightful work, one of my favorites. The large number of music lovers generated by the traditionaly popular all-Beethoven weekend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood and the jazz concert at the Music Inn, combined to cause an impossible traffic mess, virtually blocking all through traffic, and parking on the Tanglewood grounds was impossible. Fortunately, traffic was finally unsnarled, allowing hundreds of concert-goers to arrive just in time to hear Beethoven's Ninth.

The attendance of 12,994 was also the largest on record for a Saturday concert. The star, of course, was once again Beethoven.

Again Ormandy drove the orchestra into high pitch. The soloists participating in the Finale of Schiller's "Ode to Joy" were accompanied by the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus, gave a rather disappointing rendition of this most monumental and moving work. The chorus and choir were outstanding, under the direction of John Oliver. Phyllis Curtin, soprano, was not at her best in this uplifting and glorious "Ode to Joy." She was joined by Joanna Simon, contralto, Seth McCoy, tenor and Peter Lagger, bass, who gave spirited support.

The enthusiastic audience cheered the conductor, soloists and choral groups and orchestra and bravoed again and again, attesting to the genius that was Beethoven.

The weekend's final concert on Sunday afternoon brought an attendance of 14,307, another record-breaking audience.

The program started with the Overture for Heinrich Joseph von Collins tragedy "Coriolan," a most dramatic and gory piece put to music by Beethoven and is considered one of his noblest works. It is bold and emotional and the Shakespeare version of this tragedy is truly met and conquered by this composer.

Sunday's concert was conducted by the gifted Stanislaw Skrowaczewzewski, ably dedicated, who gave every evidence of his mastery and musicianship. He is conductor-in-residence at Tanglewood this summer at the Berkshire Music Center.

Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D, with Sidney Harth as soloist, marked his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was a winner of the Naumberg Award, gave a debut concert at Town Hall in New York, studied with Georges Enesco, among others. He was one of the gifted young violin soloists appearing with Mario DiCecco and the Waterbury Symphony Orchestra, soon after he received the award, and also once before at earlier engagement. He was concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Louisville Orchestra, then became concertmaster of the Chicago Symphony and a conductor with the Evanston Symphony. He has gained an international reputation and became the first American to place in the finals of the Wieniawski Competition in Poland. He has a prestigious background in both teaching and as a soloist. He was recently appointed associate conductor and concertmaster of the Los Angeles Philharmonic. Mr. Harth gave a very sensitive, deeply moving and poetic rendition of this ever-popular concerto.

The last half of the concert concluded with Beethoven's magnificent "Eroica" Symphony No. 3, which is one of this composer's great creative works. The second movement, Marcia Funebre, was especially rooding and deeply moving, almost to heartbreak. To this reviewer's taste, Sunday's concert was the highpoint of the weekend. May I caution all Waterbury music lovers that Saturday evening concerts will be affected by the over-whelming visitors to the area, due to the jazz concerts. So start out an hour earlier if you want to secure a parking space.

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins Friday with the 7 p.m. weekend Prelude, featuring Peter Lagger in a program of songs by Beethoven and accompanied on the piano by Malcolm Fragger. At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburg Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahams program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in the Violin Concerto in D, with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C minor. On Saturday morning throughout the season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed Sunday. On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor (Unfinished) and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck, musical director of the National Orchestra of Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torer. The concert closes with Brahm's Symphony No. 4 in E minor. Before the Brahms, the orchestra will perform Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist.

SYLVIA MEYERS

BANGLADESH DWELLERS

More than 80 per cent of Bangladesh's population of 75 million live directly off the land.

TANGLEWOOD PARKING lot during Sunday's concert gave way to traffic snarls when the record-setting crowd left the area afterward. Tanglewood traffic was called worst ever by police.

Joel Librizzi

Record turnout at Tanglewood accompanied by traffic tieups

Berkshire

LENOX — Tanglewood officials said today an all-time record of 42,604 people attended Tanglewood this weekend. Police said traffic congestion throughout the area probably set a record too.

The Beethoven weekend drew 1,267 more concertgoers than the same weekend last year. The weekend created the "worst traffic I've ever seen," said Stockbridge Police Chief William J. Obanhein.

Saturday afternoon, traffic headed north on Route 7 north of Stockbridge was backed up from the Lee Road back to the Red Lion Inn.

Sunday afternoon, traffic headed north on Route 20 south of Lenox was backed up to the Cranwell School area. The traffic was waiting to make the left turn from the Lenox Bypass onto Walker Street, where it ran into further backups.

Turnpike traffic

Later Sunday afternoon, traffic headed south on Route 20, apparently bound for the Turnpike Interchange in Lee, was backed up past Laurel Lake all the way to the Cranwell area. About 7 p.m., traffic was still backed up almost to the Laurel Lake area.

One improvement in the traffic situation is that congestion was reduced on Hawthorne Street in Stockbridge, where traffic connected with the concert at Music Inn Saturday becomes tangled with traffic from Tanglewood.

The previous Saturday, traffic congestion was so bad on Hawthorne Street that cars parked along the road were towed away and the owners each had to pay $25 in towing fees to get their vehicles back.

This week, deputy sheriffs hired by Music Inn started at 2 p.m. to regulate traffic. Deputy sheriffs in the employ of Tanglewood were also on the road earlier, according to officials. Equipped with two-way radios and motorcycles, the deputies considerably reduced the potential of congestion in the immediate areas of Tanglewood and Music Inn.

Left unresolved is the question of whether David Rothstein, manager of Music Inn, is supposed to limit his audience to 4,000.

At a meeting last Monday, the Selectmen ordered Rothstein to limit his attendance to 4,000. The minutes of an earlier Selectmen's meeting at which Rothstein received his permit, according to the town secretary, established a limit of 4,000.

Apparently there was a subsequent meeting last week at which this number was changed. The number now is indefinite. Rothstein today would not cite a specific number. Selectman George Emerson also declined to state what specific limit, if any, was being placed on Rothstein.

JOURNAL LOUISVILLE, KOHN.
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

Sunday, July 22

The shed and lawn of Tanglewood overflowed on a beautiful Sunday afternoon as guest conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski brought us some honest Beethoven.

The BSO responded to Mr. Skrowaczewski's musical direction with duly brilliant playing as he made it absolutely clear what he wanted from them. He achieved that rare coupling of technical control and dramatic thrust that Beethoven demands but seldom receives.

The Coriolan overture had tremendous energy but was shaped with impeccable taste. There were precipitous moments as Mr. Skrowaczewski took chances to convey programmatic suspense, but never a slip.

In the Eroica (Symphony no. 3), clarity was not sacrificed to drama, but worked with it resulting in a thrilling structure. The Marcia Funebre was especially moving. Its tricky cross-rhythms were handled with finesse and the fugue was properly ponderous but precisely articulated. The Finale was perfect. In it Mr. Skrowaczewski managed a remarkable degree of independence in contrasting voices.

Violinist Sidney Harth appeared in the Concerto in D. It is always sad when a conductor and soloist are poorly matched in the performance of a standard masterpiece. Mr. Harth's heavily-mannered, unsonorous, and even sloppy rendering of this work was not worthy of the accompaniment which Mr. Skrowaczewski and the Symphony players gave it.

When a performer tries to make a bouncy theme dramatic and lyrical, it is obvious that he is trying too hard. That most joyous of rondos was robbed of its sparkle and filled with conflict between the soloist's and the conductor's ideas of tempo and texture.

One final note: oh, that the Tanglewood audience would learn to refrain from gossiping between movements.

John Hinners

with The Misanthrope's director, Austin Pendleton. She appeared as Toinette in the National Repertory Theatre production of Moliere's The Imaginary Invalid, and portrayed Mme. Pernelles in the Williamstown Theatre's 1969 production of Tartuffe directed by Mr. Pendleton.

Variety in weekend concerts

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 27, with the 7:30 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa tomba oscura", "Bitten", "Vom Tode", "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Nature", "Ich liebe dich", "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte". At 9:00 p.m., William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony and Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday, July 28 at 10:30 a.m. as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be pernormed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday, July 29 at 2:30 p.m. Rafel Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their its performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto no. 2 with Christoph Eschenback as soloist and closes with Brahms' Sympnony no. 4 in E minor.

Newport Jazz Festival New England will be a continuing annual event at Fenway Park, Boston, because of the response when tickets went on sale last week for the Friday-Saturday, July 27-28 events.

George Wein, producer of Newport Jazz Festivals for the 20th year, made the announcemnet. "Next year we intend to enlarge the scope of the Jazz programs beyond this year's two days," said Wein.

"We will cooperate with Boston groups such as "The Jazz Coalition" and Mayor Kevin White's Cultural Affairs Committee to present more of the many talented Jazz musicians residing in the Boston area. They deserve greater exposure. From experience I have found that many of the finest nationally recognized musicians claim Boston as 'home', as I do."

Wein has arranged two programs of Soul and Jazz at Fenway Park. On Friday, July 27 at 8:00 p.m., he will present WAR, the musical group that has amassed five Gold Records in nine months; Ray Charles and his All-Star Orchestra with the Raeletts, Herbie Mann and The Family of Mann featuring David Newman, The Staple Singers, Billy Paul.

TIMES (E)
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 3,514
JUL 2 6 1973
New England Newsclip

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE (E)
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,835
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

JAMES KING

WILLIAM STEINBERG

Fourth Weekend

Schubert's 'Unfinished' At Tanglewood Saturday

LENOX— The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins Friday with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano.

The program of songs of Beethoven includes: "In questa tomba oscura," "Bitten," "Vom Tode," "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur," "Ich liebe dich," "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte."

At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m. as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied von der Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E minor.

Tanglewood

Steinberg Conducting Weekend Concert

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 27, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

At 9 p.m. William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony and Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

James King

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. William Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's "Das Lied der Erde" ("The Song of the Earth") with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's "La oracion del torero" Sunday, July 29, at 2:30 p.m. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto no. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahms' Symphony no. 4 in E minor.

JOURNAL
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 1,405
JUL 2 6 1973
New England Newsclip

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 251,094
JUL 2 2 1973

Tanglewood slates Boston Symphony

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. — The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins Friday, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa tomba oscura", "Bitten", "Vom Tode", "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur", "Ich liebe dich", "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte".

At 9 p.m. William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston in an all-Brahms program. Steinberg will lead the orchestra in the Violin Concerto in D, with Miriam Fried as soloist, and Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

Saturday, at 10:30 a.m. there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

Saturday at 8:30 p.m. William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's "Das Lied der Erde" ("The Song of the Earth") with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

Next Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's "La oracion del torero." The concert continues with Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor.

WILLIAM STEINBERG

JAMES KING

Instrumental and vocal soloists listed for Tanglewood week-end

The fourth week-end at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., begins Friday with the 7 p.m. Week-end Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa tomba oscura," "Bitten", "Vom Tode," "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur", "Ich liebe dich", "Wonne der Wehmut' and 'An die ferne Geliebte".

At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony and Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program, including the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

Saturday evening at 8:30 Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor (Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied dre Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E minor.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y
STAR
(NEW YORK CITY MARKET AREA)
D. 13,000
JUL 24 1973

REVIEW
HARTFORD, CONN.
JUL 2 6 1973
New England Newsclip

This Week-End At Tanglewood

William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony will conduct the orchestra at Tanglewood on Friday and Saturday evenings July 27 and 28th.

As Music Director of the Pittsburg Symphony, Mr. Steinberg recently returned from his orchestra's tour of Japan which included concerts in Tokyo, Nogoya and Yahata, and at the Osaka Music Festival.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
JUL 2 6 1973

Tanglewod Features Steinberg, deBurgos

By BILL RICE

William Steinberg and Raphael Frubeck de Burgos, who respectively represent the establishment and the new breed among today's musical directors, will share conducting honors with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend at Tanglewood.

The fourth weekend begins Friday with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lager, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

At 9 p.m. William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Brahms program. Included will be the violin Concerto in D with Miriam Fried the solosit, and the Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 (the "Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied derErde (Song of the Earth), with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian the soloists.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Raphael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert will also include Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist, and Brahm's Symphony no. 4.

TRANSCRIPT (E)
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
D. 13,700
JUL 2 7 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952 will conduct at Tanglewood tonight and tomorrow evenings.

Tonight's performance is a Beethoven program featuring Peter Lagger on the bass and Malcolm Frager, pianist. Tomorrow night's performance is an all-Brahms program, featuring a Violin Concerto in D with Miriam Fried, soloist.

Sunday afternoon, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero.

Next weekend Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct all three performances. On Friday and Saturday, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus is featured. Friday night's program includes Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 and Copland's Symphony No. 3. Saturday night features a Stravinsky program. Music by Mozart, Cage, Strauss and Brahms will be featured Sunday with Malcolm Frager as soloist.

William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony will conduct the symphony on Friday and Saturday evenings.

As Music Director of the Pittsburg Symphony, Mr. Steinberg recently returned from his orchestra's tour of Japan which included concerts in Tokyo, Nogoya and Yahata, and at the Osaka Music Festival.

Steinberg To Conduct Tanglewood Program

LENOX — The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins tomorrow with the 7:00 pm Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa tomba oscura", "Bitten", "Vom Tode", "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur", "Ich liebe dich", "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte". At 9:00 pm, William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony and Music Director of the Pittsburg Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in the violin concerto in D with Mirian Fried as solist and Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday at 10:30 am, as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

Saturday evening at 8:30, William Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lilo Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday, at 2;30 pm, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto no. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahm's Symphony no. 4 in E Minor.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181

JUL 26 1973

Tanglewod Features Steinberg, deBurgos

By BILL RICE

William Steinberg and Raphael Frubeck de Burgos, who respectively represent the establishment and the new breed among today's musical directors, will share conducting honors with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this weekend at Tanglewood.

The fourth weekend begins Friday with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lager, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

At 9 p.m. William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Brahms program. Included will be the violin Concerto in D with Miriam Fried the solosit, and the Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 (the "Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied derErde (Song of the Earth), with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian the soloists.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Raphael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert will also include Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist, and Brahm's Symphony no. 4.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
W. 3,750

JUL 26 1973 New England Newsclip

Out-of-Town

William Steinberg will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow at Tanglewood-Berkshire Festival near Lenox, Mass. in Schubert's Eighth Symphony and Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," at 8:30 p.m. On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos will lead the orchestra in works by Turina, Bartok and Brahms . . . Tonight at 8 and tomorrow at 2 and 8 p.m., the N. Y. City Ballet presents "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at Saratoga Performing Arts Center in Saratoga Springs, N. Y. On Sunday at 7:30 p.m. the center will hold a "Messiah" Sing-In . . . The Bolshoi Ballet performs tonight through Sunday at 8:30 at Temple University Music Festival in Ambler, Pa.... The National Ballet of Washington with "Cinderella" is on stage tonight and tomorrow night at 8:40 at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival near Lee, Mass.... Tonight and tomorrow night at 9, Doc Severinsen is appearing at the Garden State Arts Center near Holmdel, N. J. The National Symphony presents "Opera Night" Sunday evening at 8:30... "Tosca" is the offering at Lake George Opera Festival near Glens Falls, N. Y. tonight at 8:15, and at the same hour tomorrow night, "The Barber of Seville."

* * *

A "Melange Weekend" will present five young dance companies at the 26th Connecticut College American Dance Festival in New London, Conn., tonight, tomorrow and Sunday... Kate Hurney is the soloist in A Night at the Opera in the sixth concert of the Summer of Music on the Hudson Festival tomorrow evening at 8:30 at Lyndhurst, N. Y.... Music for the Mind's Eye is the program tomorrow at 9:30 p.m. at The Newport (RI) Music Festival. On Sunday evening Francois Devienne's comic opera "Les Visitandies" will be presented in the great hall of The Breakers, Newport's famous Vanderbilt mansion... Jan Peerce will appear at The Concord, Sunday . . . Focus will rock the Convention Center in Asbury Park, N. J. tomorrow... Vic Damone and Allan Drake are on stage nightly except Monday at The Playboy Club-Hotel at Great Gorge, McAfee, N. J.... The Silvermine String Quartet will have the stage to itself Sunday at 8 p.m. in Silvermine's Gifford Hall, New Canaan, Conn.

* * *

"A Shot in the Dark," starring Patty Duke and John Astin, opens Monday night at the Tappan Zee Playhouse . . . Sada Thompson continues through "Twigs" at Playhouse, F Nancy Leeds for a musica Tempest," Sunday at Opera Hous Conn.

New York Post
D. 623,245 SAT. 354,797

JUL 27 1973

GLOBE (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042

JUL 27 1973 New England Newsclip

HERALD (E)
MANCHESTER, CONN.
D. 15,000

JUL 27 1973 New England Newsclip

HIGHLIGHTS THIS WEEK

A FOND FAREWELL to a Boston institution comes this weekend, when "Godspell" closes down after a record 86-week run. The well-loved musical, based on the Gospel According to St. Matthew, opened in December, 1971, and has filled the Wilbur Theater with song since. The shutdown makes all of Boston's downtown houses dark for the summer — the Shubert's Sigmund Romberg festival has been postponed to fall, and the Colonial has no bookings before autumn.

PROFESSIONAL THEATER in Boston does continue in Park Square though, as "One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest" extends its long run at the Charles Playhouse of the melodrama based on Ken Kesey's novel. The show set in a mental hospital ward has been receiving critical acclaim since last November.

MUSIC LOVERS who journey to Tanglewood this weekend can hear former BSO music director William Steinberg conduct the Brahms "Violin Concerto" and "Symphony No. 1" (Friday night) and the Schubert "Unfinished Symphony" and Mahler "Lied von der Erde" (Saturday night). Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos conducts Brahms and Bartok Sunday afternoon.

CLOSER TO HOME in Fenway Park, music of a more informal sort enlivens the Newport Jazz Festival-New England, July 27 and 28. Producer George Wein broke up his Rhode Island extravaganza of years past into nine regional concerts. The first was in New York. Boston's, "to be an equivalent to two nights of the Rhode Island festival," features: War; Ray Charles and His All-Star Orchestra With the Raelets; Herbie Mann and the Family of Mann Featuring David Newman; The Staple Singers and Billy Paul, all Friday; and Stevie Wonder, B.B. King, Donny Hathaway, Freddie Hubbard Quintet, Charles Mingus Sextet, Rahsaan Roland Kirk and The Vibration Society, on Saturday. Seats are reserved, and priced at $5.50, $6.50 and $7.50. Only a part of Fenway will be used, to ensure greater intimacy, and the grandstand covering will protect against rain.

YET ANOTHER SOUND will resound through the Orpheum downtown bn Washington st., Aug. 1, 2 and 3 as "Tommy," the granddaddy of rock operas written by The Who, plays five performances. Ted Neeley, star of the movie of "Jesus Christ Superstar," plays the title role in the quadraphonic-sound, mixed-media production. The Orpheum, home of both rock concerts and the Opera Company of Boston, offers fine sound even high in the balcony. Tickets are available for performances Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. and Thursday and Friday at 7 and 10 p.m.

ART OF A QUIETER SORT comes to the Prudential Center Friday through Sunday, July 27-29, with the second annual Professional Art Show along the arcades. The free show from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. features drawing, painting, sculpture and mixed media work by artists from 15 states and Canada.

ART BY INMATES is on display Sunday at a benefit for the Elma Lewis School. The Boston Flea Market, Faneuil Hall Marketplace, is the scene of the exhibit from 1 to 6 p.m. rain or shine. Arts and crafts, poetry and music by residents of the Mass. Correctional Institute, Norfolk, plus more than 100 displays of antiques, collectibles and handicrafts by New England craftsmen, will be on display for $1 admission (children 25 cents.)

Actress-Author Ruth Gordon—Will appear in person at the Park Square Moviehouse on Monday, July 30, at 7:30 p.m. to acknowledge the "Tribute to Ruth Gordon" weekend double feature of films associated with the Quincy native's long and distinguished theatrical career: "Harold and Maude" (1972), in which she co-stars, and "Adam's Rib" (1949) which she co-authored with her husband Garson Kanin. The double feature runs July 29-31.

APART FROM THE ARTS, the Museum of Science is celebrating the first anniversary of the opening of its west wing Aug. 3 by admitting the public for half price to all Museum exhibits and programs, including "Ad Astra per Aspera" in the Charles Hayden Planetarium. The day also features a special demonstration with a bush baby and a Slow Loris.

bb Opus 1 ##

June B. Tompkins

Tanglewood

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood in the Berkshires begins tonight with the 7 o'clock Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

At 9 o'clock, William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in the Violin Concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

Saturday evening at 8:30, Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor, and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in its first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert will include Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist, and Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E minor.

Steinberg Guest Conductor

LENOX — The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa tomba oscura," "Bitten," "Vom Tode," "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Matur," "Ich liebe dich," "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte."

At 9 p.m. William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all - Brahms program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m. as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

JAMES KING

WILLIAM STEINBERG

On Saturday evening a 8:30 p.m. William Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto no. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahms' Symphony no. 4 in E minor.

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
S. 130,000

JUL 22 1973 New England Newsclip

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528

JUL 25 1973 New England Newsclip

Steinberg, de Burgos, Featured Conductors

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa tomba oscura", "Bitten", "Vom Tode", "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur", "Ich liebe dich", "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte".

At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday, at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday at 8:30 p.m. William Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday, at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto no. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes wth Brahms' Symphony no. 4 in E minor.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUL 26 1973 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood program

De Waart to replace ill conductor De Burgos

Edo de Waart, music director of the Rotterdam Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Mr. de Waart replaces the indisposed Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos. The new program for Sunday will include Berlioz' "Overture, Le cranaval romain; Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach; and Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor.

On Saturday night, tenor Nicholas di Virgilio will replace the ill James King in Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde."

William Steinberg, former music director of the BSO, will conduct the concerts on Friday and Saturday nights.

Beethoven songs

The weekend prelude Friday at 7 p.m. will be a program of Beethoven songs with soloists Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcom Frager, piano. They will perform the songs, "In Questa Tomba Oscura," "Bitten," "Vom Tode," "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur," "Ich Liebe Dich," "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte."

At 9, Steinberg, who has been music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the BSO in an all-Brahms program. The orchestra will play the Violin Concerto in D with violinist Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C Minor.

On Saturday evening at 8:30, Steinberg will conduct the symphony in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B Minor (unfinished) and Mahler's "Das Lied der Erde," (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists. An open rehearsal will be held on Saturday morning at 10:30.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD RECORD
D. 45,349 SUN. 41,720

JUL 20 1973

Steinberg to conduct at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. — The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 27, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

At 9, p.m., William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony and Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in the Violin Concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C Minor.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
W. 3,750

JUL 19 1973 New England Newsclip

Steinberg Scheduled At Tanglewood

WILLIAM STEINBERG former music director of the Boston Symphony will conduct the symphony on Friday and Saturday evenings July 27 and 28th, at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. As music director of the Pittsburg Symphony, Mr. Steinberg recently returned from his orchestra's tour of Japan which included concerts in Tokyo, Nogoya and Yahata, and at the Osaka Music Festival. The program Friday will be all Brahms. Schubert's No. 8 and Mahler's Das Lied von der Erde are scheduled Saturday. The Boston Symphony will be directed by Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, on Saturday.

DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
D. 30,000

JUL 24 1973

Tanglewood weekend

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood will begin Friday night at 7 with a weekend prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven. At 9 p.m. William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and now music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program.

Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in selections from Schubert and Mahler with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. Sunday at 2:30 p.m. The concert continues with a Bartok piano concerto with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with a Brahms' symphony. Ticket information is available by calling Tanglewood Lenox, Mass.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
STAR
(NEW YORK CITY MARKET AREA)
D. 13,000

JUL 24 1973

Instrumental and vocal soloists listed for Tanglewood week-end

The fourth week-end at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., begins Friday with the 7 p.m. Week-end Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa tomba oscura," "Bitten", "Vom Tode," "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur", "Ich liebe dich", "Wonne der Wehmut' and 'An die ferne Geliebte".

At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony and Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program, including the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

Saturday evening at 8:30 Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor (Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied dre Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E minor.

BLACKSTONE VALLEY
TRIBUNE ADVERTISER
WHITINSVILLE, MASS.
W. 10,000

JUL 25 1973 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood will present Peter Lagger at the 7 p.m. concert Friday night. William Steinberg will be featured with Miriam Fried at a 9 p.m. concert the same night. Saturday night's concert at 8:30 p.m. will feature Steinberg with James King. Rafael Fruhbeck De Burgos will be featured Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Weekend Preludes at 7 p.m. each Friday night, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Orchestra in short recitals offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders. The Boston Pops will be in concert at Tanglewood on August 21 at 8:30 p.m.

SOUTH MIDDLESEX
NEWS (E)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
D. 32,500

JUL 21 1973 New England Newsclip

Steinberg featured at Tanglewood weekend

TANGLEWOOD — The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 27, with the 7 p.m. weekend predule concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program.

Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in the violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and symphony No. 1 in C minor.

Saturday, July 28 at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

Saturday at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Shubert's Sympony No. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

KAVENA, N. Y.
NEWS-HERALD
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
W. 2,000

JUL 27 1973

Duo To Give Concert At Tanglewood

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins Friday, July 27 with the 7 p. m. prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

At 9 p. m. William Steinberg, former music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. It will open with the Violin Concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and conclude with Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday at 10:30 a. m., as on every Saturday, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday. In the evening, at 8:30, Mr. Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor (the Unfinished) and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde, with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano Concerto no. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahm's Symphony no. 4 in E minor.

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,523

JUL 25 1973 New England Newsclip

Steinberg, de Burgos, Featured Conductors

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa tomba oscura", "Bitten", "Vom Tode", "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur", "Ich liebe dich", "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte".

At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday, at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday at 8:30 p.m. William Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday, at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto no. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahms' Symphony no. 4 in E minor.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUL 26 1973 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood program

De Waart to replace ill conductor De Burgos

Edo de Waart, music director of the Rotterdam Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Mr. de Waart replaces the indisposed Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos. The new program for Sunday will include Berlioz' "Overture, Le cranaval romain; Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach; and Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor.

On Saturday night, tenor Nicholas di Virgilio will replace the ill James King in Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde."

William Steinberg, former music director of the BSO, will conduct the concerts on Friday and Saturday nights.

Beethoven songs

The weekend prelude Friday at 7 p.m. will be a program of Beethoven songs with soloists Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcom Frager, piano. They will perform the songs, "In Questa Tomba Oscura," "Bitten," "Vom Tode," "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur," "Ich Liebe Dich," "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte."

At 9, Steinberg, who has been music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the BSO in an all-Brahms program. The orchestra will play the Violin Concerto in D with violinist Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C Minor.

On Saturday evening at 8:30, Steinberg will conduct the symphony in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B Minor (unfinished) and Mahler's "Das Lied der Erde," (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists. An open rehearsal will be held on Saturday morning at 10:30.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.
TIMES HERALD RECORD
D. 45,349 SUN. 41,720

JUL 20 1973

Steinberg to conduct at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. — The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 27, with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

At 9, p.m., William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony and Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in the Violin Concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C Minor.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
W. 3,750

JUL 19 1973 New England Newsclip

Steinberg Scheduled At Tanglewood

WILLIAM STEINBERG former music director of the Boston Symphony will conduct the symphony on Friday and Saturday evenings July 27 and 28th, at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. As music director of the Pittsburg Symphony, Mr. Steinberg recently returned from his orchestra's tour of Japan which included concerts in Tokyo, Nogoya and Yahata, and at the Osaka Music Festival. The program Friday will be all Brahms. Schubert's No. 8 and Mahler's Das Lied von der Erde are scheduled Saturday. The Boston Symphony will be directed by Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, on Saturday.

DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
D. 30,000

JUL 24 1973

Tanglewood weekend

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood, will begin Friday night at 7 with a weekend prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven. At 9 p.m. William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and now music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program.

Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in selections from Schubert and Mahler with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. Sunday at 2:30 p.m. The concert continues with a Bartok piano concerto with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with a Brahms' symphony. Ticket information is available by calling Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y
STAR
(NEW YORK CITY MARKET AREA)
D. 13,000

JUL 24 1973

Instrumental and vocal soloists listed for Tanglewood week-end

The fourth week-end at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., begins Friday with the 7 p.m. Week-end Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa tomba oscura," "Bitten", "Vom Tode," "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur", "Ich liebe dich", "Wonne der Wehmut' and 'An die ferne Geliebte".

At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former Music Director of the Boston Symphony and Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program, including the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

Saturday evening at 8:30 Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor (Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied dre Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto No. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E minor.

BLACKSTONE VALLEY
TRIBUNE ADVERTISER
WHITINSVILLE, MASS.
W. 10,000

JUL 25 1973 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood will present Peter Lagger at the 7 p.m. concert Friday night. William Steinberg will be featured with Miriam Fried at a 9 p.m. concert the same night. Saturday night's concert at 8:30 p.m. will feature Steinberg with James King. Rafael Fruhbeck De Burgos will be featured Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Weekend Preludes at 7 p.m. each Friday night, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Orchestra in short recitals offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders. The Boston Pops will be in concert at Tanglewood on August 21 at 8:30 p.m.

SOUTH MIDDLESEX
NEWS (E)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
D. 3,500

JUL 21 1973 New England Newsclip

Steinberg featured at Tanglewood weekend

TANGLEWOOD — The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 27, with the 7 p.m. weekend predule concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

At 9 p.m., William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program.

Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in the violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and symphony No. 1 in C minor.

Saturday, July 28 at 10:30 a.m., as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

Saturday at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Shubert's Sympony No. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

KAVENA, N. Y.
NEWS-HERALD
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
W. 2,000

JUL 27 1973

Duo To Give Concert At Tanglewood

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins Friday, July 27 with the 7 p. m. prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

At 9 p. m. William Steinberg, former music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. It will open with the Violin Concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and conclude with Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday at 10:30 a. m., as on every Saturday, there will be an open rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday. In the evening, at 8:30, Mr. Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor (the Unfinished) and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde, with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano Concerto no. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahms's Symphony no. 4 in E minor.

William Steinberg to Conduct At Tanglewood This Weekend

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday, July 27, with the 7 pm Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa Tomba Oscura," "Bitten," "Vom Tode," "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur," "Ich liebe dich," "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte." At 9 am William Steinberg, former music director of the Boston Symphony and music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

On Satrday, July 28, at 10:30 am, as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 pm, William Steinberg will conduct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday, July 29, at 2:30 pm, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto no. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahm's Symphony no. 4 in E minor.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 24,500
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

The Herald Traveler
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 46,[illegible]
JUL 24 1973

PRESS (E)
BRISTOL, CONN.
D. 18,000
JUL 24 1973
New England Newsclip

This weekend at Tanglewood

Weekend Prelude concert at 7 p.m. on Friday begins the fourth weekend at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., featuring Peter Lager, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven.

William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will conduct the Boston Symphony at 9 p.m. is an all-Brahms program, with Miriam Fried the soloist in the violin concerto in D.

An open rehearsal will be held at 10:30 a.m. Saturday, as is held every Saturday morning throughout the season.

Maestro Steinberg, will conduct the orchestra at 8:30 p.m. Saturday with tenor, James King, and contralto, Lili Chookasian, as soloists.

Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, musical director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony at 2:30 p.m. Sunday in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. Christoph Eschenbach will be soloist for Bartok's Piano concerto No. 2.

PATRIOT LEDGER (E)
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 71,000
JUL 31 1973
New England Newsclip

(Photo from "Tanglewood" by James R. Holland, Barre Publishers)

The famous Tanglewood pines tower over the former estate's main gate.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (E)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,000
JUL 26 1973
New England Newsclip

Illness strikes at podium

Because of the sudden illness of William Steinberg, concertmaster Joseph Silverstein will conduct the Friday and Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, according to a statement this noon by BSO management. The programs for both evenings will be the same, and are contained in a story on Page 8.

The indisposition of conductor Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos had earlier caused the substitution of Edo de Waart as conductor of Sunday's concert. A BSO spokesman said he was sure there was no plague and that both illnesses were not serious.

JUL 24 1973
New England Newsclip

Weekend Tanglewood Program

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood begins on Friday, with the 7:00 p.m. Weekend Prelude concert featuring Peter Lagger, bass, and Malcolm Frager, piano, in a program of songs by Beethoven: "In questa tomba oscura", "Bitten", "Vom Tode", "Die Ehre Gottes aus der Natur", "Ich liebe dich", "Wonne der Wehmut" and "An die ferne Geliebte". At 9:00 p.m., William Steinberg, former Music Director for the Boston Symphony and Music Director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952, will conduct the Boston Symphony in an all-Brahms program. Mr. Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in the Violin concerto in D with Miriam Fried as soloist and Symphony no. 1 in C minor.

On Saturday, at 10:30 a.m. as on every Saturday morning throughout the Tanglewood season, there will be an Open Rehearsal of works to be performed on Sunday.

On Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg will conduct the Orchestra in Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's Das Lied der Erde (The Song of the Earth) with tenor James King and contralto Lili Chookasian as soloists.

On Sunday, at 2:30 p.m., Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, Musical Director of the National Orchestra in Madrid, will conduct the Boston Symphony in their first performance of Turina's La oracion del torero. The concert continues with Bartok's Piano concerto no. 2 with Christoph Eschenbach as soloist and closes with Brahms' Symphony no. 4 in E minor.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 135,000
JUL 29 1973
New England Newsclip

Music

LENOX ARTS CENTER, INC. AT WHEATLEIGH — Lenox, Mass. Musical Theater Premieres: Today— A music-theater-dance work with film. Aug. 1-5 and 8-12 — "Mandrake the Magician." Aug. 15-19 and 21-26 — Stage Leers and Love. Songs by Stanley Silverman. (413-637-2227).

TANGLEWOOD — Lenox, Mass. Berkshire Festival Concerts Series. Boston Symphony Orchestra. Today Christoph Eschenbach, 2:30 p.m. "Weekend Preludes," 7 p.m., will precede each Friday's 9 p.m. concert at no extra charge to evening ticket holders. Saturday concerts begin at 8:30 p.m. and Sunday programs at 2:30 p.m. Open rehearsals in the Shed on Saturday mornings at 10:30 a.m. at a nominal charge.

ROCKY LAIR RESTAURANT—Rocky Hill, Townline Road. The Tahitians. Floor show Sun. at 6:30 p.m. Tues., Wed. & Thurs. one show and Sat. two shows.

CHESTNUT HILL CONCERTS — Killingworth, Creative Arts Center. Thru Aug. 25. Thurs. & Sat. 8 p.m. (1-669-2060).

BOSTON HERALD TRAVELER (E)
BOSTON, MASS.
JUL 29 1973
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood's 4th Weekend Program

The fourth weekend at Tanglewood features former music director of the Boston Symphony William Steinberg on Friday and Saturday and Conductor Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos on Sunday.

On July 27 at 7 p.m., the prelude concert will consist of songs by Beethoven including "In questa tomba oscura" and "Wonne der Wehmut." At 9 p.m., Steinberg conducts an all Brahms program.

July 28 at 8:30 p.m. Steinberg and the orchestra will perfom Schubert's Symphony no. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") and Mahler's "Das Lied der Erde."

Sunday, July 29 at 2:30 p.m., the Boston Symphony plays Bartok's Piano concerto no. 2 and Brahm's Symphony no. 4 in E minor.

In Concert

Keeping Score At Tanglewood

By Peter M. Knapp

You needed additional scorecards to keep track of the performers last weekend at Tanglewood, fourth of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer season in Leonox, as illness forced a number of substitutes.

Neither of the weekend's scheduled conductors were on hand. BSO Concertmaster and Assistant Conductor Joseph Silverstein stepped in for indisposed former BSO Music Director William Steinberg on Friday and Saturday. Edo de Waart, music director of the Rotterdam Philharmonic, took over Sunday's program for Rafael Fuehbeck De Burgos (resulting in one program change). And tenor James King had illness in his family and was replaced by Nicholas di Virgilio Saturday night.

But at least in one case, the substitution was a galloping success in the debut of Edo de Waart with the orchestra, enthusiastially cheered by the 7,396 listeners. Remember the name, for this 32-year-old native of Amsterdam, a winner of the Dimitri Mitropoulous competition and former asistant to Leonard Bernstein for a season, seems to have it all.

Taking Charge

One took notice immediately at the way DeWaart firmly planted his feet and authoritatively called the orchestra to attention for Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture — a fellow ready to take charge, one sensed. And he did, giving the Berlioz warhorse quite a ride, without overspurring or working up excess lather. Platinum-clean, nothing careless, good line and detail, and a charge of electricity. A conductor willing to exercise this care and restraint on a sure show-stopper commands further respect.

And in this case, the initial favorable reaction carried through to the final note in a program of exceptional musicmaking. The audience loved him and the orchestra played beautifully for him in Bela Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. His accompaniment to Christoph Eschenbach's solo work in the Bartok was sharp and precise, and the Brahms was magnificent in every way — marvellously proportioned, with graceful linear contours (he is especially effective at drawing out string legato), and a stunning sense of rhythm and structural flow.

Eschenbach, too, was superb. He has gained a reputation as a classical pianist, and his Tanglewood debut some years ago confirmed his sensitive and balanced approach to Mozart. But would he have the flair for the flashy, percussive Bartok?

Sparkling

The answer was yes, as Eschenbach struck sparks in this busy, virtuosic concerto completed in 1931. It is a workout for sure — Bartok sending the pianist scampering up and down the octaves in whirling toccata-like figurations or hammering percussively a la Prokofiev, or brushing in gentle arpeggio washes. In the first movement, Bartok boldly withholds his strings, punctuating the pianist's display with percussion and brass fanfares.

But for all the heroic fingerwork, of the exterior movements, the most interesting music lies in the middle — a combination adagio and scherzo (at a furious pace). Here, Bartok evokes one of his magical night moods with a slow string chorale followed by an unusual duet for piano and timpani, the pianist discoursing in terse, eloquent, Magyar-flavored fragments in which Eschenbach was particularly expressive.

Silverstein took on a rugged program on a hot and humid Saturday night before a colorfully attired audience of 8,000. A program juxtaposing Franz Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony No. 8 in b minor, with Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" ("The Song of the Earth"). Both by Austrian symphonists, but as far apart in perspective as an Eskimo and an African: the Schubert, so serene, confidently lyrical and in perfect equilibrium; the Mahler "tripping out" in a new soundscape not to be mapped in terms of keys or chords or structure or instrumentation, but rather in its profound powers of communication.

Signoff

Perhaps "Das Lied von derErde" is an existential rather than a musical experience. Mahler's lengthy hymn to weltschmerz, a cycle of six songs alternating for tenor and contralto, is the Austrian composer's most subjective and personal composition — his apparent farewell to life after being told of a fatal heart condition. The settings of Hans Bethge's translations of ancient Chinese lyrics present a mood of hopeless loneliness and resignation, a somber, autumnal acceptance of the end.

One cannot communicate verbally the effects of this powerfully strange score culminating in the transcendent, half-hour glories of "Der Abschied" ("The Farewell"), drifting off to silence on the word "ewig" (forever); it must be directly experienced. What creative process concocted such evocative instrumental effects, such chilling motifs as the sinister English horn figuration and mocking horns in the last song, or the tolling harp-percussion pronouncements prefacing it?

Memorable

The performance was most memorable for contralto Lili Chookasian's extraordinarily expressive singing.

Mahler is more convincing in the melancholy songs for low female voice, than in the bitter "life be damned" attitude of the first and fifth songs for tenor. "Das Trinklied vom Jammer der Erde," the opening song, is virtually beyond the scope of most tenors — perhaps Maher wanted to guarantee a sense of desperation, if not hysteria — by writing in such a high tessiture and orchestral jangle. Tenor DiVirgilio sang earnestly in a voice with an attractive dusky timbre, but with insufficient power or verbal projection to really carry off the challenge of the tenor songs — and few can.

But Miss Chookasian was wonderful. For years I have admired her rich, sensuous contralto, her technical command of the vocal art and her intelligent musicality; she sang here with great intensity and nuance of vocal coloration and textual expression.

The evening, too, was another illustration of Silverstein's musical abilities. The Schubert flowed very nicely in well-chosen tempi and dynamic scales, aside from some moments of stiffness as in the first movement's development, and the larger challenge of the Mahler also was effectively accomplished. While the opening seemed overly raucous and not completely under control and the first section of "Von der Schoenheit" tended to drift, there were otherwise many admirable details and an over-all soundly conceived and executed interpretation.

NEWS (E)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,[illegible]
JUL 27 1973
New England Newsclip

de Waart to Conduct BSO at Tanglewood

Edd de Waart, music director of the Rotterdam Philharmonic, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, at Tanglewood, Lenox at 2:30 p.m.

On Saturday, at 8:30 p.m., Maestro de Haart replaces replaces the indisposed James King in Mahler's Das beck de Burgos.

HERALD-AMERICAN (M)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 424,654
AUG 1 1973 New England Newsclip

4 FOURTH WEEKEND

JULY 27
7 pm Weekend Prelude
PETER LAGGER
9 pm WILLIAM STEINBERG
BRAHMS PROGRAM
Violin Concerto
Miriam Fried
Symphony No. 1

JULY 28
10:30 am Open Rehearsal
8:30 pm WILLIAM STEINBERG
Schubert: Symphony No. 8 "Unfinished"
Mahler: Das Lied von der Erde
soprano to be announced
James King

JULY 29
2:30 pm RAFAEL FRUHBECK DE BURGOS
Turina: Oracion de Torero for Strings
Bartok: Piano Concerto No. 2
Christoph Eschenbach
Brahms: Symphony No. 4

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUL 3 1 1973

61

Cancellations Hit Tanglewood

By ELLEN PFEIFER
Music Critic

It was a weekend for cancellations at Tanglewood.

William Steinberg was forced to cancel both of his scheduled conducting performances Friday and Saturday evenings. Then the tenor James King made it a double cancellation on Saturday. And on Sunday afternoon, it was announced that Rafael Fruehbeck de Burgos would not appear.

The last cancellation was especially disappointing, because the combination of Fruehbeck de Burgos and the pianist Christoph Eschenbach in Bartok's Second Piano Concerto promised to be quite a novel one with a few surprises almost guaranteed and possibly an amusing clash of temperaments.

Taking Fruehbeck de

• Concert Review

Burgos' place, however, was the young Dutch conductor Edo de Waart, who, in making his debut with the BSO, stimulated a good bit of interest in his own right.

De Waart, at 32, has recently been appointed music director of the Rotterdam Philharmonic and has been making the rounds this summer of the American festivals. He appears to have allied himself with that school of young conductors who are more interested in serious performances of music than in becoming matinee idols of the podium.

Certainly he is a physically active conductor — but in a healthy, spontaneous, and, most importantly, undistracting way. His music-making is honest and straightforward, if just a bit uninteresting.

Most successful of the afternoon's works was the above-mentioned Bartok Concerto played by Eschenbach with fiery energy in the outer movements and moving eloquence in the recitative-piano sections of the second movement. The ensemble work in this second movement was also first rate with the transitions between chordal string sections and piano-timpani parts smooth and seamless.

The one problem, which seemed most acute in the first movement where the orchestral part is given entirely to the winds, was that of balance. The piano, which is certainly supposed to dominate the work, proved so overwhelming as to obscure the other instruments.

De Waart closed the program Sunday with the Brahms Fourth Symphony, which was characterized by very close scrutiny of local details at the expense of long line the big picture, so to speak. For the most part, the tempi were slow, the dynamic range was limited, and the sweep and grand passion customarily heard in this work were missing.

CONNECTICUT
WESTERN NEWS
CANAAN, CONN.
N. 2,875
AUG 1 1973 New England Newsclip

Review: Tanglewood Visited

By John Massameno

ON SUNDAY, TANGLEWOOD once more opened its famed gates to a multitude of anxious music lovers. After strolling through the lovely grounds, and being seated in the immense summer concert hall, we glanced at our programs and noticed that Rafael Fruhbeck de Brugos, due to illness, would not be conducting. Appearing in his stead was the young and energetic Edo De Waart, recently appointed director of the Rotterdam Philharmonic.

The afternoon of music began with "Overture Le carnaval romain op. 9" by Berlioz. The work's percussive pagentry seemed at times to possess strong Russian influences. It served well as an opening number, activating the appetites of the audience.

Following Berlioz was Bartok's Piano concerto no. 2. The guest soloist was the youthful and vigorous Christoph Eschenbach, who is no stranger to the Tanglewood stage.

The first movement, in which there was little delineation between the soloist and the orchestra, was a mass of chromatically moving parts, resembling at times piano exercises. Interspersed were lilting mysterious passages displaying Eschenbach's sensitivity at the keyboard.

The second movement, opening with a subtle parlay between the timpani and the piano, developed into an ellusive melodic line by the soloist with an entirely cordal orchestral background.

The final movement exploded into a rhythemical intensity which was sustained throughout. The combination of a strong use of timpani and brass concluded Bartok's creation.

AUDIENCE APPROVAL of Eschenbach's extraordinary talent was evidenced by a prolonged standing ovation.

The final work on the program was Brahms Symphony no. 4 in E minor, op. 98. Opening the piece was the lyrical melody carried predominatly by the strings in which the vigor as well as depth of Brahms were portrayed. The French horn introduced the second movement which quickly featured the reeds playing to a pizzacato string background.

